HISTORY

THE PREFACE.

HAVING been so particular in the Preface to the Second Volume, I have the less Reason to trouble the Reader with enlarging upon the Third; which consists of the History of a less Number of Years, and with less Variety of Incidents and Changes; but still in their own Nature so curious and desirable, as may be of singular Use and Satisfaction to the Generality of the Nation. It contains the actual Reigns of two Kings and Brothers, who were excellently well fitted and qualified by Nature and Education for their exalted Stations, and so well prepared and season'd by Adversity and Opposition, as to make themselves and their People great and happy in this World: Whose Lives and Actions, both laudable and culpable, I have endeavour'd to represent with all Simplicity and Fidelity, as well as all Freedom and Decency.

The first of these Reigns, notwithstanding all the Advantages of the clear Understanding and good Nature of the Prince, was attended with great Mixture of Counsels, and strange Vicissitudes of good and bad Events, throughout the greatest Part of the Time. So that the whole Space has been ingeniously compared to the four Seasons of the Year; in which three Quarters are generally fair, hopeful, flourishing, and gay; but as constantly follow'd by severe Winters that freeze, wither, destroy and cut off many hopeful Plants, and Expectations of Things to come. The next Reign, which was much shorter, may perhaps be compared to a Day, clear and calm in the Morning, tho' not without a Mixture of something dubious and lowring; but in a little Time spread and cover'd over with dark and diſmal Clouds, threatning a general Ruin and Deſolation, 'till of a ſudden they were diſſipated and diſpell'd after an unknown and miraculous Manner. So that the Reader, from theſe two Reigns, may expect Profit and Entertainment ſufficient to recompence all his Labour.

It were to be wiſh'd indeed that the Materials in this Volume were altogether as plentiful and valuable as thoſe from whence the laſt was taken; but conſidering the Nature of the Subject, they were not to be ſo much expected, eſpecially at preſent; but were rather to be hop'd for afterwards, when Time has abated and remov'd the Fear and Caution, that is ſo natural to good Writers. However, I have endeavour'd to make the beſt Uſe of thoſe Materials I cou'd procure; the Principal of which may be ſeen in the Beginning of every great Section; and tho' not ſo particular as ſome ſtrict Men may expect, yet, I preſume, ſufficient to ſatisfy any fair and candid Reader, who will have ſo good an Opinion of the Judgment and Honeſty of the Author, as not to expect every Sentence to be ſupported by a particular Authority. Thoſe that expect ſo much, are too often unwilling to be ſatisfy'd with the greateſt Evidence, when it comes in competition with either Intereſt, or Party.

Beſides the Uſe of all printed Tracts, ſuch as Annals, Collections, Memoirs, Letters, Tryals, Pamphlets, Speeches, Gazettes, &c. I had, as in the laſt Volume, the Advantage of ſeveral Manuſcripts and private Accounts from Perſons of unqueſtion'd Knowledge and Credit, which have ſerv'd much to inrich and inlighten the Work, to clear up many Difficulties, and to invalidate ſeveral vulgar Stories that have crept into the common Books, and been ſwallow'd as Truths by moſt People. And particularly I had the Benefit of the Journals of the Lords and Commons in the two Reigns, which were of ſingular Advantage in perfecting the Parliamentary Accounts; and in which there are many Particulars valuable, new, and never before publiſh'd: And eſpecially in the famous Long Parliament, ſo much applauded and cenſur'd; a Parliament that continu'd above ſeventeen Years, 'till remov'd and deſtroy'd by the Heats ariſing from the Popiſh Plot.

As to the Plot in particular, I have been more than ordinary careful in tracing out the Steps, and examining into the Bottom of that Myſtery of Villany. And if I have not done it ſo perfectly as it deſerves, I have done it more completely and regularly than it is to be found in any one ſingle Writer before me; not only in its Beginning and Riſe, but alſo in its Effects and Conſequences, which proproduc'd many ſtrange and bloody Events, that ſo far unhing'd the Prerogative of the Crown, that it was hard to ſet it right without endangering the Priviledges of the People. To be Maſter of which Account, I made uſe of ſeveral living Aſſiſtances of Worth and Knowledge, beſides what Books and Pamphlets I cou'd procure; from all which I believe I have ſet the whole in a better Light than it has been generally ſeen in before; and if that Plot appears to be another thing than what it has been commonly taken for, it is owing to Evidence and Conviction, more than to Humour and Opinion.

The Tranſactions of the laſt Reign were leſs myſterious, and more open and apparent, and conſequently not ſo hard to be diſcover'd or diſplay'd. Yet that Reign was not without its Depths, as well as Shallows; and tho' the grand Steps were viſible and obvious to the World, yet there was intermixt ſo much Artifice and Subtlety, as was ſufficient to try the Underſtandings, as well as the Honeſty, of a great Part of the Nation. Matters were indeed carry'd on with ſtrange Zeal and Precipitation, but yet were ſo deeply laid, that a very little leſs of either, humanly ſpeaking, muſt have carry'd the Point. And thoſe very Proceedings that caus'd the Ruin of the King and the Popiſh Cauſe, was ſo very near overthrowing that of the Proteſtant and Engliſh Eſtabliſhment, that our Eſcape can be call'd no leſs than a mighty Deliverance; a Deliverance in which the Hand of Heaven appear'd eminently viſible and conſpicuous, not only here, but in other Parts of Chriſtendom.

This laſt has ever been my firm and poſitive Belief, and the Effect of the moſt deliberate Conſideration and Reflection; therefore I freely aver, and gratefully acknowledge the Greatneſs of the Deliverance, in ſpite of the innumerable Inconveniencies ſaid to attend it, and without any Fear of the Charge and Scandal of Partiality. And this has been acknowledg'd not only by the greateſt and wiſeſt Men, but by ſeveral of thoſe whoſe Conſciences unhappily held them from receiving the full Benefit of it. I ſpeak not this to enter into a Controverſy, but rather to admire the Wiſdom of Heaven, which has maturely and in due Seaſon brought about that Eſtabliſhment, which ſome factious and miſ-led Perſons by a crude Anticipation were weakly attempting in the latter End of King Charles the Second's Reign; which in that Juncture muſt, in all Probability, have involv'd three Kingdoms in Blood.

It were to be deſir'd, that the Hiſtory of the Revolution it ſelf, with all its concurrent Circumſtances, was undertaken by ſome

eminent Hand, whoſe Knowledge and Genius is equal to ſo noble a Subject: In the mean Time I hope the World will reſt ſatisfy'd with what I have done; in which they may find all the ſeveral known Steps and Proceedings laid open with Perſpicuity and Regularity. In performing whereof, and the greateſt Part of this laſt Reign, I have been much eas'd, not only by Mr. Bohun's labour'd Work, but alſo by the Author of The Life of King William, who, I am told, had very good Aſſiſtance in that Piece.

In Writing of this Volume, I particularly aim'd at obſerving a juſt Decorum with relation to the two Royal Brothers, and their chief Miniſters; and beſides the Caution againſt the ſtrong Prejudices that have ſo much prevail'd of late, I have conſider'd them chiefly according to the Dignity of their Offices. I have indeed been very free with their publick Errors and Miſmanagements; but at the ſame Time very fearful of examining and expoſing, much leſs dilating upon their private Vices and Extravagancies. The Crimes of great Men are not to receive the vulgar Puniſhments of Stocks, Whips, and Pillories; but they are naturally attended with Fines and Forfeitures, and even Death and Extirpation. To ſearch far into their dark and ſecret Receſſes, is preſumptuous in the Writer, and dangerous to the Reader: Impartiality indeed will not ſuffer thoſe remote Exorbitancies to appear very inconſiderable, but Decency requires that they ſhould very little appear; the one will not allow them to be varniſh'd over, and the other commands them to be thrown into Shades.

I find it the more neceſſary to condemn and avoid thoſe Ways, becauſe in theſe latter Times we meet with ſo many Abuſes of that Kind both in Books and Converſation. Too many in a free Country take a Pleaſure in cenſuring and vilifying their Superiors; and by making bold with crown'd Heads, they bring all upon the Level, and turn Liberty into Licentiouſneſs. And, what is commonly the Conſequence, thoſe Perſons who are ſo ready to pry into the Vices of Princes, too rarely take notice of their Virtues. Of this Sort we find a numerous Spawn ſince the Revolution, as Libellers and Dealers in Scandal, and ſome of the Writers of Secret Hiſtories, who have taken ſuch Liberties with their Betters, as are hardly to be found in any other Part of the World. And thus while the true and valuable Hiſtorians are diving into the rich Mines of Nature, theſe diminutive Writers are raking into Kennels and Common-Shores.

A faith-

PREFACE.

A faithful Hiſtorian indeed ought to lay open and repreſent the publick Errors and Miſcarriages of Princes and great Men, but always with Deference to their Stations and Characters. In ſuch Caſes I have taken all becoming Freedom, but with no little Caution, for fear of ſwimming beyond my Strength. I have us'd the greateſt Freedom with what I account the principal Blemiſh in the Reign of King James the Second, the frequent Breach of his Royal Word. Such open Breaches ought not to be ſilently paſs'd over by an Hiſtorian, whoſe Buſineſs in ſuch a Caſe is to judge and condemn without Reſerve. A Failure in this Kind is acting againſt Natural Principles, and therefore beyond the Power of Excuſe. Had that unfortunate Prince never made thoſe ſolemn and voluntary Promiſes, his Endeavours to eſtabliſh Popery and Arbitrary Power would (in Hiſtory) have admitted of various Mitigations; he had then ſuffer'd leſs in his Memory, and his Caſe would have been more pity'd. But it has been by ſome alledg'd, That without theſe Promiſes, he could not hope to carry his grand Point; which only ſhews to what a miſerable Dilemma he was reduc'd, that either he muſt violate his Honour, or ſacrifice his Religion. And if the Former muſt thus give place to the Latter, what a wretched Idea muſt the World have of that Religion that cannot be ſupported but by what has been abhorr'd, or at leaſt diſclaim'd and diſavow'd, by Jews, Turks, Pagans, and Infidels!

But this ungrateful Subject may eaſily carry an Author beyond the Compaſs of a Preface, therefore it is Time to deſiſt.----- I ſhall only repeat the Promiſe I made in the laſt Preface, of Correcting and Amending whatever is found to be amiſs; and further add, That tho' I have been too bold in attempting this Third Volume, as coming too near my own Time, yet I am not afraid to venture a few Years further, upon a Fourth, namely, the compleat Reign of King William; which poſſibly I may undertake, if I meet with reaſonable Aſſiſtance and Information from thoſe that are able to give it.

I. HAVING got through a ſtormy and tempeſtuous Seaſon of many Years Continuance, a tedious Time of various Miſery and Confuſion, We arrive at the moſt unexpected Order and Settlement, at ſuch a glorious Calm and Sunſhine, as the ſudden Brightneſs and Splendor of it was to many of the Nation harder to be born than all the preceding Clouds and Darkneſs. The Greatneſs and Quickneſs of the Change, render'd the Pleaſure not only inexpreſſible, but inſupportable, even to ſeveral of Thoſe 1660. Car. 12 Reſ. 1. The Introduction.

1660. Car. 12 Ref. 1. who had endured the greateſt Perſecutions with uncommon Patience; every Man's Head being ſeiz'd with ſome Degree of Raptures and Madneſs. It might naturally have been expected, that thoſe Torrents of Joy, that overflow'd the Nation, and bore down all before them, ſhou'd have had more tragical Effects upon the late Uſurpers and Oppreſſors, whoſe Power was now diſſolv'd and bury'd beyond all Hopes of a Reſurrection. Therefore it is highly to be admired and applauded, that the Tranſports and Reſentments of an injured Body of Men, who had ſo ſuddenly got their Enemies at their Mercy, ſhou'd be ſo much ſpent in Smoak and Air, and not reverberate with a more ſignal Rage and Vengeance. We cannot ſufficiently revere that Power of Heaven, that put ſo quick and full a Period to a Rebellion and War that had rag'd near twenty Years, and had been proſecuted with all the diſmal Circumſtances of Murder, Devaſtations and Parricide, that Fire and Sword, in the Hands of the moſt impious Men, cou'd produce; but that Mercy is ſtill more bright and adorable, that in ſo ſhort a Space did not only bind up and heal all thoſe Wounds, but even made the Scars as undiſcernable, as, in reſpect to the Deepneſs, was poſſible; which was certainly, as the noble Hiſtorian obſerves, a glorious Addition to the Deliverance. How, and by whom any of theſe Scars came to be rubb'd, or any of theſe Wounds to be open'd, will be particularly ſeen afterwards: But in the mean Time we may juſtly take notice, That this unexpected Felicity, humanly ſpeaking, was in a great Meaſure owing to the Moderation and Goodneſs of the King Himſelf, and his chief Miniſters, who being return'd to a People inebriated with Joy, and without any Reſtriction, but that of Honour and Conſcience, had Opportunity and Temptation of carrying their Revenge and Power to any Exorbitancy whatſoever. The King's own Clemency was apparent and remarkable; and it was his Opinion, both before and after his Arrival, 'That the beſt Means to reſtore the decay'd Body of 'the Kingdom to its former Health and Vigour, was not to cure one 'Part, by afflicting of the Other; but to heal thoſe Wounds which were 'already feſter'd, by their proper Lenitives, and to remove all the Cauſes of future Animoſities.

The Character of King Charles the Second,

And here it will not be improper to give ſome Character of the King Himſelf, as we find it by the beſt Hands at this Time, reſerving Another for him at the Time of his Death, which will differ almoſt as much as two Pictures drawn for the ſame Perſon at the moſt diſtant Time of his Age. His Majeſty was now juſt thirty Years of Age, ſomewhat taller than the middle Stature of Engliſhmen; ſo exactly form'd, that the moſt curious Eye cou'd find no Error in his Shape. His Countenance was rather grave than ſevere, but much ſoftned whenever he ſpoke; his Complexion ſomewhat dark, but much enlightned by his quick and ſparkling Eyes. The Figure of his Face was very lovely till near twenty Years of Age; but after that, growing leaner, the Majeſty of his Looks happily ſupply'd the Lines of Beauty; which was very much ſet off by plentiful Ornaments of his ſhining black Hair. His Motions were ſo eaſy and graceful, that they highly recommended his Perſon to all Strangers, whether he walk'd, or danc'd, or play'd at Tennis, or rode the great Horſe, which were his uſual Exerciſes: In ſum, his Mien fully denoted his Quality; and whereſoever he appear'd, he immediately obtain'd the Reſpect and Affections of all that approach'd him; for all his Looks and Actions help'd to diſplay the Beauties of his Mind, a vivacious Wit, a delicate Apprehenſion, and an excellent Underſtanding. Theſe natural Endowments were highly improv'd, not only by his own uncommon Induſtry, but by a numerous Train of Accidents uſually unknown to other Princes. So that, beſides his great Skill in modern Languages, Hiſtory, Mathematicks, Mathematicks, Navigation, &c. his Mind was adorn'd with ſuch Virtues, as might, if continu'd, have prov'd a perpetual Source of Happineſs to Himſelf and Kingdom, as Juſtice, Fortitude, Clemency, Temperance and Sobriety. The two latter were conſpicuous at this Time; Oaths and Drunkenneſs were Strangers to him; and tho' he cannot be clear'd of another Vice, of which the Duke of Monmouth's Mother was not the only Inſtance, yet the former Part of his Life ought by no Means to be compared to the latter; and it is obſerv'd by a good Hand, that for many Years before his Return, he had been ſo chaſte and cautious, that thoſe about him cou'd hear no Whiſper of any indecent Gallantry. In general, he had learn'd ſo much Experience from the Variety of his Father's Fortunes, from the Oppoſition of his Enemies, the Treachery of his ſeeming Friends, and the frequent Neceſſity of treating with all Parties in Perſon, that it might juſtly be ſaid of Him, as it was of his Grandfather of France, He that wou'd corrupt his Council, muſt firſt begin with the King. Such was the preſent King, when he return'd to his overjoy'd People, bringing with him all the Preſages of a happy Government; and cou'd he have withſtood the Charms of Proſperity with the ſame Virtue and Vigour he did the Storms of Adverſity, he might well have prov'd not only a real, but a laſting Bleſſing to his three Kingdoms. 1660. Car. 12 Ref. 1.

And of the Duke of York.

His Brother, the Duke of York, was at this Time a Prince of thoſe Qualifications that were every Way hopeful and promiſing to the Nation; and was particularly remark'd for being a loyal and obedient Subject, as well as a faithful and affectionate Brother. His Education had been always laudable, and under the beſt Inſtructors; but he had employ'd a great Part of his Time in the continual Exerciſe of Arms. His Genius led him that Way, and he generally apply'd himſelf to it, from the Age of nine Years, when he was with his Father at Edgehill, till the Age of twenty ſeven, when he return'd into England with his Brother. He made ſeveral Campaigns under the great Marſhal de Turenne, from whom he gain'd mighty Commendations both for his Valour and Affability. And as to the former, the famous Prince of Conde was often heard to ſay, That if ever there was a Man in the World without Fear, it was the Duke of York; and during this Reign, he preſerv'd this Character of Intrepidity at all Times, and upon all Occaſions. This Diſpoſition was particularly obſerv'd by a great Man of France, who having travell'd into England, and remark'd upon the Court, he took particular Notice, That tho' the Intereſt of this Prince ought to keep him to the Court, he rather choſe to be in the Army, and that he valu'd an Opportunity of ſignalizing his Courage, above the greateſt Political Advantages. As to the Religion of this Prince, which in Time had ſuch remarkable Effects upon the Nation, he was a Proteſtant of the Church of England by Profeſſion, but of that of Rome in his Heart, as his beſt Friends teſtify. He had valiantly withſtood many a Shock from his Mother, and other Popiſh Zealots, but at length yielded, as they tell us, to a peculiar Accident, his reading of Dr. Heylin's Hiſtory of the Reformation; where the Luſt of King Henry the Eighth, the Ambition of the Duke of Somerſet, the Policy of Queen Elizabeth, and the Avarice of Thoſe who had ſeiz'd the Church Lands, gave him a mortal Averſion to the Reformation it ſelf, and brought him over to the contrary Party. The King his Brother had many Times endeavour'd to prevent this Change, and more particularly in the Year 1654, when the Duke of Gloceſter was in the greateſt Danger in France; at which Time alſo hearing of the Attempts made upon the elder Brother, he wrote a memorable Letter to him, in which he let him know, 'That 'if ever he hearken'd to his Mother, or any Body elſe in that Mat-'ter, he muſt never think to ſee England or Him again:' And if the general Miſchief that muſt happen to Him and the Family did not move him, 'he deſired him to conſider and remember the laſt Words of his 'dead Father, which were to be conſtant in his Religion, and never ſha- 'ken in it; which if he did not obſerve, this ſhou'd be the laſt Time he 'ſhou'd hear from his affectionate Brother.' Yet after all this, the King Himſelf, as we have full Reaſon to believe, in the Year before his Reſtoration, yielded privately to the Temptations of the Spaniard at Fontarabia, and conſented to embrace the Romiſh Faith. This, as well as the Religion of the Duke, was a very great Secret for many Years; only the Duke being more zealous and hearty for the Popiſh Principles, thought fit to appear more openly in 1671, at which Time he made his Abjuration to Father Simons an Engliſh Jeſuit; while the King, in the main, generally conceal'd his Inclinations, which were leſs ſtrong and operating, till the Time of his Death.

The King eſtabliſhes his Privy-Council,

2. To proceed in the Hiſtory: His Majeſty's firſt Care after his Reſtoration, was to ſettle his Houſhold, and conſtitute his Privy-Council; in which, to teſtify his Impartiality and good Nature, as well as Policy, he made Choice of ſeveral Counſellors, who had been profeſs'd Enemies to his Father and Himſelf. They conſiſted of Thirty in Number, namely, the Duke of York, the Duke of Gloceſter, Sir Edward Hyde, General Monk, Admiral Mountague, the Marqueſs of Ormond, the Marqueſs of Dorcheſter, the Earl of Southampton, the Earl of Lindſey, the Earl of Berkſhire, the Earl of Norwich, the Lord Vicount Say, the Lord Wentworth, the Lord Seymour, Mr. Denzil Hollis, Sir Frederick Cornwallis, Sir George Carteret, Sir Anthony Aſhley-Cooper, Colonel Charles Howard, the Marqueſs of Hertford, the Earl of Mancheſter, the Earl of Northumberland, the Earl of St. Alban's, the Earl of Leiceſter, the Lord Colepeper, the Lord Roberts, Mr. Arthur Anneſley, Sir John Barkley, Sir Edward Nicholas, and Sir William Morrice. Of theſe, the Duke of York was inveſted with the Office of Lord High-Admiral of England, and Lord Warden of the Cinque-Ports: Monk was continu'd Captain General of all the Forces of the three Kingdoms, and made Maſter of the Horſe to his Majeſty: Sir Edward Hyde was continu'd in the Office of Lord Chancellor of England: The Earl of Southampton was made Lord Treaſurer; the Marqueſs of Ormond, Lord Steward of the Houſhold; the Lord Say, Privy-Seal; the Lord Seymour, Chancellor of the Dutchy; the Earl of Manchester, Lord Chamberlain of the Houſhold; Sir Frederick Cornwallis, Treaſurer of the Houſhold; Sir Charles Barkley, Comptroller; Sir George Carteret, Vice-Chamberlain; and Sir Edward Nicholas and Sir William Morrice, were made chief Secretaries of State. On theſe laſt, and others of the Council, his Majeſty in a ſhort Time conferr'd ſuch Honours as were thought ſuiable to their Services or Expectations: Particularly General Monk was made Duke of Albemarle, which Dutchy had been anciently appropriated to the Royal Blood; Sir Edward Hyde was made Earl of Clarendon; Admiral Mountague, Earl of Sandwich; the Marqueſs of Ormond was made an Engliſh Earl, and afterwards a Duke; the Marqueſs of Hertford was made Duke of Somerſet; Mr. Anneſley, Earl of Angleſey; and Hollis, Berkley, Cornwallis, and Aſhley-Cooper were made Barons and Peers of England.

And his Judges.

The King alſo by ſeveral Steps made a careful and judicious Proviſion for the Benches and Courts of Judicature: For the Chancery, Sir Edward Hyde, as before-mention'd; for the Rolls, the Lord Colepeper, who ſhortly dying was ſucceeded by Sir Harbottle Grimſtone; for the King's Bench, Sir Robert Foſter, Sir Thomas Mallet, Sir Thomas Twiſden, and Sir Wadham Windham; for the Common-Pleas, Sir Orlando Bridgeman, Sir

Sir Robert Hyde, Sir Thomas Tyrrel, and Sir Samuel Brown; and for the Exchequer, Sir Matthew Hale, Sir Edward Atkins, and Sir Chriſtopher Turner. Sir Jeoffrey Palmer was made Attorney-General, and Sir Heneage Finch Sollicitor-General. At the ſame Time his Majeſty took ſpecial Care for the committing all Military Offices of the higheſt Truſt, as well as the Civil already mention'd, into the Hands of ſuch Perſons as were judg'd moſt proper for his Service: So that the Governments of all the moſt important Fortreſſes, Caſtles and Iſlands, and the Commands of the ſeveral Regiments, were by General Monk conferr'd upon ſuch Lords, and other Perſons of Honour, as the King was pleas'd to recommend to him for that End, till ſuch Time as the Army cou'd conveniently be diſbanded. Likewiſe for the farther ſettling of the Militia of the Nation, Lord-Lieutenants were conſtituted of the chief Nobility of the Land, each having under them, as Deputy-Lieutenants, ſuch Gentlemen of the ſame Counties as had moſt eminently ſhew'd their Affections to his Majeſty. 1660. Car. 12 Reſ. 1.

Among the Miniſtry at this Time, there were five or ſix who had a ſpecial Influence and Authority; as Chancellor Hyde, the Earl of Southampton, the Duke of Ormond, the Duke of Albemarle, the Earl of Sandwich, and Secretary Nicholas. The three firſt were united in the ſtricteſt Bonds of Love and Friendſhip: They continually joyn'd their Endeavours for the Good of their Country, and prov'd noble Inſtruments in cloſing up the Wounds, and eſtabliſhing the Proſperity of the Nation. Yet ſtill the Chancellor had the Superiority and Preference of them all in the Favour and Eſteem of the King, who for about two Years after his Return rely'd entirely on his Advice and Conduct. His Daughter had been ſecretly marry'd, or rather contracted abroad to the Duke of York; and ſo ſecretly, that after the great Revolution, when her Pregnancy appear'd, his Highneſs was attack'd by ſeveral Friends in private with ſo much Vigour and Reſentment, that he was brought under the ſtrongeſt Temptations to diſown the Obligation: But the King, tho' much ſurpriz'd at the unequal Alliance, very generouſly preſerv'd the Honour of an excellent Servant, who had not at firſt been privy to it, and aſſured him, That this Accident ſhould not leſſen the Eſteem and Favour he had for him; yet his own good Judgment made him immediately ſenſible, and to declare it to his intimate Friends, That this muſt certainly be the Occaſion of the Diminution of his Credit. Being prime Miniſter of State, and principal Manager of the Publick Affairs, he was oblig'd to ſuſtain the Odium of ſome unpopular Acts, of which the Springs were then altogether unknown. Yet the Nation at the ſame Time cou'd not but be ſenſible of the Greatneſs of his Abilities and Induſtry; that he was a wiſe and faithful Servant, both to his King and Country; and that none was more dextrous and happy in making up the Breaches between Both, without too much hazarding the Repoſe of Either. Notwithſtanding he was a finiſh'd Stateſman, and every way equal to the Height of his Station, he was judg'd to have had a general Failing, which has been ſometimes, and by good Men, turn'd to his Commendation; and this was a certain overbearing Greatneſs, or perhaps Haughtineſs, which was ſo viſible in his publick Actions, and ſometimes private Reproofs, that it gave Uneaſineſs to many who envy'd his Grandeur, and the Favours he enjoy'd. This, together with a Strictneſs of Morals that carry'd ſome Awe with it, muſt needs be diſagreeable to a Court which gradually gave Countenance and Encouragement to all ſorts of Pleaſures that proceeded from new Taſte, Politeneſs, Converſation, Courtſhip, and Gallantry, with other Names that ſerv'd to cover or palliate the greateſt Licentiouſneſs. Notwithſtanding he gave a great Check to all theſe in the worſt Senſe, and and took the Liberty to reprove the greater, as well as the leſſer Offenders, he happily ſtood his Ground, and maintain'd his Authority, till he had more than Time to compoſe the Minds of the People, and ſettle the moſt difficult Affairs of the Nation.

The firſt Complaint againſt Him.

The firſt Complaint againſt this great Man proceeded chiefly from the Cavalier Party, and his Friends; and this began ſo early after the Reſtoration, that it will be very proper to take ſome Notice of it before we proceed farther in the Hiſtory. The King, as was before hinted, to ſhew that he wou'd not reign only over a Party of his Subjects, and to teſtify his Readineſs to forgive, thought it proper and fit to reward and prefer ſeveral who had been open Enemies to his Father and himſelf; and at the ſame Time he ſet aſide, or beyond Expectation neglected many loyal and faithful Subjects, who had been illuſtrious Sufferers for the Cauſe of both Kings. The Care for the former was thought to be the Cauſe of the Neglect of the latter; and tho' the Reaſons for either were not then well or fully known, yet both became ſo conſpicuous to the Nation, that a diſadvantagious Report was ſoon ſpread abroad, 'That the Chancellor 'had inſtill'd a Principle into the King's Mind, That he muſt prefer and advance his Enemies, to gain them to be his Friends; but for his old Friends, it was no Matter how he us'd them, for they wou'd continue ſo ſtill.' This Report did not only fall heavy upon the Chancellor, but likewiſe reach'd the King himſelf, whoſe general Practice in this Matter will hardly admit of a total Vindication, tho' of a very great Alleviation. Much of it was owing to Neceſſity, as well as Policy: For the Sufferings of the King's Friends were too great and too numerous, ever to expect a full Compenſation and Reward; and the inſenſibly encreaſing Expences of the Court render'd it ſtill more impracticable. Beſides, the Pretenders were as numerous, or at leaſt as noiſy, as the real Sufferers; and they oftentimes by their Importunities exercis'd the King's Good Nature to the Diſadvantage of the other. Every one was ready to celebrate and diſplay his own particular Merits; but never more plauſibly, than when they related to the glorious Work of the Reſtoration. Great Numbers were eager to be thought Sharers and Aſſiſtants in that important Affair; and not a few were really ſo, who had before been violent Promoters of all that was diſſerviceable to the Crown. Of this Sort the King thought himſelf particularly oblig'd to take Notice, and diſtinguiſh them by his Favours. It is believ'd that this Conſideration brought in the Earl of Mancheſter, the Lord Say, Mr. Hollis, Sir Anthony Aſhley-Cooper, and ſeveral others who had been great Agents in the grand Rebellion: Among whom the Earl of Mancheſter did ſignally diſtinguiſh himſelf by the moſt manifeſt Tokens of Repentance, and the moſt real Aſſurances of future Loyalty.

The Presbyterians encourag'd.

The Presbyterians having had a very conſiderable Hand in the Reſtoration, the King, for ſome Time eſpecially, ſhew'd a particular Regard to them, and made choice of two prime Miniſters of their Party, Mr. Richard Baxter and Mr. Edmund Calamy, beſides others, to be his Chaplains in Ordinary. His Majeſty's publick Acknowledgment of their Aſſiſtance, with other Circumſtances, afterwards gave that Party Occaſion to extend the Merits of their Services, and to challenge the chief Hand in that wonderful Revolution. This has been frequently inſiſted on, not ſo much to praiſe themſelves, as to aggravate the Ingratitude of a Government, which they ſay was ſo much indebted to Them; and this is ſtill continu'd as a Matter of warm Diſpute between the Church and Presbyterian Party. The moſt common Anſwer to this often repeated Challenge, is not ſo much a direct Denial of the Fact, as an Aſſertion, drawn from many Circumſtances in Hiſtory, 'That what-

'ever

'ever the Presbyterians did in this Matter, was only to relieve themselves from the Oppreſſions of the Independents, and other Sectaries, who had wreſted the Power out of their Hands; and not out of any Affection for the King, or the Church, which very much alter'd the Merit of their Services; eſpecially when they afterwards ſhew'd ſo little Repentance for thoſe Actions that produc'd all the Miſeries of the Nation.' But not to enter too far into a Matter of Controverſy, which may lead us aſide, we ſhall conclude and determine the Hiſtory of the Reſtoration in the Words of a great Man, written four or five Years after it: 'Shall the Honour of that immortal Work be fix'd on a private 'Sect? Whereas it was accompliſh'd by the immediate Favour of Divine Providence, by the Wiſdom of a victorious General, by the perpetual and immoveable Fidelity of the Royal Party, by the Hands, the Wiſhes, the Tongues, and the united Deſires of three Kingdoms. 'Tis 'true indeed, the Presbyterians went along with the mighty Torrent, 'but the whole Courſe of this happy Violence is not therefore to be attributed to them. It was in that, as in a ſudden Land Flood, which, 'as it comes down, carries with it Trees, and Stones, and Houſes, and 'all that it meets in the Way. And even all theſe which lay before quiet, 'nay, which reſiſted the firſt Waters while they were weak, do add to 'the Impetuoſity of the Current when it is going. But we muſt not 'therefore ſay that the Flood it ſelf took its Riſe from thence, ſeeing it 'was in truth caus'd by Rain coming down from Heaven, and by Streams 'flowing in from every Part of the Country.' And now it is Time to proceed to the healing Methods us'd after the Reſtoration, and to begin with the Convention-Parliament, that was to ſettle the Happineſs of the Kingdom.

1660. Car. 12 Reſ. 1.

The Share they had in the Reſtoration.

3. The Convention-Parliament, that had met on the 25th Day of April laſt, conſiſted of many conſiderable Perſons of different Parties; not without ſeveral of the King's Enemies, and two or three of the Regicides themſelves, as Hutchinſon and Laſſels. As to their Election, they were limited to particular Qualifications by the laſt long Parliament; one of which was, 'That all that advis'd, or voluntarily aided in the War 'againſt the Parliament in 1641, unleſs they have ſince given a Manifeſtation of their good Affection, they, or their Sons, ſhall be incapable 'of being elected Members of this Parliament.' The Speaker himſelf, Sir Harbottle Grimſtone, had been a Member of the Long Parliament, and had joyn'd with them, tho' after a more moderate way, till the Treaty of the Iſle of Wight; ſoon after which he was excluded the Houſe with many others. Notwithſtanding all the foremention'd Care, many of the Royal Party, and other Promoters of Peace, were elected; ſo that the Houſe of Commons conſiſted of ſuch a Number of Perſons as were fully diſpos'd to do Juſtice to the King, and to make up all the Breaches of the Nation. The Houſe of Peers, tho' at preſent without the Biſhops, ſeem'd ſtill more united, and were reſolv'd to make a full Compenſation for all former Errors and Miſcarriages: And both Houſes had made as large Steps towards an Accommodation, as Time wou'd permit, before the Arrival of the King. At which Time their Speeches and Compliments to his Majeſty at Whitehall, teſtify'd as much Joy, Affection, and Loyalty as can be expreſs'd by any Subjects in the World.

An Account of the CONVENTION.

Within two Days after his Arrival, his Majeſty, accompany'd with his two Royal Brothers, York and Gloceſter, Lord Chancellor Hyde, and many other Perſons of Honour, went in a ſolemn Manner by Water to the Houſe of Lords: Where, being ſeated on his Throne, and the Commons appearing at the Bar, he in a ſhort Speech acquainted them with the

the Occaſion and Cauſe of his preſent ſending for them, namely, to paſs thoſe Bills which he underſtood were prepared for him, all which were very material at this Time. 'The firſt was conſtituting the preſent Convention to be a Parliament: The ſecond for authorizing the Tax for 'Seventy Thouſand Pound per Menſem for three Months longer; and 'the third for Continuance of Proceſs and all judicial Proceedings.' Which being paſs'd, the Lord Chancellor in a handſom Speech told both Houſes, 'With how much Readineſs his Majeſty had paſs'd theſe im-'portant Acts, and how willing they ſhou'd at all times hereafter find 'him, to paſs any other that might tend to the Advantage and Benefit 'of the People; in a particular Manner deſiring, in his Majeſty's Be-'half, That the Bill of Oblivion, in which they had made ſo good a Pro-'greſs, might be expedited: That the People might ſee and know his 'Majeſty's extraordinary gracious Care to eaſe and free them from their 'Doubts and Fears; and that he had not forgotten his gracious Declara-'tion made at Breda, but that he wou'd in all Points make good the 'ſame.'

The Convention turn'd into a PARLIAMENT.

II. 1. The Convention, having now the Eſſence of a Parliament, tho' not the exact Form, proceeded in the great Affairs of the Nation with all Diligence and Vigour. They had, among others, three great Points to bring to Perfection, the general Act of Indemnity, the diſbanding of the Army, and the ſettling the Publick Revenues. The firſt was judg'd moſt neceſſary to begin withal: The Commons thought that neither themſelves, nor the People of England, were freed from that Guilt and Puniſhment which the unhappy Times had contracted, unleſs they laid hold on his Majeſty's Grace, mention'd in his Declaration from Breda; therefore they reſolv'd, 'That the Houſe doth declare, That 'they do in the Name of themſelves, and all the Commons of England, 'lay hold on his Majeſty's gracious Pardon, mention'd in his Declarati-'on, with Reference to the excepting of ſuch as ſhall be excepted in an 'Act of Pardon.' And accordingly a Declaration was drawn up, and ſolemnly preſented to the King in the Banquetting-Houſe by Mr. Denzil Hollis. The King graciouſly accepted of this Declaration, as well as another from the Lords; and about the ſame Time he iſſu'd out a Proclamation, declaring, 'That all ſuch of the late King's Judges, as did not 'render themſelves within fourteen Days, ſhou'd be excepted out of the 'General Pardon.' Upon which ſeveral of them ſurrender'd themſelves, while ſome made their Eſcape, and others were taken in their Flight. At the ſame Time ſeveral of the moſt eminent Officers under the Uſurpation, for their greater Security, got their particular Pardons exemplify'd under the Great-Seal of England. The King was very forward in granting theſe Pardons, and was more than ordinary preſſing for a ſpeedy paſſing the Act of Oblivion. Nor was his Majeſty wanting to give all ſuch publick Teſtimonies of a Virtue and Prudence, as might render him deſervedly Glorious in the Eſteem of all ſober and moderate Perſons; and that by ſeveral wholeſom Edicts, eſpecially by that ſeaſonable Proclamation which he publiſh'd, one of the firſt Things he did after his Arrival, 'For the diſcountenancing and puniſhing of Debauchery, Profaneneſs, 'and other Vices;' which began to break out from the ungovernable Joy of the Times.

Rot. Parl. Philips. Heath. Skinner. &c.

They begin with a general Act of Pardon.

Addreſſes, &c. Every Day produc'd Rejoycings and Triumphs; and the King was perpetually entertain'd with the loyal Addreſſes of his People, and with the ſolemn Congratulations of Foreign Princes and Potentates, who ſeem'd all to vie in Haſte and Zeal for ſending over their Ambaſſadors and Agents to compliment his Majeſty upon his happy Reſtoration to his Royal Royal Dignity and Government. Addreſſes came from all Parts of the Kingdom, as well as from Scotland and Ireland; and all thoſe Towns and Corporations that had bought out their ſeveral Fee-Farm Rents formerly belonging to the Crown, and by the late Common-Wealth alienated from it, ſent their Deputies to the King, to make a voluntary Surrender of them into his Hands. Others preſented him with Sums of Gold and other Gifts, according to their reſpective Abilities: But the City of London, as being the chief, and the Seat of Kings for many Ages, judg'd themſelves oblig'd in Point of Duty and Reputation, to exceed all the reſt in the Glory of their Performances towards their Soveraign; and therefore to the Splendor of their former Preparations at his firſt Reception and triumphant Entrance, they added the Expence of a moſt magnificent Entertainment at Guild-Hall, which was gloriouſly beautify'd and adorn'd for that great Occaſion. To which Place the King, his two Royal Brothers, the Lords of the Privy-Council, both the Houſes of Parliament, and the chief Officers of State being ſolemnly invited, were on the 5th of July conducted thither in mighty Pomp and State by the Lord Mayor and Grandees of the City, where they were feaſted in a munificent Manner with the moſt exquiſite Rarities, and admirable Muſick, and whatever elſe cou'd be thought agreeable and equal to ſuch an illuſtrious Aſſembly.

The King and Parliament entertained by the City.

2. All this Time the Parliament proceeded in the Act of Oblivion, but met with ſeveral Obſtructions that proceeded from the Animoſities of ſome who were for ſeverer Proceedings. The King himſelf was a great Promoter of the Act, and often ſate in Council about that, and the great Affairs of the Government: But notwithſtanding his great Care and Zeal to compoſe all publick Differences, many ill-affected Perſons in Pamphlets aſpers'd his Actions, endeavouring to inſinuate, That he intended nothing leſs than the Performance of his Promiſes from Breda. This caus'd him to ſend a remarkable Meſſage to the Houſe of Commons by Secretary Morrice, to quicken their Debates about the Act of Indemnity, as the beſt Means to quiet the Minds of his Subjects.

The Commons proceed in the Act of Indemnity.

He told them, 'He had too ample a Manifeſtation of their Affections 'and Duty towards him, to make the leaſt Doubt of the Continuance 'and Improvement thereof, or in the leaſt Degree to diſlike what they 'had done, or to complain of what they had left undone. He knew 'well the Weight of thoſe Affairs which depended upon their Counſels, 'and the Time that muſt unavoidably be ſpent, where there muſt be na'turally Difference of Opinions and Judgments amongſt thoſe, whoſe De'ſires of the Publick Peace and Safety were the ſame. And that neither 'He nor They muſt be overmuch troubled, if they found the good In'tentions and unwearied Pains, taken to reduce thoſe good Intentions 'into real Acts, for the Quiet and Security of the Nation, miſrepreſented, 'and miſ-interpreted, by thoſe who are in truth much afflicted to ſee the 'publick Diſtractions, by God's Bleſſing, ſo near an End; and by others 'upon whoſe Weakneſs, Fears and Jealouſies, the Activity and Cunning 'of thoſe ill Men hath had too great an Influence. That how wonderful 'and miraculous ſoever the great Harmony of Affections between him 'and his Subjects is; yet it is not to be thought that God Almighty had 'wrought that Miracle to that Degree, that a Nation ſo miſerably divid'ed for ſo many Years, wou'd be ſo ſoon and intirely united in their Af'fections and Endeavours, as were to be wiſhed; but that the Evil Con'ſciences of many continu'd ſo awake for Miſchief, they wou'd 'not be willing to take Reſt themſelves, or ſuffer others to take it: That

The King's Meſſage to them concerning it.

'they all had too ſad Experience of the unhappy Effects of Fears and 'Jealouſies, how groundleſs and unreaſonable ſoever, not to think it very 'neceſſary to apply all timely and proper Remedies to thoſe Diſtempers, 'and to prevent the Inconveniencies and Miſchiefs which ſo naturally flow 'from thence: That he well foreſaw, That the great Violation, which 'the Laws of the Land had for ſo many Years ſuſtain'd, had fill'd the 'Hearts of the People with terrible Apprehenſions of Inſecurity to them-'ſelves, if all they had ſaid and done, ſhou'd be liable to be examin'd and 'puniſh'd by thoſe Laws which had been ſo violated. And that nothing 'cou'd eſtabliſh the Security of King and People, but a full Proviſion, that 'the Returning to the Reverence and Obedience of the Law, which is 'good for All, ſhou'd not turn to the Ruin of Any who were willing and 'fit to receive that Protection hereafter from the Law, and to pay that 'Subjection to it, which were juſt and neceſſary. And therefore he made 'a free Offer of a General Pardon, in ſuch a Manner as was expreſs'd in 'his Declaration; and how ready and deſirous he was to make good the 'ſame, appear'd by his Proclamation iſſu'd out upon and according to 'their Deſire. However, it was evident, That all he had offer'd or did 'offer, did not enough compoſe the Minds of the People; nor in their 'Opinions cou'd their Security be provided for, till the Act of Indemni-'ty and Oblivion was paſs'd.' He told them, 'He had found great In-'duſtry us'd to perſwade his good Subjects, that he had no Mind to make 'good his Promiſes, which he deſired to perform for his own Sake as 'well as theirs. Therefore he did very earneſtly recommend it to them, 'That all Expedition might be us'd in the paſſing that moſt neceſſary Act, 'whereby his good Subjects generally wou'd be ſatisfy'd, that their Secu-'rity was in their own Hands, and depended upon their future Actions, 'and that they were Free for all paſt; and ſo the Endeavours of ill Men 'wou'd be diſappointed, who wou'd perſwade them not to do well Now, 'becauſe they had done amiſs Heretofore. And that he was the more 'engag'd to this Recommendation, becauſe upon the Reflection of their 'eminent Zeal and Affection for his Service, and hearty Concurrence with 'him in all things deſired from them, Men were apt to perſwade others, 'tho' not believing it themſelves, That the paſſing this Act was there-'fore not deſired, becauſe he did not enough preſs the Diſpatch of it; 'which he did deſire from his Heart, and was confident they wou'd the 'ſooner do it, upon his earneſt Recommendation.

The Commons diſpatch the Bill.

This Meſſage did ſo much quicken the Debates of the Commons, that they diſpatcht the Bill in a very ſhort Time after, and ſent it up to the Lords; by which the Peoples Minds were much compos'd, and the more, becauſe his Majeſty by a Proclamation after it, did declare a Kind of Impatience for the Delay of it. The Commons had been very favourable, and in the Act had excepted for Life and Eſtate but a few of the moſt notorious Regicides; but the Lords were more ſtrict and warm in their Debates, being incited by the Importunities of ſeveral Widows and Relations of thoſe who had ſuffer'd Death by the late Uſurpers. Therefore they enter'd into a Conſultation, to except all from Pardon that had been Judges in any High Court of Juſtice. But the Clemency of the King extended to all who were not immediately guilty of his Father's Murder; and obſerving that thoſe Debates much obſtructed the ſpeeding and perfecting that Bill he ſo earneſtly deſired to have finiſh'd, on the 27th Day of July, about two Months after his Reſtoration, he went to the Houſe; and in a remarkable Speech, he expreſs'd his Zeal for it in theſe Words.

The King's Speech to the Lords upon the ſame Subject.

'My Lords, When I came firſt hither to you, which was within two 'or three Days after I came to White-Hall, I did, with as much Ear-'neſtneſs as I cou'd, both by my ſelf and the Chancellor, recommend to 'you

1660. Car. 12 Ref. 1.

'you and the Houſe of Commons, the ſpeedy Diſpatch of the Act of In- 'demnity, as a neceſſary Foundation of that Security we all pray for. I 'did ſince, by a particular Meſſage to the Houſe of Commons, again
'preſs them to haſten that Important Work; and did likewiſe by a Pro-
'clamation, publiſh to all the Kingdom, That I did with Impatience ex- 'pect that that Act wou'd be preſented to Me for my Aſſent, as the moſt
'reaſonable and ſolid Foundation of that Peace, Happineſs and Security
'I hope and pray for to my ſelf, and all my Dominions. I will not deny
'it to you, That I thought the Houſe of Commons too long about that 'Work; and therefore now, it is come up to you, I wou'd not have you
'guilty of the ſame Delay. I thank God, I have the ſame Intentions and 'Reſolutions now I am here with you, which I had at Breda; and be'lieve that I owe my being here, to God's Bleſſing upon the Intentions
'and Reſolutions I then expreſs'd to have. I will read to you what I 'then ſaid:

'And to the end that Fear of Puniſhment may not engage any, conſci-
'ous to themſelves of what is paſt, to a Perſeverence in Guilt for the fu- 'ture, by oppoſing the Quiet and Happineſs of their Country, in the Re-
'ſtoration both of King, Peers, and People, to their juſt, ancient and fun- 'damental Rights; We do by theſe Preſents declare, That we do grant a
'free and general Pardon, which we are ready, upon Demand, to paſs
'under our Great Seal of England, to all our Subjects of what Degree or
'Quality ſoever, who within forty Days after the publiſhing hereof, ſhall
'lay hold upon this our Grace and Favour, and ſhall by any publick Act
'declare their doing ſo, and that they return to the Loyalty and Obedience
'of good Subjects; excepting only ſuch Perſons as ſhall hereafter be ex-
'cepted by Parliament. Thoſe only excepted, Let all our Subjects, how
'faulty ſoever, rely upon the Word of a King, ſolemnly given by this pre-
'ſent Declaration, That no Crime whatſoever committed againſt us, or
'our Royal Father, before the Publication of this, ſhall ever riſe in Judg- 'ment, or be brought in Queſtion againſt any of them, to the leaſt Inda-
'magement of them, either in their Lives, Liberties, or Eſtates, or, as 'far forth as lies in our Power, ſo much as to the Prejudice of their 'Reputations, by any Reproach, or Terms of Diſtinction from the reſt of
'our beſt Subjects; we deſiring, and ordaining, That henceforward all
'Notes of Diſcord, Separation, and Difference of Parties, be utterly a-
'boliſhed among all our Subjects; whom we invite and conjure to a per- 'fect Union among themſelves, under our Protection, for the Re-ſettle-
'ment of our juſt Rights, and theirs, in a Free Parliament; by which,
'upon the Word of a King, we will be adviſed.

'My Lords, If you do not join with me in extinguiſhing this Fear,
'which keeps the Hearts of Men awake, and apprehenſive of Safety and 'Security; you keep Me from performing my Promiſe, which if I had 'not made, I am perſwaded neither I, nor you had been now here: I
'pray let us not deceive thoſe who brought, or permitted us to come 'together. I knew well there were ſome Men, who cou'd neither for'give themſelves, nor be forgiven by us; and I thank you for your Ju-
'ſtice towards thoſe, the immediate Murtherers of my Father: And I 'will deal truely with you, I never thought of excepting any other. I
'pray think well upon what I have offer'd, and the Benefit you and I 'have receiv'd from that Offer; and encourage and oblige all other Per-
'ſons, by not excluding them from the Benefit of this Act. This Mer'cy and Indulgence is the beſt Way to bring them to a true Repentance,
'and to make them more ſevere to themſelves, when they find we are 'not ſo to them. It will make them good Subjects to me, and good 'Friends and Neighbours to you; and we have then all our End, and

1660 Car. 12 Ref. 1.

'you ſhall find this the ſecureſt Expedient to prevent future Miſchief. 'Therefore I do earneſtly deſire and conjure you, to depart from all par- 'ticular Animoſities and Revenge, or Memory of paſt Provocations; 'and that you will paſs this Act without other Exceptions, than of thoſe 'who were immediately guilty of the Murther of my Father.' Then, after a few Expreſſions of leſs Moment, and a Word or two concerning Ireland, he thus concluded: 'I do again conjure you, That you will 'uſe all Expedition in the Diſpatch of this Bill.

3. This Speech did not only expedite the Paſſing of this Act in the Houſe of Peers, but gave a general Satisfaction to the People, who were exceedingly eas'd in their Minds with the King's immoveable Care on the Behalf of all his Subjects. And ſhortly after, to prevent all Delays, and remove all Impediments, the King ſent a very obliging Meſſage, to be communicated to both Houſes in theſe Words: 'His Majeſty is well in- 'form'd of the Value of thoſe Conceſſions, which are to paſs in the Act 'of Indemnity, which relate entirely to his Majeſty's Profits, and which 'have little or no Relation to the War: He knows well that the Arrears 'of the Wars, the Alienations with Licenſe, Purveyance, Reſpite of 'Homage, the Arrears of the Rents ſtill in the Hands of the Tenants, 'and the other Particulars, amount to a vaſt great Sum; all which are 'releas'd and diſcharg'd by this Act. But his Majeſty is ſo well ſatisfy'd 'of the good Affection of the Houſe of Commons, and of their Inten- 'tions and Reſolutions to ſettle ſuch a Revenue upon his Majeſty, as 'may preſerve the Crown from Want, and from being undervalu'd by 'its Neighbours: That he is reſolv'd not to inſiſt upon any Particular, 'which the Houſe of Commons deſir'd his Majeſty ſhou'd releaſe; and 'therefore as his Majeſty thanks the Houſe of Peers for the Informati- 'on they have given him, and for the Care they have expreſs'd for his 'Majeſty's Profit, ſo he is well contented that that Clauſe ſhall paſs in 'ſuch a Manner as the Houſe of Commons have ſet down, and conti- 'nues his earneſt Deſires, that all Expedition be us'd in paſſing the ſaid 'Act in the Manner he hath formerly expreſs'd.' This ſeaſonable and condeſcending Meſſage did not only produce the hearty Thanks of the Houſe of Commons, but likewiſe a particular Order 'For the ſettling 'ſuch a Revenue on his Majeſty, as may maintain the Splendor and Gran- 'deur of the Kingly Office, &c.

He ſends an obliging Meſſage after it.

Nor was his Majeſty's Mind ſo intent upon this neceſſary Affair, as to neglect the other Concerns of Government: But obſerving, That the late Differences of his People had created many Animoſities among them, which occaſion'd frequent Duels, he thought fit to prevent the Miſchiefs of them by a Proclamation, by which he manifeſted ſo great a Diſlike of Duels, as 'Strictly to command all his Subjects whatſoever, neither by 'Themſelves nor any Other, by Meſſage, Word or Writing, or other 'Ways or Means to Challenge, or cauſe to be Challeng'd any Perſon or Per- 'ſons to fight in Duel, nor to carry, accept, nor conceal any Challenge, nor 'actually to fight, or be Second to any therein.' And he further declared, 'That every Perſon offending againſt his Commands herein, ſhou'd not only 'incurr his Diſpleaſure, but be incapable of holding any Office in his 'Service, and never after be permitted to come to Court or preferr'd, 'beſides the ſuffering ſuch Puniſhment as the Law ſhou'd inflict on ſuch 'Offenders: And all Perſons that ſhou'd accept or know of ſuch Chal- 'lenges, and not reveal the ſame to one of the Privy-Council, or the 'next Juſtice of Peace, ſhou'd be liable to the ſame Penalties.' And laſt of all, he was ſo ſtrict in the Matter, as to forbid 'any Interceſſion to be 'made for Offenders againſt this Proclamation.

His Proclamation againſt Duels.

At

At the ſame Time the King took no leſs Care of the Benefit and Revenues of the Church, eſpecially with Relation to poor Vicarages and other Endowments, and wrote Letters to all the Biſhops, Deans and Chapters in the Kingdom, teſtifying his Will and Pleaſure, 'That no Leaſe 'be granted of any Rectory or Parſonage, belonging to any of them, or 'their Succeſſors, unleſs they firſt provided, That the reſpective Vicara- 'ges or Curates Places, where no Vicarages are endow'd, have ſo much 'Revenues in Glebe Lands, or other Emoluments, as commonly will a- 'mount to eighty Pounds per Annum; or more, if it will bear it: And 'where the Rectories are of ſmall Value, and cannot admit of ſuch Por- 'tion to the Vicar or Curate, that then one half of the Profits of ſuch 'Rectory be reſerv'd for the Maintenance of ſuch Vicar or Curate, &c. All which being communicated to the Houſe of Commons, new Thanks were return'd by them to his Majeſty, in which they particularly teſtify'd 'the great Joy they took in the Goodneſs and Favour he had expreſs'd 'to his People.' And after that proceeded to prepare ſuch a Bill as ſhou'd beſt anſwer his Majeſty's pious Intentions.

His Care of the Church.

4. The great Act of Indemnity, in a ſhort Time, was ſent from the Lords to the Commons with ſeveral Alterations, to which the Commons were unwilling to agree: For the latter had ſubjected twenty, that were not the King's Judges, to be liable to ſuch Pains and Penalties, not extending to Life, as ſhou'd be inflicted by another Act to be paſs'd in this Parliament: Whereas the Lords finding the King's Inclination to tend towards the pardoning of all but ſuch as were his Father's Judges, or otherwiſe Actors in his Murder, they diſagreed to that Part of the Act, as to all thoſe nam'd by the Commons, except Sir Arthur Haſlerigg, Sir Henry Vane, and Colonel John Lambert, who were eſteem'd to be ſo maliciouſly active in Oppoſition to his Majeſty's Government, as to be excepted from any Conditions of Pardon. The Lords were more ſtrict as to the King's Judges, and thought none ought to be ſpared, even thoſe who had ſurrender'd themſelves upon the Proclamation; but the Commons were of Opinion that a Difference ought to be made between thoſe and the reſt. They for ſome Time adhered to their firſt Reſolutions; but after ſeveral free Conferences, Matters were ſo compromis'd, that they agreed with the Lords in all Things, except ſome little Alterations to their Form of the Act: Vane and Lambert were excepted as to Life and Eſtate, but Haſlerigg remain'd liable to ſuch Pains, Penalties and Forfeitures, as ſhou'd be inflicted on him, not extending to Life; and the reſt of thoſe, put under the ſame Qualification by the Commons that were not of the King's Judges, were with others made only incapable of Offices, &c. The Favour ſhewn to Sir Arthur Haſlerigg was chiefly owing to General Monk, who in the Beginning of the Reſtoration, being unwilling to make a Man deſperate, who had two Regiments at his Command, had promis'd him upon his Submiſſion, to ſecure both his Life and Eſtate. This being made known in a Conference by the Houſe of Commons, was juſtify'd with great Modeſty by the General in the Houſe of Peers, and his Life was thereupon pardon'd in the Act, and ſhortly after his Eſtate alſo was, at the Mediation of the General, granted to his Heir, a Perſon averſe to his Father's Principles: Sir Arthur himſelf, a while after his Impriſonment, dying of a Feaver in the Tower.

The Lords and Commons agree about the Act of INDEMNITY.

At the laſt Conference between the Lords and Commons, Chancellor Hyde took Occaſion to ſpeak of the King's Affection to his People by a very remarkable Inſtance, affirming, 'That he, being employ'd in a ſo- 'lemn

1660. Car. 12 Ref. 1.

'lemn Embaſſy to the Court of Spain, had it ſtrictly given him in Charge 'by his preſent Majeſty, to avow and declare, That the horrid Murther 'of his Royal Father was not the Act of the Parliament, or the People 'of England, but of a very wretched, and a very little Company of Miſ- 'creants in this Kingdom.' This was ſo very pleaſing and obliging to the Houſe of Commons, that upon the Report of it to them, they order'd ſuch of the Privy-Council as were Members of that Houſe, 'That they 'preſent to his Majeſty the humble, hearty and thankful Senſe this 'Houſe hath of his Majeſty's Juſtice and Favour, in making this juſt De- 'fence for the Parliament, and People of England.' And within a few 'Days after, they compleated the much deſired Act of Indemnity.

The Subſtance of the ACT.

The Act was large and very extenſive, and ſuch as was moſt likely to compoſe the Minds of a divided and diſtracted People, and to give Eaſe and Quiet to various and innumerable Criminals. One healing Clauſe was, 'That if any Perſon objected againſt another any Words of Reproach, 'tending to revive the Memory of the late Differences, he ſhou'd pay 'ten Pounds, if a Gentleman, and forty Shillings, if one of a more infe- 'rior Degree. As to the Exceptions, the Act gave no Benefit to Row, 'Garland, Harvey, Smith, Martin, Waller, Titchburn, Fleetwood, J. 'Temple, Wait, Mein, Haveningham, Pennington, P. Temple, Lilburn, 'Millington, Potter, Wogan, Downs, Scroop, Liſle, Say, Walton, Har- 'riſon, Whally, Barkſteed, Ludlow, Liveſey, Okey, Hewſon, Goffe, 'Holland, Challoner, Carew, Jones, Corbet, Clement, Scott, Cawley, 'Love, Dixwell, Blagrave, Cook, Broughton, Dendy, Hewlett, Peters, 'Hacker, Axtell, or any of them; nor to thoſe two diſguis'd upon the 'Scaffold the 30th of January 1648.' All which Perſons, for being inſtrumental in the Murther of the late King, are wholly excluded: But in regard the nineteen firſt-mention'd had render'd themſelves according to the Proclamation of the 6th of June, and thereby pretended to ſome Favour, it was enacted, 'That if the ſaid Row, and the reſt ſo firſt men- 'tion'd, are attainted, their Execution ſhou'd be ſuſpended, untill the 'King and Parliament ſhou'd order the ſame.' Only Mr. Scroop, for vindicating his Crime, was again excepted. 'Next, Cromwell, Ireton, 'Bradſhaw, and Pride, though dead, were excepted, and the Lands and 'Goods, Rights and Truſts of them, and one and twenty others deceas'd, 'viz. Ewer, Danvers, Maleverer, Purefoy, Blakeſtone, Conſtable, 'Dean, Allen, Pelham, Moor, Alred, Edwards, Norton, Ven, Andrews, 'Stapely, Horton, Fry, Hammond, Skippon and Bouchier, were made 'ſubject to ſuch Penalties and Forfeitures as by another Act to be paſs'd 'ſhou'd be ordain'd. Moreover, Mounſon, Mildmay, Harrington and 'Wallop, as not having ſign'd the Warrant for the Execution of the King, 'were reſerv'd to future Penalties and Forfeitures, not extending to Life. 'Phelps and Haſterigg were put into the ſame Condition. Hut- 'chinſon and Laſſels, were made incapable to execute any Place of Truſt, 'and to pay one Year's Value by Way of Fine. Oliver St. John, and 'ſeventeen others nam'd in the Act, were to be excluded from any Be- 'nefit by this Act, if they accepted or executed any Office in England, 'either Eccleſiaſtical, Civil, or Military. And all that had given Sen- 'tence of Death in any of the late illegal High-Courts of Juſtice, except 'Colonel Ingoldsby, and Colonel Thomlinſon, were diſabled from being 'Members in any Parliament, or bearing any Office in England or Wales. 'Laſtly, no Perſons were to be indemnify'd who had enter'd into any 'Lands, &c. called Fabrick Lands, or poſſeſs'd themſelves of any Rents or 'Revenues given for the Repair of any Cathedral or any other Church, 'or who had ſacrilegiouſly enrich'd themſelves by the converting of the 'Plate, Utenſils, and Materials belonging to ſuch Churches, to their pri'vate

'vate Uſe.' After all we muſt not forget that Sir Henry Vane and John Lambert were intirely excepted out of the Act. 1660.

With this, ſome other Acts were prepar'd for the Royal Aſſent, particularly One for Confirmation of Judicial Proceedings; which was likewiſe a very healing Act, and highly neceſſary at this Juncture; ſince without this, beſides other Inconveniencies, there muſt have been ſo great a Concuſſion in moſt Mens Eſtates, as wou'd have render'd them ſubject to perpetual Difficulties and Uncertainties. By this All Proceedings in Law, Equity, &c. ſince the firſt of May 1642, were confirm'd, notwithſtanding any Defect of Legal Power, or Difference in Stile or Title; but ſtill with ſome Reſtrictions, eſpecially as to Crown and Church Lands, where no Purchaſers cou'd pretend or expect to have a Right. A Third was an Act for a Proviſion of Mony to pay off the Armies and Navy, which was by an extraordinary Poll, that variouſly comprehended Perſons of all Ranks and Conditions. The Fourth was an Act for reſtraining the taking of exceſſive Uſury, which makes it highly penal to any that ſhou'd take above ſix Pounds for the Loan of a hundred Pounds for a Year, and to any Scrivener or Broaker that ſhou'd take above five Shillings for the ſame, or above twelve Pence for the making or renewing a Bond or Bill. The laſt publick Act was for a perpetual Anniverſary Thankſgiving on the twenty ninth Day of May, the Day of his Majeſty's Nativity and Reſtoration. Car. 14 Reſ. 1. Other Acts.

Theſe Acts being ready, the King on the 29th of Auguſt paſs'd them, with the following Speech to both Houſes: 'My Lords, and Gentlemen 'of the Houſe of Commons, I have been here ſome times before with you, 'but never with more Willingneſs, than I am at this Time. And there 'are few Men in the Kingdom have longed more impatiently to have thoſe 'Bills paſs'd, than I have done to paſs them; and I hope they will be the 'Foundation of Peace and Security to us all. I do very willingly pardon 'all that is pardon'd by this Act of Indemnity, to that Time which is 'mention'd in the Bill: Nay, I will tell you, That from that Time to 'this Day, I will not uſe great Severity, except in ſuch Caſes where the 'Malice is notorious, and the Publick Peace exceedingly concern'd. But 'for the Time to come, the ſame Diſcretion and Conſcience, which 'diſpos'd me to the Clemency I have expreſs'd (which is moſt agreeable 'to my Nature) will oblige me to all Rigour and Severity, how contra'ry ſoever it be to my Nature, towards thoſe who ſhall not now acqui'eſce, but continue to manifeſt their Sedition and Diſlike of the Govern'ment, either in Actions or Words. And I muſt conjure you all, my 'Lords and Gentlemen, to concurr with me in this juſt and neceſſary Se'verity; and that you will, in your ſeveral Stations, be ſo jealous of the 'Publick Peace, and of my particular Honour, that you will cauſe ex'emplary Juſtice upon thoſe who are guilty of ſeditious Speeches or 'Writings, as well as thoſe who break out into ſeditious Actions: And 'that you will believe thoſe who delight in reproaching and traducing 'My Perſon, not to be well affected to You and the Publick Peace. Ne'ver King valu'd himſelf more upon the Affections of his People than I 'do: Nor do I know a better way to make my ſelf ſure of your Affe'ctions, than by being juſt and kind to you all: And whilſt I am ſo, I 'pray let the World ſee, That I am poſſeſs'd of your Affections. For your 'Poll-Bill, I thank you as much as if the Mony were to come into my 'own Coffers; and wiſh with all my Heart that it may amount to as great 'a Sum as you reckon upon. —— I pray very earneſtly, as faſt as Mony 'comes in, diſcharge that great Burthen of the Navy, and disband the 'Army as faſt as you can; and till you can disband the reſt, make a Pro'viſion for their Supply. I do conjure you, as you love me, let me not 'hear The King's Speech at his paſſing them.

1660. Car. 12 Ref. 1.

'hear the Noiſe of Free Quarter, which will be imputed to my want of 'Care and Government, how innocent ſoever I am. I am ſo confident 'of your Affections, that I will not move you in any thing that immedi-'ately relates to my ſelf: And yet I muſt tell you, That I am not richer, 'that is, I have not ſo much Mony in my Purſe, as when I came to you. 'The Truth is, I have liv'd principally ever ſince upon what I brought 'with me, which was indeed your Mony: You ſent it to me, and I 'thank you for it. The weekly Expence of the Navy eats up all you 'have given me by the Bill of Tonnage and Poundage: Nor have I been 'able to give my Brothers one Shilling ſince I came into England, nor 'to keep any Table in my Houſe but where I eat my ſelf. And that 'which troubles me moſt, is, to ſee many of you come to me at White-'hall, and to think you muſt go ſome where elſe to ſeek a Dinner. I 'do not mention this to you, as any thing that troubles me: Do but take 'Care of the Publick, and for what is neceſſary for the Peace and Quiet 'of the Kingdom, and take your own Time for my own Particular; 'which I am ſure you will provide for with as much Affection and Frank-'neſs as I can deſire.

Part of the Speaker's Speech.

At the ſame Time a long Speech was made by the Speaker, Sir Harbottle Grimſtone, who diſcourſing upon the ſeveral Bills preſented to the King, upon the Act of Indemnity, he has theſe Words: 'There is ano-'ther Bill intituled, An Act of Free and General Pardon, Indemnity, and 'Oblivion: It may well be call'd a free Pardon; for your Majeſty was 'pleas'd to offer it before we had Confidence enough to ask it, and at a 'Time when your People had moſt need of it; and it may as truly be 'called a General Pardon in reſpect of the Extenſiveneſs of it. But 'looking over a long, black, prodigious, diſmal Roll and Catalogue of 'Malefactors, we there met not with Men, but with Monſters, guilty of 'Blood, precious Blood, precious Royal Blood, never to be remember'd 'without Tears; incomparable in all kinds of Villanies that ever were 'acted by the worſt of Miſcreants, Perverters of Religion, Subverters 'of the Government, Falſe to God, Diſloyal to the beſt of Kings, and 'Perfidious to their Country. And therefore we find an abſolute and 'indiſpenſible Neceſſity incumbent on us, to except and ſet ſome apart 'for an Antidote to expel the Poiſon of Sin and Rebellion out of others, 'and that they may be made Sacrifices to appeaſe God's Wrath, and ſa-'tisfy Divine Vengeance.'

The Commons Care in ſettling the Revenues of the Crown.

5. The Parliament underſtanding from the King that they were to have a Receſs after the 13th of the next Month, proceeded with all Vigour to compleat ſome Bills under Conſideration. That which was of moſt immediate Importance, was a Bill for the ſpeedy disbanding the Army and Garriſons, upon which they were very intent. The next was the Eſtabliſhment of the Revenues of the Crown; and underſtanding the preſent Wants of the Royal Family, they began with a Preſent of ten Thouſand Pounds to the Duke of York, and another of ſeven Thouſand to the Duke of Gloceſter. They conſider'd that the Misfortunes of the late King, and the conſequent Miſeries, were originally owing to his Want of Mony; and therefore they particularly examin'd into that Matter. They found the Total of the Revenue which came unto his late Majeſty, amounted from the Year 1637 to the Year 1641 incluſive, communibus Annis, unto 895819 Pounds; whereof 210493 Pounds did ariſe by Payment partly not warranted by Law, and partly expired: And that the Expences of his late Majeſty's Government did amount, communibus Annis, to about 200000 Pounds a Year above the Receipt; in which Computation the Incomes ariſing by Ship-Mony are not comprehended. Next, they found found that the preſent Revenue of his now Majeſty, by the additional Compoſition for the Court of Wards, may be computed at 819389 Pounds, or thereabouts; which Revenue they thought too little for the Support and Dignity of the Crown of England; therefore they reſolv'd to make a very conſiderable Addition. 1660. Car. 12 Reſ. 1.

But before they cou'd compleat that Matter, having prepared ſeven or eight publick Bills for the Royal Aſſent, on the 13th of September his Majeſty came to the Houſe of Peers and paſs'd them all. What they were, and the Nature of them, will appear from the Speaker's Speech, as following, ‘ Sir, the Royal Favour and Fatherly Kindneſs unto your People, ‘ hath naturaliz'd their Affections to your Perſon, and their Obedience ‘ to your Precepts: And as it is their Duty, ſo it is their Deſire to ma- ‘ niſeſt and evidence the Truth and Reality thereof, by ſupporting and ‘ upholding that Grandeur and Splendor which is due to the Majeſty of ‘ ſo meritorious a Prince as your ſelf; and therefore they have reſolv'd, ‘ uno Flatû and Nemine Contradicente, to make up your Majeſty's con- ‘ ſtant and ordinary Revenue twelve hundred thouſand Pounds per An- ‘ num. But finding as to ſome Part of the Settlement of that Revenue, ‘ there will be a Neceſſity of making uſe of the Legiſlative Power; and ‘ that the Bills brought into the Houſe for that Purpoſe cannot poſſibly ‘ be made ready for your Royal Aſſent, until the next Meeting of your ‘ Houſes again, therefore they have taken your Majeſty's preſent Supply ‘ into their Conſideration; and firſt how to raiſe it in the moſt expeditious ‘ way to anſwer your preſent Occaſions. They have wrapt up their Af- ‘ fections to your Majeſty, and the Truſt repoſed in them by the People, ‘ in one of theſe Bills here in my Hand, intituled, An Act for the ſpee- ‘ dy raiſing of a hundred thouſand Pounds for a preſent Supply, to be le- ‘ vy'd by way of Land-Tax within the Space of one Month.---- Sir, they ‘ have likewiſe paſs'd another Bill with Rules and Inſtructions how to im- ‘ power and direct your Commiſſioners in what manner to disband your ‘ Army and Garriſons, and to pay off ſome Part of your Fleet, and to begin ‘ with thoſe Ships now in Harbour. But not knowing for certain whe- ‘ ther the Monies upon the Poll-Bill, which is deſigned for that Pur- ‘ poſe, will be ſufficient to defray that Charge; and being unwilling that ‘ any thing ſhould be wanting on their Parts to perfect ſo good a Work, ‘ ſo acceptable to your Majeſty, and ſo grateful to all your People, they ‘ have paſs'd another Act for raiſing a hundred and forty thouſand Pounds, ‘ at ſeventy thouſand Pounds per Menſem, to begin the firſt of Novem- ‘ ber. —— Sir, there are other Bills likewiſe which wait and attend for ‘ your Royal Aſſent; one entituled, An Act for regulating the Bay ‘ Trade, which is the only way to keep up the Credit of that which is now ‘ in ſome Danger to be loſt: When the Credit of Trade begins to de- ‘ cline, the Trade it ſelf decays with it, and is never long liv'd after ‘ it.---- Sir, there is another Bill intitled, An Act for encouraging and ‘ encreaſing Shipping and Navigation; which will enable your Majeſty to ‘ give Laws to foreign Princes abroad, as your Royal Predeceſſors have ‘ done before you.----- Sir, there is another Bill entitled, An Act for re- ‘ ſtoring ſome Miniſters into their Places, out of which they have been ‘ long and injuriouſly ejected and expos'd, and for confirming others in ‘ vacant Places. Crazy Titles need your Majeſty's Help, as much as ‘ crazy Bodies need the Help of a Phyſician: And what your Majeſty ‘ hath already done in that kind to this Parliament, and what you are now ‘ about to do, and what you have ever expreſs'd your Readineſs in, if ‘ we cou'd be as ready as your Majeſty is to give, we hope to baniſh all ‘ Fears and Jealouſies out of Mens Minds for the future, and teach them ‘ with much Confidence and Contentedneſs to reſt, and wholly rely up- ‘ on your Majeſty's Grace and Goodneſs, for what may be thought fur- ‘ ther

The King's Speech at paſſing ſeveral Bills.

'ther neceſſary to be done hereafter, when a fitting Opportunity ſhall 'be offer'd at the next Meeting of your Houſes of Parliament.'---

In the paſſing of theſe, and about fourteen private Bills, which related chiefly to the reſtoring of ſome Perſons to their Eſtates, his Majeſty made this following Speech: 'My Lords and Gentlemen, If my Preſence here 'had not been requiſite for the paſſing of theſe many Bills, I did always 'intend to ſee you together before your Adjournment, that I may again 'thank you for the many good things you have done for Me and the 'Kingdom: And in truth, I do thank you more for what you have done 'for the Publick, than what you have done for my Own Particular; and 'yet I do thank you for that with all my Heart. But I confeſs to you, I 'do thank you more for the Proviſion you have made to prevent Free 'Quarter, during the Time the Army ſhall be disbanded, which I take 'to be given for my Satisfaction, than I do for the Preſent you have 'made me for my own particular Occaſions. And I do promiſe you, 'which is the beſt way I can take to gratify you, I will not apply one 'Penny of that Mony to my own particular Occaſions, what Shift ſoe-'ver I make, till it is evident to me that the Publick will not ſtand in 'need of it; and if it do, every Penny of it ſhall be disburs'd that 'way, and I dare ſay I ſhall not be the poorer for it. I cannot but take 'Notice of one particular Bill I have paſs'd, which may ſeem of an ex-'traordinary Nature [An Act for reſtoring the Marqueſs of Hertford to 'the Dukedom of Somerſet.] But you all know it is for an extraordinary 'Perſon, who hath merited ſo much of the King my Father, and my 'ſelf, as a Subject can do: And I am none of thoſe who think, That Sub-'jects, by performing their Duties in an extraordinary Manner, do not 'oblige their Princes to reward them in an extraordinary Manner. There 'can be no Danger from ſuch a Precedent; and I hope no Man will en-'vy him, becauſe I have done what a good Maſter ſhould do to ſuch a 'Servant. My Lords and Gentlemen, I will not deny to you, That I had 'ſome Inclination, when I conſented to your Deſire for your Receſs, to 'have made a Seſſion, which I thought moſt agreeable to the ancient Or-'der of Parliaments; and I hope you will joyn with me in reducing of 'Parliaments to their ancient Rules and Orders, the Deviation from 'which hath done us no Good. And I think there were never ſo many 'Bills paſs'd as I have this Day, without a Seſſion: But upon the Deſire, 'and Reaſons given by the Houſe of Commons, for an Adjournment, 'without a Seſſion, I do very willingly part from that Inclination, and 'do as willingly give you Leave, and direct you to adjourn your ſelves 'to the Sixth of November, when I hope you will meet again: And in 'the mean Time that you will be welcome to your Countries, and do 'much Service.'

The Subſtance of the Chancellor's Speech.

After which his Majeſty referr'd to the Lord Chancellor to ſpeak of many other things which he had to recommend to them: For in the Time of their Receſs, the Army was to be daily disbanding; of which many ſuſpicious Diſcourſes had been ſpread abroad by diſaffected Perſons: Some ſaid the King wou'd keep them up; and others, that they wou'd not ſuffer themſelves to be disbanded. And tho' an Act was paſs'd to confirm Miniſters, yet farther Order was to be taken in Reference to Church Government, and particularly in reſpect to tender Conſciences; as alſo about Purchaſes and Sales of Publick Lands, which had, without Iſſue, much taken up the Time of both Houſes. And therefore ſince the Parliament was to adjourn before theſe Matters were effected, it was expedient to ſatisfy the People with the King's generous Intentions in theſe and other Affairs. Accordingly the Lord Chancellor diſplay'd his Eloquence in a long Speech, conſiſting of Variety of Subjects, principally tending to the compoſing and healing of all former Differences. As to the the Army, he told them, ‘ That his Majeſty cou'd not take it unkindly ‘ at their Hands who thought he wou'd not disband them: It was a ſober ‘ and rational Jealouſy; ſince no other Prince in Europe cou'd be willing ‘ to disband ſuch an Army, every Way ſo valuable, &c.' But what he alledg'd, as the greateſt Felicity to a diſtracted Nation, was the Act of Indemnity; in which he particularly inſiſted upon that moſt charitable Clauſe, ‘ That made it penal to any Perſons, who within three Years, ‘ ſhou'd maliciouſly call, or object againſt others any Name or Words of ‘ Reproach, any Ways tending to revive the Memory of the late Diffe- ‘ rences.' Nay farther, he let them know, ‘ That even evil and envi- ‘ ous Looks, murmuring and diſcontented Hearts, were directly againſt ‘ the Equity of the Statute, and, as far as they were diſcover'd, ſhou'd ‘ be ſo eſteem'd by his Majeſty.' Therefore he conjured them from the King, ‘ to joyn with Him in reſtoring the whole Nation to its primitive ‘ Temper, and Integrity, to its old Good Manners, to its old Good Hu- ‘ mour, and its old Good Nature: Good Nature, a Virtue ſo peculiar to ‘ Them, ſo appropriated by God Almighty to this Nation, that it can be ‘ tranſlated into no other Language, hardly practis'd by any other Peo- ‘ ple.' After this he put them in Mind of the neceſſary Severity that ought to be us'd towards ſuch as ſhall ſtill continue to widen the Brea- ches; but likewiſe told them, ‘ That too much Ill cou'd not befal Thoſe, ‘ who did the beſt they cou'd to corrupt his Majeſty's Nature, and to extin- ‘ guiſh his Mercy.' The whole conſiſted of great Variety, and was fill'd with ſuch generous and healing Sentences, as were agreeable to the beſt of Kings, and beſt of Miniſters; and concluded in theſe Words, ‘ Be but ‘ pleas'd your ſelves, and perſwade others to be ſo; contrive all the ‘ Ways imaginable for your own Happineſs, and you will make his ‘ Majeſty the beſt pleas'd and the moſt happy Prince in the World.

1660. Car. 12 Reſ. 1.

Upon finiſhing this Speech the King retired, and both Houſes of Parliament adjourn'd themſelves to the ſixth Day of November, after they had ſat four Months and eighteen Days, from their firſt Meeting, and three Months and fourteen Days from the King's Arrival; in which Time they compleated as much Buſineſs, as cou'd poſſibly be expected, in this great Exigency of Affairs.

The Parliament adjourn'd for near two Months.

III. 1. During the Time of the Parliament's Receſs, which continu'd almoſt two Months, while Joy and Triumphs ſtill appear'd in every Place, a darker Scene began to open, and the Divine Vengeance took Place againſt the moſt notorious Murderers of his Majeſty's Royal Father. The Judges, Officers, and other immediate Actors in that bloody Tragedy, were in Number about Fourſcore; of whom four or five and twenty were dead, and gone to receive the Judgment of Heaven; eighteen or nineteen were fled from Juſtice; about ſeven, who were thought to have ſinn'd with leſs Malice, without Tryal had their Lives ſpared: and twenty nine were reſerv'd for preſent Tryal and Judgment, namely, Waller, Harriſon, Carew, Cook, Peters, Scot, Clement, Scroop, Jones, Hacker, Axtel, Heveningham, Marten, Millington, Tichborn, Roe, Lilburn, Harvey, Pennington, Smith, Downs, Potter, Garland, Fleetwood, Meyn, J. Temple, P. Temple, Howlet and Waite. For the Tryal of theſe the King appointed an extraordinary Bench of Commiſſioners, conſiſting of the beſt and moſt able of the Nobility, Judges, Lawyers and Gentlemen, to ſit at the Old-Baily, and determine the whole with the higheſt Decency and Solemnity. They conſiſted of thirty four in Number, namely, Sir Thomas Allen, Lord-Mayor of London, Lord Chancellor Hyde, the Earl of Southampton, the Duke of Somerſet, the Duke of Albemarle, the Marqueſs of Ormond, the Earl of Lindſey, the Earl of Mancheſter, the Earl of Dorſet, the Earl of Barkſhire, the Earl of Sandwich, wich, the Lord Say, the Lord Roberts, the Lord Finch, Mr. Denzil Hollis, Sir Frederick Cornwallis, Sir Charles Barkley, Mr. Secretary Nicholas, Mr. Secretary Morrice, Sir Anthony Aſhley-Cooper, Mr. Arthur Anneſley, Sir Orlando Bridgman, Lord Chief Baron, Mr. Juſtice Foſter, Mr. Juſtice Mallet, Mr. Juſtice Hyde, Mr. Baron Atkins, Mr. Juſtice Twiſden, Mr. Juſtice Tyrrel, Mr. Baron Turner, Sir Harbottle Grimſton, Sir William Wild Recorder of London, Mr. Serjeant Brown, Mr. Serjeant Hale, and Mr. John Howel. The Proſecutors in Behalf of the King were Sir Jeffery Palmer Attorney-General, Sir Heneage Finch Sollicitor-General, Sir Edward Turner Attorney to the Duke of York, Serjeant Keeling, Mr. Wadham Windham, and Mr. Edward Shelton Clerk of the Crown. As the Bench conſiſted of ſeveral who had been great Promoters of that Cauſe which ruin'd the late King, ſo were ſeveral of the Witneſſes of the ſame Stamp, ſuch as Mr. Maſterſon, Colonel Hunks, Colonel Tomlinſon, Mr. John Ruſhworth, Mr. William Lenthal, Mr. Anthony Mildmay, &c.

All the Commiſſioners being met on the 9th Day of October, the Grand Jury was ſworn, which conſiſted of Baronets, Knights, and Gentlemen of the beſt Rank. Which done, Sir Orlando Bridgman, who ſat as principal Judge, in a long and learned Charge, clearly open'd and ſtated the whole Matter to them: He told them, after a proper Introduction,

The Subſtance of Bridgman's Speech.

'That he muſt deliver to them for plain and true Law, That no Authority, no ſingle Perſon, no Community of Perſons, not the People Collectively, or Repreſentatively, had any coercive Power over the King of England.' He ſhew'd them by the Common and Statute Law, 'That the King was not only the Head of the People, but the Head of the Common-Wealth, the Three Eſtates of the Realm. All which was agreeable to the Oaths of Supremacy and Allegiance; which Oaths, all Men who enter'd into the Parliament Houſe, were oblig'd to take. Now for a few Members of the Houſe of Commons, who had taken theſe Oaths, and by them ſtood oblig'd to defend the King againſt all Attempts againſt his Perſon, Crown and Dignity; for a few Members, not an eighth Part of the Houſe, to aſſume to Themſelves an Authority to make Laws, to erect an High Court of Juſtice, and to take away the Life of their Sovereign; a King, that had not only redreſs'd all Grievances in the Beginning of the Parliament, as the Star-Chamber, High Commiſſion Court, Ship-Mony, &c. but had afterwards made ſuch Conceſſions in the Iſle of Wight, as were more than the People cou'd deſire.—When theſe few Commons, not only without, but excluding the reſt of the Commons, and likewiſe rejecting all the Lords, ſhall take upon them this Authority, and, by Colour of this, ſentence to Death their Sovereign Liege Lord, and, as King, put him to Death before his own Royal Palace at Noon Day; it was ſuch an Aggravation of Villany, that no Words cou'd expreſs it: No Story in any Romance, or invented Tragedy, cou'd produce the like. Therefore, for any of theſe Criminals to ſhelter themſelves under this pretended mock Authority, was ſo far from being an Excuſe, that it was the Height of Aggravation.'

The Criminals indicted.

The Criminals being put upon their Tryal the next Day, and their Indictment read, two only pleaded Guilty, Sir Hardreſs Waller, and Mr. George Fleetwood. The reſt pleaded Not guilty; tho' ſeveral of them for the while trifled with the Court: Particularly Harriſon, after Uſeleſs Evaſions, ſaid, He wou'd be try'd according to the Laws of the Lord; and when they told him the neceſſary Form was By God and the Country, he ſaid, They were vain Words. Harry Martin pleaded, 'That he was not 'excepted out of the Act of Indemnity, the Perſon there mention'd being Henry, not Harry, which was his real Name;' but the Court inform'd him, 'That a Miſnomer in this Caſe was not pleadable.' Carew put himſelf ſelf upon his Tryal, with this ſtrange Salvo, Saving to our Lord Jeſus Chriſt his Right to the Government of theſe Nations. Axtel for a while ſtood mute; and after the Court had convinc'd him of the Danger of it, and put him upon the Form of God and the Country, he anſwer'd, That is not lawful; God is not locally here. Hugh Peters declar'd, He wou'd not for ten Thouſand Worlds ſay he was guilty; and ſo deſir'd to be try'd by the Word of God; which he of all Men had ſo ſcandalouſly abus'd, that it produc'd a loud Laughter in the Court. 1660 Car. 12 Reſ. 1.

2. The Forms of Indictment being over, the next Day began with the Tryal of Thomas Harriſon, not long ſince call'd Major-General Harriſon, an inveterate Man, and moſt deeply engag'd. He was charg'd not only with ſitting as a Judge upon the late King, but with bringing him Priſoner to London, and treating him rudely, and, as a particular Aggravation, with ſaying to thoſe who drew up his Charge, Gentlemen, it will be good for us to Blacken him what we can; pray let us Blacken him! The Priſoner began his Defence by a ſurprizing Argumentation, 'from 'the Notoriety of the Fact, That it was not done in a Corner; That 'he believ'd God was with his Servants in thoſe Days, however it ſeem'd 'good to him to ſuffer this Turn to come upon them: That he had with 'Prayers and Tears deſired to know the Mind of God in it; but he had 'received no Conviction of the Evil of it, but rather Aſſurance: He 'profeſs'd the Harmleſſneſs of his Nature to Man, Woman and Child: 'That he follow'd not his own Judgment, but his Conſcience to the 'Lord: That divers of thoſe upon the Bench were formerly as active in 'the ſame Cauſe: That he had ſuffer'd Impriſonment, becauſe he wou'd 'not turn aſide from the Cauſe to Cromwell, and refus'd the Temptation 'of ſitting at his Right Hand: That what he had done, was by Autho-'rity of Parliament; and that neither this, nor any other inferior Court, 'had any Cognizance or Juriſdiction on That: and therefore they cou'd 'not queſtion Him that acted in Obedience to that Authority; and that 'he did act in the Fear of the Lord.' Hereupon the Court and Audience were amaz'd, and cry'd out, Away with him, for he made God the Author of his Treaſons and Murders! And as to his pretended Authority, by which he warranted his Actions, it was anſwer'd, 'That the King and 'Lords cou'd not do any Thing without the Commons, nor the King 'and Commons without the Lords, nor the Lords and Commons without 'the King; and for the Priſoner to excuſe, nay, juſtify himſelf, upon 'Pretence of being impower'd by one Houſe, nay the eighth Part of a 'Houſe, to condemn their King, whom no Authority upon Earth cou'd 'call in Queſtion, and without Whom both Houſes together cou'd not 'take away the meaneſt Subject's Life, deſerv'd not only Reproof, but 'immediate Sentence.' They told him, 'That this Diſcourſe was to 'infect the People;' and Sir Edward Turner added, That he had the Plague all over him. So the whole Court unanimouſly and ſeverally rejected that treaſonable Tenet of an Authority in both or either Houſes without the King, and over-rul'd that Plea. At which Harriſon deſired Counſel; and after ſome Interlocutions, he began a Diſcourſe of the War; the King's ſetting up his Standard againſt his People, and ſhedding of innocent Blood: And being interrupted there, avouching the ſame Authority, he profeſs'd his Abhorrence of blackening the King; and equivocated with his bringing him Priſoner from Hurſt-Caſtle, ſince he was commanded to do it from the General. At laſt he urg'd his Unpreparation for his Tryal, being ſix Months a cloſe Priſoner; but that he had ſome Acts of Parliament to produce to his Juſtification, and ſo concluded. Judgment being demanded, the Jury pronounc'd him guilty, without ſtirring from the Place; and Sentence of Execution was paſs'd upon him. Harriſon's Tryal.

Ludlow

1660. Car. 12 Ref. 1. Ludlow mentions two Particulars, not to be found in the printed Tryals: The first, the Truth of which is much doubted, was, that the Executioner in an ugly Dress, with a Halter in his Hand, was plac'd near the Prisoner, and continu'd there during the whole Time of the Tryal. The other was, That after Sentence had been pronounc'd against him, he said aloud as he was withdrawing from the Court, That he had no Reason to be asham'd of the Cause in which he had been engag'd. But whether this be to the Advantage of the Prisoner, is left to the Judgment of the Reader.

Scroop's Tryal. The next that was set to the Bar was Colonel Adrian Scroop, who was convicted by the same Evidence of sitting as Judge in the High Court of Justice, and signing the Warrant for the Execution of the late King; as also by the Testimony of Sir Richard Brown, the Lord-Mayor Elect, who said, 'That since the Return of the King, in some accidental Conference, he seem'd to allow and approve of the Fact, by saying, Many People did not think it such a heinous Matter; and that some be of one Mind, and some of another:' Which he deny'd now to have expresly said; but bewail'd the Misfortune of that Encounter with Sir Richard; 'For whereas before, he was not excepted out of the Act of Indemnity, the very last Day it pass'd he was, by that Means, even then excepted. He justify'd that Authority, and the Fact committed by that Authority, but not the Person; protesting he had no Malice against the King, and that it was an Error of Judgment, not of his Will; and that he saw a great many Faces at this Time that were mis-led as well as himself: That he really took the Parliament's Authority for valid.' But being over-rul'd in that Plea, according to the preceding Tryal, he acquainted the Jury, 'That he lay under a great Prejudice by the Fact, and desired them to consider his Case as they wou'd their own; and hinted at the Benefit of the Proclamation.' He had more of the Port and Language of a Gentleman than any of the rest of the King's Judges; and tho' he was found guilty, yet it is justly believ'd that he wou'd have escap'd with Life, had not his Crime been aggravated by the particular Testimony of Sir Richard Brown.

Carew's Tryal. Mr. John Carew was next brought to the Bar, who being charg'd with sitting as a Judge, and signing the bloody Warrant for the Murder of the King, he fell into the like Discourse with Harrison, declaring, 'That he was so far from acting with a traiterous and malicious Heart; that what he did was in the Fear of the Lord, and in Obedience to his holy and righteous Laws; and next in Obedience to that which was the Supream Authority of the Nation; which having been controverted in the Face of the whole World, the Lord had given an Answer upon solemn Appeals to these Things.' The Court interrupted him, and the Lord Chief Baron bad him remember, That the Devil sometimes appear'd in the Habit of an Angel of Light. Others charg'd him with sowing Sedition, and the Solicitor told him, 'Tho' he pretended Conscience, and the Fear of the Lord, all the World knew he did it against the Law of the Lord, his own Conscience, the Light of Nature, and the Laws of the Land, against the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy which he himself had taken.' He still insisted upon the Power and Authority of the Parliament, and so left it with the Jury, who without removing from the Bar brought him in guilty.

Scot's Tryal. Mr. Thomas Scot being the next at the Bar, the same Witnesses were produc'd in all Things as the former, concerning his sitting and signing the Warrant for Execution: But some Things were added by Way of aggravation; particularly it was sworn, 'That he was so far from repenting of the Act, that in open Parliament he desired that upon his Tomb-Stone

'Stone he might have this Inſcription, Here lies Thomas Scot, who ad- 1660.
'judg'd to Death the late King. And afterwards, upon the Diſſolution
'of the Parliament, he in the Houſe added theſe Words, Since it is your Car. 12
'Pleaſure to have it ſo, I know not how to hinder it; but when Reſ. 1.
'that is done, I know not where to hide this Hated Head of 'mine.' The Priſoner was very bold in his Defence, and declared 'That 'he was not to anſwer for Words ſpoken in Parliament; and that it was 'a high Breach of Priviledge.' To which he was anſwer'd, 'That there
'cou'd be no Priviledge of Parliament for Treaſon, nor Felony neither.'
Then he flew to the Authority of the Commons in Parliament, and in-ſiſted 'It was a Parliament, and that that Court had no Cognizance to 'declare whether it was a Parliament or not.' To this he was anſwer'd,
'That then any Man might pretend to an Authority of Parliament: If
'forty Men ſhou'd meet at Shooter's-Hill, as the little Convention did
'at Weſtminſter, and ſay, We declare our ſelves the PARLIAMENT
'OF ENGLAND; becauſe they do ſo, ſhall not this be judg'd what 'is a Statute, and what not?' He then alledg'd, 'He knew not but that 'it might be as lawful for the Commons to make Laws, as this preſent
'Parliament, being call'd by the Keepers of the Liberties of England;' adding withal, 'That the Authority of the remaining Members might be 'as good as the Parliament was when the Biſhops were excluded; and
'Two Eſtates may take away a Third, if the Second do not continue to 'execute their Truſt, He that is in Occupancy may have a Title to the 'whole; therefore he affirm'd he had a Parliamentary and Legiſlative
'Power to juſtify him.' To this was reply'd, 'That the Biſhops were 'taken away by an Act, with the Conſent of the King, Lords and Com'mons; and therefore the Juſtification of this poyſonous Doctrine was 'inſufferable.' After ſome little ſtruggle more, the Jury, being directed, ſoon brought him in Guilty.

There were two others to be try'd on the ſame Day, Mr. Gregory Cle- Clement's and ment, and Colonel John Jones, both for aſſuming a Power of judging Jones's Tryal.
and condemning the late King. The former wav'd his Plea, and confeſs'd his Crime, and deliver'd a Petition, as Sir Hardreſs Waller had before. Colonel Jones made ſome little Defence, but upon a full Proof of his ſitting in Court, and ſigning the Warrant, he acquieſc'd. And ſo all the five that were try'd this Day receiv'd Sentence together. Before the paſſing of which, Sir Orlando Bridgman made an affecting Speech to them and the Audience, in which, after he had enlarg'd upon the Virtues and Conceſſions of the late King, and the Peace and Proſperity that once flouriſh'd in his Reign, he more immediately apply'd to the Criminals: And becauſe Mr. Scot and others had alledg'd, That they had by Prayers and Tears often ſought the Lord, That if there were any Iniquity in It, he wou'd ſhew it them; 'he remember'd them of our Saviour's Say'ing, The Time cometh, that whoſoever killeth you, will think that he
'doeth God Service— There is a ſpiritual Pride; Men may over-run them-
'ſelves by their own Holyneſs, and may follow pretended Revelations:
'Men may ſay I have pray'd about ſuch a Thing: A Man may commit a
'Robbery, or Murther, meerly becauſe he will, and may come and ſay, I
'have pray'd againſt it, and cannot underſtand it to be a Sin, as one in Shrop-
'ſhire did, and yet notwithſtanding kill'd his own Father and Mother.

3. The Commiſſioners, having try'd ſome of thoſe who were more Cook's Tryal.
ſtrictly call'd The King's Judges, thought fit to proceed to ſome others who were more remotely, tho' as effectually concern'd as the reſt. The firſt of theſe was the Sollicitor John Cook, who was arraign'd for aſſuming a Power over the King's Life; for drawing and exhibiting the Charge;

for preſſing the Charge to be taken pro Confeſſo; in ſum, for being Inſtrumental in the King's Death. It was alſo particularly ſworn againſt him, 'That he acknowledg'd he was a wiſe and gracious King, but added, 'That he muſt die, and Monarchy with him.' To all which he anſwer'd very acutely, to the Honour of his Parts, and Infamy of his Practice: He began with St. Paul's Plea. 'Againſt the Law, and againſt Cæſar, he 'hop'd he had not offended at all. For firſt, he cou'd not be juſtly ſaid 'to have contriv'd or counſell'd the Death of the King, becauſe the Proclamation for the King's Tryal was, without Diſpute, publiſh'd on the 'ninth of January, which was the Day before he was appointed Solicitor to the High Court of Juſtice. In the ſecond Place, tho' the Court 'ſhou'd not admit that to be an Act of Parliament, which had authoriz'd 'him; yet he aſſured himſelf they wou'd allow it to be an Order, which 'was enough to acquit him of Treaſon. Thirdly, That he, who had 'been neither Accuſer, Witneſs, Judge, or Executioner, cou'd not be 'guilty in this Caſe. He alledg'd, he was but Counſel, and acted in his 'Sphere for a Fee; in which his Crime might be call'd Avaritia, but 'not Malitia: That he was no Sword-Man: That he executed no Power 'over the King: That to pray and demand Juſtice, tho' Injuſtice be done 'upon it, cou'd not be Treaſon within the Statute: That when he demanded Juſtice, it might be meant of Acquittal, as well as of Condemnation; and that if it ſhou'd be accounted Treaſon in a Counſellor to 'plead againſt the King, it muſt alſo be Felony to plead againſt a Man 'who happens to be unjuſtly condemn'd for Felony: That the High 'Court of Juſtice, tho' now call'd tyrannical and unlawful, was yet a 'Court, had Officers attending them, and many think had Authority, 'there being then no Other in the Nation than that which gave them 'their Power; and if this will not juſtify a Man for acting within his own 'Sphere, it will not be lawful for any one to exerciſe his Profeſſion, unleſs he may be ſure of the Legality of the Court in which he acts.' He obſerv'd, 'that the Word Inſtrumental, in the Exception of the Act, was 'inſignificant, or otherwiſe incomprehenſive of him: That by the King's 'gracious Letter, a Free Parliament was to declare the excepted Perſons; which this cou'd not be, not being called by the King's Writ. 'Laſtly he ſtill pray'd for the Equity of that Act of Parliament in the 'Reign of Henry the Seventh, which indemnify'd thoſe that acted under 'a de Facto Authority.' After all his long Pleadings, he was anſwer'd by the Court, 'That he had been ſufficiently prov'd Inſtrumental in taking away the King's Life; therefore his alledging, That he was neither Witneſs, Jury, Judge nor Executioner, was no more than ſaying, 'Becauſe there are others worſe than my ſelf, I am innocent: That as 'no Man cou'd have a lawful Calling to purſue the Life of his King, ſo 'for a private Perſon, tho' he only intends to beat a Man, yet if he dies 'thereupon, in Law it is Murder; and if a Man counſels another to 'commit Murder, he is guilty himſelf: That his demanding the King as 'a Traytor to be brought to Juſtice, cou'd not reaſonably be meant that 'of Acquittal: That no Court cou'd ſhelter or excuſe a Perſon in the Commiſſion of Treaſon: That by a Free Parliament the King deſign'd the 'preſent Parliament, and as ſuch confirm'd it, before he paſs'd the Act 'of Indemnity. And laſtly for the Act of Parliament alledg'd, the Intent 'and Meaning of it was againſt him; it was to preſerve the King de 'Facto, how much more the King de Jure; eſpecially ſince he was 'both charg'd and ſentenc'd in the Court as King of England.' Being told that warranting the Authority was an Aggravation of his Crime, he deſired not to be miſtaken, meaning only in Point of High-Treaſon; ſo he wou'd have gladly eſcap'd with a Miſdemeanor, or Miſpriſion; but the Jury, Jury, after a little Conſideration, brought him in guilty as to the whole Indictment. 1660.

The next Perſon try'd was a Criminal of a peculiar Nature, Hugh Peters, who had been long a Scandal to the Pulpit: He was charg'd with contriving the King's Death, 'by conſpiring with Oliver Cromwell 'at ſeveral Times and Places, and procuring the Soldiers to cry out Ju- 'ſtice, againſt the Traytor at the Bar! by preaching divers Sermons to 'perſwade the Army to take off the King, comparing him to Barabbas, 'and the Soldiers to Jeſus Chriſt, and applying part of that Pſalm where 'it is ſaid, They ſhall bind their Kings in Chains, &c. to the Proceedings 'againſt him; aſſuring them from the Bible, That whoever ſheddeth Man's 'Blood, by Man ſhall his Blood be ſhed; and that neither the King, nor 'Prince Rupert, nor none of that Rabble, were excepted. He was alſo 'accus'd of comparing the High Court of Juſtice, to the Laſt Judgment 'by the Saints, and of ſaying, That the Levites, Lords and Lawyers 'muſt be taken away in order to eſtabliſh a Common-Wealth; That the 'King was a Tyrant, and that the Office was Chargeable, Uſeleſs, and 'Dangerous.' To all which he made a very mean Defence, having loſt all his uſual Briskneſs of Wit, and Preſence of Mind: 'He made ſome 'little Cavils againſt the Witneſſes, and in Effect only declar'd himſelf 'to be an Orthodox harmleſs Man, and that he had ever acted without 'Malice, Avarice, or Ambition.' He was alſo ſtrongly ſuſpected of being the Executioner; but as to that, he prov'd he was ſick in Bed that very Day. The Jury ſoon found him guilty of Treaſon; and ſo Solicitor Cook and he receiv'd Sentence together. Car. 12 Reſ. 1. Hugh Peters's Tryal.

The next Day appear'd at the Bar Colonel Daniel Axtel, who had eſcap'd, as he thought, the Exception in the Act, but was lately added to the miſerable Number, upon the Account of other Blood that likewiſe lay upon him. The chief Heads of his Charge were, 'That he commanded 'the Guards both at the Tryal and Execution of the King; that he or- 'der'd the Soldiers, in a tumultuous Manner, to cry out Juſtice and Ex- 'ecution!' and beat ſome for not doing ſo; and that he bid them Shoot 'at a Lady, ſuppos'd to be the Lady Fairfax, whom he there term'd 'Whore, for ſaying that Cromwell was a Rogue, and that the Twentieth 'Part of the People never conſented to the Tryal of the King: That he 'had ſent for and encourag'd the Executioner, and that he had charg'd 'a Perſon with Cowardiſe for refuſing to ſign the Warrant for Execution.' He made long Harangues in his Defence, and ſaid, 'That he was com- 'manded thither by his General, whom the Lords and Commons had 'commiſſion'd: That they had declared Themſelves to be the Interpre- 'ters of the Law; and if he had not obey'd his General's Command, 'he was then liable to the Puniſhment: That that Statute of 25 of Ed- 'ward III. did not extend to private Perſons in that Caſe: That ſeveral 'Judges had declared, That it was lawful and juſtifiable to obey the Par- 'liament: That if the Collected Body in Parliament be guilty of Trea- 'ſon, where will they find a Jury in the Diſtributed Part of the People?' Here he was charg'd for being One of Thoſe who actually put the Force upon the Houſe, and turn'd the Parliament into a Junto. He anſwer'd 'he only obey'd his Superiors; and that Eſſex, Mancheſter, Fair- 'fax, nay General Monk, were equally guilty for acting by the ſame Com- 'miſſion: That he was appointed to keep the Peace in the Court, and 'therefore it was no Treaſon to ſilence a Lady that ſpoke impertinently, 'and if the Soldiers did cry Juſtice, Execution! he might beat them 'and ſay I'll Juſtice you, I'll Execution you: That at the worſt, Juſtice 'being an Attribute of God, it was no Treaſon to require it; and that 'the Execution of it was no more: That, as Cook had ſaid before, Axtel's Tryal.

1660. Car. 12 Ref. 1.

'he neither Sentenc'd, Signed, Sealed nor Sate; and pleaded the Statute 'of Henry VII. for aiding a King de Facto. To all which he was an- 'ſwer'd, That there cou'd be no Excuſes for direct Treaſon: That the 'Parliament, tho' conſiſting of Lords and Commons, nor the General, 'cou'd never give any Authority to murther the King; nor was it in his 'Commiſſion to guard the High-Court of Juſtice, nor to cry for Exe- 'cution: That any of thoſe Things was an Overt-Act of his Imagination, 'and ſufficiently prov'd that Juſtice and Execution was the Intent of 'Murthering the King, which was confirm'd by his wrathful Speech to 'the Lady.' Theſe, and other Things being alledg'd by the Court, the Jury ſoon brought him in guilty of Treaſon.

Hacker's Tryal.

The next brought to the Bar was Colonel Francis Hacker; againſt whom the Witneſſes depos'd 'That he was one of the Perſons that were 'upon the Guard, and kept the King Priſoner: That the Warrant for 'ſeeing the Sentence againſt the King put in Execution, was directed to 'Him with Others: That in Proſecution of that Commiſſion, he had 'ſign'd a Warrant for Executing the King; and that, by Vertue of the 'Warrant he had receiv'd, he took the King out of the Cuſtody of Co- 'lonel Thomlinſon, and conducted him to the Scaffold where he was put 'to Death. He had been all the while preſent at the laſt Tryal, and ſaw how fruitleſs it wou'd be to make the ſame Allegations with Axtel; Therefore he only ſaid, 'That he had acted by the Command of his Su- 'periors, and that he had always endeavour'd to ſerve his Country in all 'his publick Actions:' So that his Tryal was ſoon diſpatcht, and he brought in guilty of Treaſon.

The reſt ſubmit,

4. Of the Twenty Nine Regicides that were reſerv'd for Tryal, Ten only ſuffer'd Death, the Tryals of whom have already been related. The Nineteen remaining were Harvey, Pennington, Marten, Millington, Tichborn, Roe, Lilburn, Smith, Downs, Potter, Garland, Heveningham, Meyne, J. Temple, P. Temple, Wait, Hewlet, Waller and Fleetwood, The two laſt, as was formerly obſerv'd, had pleaded guilty; and the Reſt, having all, but Hewlet, ſurrender'd themſelves upon the King's Proclamation, were, if condemn'd, to have their Execution ſuſpended, till the ſame ſhou'd be order'd by the King and Parliament. But firſt they were all oblig'd to undergo the Formality of Tryal; in which moſt of them ſubmitted to Mercy, uſing very little other Excuſe but 'that they were 'Ignorant and free from Malice.' So that we have but little Material in their Tryals: Only ſomething ſhou'd be ſaid concerning Three of them, Marten, Downs and Hewlet.

Except Marten, Downs and Hewlet.

Colonel Harry Marten was charg'd not only with Sitting, Signing and Sealing, as others were, but alſo That at the firſt Meeting of the High-Court of Juſtice in the Painted-Chamber, upon the Landing of the King from White-Hall to Sir Robert Cotton's Houſe, Cromwell upon Sight of Him, asking them this Queſtion, The firſt Thing the King will demand of us will be, By what Authority we bring him before us; what ſhall we ſay, by whoſe Authority? After a little Pauſe Marten reply'd, In the Name and Authority of the Commons in Parliament aſſembled, and the good People of England. In Anſwer to this he firſt own'd the Fact, but not the Malice; and when, as an Aggravation, he was told That he Sign'd the Warrant merrily, and in Sport, he immediately return'd, Then it was not in Malice. And ſo he proceeded to juſtify the Authority of the Parliament; and tho' he own'd it was but a Remnant of a Parliament, 'yet in the Caſe of Commons to a Cottage, if a Stick be but left, the 'Commons ſtill belong'd to that Cottage.' Colonel Downs, upon his Tryal, had ſomething to plead which none of the reſt had; namely, that in the King's Tryal, he had caus'd the Court to adjourn, and had ſaid and done what wou'd have been of the higheſt Importance to his Majeſty, had he not been over-rul'd; the Particulars of which may be ſeen in the former Part of this Hiſtory. Captain Hewlet, once a Serjeant of Colonel Hewſon's Regiment, was indicted for being the Man that was in the Frock, and cut off the King's Head: This was averr'd from his own Confeſſion by three Witneſſes; and as many atteſted it was Gregory Brandon the common Executioner: 'That He, the Executioner, after it was 'done, was put into a Boat, and trembled every Joint of him; and that 'he affirm'd as much to the Lord Capel at his Suffering by the ſame Ax, of 'which the Executioner aſſured him.' The Priſoner further ſaid, 'That 'he cou'd make it appear he was not upon the Scaffold that Day, nor 'near it, for that he and other Serjeants were ſecured that Day, for re-'fuſing to be there.' But the other Witneſſes Evidence being expreſs, He was found guilty. The Court gave him all the Advantage that cou'd be, and repriev'd him, ſo that he eſcap'd with Life. 1660. Car. 12 Reſ. 1.

As the Lord chief Baron Bridgeman had open'd, ſo he concluded the whole Affair with a learned and affecting Speech, addreſs'd to the greateſt Number of the Criminals then ſtanding at the Bar. He told them, 'That what he did was with as much Sorrow of Heart as they had them-'ſelves, many of them being of liberal Education, and of great Parts.' He let them know, 'That they were now only before the Tribunal of 'Man, to receive Judgment for their Offence here; but there was another 'Judgment hereafter, and a Tribunal before which all muſt appear, and 'receive according to their Works. And ſince Mercy was reſerv'd 'by Heaven for the greateſt Offenders, he advis'd them to lay hold on 'the moſt probable Means to obtain it, and have a ſpecial Care of be-'ing given over to a Reprobate Senſe, and of a ſeared Conſcience, and 'bold Confidence, which wou'd prove the moſt ſignal Judgment upon 'them.' He did not at all blame them for making the beſt Defence they cou'd for their Lives; but then he fully made it appear, 'That their Con-'demnation was juſt, and according to the certain ſtanding Laws of their 'Country: Accordingly he repeated to them ſome Things he had for-'merly ſaid concerning the legal Supremacy of the Kings of England, 'and that no Body or Community of Men had any coercive Power over 'their Perſons. Then he nam'd the Words of the Act of the Firſt of 'King James, wherein the Lords and Commons did acknowledge an hum-'ble and natural Liege Obedience to the King as Supreme, his Heirs and 'Succeſſors; and in the Name of themſelves and all the People, humbly 'ſubmit themſelves until the laſt Drop of their Blood be ſpent in De-'fence of the King and his Royal Poſterity. Remember, added He, 'theſe were not Words of Compliment: You ſhall find that they, all of 'Them, and ſo did as many of You as were Members of Parliament, 'before you came into the Houſe of Commons, took the Oath of Alle-'giance, which was made after this Recognition, or otherwiſe were not 'to be Members: In which Oath you ſwore to defend the King, his Per-'ſon, his Crown and Dignity, &c. Therefore their Oaths were a far-'ther Aggravation of their Crimes; and there never was ſuch a Blow 'given to the Church of England, and the Proteſtant Religion.' Then, after a new adviſing them to beware of an obſtinate, perverſe Courſe, he proceeded to Sentence of Execution. Bridgeman's concluding Speech.

5. What follow'd was more tragical and amazing, which was the Execution and Behaviour of Ten of theſe wretched Criminals; in which there appear'd a prodigious Spirit of Deluſion and Enthuſiaſm. Harriſon was the Firſt, who on the thirteenth of October, ſuffer'd according to the The Execution of Harriſon, Carew, Cook, Peters, Scot, Glement, Scroop, Jones, Hacker and Axtel.

the Letter of the Law at Charing-Croſs, the People loudly ſhouting at his exemplary Fall. He was firſt hang'd with his Face towards the Banquetting-Houſe, and then, being cut down alive, his Body was quarter'd and plac'd upon the City Gates, and his Head upon Weſtminſter-Hall. Two Days after Mr. Carew was brought to the ſame Place, and ſuffer'd in the ſame Manner; only, upon the Interceſſion of his Friends, the King permitted his Body to be bury'd. The following Day John Cook and Hugh Peters were together brought to the ſame Place, and were executed after the ſame Manner; Cook's Head being plac'd upon Weſtminſter-Hall by Harriſon's, and that of Peters upon London-Bridge. On the Day following four ſuffer'd at the ſame Place, at two ſeveral Times, firſt Scot and Clement, next Scroop and Jones. As to Hacker and Axtel, being Criminals of another Nature, and not the King's Judges, they were order'd to be hang'd and quarter'd at Tyburn; but the Body of Hacker was, by the King's Favour, given to his Friends, and bury'd. To aggravate the Severity of theſe Executions, Ludlow mentions two Circumſtances not obſerv'd by every Writer: The Firſt was, that when Cooke was drawn upon his Sledge, the Head of Harriſon, with his Face uncover'd, was plac'd before him, to the great Deteſtation of the People. The other was, when his Body was cut down and quarter'd, the Executioner, rubbing his bloody Hands together, came to Peters, then going to ſuffer, and ask'd him How he lik'd that Work? To whom the other reply'd, He was not at all terrify'd, and that he might do his worſt.

An Account and Character of them.

To give ſome ſhort Account of theſe Sufferers: Firſt, Thomas Harriſon was a Butcher's Son of Newcaſtle Under-line in Staffordſhire, who being brought up an Attorney, left his Employment, and betook himſelf to the Army in the Beginning of the Wars; where his pragmatical Spirit, his voluble Tongue, and his Enthuſiaſtical Preaching, ſo recommended him to the Army, and to Cromwell himſelf, that he was gradually rais'd to the Office of a Major-General. Being a great Confident, by his Aſſiſtance Cromwell broke the Power of the Presbyterians, purg'd the Houſe of Commons, and brought the King to his Tryal, and laſt of all deſtroy'd the long Parliament, call'd the Common-wealth of England. But upon his making himſelf ſole Governor, Harriſon left him with great Scorn and Indignation, and became the Ringleader of that dangerous Sect call'd the Fifth-Monarchy-Men; and ſubmitted to be rebaptiz'd to gain the Anabaptiſts to his Party. Being very buſie in raiſing Forces to oppoſe the Reſtoration, he was prevented in his Deſign, taken Priſoner, and brought to his Tryal and fatal End. The next was Mr. John Carew, a Corniſh Gentleman, Brother to Sir Alexander Carew, who loſt his Head in 1644; who, notwithſtanding a liberal Education, fell into the Fifth-Monarchy Crew, and being an Enemy to all Regal Government, he not only hated King Charles, but afterwards Cromwell Himſelf, whoſe Power and Intereſt he had ſo much promoted. Mr. John Cook was a Man of mean Birth, and inconſiderable Fortune, but of very good Parts and a gentile Education; who being made a Barriſter at Law, his ſmall Practice made him ready to joyn with the Regicides; for which he was rewarded with the Title of Lord Chief Juſtice in Ireland, where he prov'd a great Preacher and Favourer of the Anabaptiſts. In the Height of his Preferment, he cou'd not always conceal the Laſhes of a troubled Conſcience, with Relation to his particular Crime; tho' at laſt he dy'd as impenitent as any of the reſt. Hugh Peters was firſt educated in, then whipt and expell'd out of Cambridge; and from thence became an Itinerant Preacher in New-England, Holland, and other Places, and afterwards a Chaplain in the Camp, where he acted ſeveral Parts, as that of Colonel and Agitator, and became the great Scandal of the Pulpit by

by his ſtrange Cant, Scurrility, and Buffoonry. At the Reſtoration he was diſcover'd by one of his New-England Confidents, ſeiz'd in Bed with another Man's Wife, and ſo brought to his Priſon and Tryal. Thomas Scot was born of obſcure Parents in Buckinghamſhire, being firſt a Brewer's Clerk or Partner in London, and then a Country Attorney; and ſignalizing his Zeal for the Cauſe, he was choſen a Member of Parliament for a Borough in his own County, and always continu'd a moſt inveterate Enemy againſt his Soveraign Maſter. Gregory Clement was firſt a Merchant; but failing there, he forc'd himſelf into the Parliament Houſe, and ſought to grow rich by a new Trade in Biſhop's Lands, wherein he got a conſiderable Eſtate: He was turn'd out of the Rump Parliament for his Lewdneſs, but was taken in again when they were reſtored after Cromwell's Interruption. His Guilt or his Ignorance wou'd not ſuffer him to make any Plea at the Bar, or any Speech at the Gallows. Mr. Adrian Scroop was deſcended of a good Family in Buckinghamſhire, and ally'd to the Cavalier Family in Lincolnſhire, having above the reſt the Port and Mien of a Gentleman: He was a great Puritan and Stickler againſt the King, for which he was rewarded with ſeveral Employments, and particularly the Office of a Colonel. The next Man was Mr. John Jones, a Man of a mean Family in Wales, once a Serving Man to Sir Thomas Middleton; but riſing in the Wars, he got into the Parliament-Houſe, and marry'd one of Cromwell's Siſters; after which he obtain'd ſeveral Places; and beſides that of Colonel in the Army, he was made Governor of Angleſey, and then a Commiſſioner for the Government of Ireland, where he behav'd himſelf after a ſevere and tyrannical Manner. There is little to be ſaid of the two laſt, Hacker and Axtell; only the former was a Soldier of Fortune, whoſe notable Reſolution and Conduct brought him into the Familiarity of Cromwell. The latter was firſt a Grocer's Apprentice in London; but being an Anabaptiſt, and a gifted Man, he ſoon became acquainted in the Army, where that and his barbarous Diſpoſition rais'd him to the Office of a Lieutenant-Colonel.

Nothing can be more aſtoniſhing and ſhocking to good Chriſtians and Subjects than the Behaviour of theſe Criminals, as it is publiſh'd by their own ſpecial Friends under the Title of The Speeches and Prayers of ſome of the late King's Judges, &c. by which we ſee that they were ſo far from expreſſing the leaſt Repentance, that moſt of them glory'd in the Villany; and none of the primitive Martyrs left the World with ſo much Aſſurance and Self-Juſtification. Harriſon declar'd, That the Lord's Spirit did witneſs with his Spirit, that all his Sins were done away by Jeſus Chriſt; and as he was carry'd to his Execution, he ſeveral times cry'd out, I go to ſuffer upon the Account of the moſt glorious Cauſe that ever was in the World! Then in his laſt Speech he ſaid, He believ'd, e'er it be long, the Lord wou'd make it known from Heaven, That there was more of God in it than Men were aware of. Carew declared, What he did was of the Lord, and if it were to be done again, he wou'd do it. He ſaid, The Lord had juſtify'd the Cauſe in the Field once already, but he wou'd again do it with a Witneſs. He afterwards added, I dye not in the Lord only, but for the Lord: And think not that this bleſſed Cauſe ſhall be loſt, for it ſhall reach the End of the Earth. Cook began his Speech upon the Ladder in theſe Words, The moſt glorious Sight that ever was ſeen in the World, was our Lord Jeſus upon the Croſs; and the moſt glorious next to that, is to ſee any poor Creature ſuffer for him in his Cauſe. And in his laſt Prayer he has theſe Words, I believe that an Army of Martyrs wou'd willingly come from Heaven, to ſuffer in ſuch a Cauſe as this I come here to ſuffer for. Scot declar'd it To be a Cauſe not to be repented of; and expreſs'd no other Sorrow but for his asking the Benefit

1660. Car. 12 Ref. 1. of the King's Proclamation. Axtel ſaid, If he had a thouſand Lives, he cou'd lay them all down for the Cauſe; and declar'd, They had nothing againſt him, neither by God's Law, nor their own Law, to condemn him; therefore, They had meerly murther'd him, and might as well have done it at the Tower, as brought him thither to make this Buſtle: Yet he very charitably wiſh'd, That his Blood might not cry to the Third and Fourth Generation. Hacker ſhew'd much of the ſame Spirit, and in a Paper he read at his Execution he ſaid, I thank the Lord, I have nothing lyes upon my Conſcience as Guilt whereof I am now condemned; and do not doubt but to have the Sentence revers'd. The Behaviour of Scroop and Jones was more decent than the reſt; for tho' both theſe aged Gentlemen in Effect maintain'd the ſame Cauſe, yet the former pray'd for the King, and the latter acquitted his Majeſty, 'as having done nothing but the Part 'of a loving Son to a Father; and the Court, as acting by Law accord-'ing to the beſt of their Underſtandings:' Yet ſpeaking of the Sledge that was to carry him to Execution, he cou'd not help ſaying, It was like Elijah's fiery Chariot, only it goes through Fleet-ſtreet.

Such were the prodigious Effects of Enthuſiaſm, Poſſeſſion, or ſomething that wants a Name; which were ſufficient to create Horror in good Men, and Infidelity in bad. Yet this obdurate and impenitent Behaviour is believ'd not to have riſen wholly from within, or from a ſedate Frame of Mind: For others tell us that moſt of them made uſe of Art, and prepared themſelves for their Journies by intoxicating Cordials and other ſtrong Liquors: Particularly Harriſon and Carew, in whoſe Looks there was a ſenſible and remarkable Change; which by Carew's Friends is related in this ſhocking Expreſſion, His Countenance ſhining with great Glory. As to Hugh Peters, he had taken ſo large a Potion, that he for ſome time behaved himſelf like an Ideot, and was ſtupidly drunk; which caus'd Cook, who ſuffer'd with him, to ſay, Here is a poor Brother coming, I am afraid he is not fit to dye at this Time.

The reſt eſcape with Life. As to the nineteen other Priſoners, formerly mention'd, who came in upon the Proclamation, and were condemn'd as well as the reſt, they were all remitted to the Tower, till the farther Pleaſure of the King and Parliament ſhou'd be known. Their Eſtates were immediately ſeiz'd into the King's Hands; but they ſo far eſcap'd in their Perſons, that none of them ſuffer'd Death, as many expected and deſir'd: Only ſome few others, who were afterwards taken, ſuffer'd the Law, as will be mention'd in due Time.

6. During theſe Proceedings of Juſtice, the King and his Miniſtry were uſing all ſoftning Methods to allay and cure the Diſtempers of the Nation; eſpecially thoſe relating to Religion, which had been the principal Cauſes of the late Wars. Almoſt all Diſſenters from the Church of England had apply'd themſelves to the Crown, but more particularly the Presbyterians, who had a comfortable Proſpect from the Favours ſhewn to their chief Miniſters, the Countenance of great Men, and the King's Declaration at Breda. In order to bring all to a good Temper, the King, according to his Promiſe made at the Adjournment of the Parliament, on the 25th of October publiſh'd a long and healing Declaration to all his loving Subjects, moſt agreeable to that from Breda, which had particularly declar'd, 'That no Man ſhou'd be diſquieted or called in queſtion 'for Differences in Opinion in Matters of Religion, which did not di-'ſturb the Peace of the Kingdom; and that the King ſhou'd be ready to 'conſent to ſuch an Act of Parliament, as upon mature Deliberation ſhou'd 'be offer'd to him, for the full granting that Indulgence.' In this new De-

'the Profeſſions he had made: And in order thereto, beſides their pub-
'liſhing of ſeveral ſeditious Pamphlets, they had printed and diſpers'd a
'former Declaration he had made in Scotland; of which he ſhou'd ſay
'no more, than That the Circumſtances by which he was forc'd to ſign that
'Declaration, were well known to the World; and that the worthieſt and
'greateſt Part of that Nation did even then deteſt and abhor the ill U-
'ſage of him in that Particular.' After this he proceeded to declare,
'That upon a full Conference with learned Men of ſeveral Perſwaſions,
'he found, That the Miſchiefs, under which both the Church and State
'at preſent ſuffer'd, did not reſult from any form'd Doctrine or Conclu-
'ſion maintain'd by either Party, but from the Paſſion, Appetite, and In-'tereſt of particular Perſons, who contracted greater Prejudice from
'thoſe Affections, than from their Opinions.' After having declar'd his Affection and Eſteem for the Church of England, and that he cou'd not preſently call a Synod, according to his Deſign, he in the mean Time, to allay the preſent Diſtempers, thought fit to make theſe eight following Conceſſions or Orders. 'The firſt was to promote the Power of God-
'lineſs in the Exerciſes of Religion and the Lord's Day, and to encou'rage the frequent Preaching of Biſhops. 2. To appoint Suffragan Bi-'ſhops, eſpecially in the larger Dioceſes. 3. That no Biſhop ordain, or
'exerciſe Church-Cenſures without the Advice and Aſſiſtance of the 'Presbyters; and that Lay-Officers be excluded in Matters purely Spi'ritual. 4. That Deans and Chapters be better fitted to afford Coun-
'ſel and Aſſiſtance to the Biſhops in Ordinations and other Spiritual Mat'ters. 5. For the Regulation of Confirmation, Admiſſion to the Lord's 'Supper, and Catechiſm; in which Rural Deans were to be aſſiſting.
'6. That no Biſhop exerciſe any Power, or impoſe any Thing, but ac'cording to the known Law of the Land. 7. For appointing ſome learn'ed Divines to reviſe and make ſome Amendments to the Liturgy; and 'that ſcrupulous Perſons be not puniſh'd for the Diſuſe of it at preſent.
'The Eighth and laſt was concerning Ceremonies, in which Perſons were 'for the preſent left at Liberty, as to Kneeling in the Sacrament, the Croſs
'in Baptiſm, bowing at the Name of Jeſus, and even the Oath of Cano'nical Obedience.' Such was the Subſtance of theſe Conceſſions, which are thought by a late ingenious Writer to have been overſtrain'd, as not only to over-rule the Canons, and diſable the Diſcipline of the Church, but likewiſe to diſpenſe with the Statutes to the Conſtruction of a Repeal, and ſo to lye hard on the Civil Conſtitution. But theſe were Times of Unſettlement and Neceſſity, which required Uncommon and Irregular Remedies: And, with this Conſideration, if we read the Declaration at large, we ſhall find in general a noble Spirit of Wiſdom and Goodneſs, and an excellent Pattern for Poſterity, when they are beſt diſpos'd to conſider of the moſt proper and healing Methods, either for the Reſtoration of the Diſcipline, or the making up the Breaches of the eſtabliſh'd Church.

In the mean Time the Church of England and Epiſcopacy gradually reviv'd in the Nation; tho' the Biſhops themſelves, by Reaſon of the Act of Parliament in 1641, ſtill continu'd excluded from the Houſe of Peers. It is obſervable that only nine of the old Biſhops ſurviv'd the Times of Confuſion, who now all recover'd their Epiſcopal Sees; as William Juxon Biſhop of London, William Pierce Biſhop of Bath and Wells, Robert Skinner Biſhop of Oxford, John Warner Biſhop of Rocheſter, William Roberts Biſhop of Bangor, Matthew Wren Biſhop of Ely, Bryan Duppa Biſhop

New Bishops.

Bishop of Salisbury, Henry King Bishop of Chichester, and Accepted Frewen Bishop of Litchfield and Coventry. Of these, in a short Time, Juxon was translated to the See of Canterbury, Frewen to that of York, Duppa to Wincheſter, and Skinner to Worceſter. Seven or eight others were consecrated this Year, and appointed to their respective Bishopricks, as John Cosens to that of Durham, William Lucy to Saint-Davids, Benjamin Laney to Peterborough, Richard Stern to Carliſle, Hugh Lloid to Landaff, Bryan Walton to Chester, and John Gauden to Exeter. About the same Time several of the Presbyterian Ministers were invited to Church-Preferments; Mr. Calamy had the Bishoprick of Litchfield and Coventry offer'd him, Dr. Reynolds that of Norwich, and Mr. Baxter that of Hereford: Dr. Manton was offer'd the Deanry of Rochester, Dr. Bates the Deanry of Litchfield and Coventry, and Mr. Bowles the Deanry of York: But all refus'd, on the Account of the uncertain Continuance of the Terms of the Declaration, except Dr. Reynolds, who accepted of Norwich, and continu'd about sixteen Years in that Bishoprick. These Bishops, tho' they were still hinder'd from their Places and Votes in Parliament, were fully restored to their Spiritual Jurisdiction, and all other Rights of Ordination, Institution, Censures, &c. so that the establish'd Church daily recover'd its former Authority, and began to shine with its usual Splendor.

All this Time Joy and Pleasure appear'd in all Places; and the King was not only entertain'd with the continual Addresses of his Loyal Subjects, but with the more solemn Congratulations of Foreign Princes and States, who by their Agents and Ambassadors did often send over Presents as well as Compliments; and particularly those of the United Provinces distinguish'd themselves by an excellent Collection of Pictures, and other Rarities. In the paying of these Foreign Ceremonies a dreadful Rencounter hapned on Tower-Hill, in a Dispute of Precedence between the Coaches of the French and Spanish Ambassadors. In the midst of these Times of Festivity, the admirable Princess of Orange, having recommended the Interest of her young Son the Prince to the Care of the States General, who had now agreed to invest him with the Trust and Dignity of his Ancestors, came over into England to visit her Royal Brothers, and once again to see her native Country, from which she had been absent about nineteen Years. But the Joy in seeing her eldest Brother peaceably enthroned, was extreamly clouded by her Sorrow for the Loss of her youngest and beloved Brother Henry of Oatlands Duke of Glocester, who just before her landing dy'd of the Small Pox, on the 13th of September, aged twenty Years, two Months and five Days. His Funeral was solemniz'd in Westminster-Abby; his Brother the Duke of York being chief Mourner, attended by the three Dukes of Richmond, Buckingham and Albemarle, and follow'd by the rest of the Nobility, &c. He was not only lamented by his Royal Relations, but by all great and good Men, being a Prince excellently accomplish'd, Religious, Valiant, and Wise above his Years, a dutiful and affectionate Brother, a just Counsellor, a good Master, and a faithful Friend. As to his Religion, he was an inviolable Observer of his dying Father's Instructions, and an Invincible Asserter of the Protestant Faith against all the Errors of Popery; to preserve him from the Temptations of which, his pious Sister, now coming to visit him, had for some Years parted with one half of her annual Income that was left to her own Disposal, as I learnt from an unquestionable Hand.

The Arrival of the Princess of Orange.

The Death and Character of the Duke of Glocester.

The Arrival of the Queen Mother.

Within a few Days after, there arriv'd the Queen Mother from France with a considerable Train, among whom was her fair Daughter Henrietta Maria, now sixteen Years of Age, together with Prince Edward, Brother ther to the Elector Palatine. Theſe were all formally met by the King, the Duke of York, and the Prince of Orange, and on the 2d of November conducted to White-Hall, from which Palace the Queen had been abſent nineteen Years. This Viſit was made to effect ſeveral political Ends, as particularly to adviſe of a Match between the young Princeſs and Monſieur, Brother to the French King; and likewiſe to promote a Match for the King himſelf. And firſt, we are inform'd, ſhe propos'd the famous Hortenſia Mancina, Neice to the Cardinal Mazarin, with a Portion of above twenty Millions of Livres. But that being rejected as an improper Match, ſhe then promoted the Alliance with Portugal, and a Match with the Infanta of that Kingdom, which had been ſet on foot by the Portugal Ambaſſador before the Reſtoration, and propos'd by General Monk to the King immediately after his Arrival in England. During her Majeſty's Stay, which was not above two Months, ſhe us'd her frequent Endeavours to perſwade her Son to remove the Chancellor Hyde from his Councils; and finding ſhe effected nothing in that Affair, ſhe became uneaſie and more willing to depart; yet, by the King's Importunity, ſhe at length admitted the new Dutcheſs of York to come into her Preſence; tho' by her Behaviour towards her, while preſent, it appear'd that ſhe thought her not worthy to be treated as a Daughter. Her chief Deſigns in this Viſit, contrary to thoſe of the Chancellor, ſeem'd to have been to promote the Intereſt of France and Portugal againſt the Monarchy of Spain: And notwithſtanding the former had articled not to aſſiſt Portugal, yet Mazarin, to encourage the Engliſh to a Treaty, and to ſend Forces thither, engag'd to eaſe them of their Tranſport Charge, and promis'd to advance two hundred thouſand Crowns in Specie as ſoon as the Treaty was ſign'd; and tho' he dy'd himſelf ſoon after, it was punctually perform'd by his Creature Monſieur Colbert. And here it is obſervable, that this Mony and new Alliance begot the 19th Article of that Treaty, by which it was ſtipulated, 'That Dunkirk ſhou'd never be given up to 'the King of Spain:' Which laid the Foundation for the ſelling of it to France, and which in a little Time was fully effected. 1660. The Second Meeting of the First PARLIAMENT.

VI. 1. After a Receſs of near two Months, the Parliament met on the 6th Day of November according to the former Adjournment; and one of the firſt Things done by the Houſe of Commons was, the Appointment of a Committee to attend the Queen Mother with a congratulatory Meſſage, 'Repreſenting the Joy and Contentment this Houſe had receiv'd 'on Occaſion of her Majeſty's Return to England.' To which the Queen in her Anſwer, 'acknowledg'd with Thankfulneſs the Expreſſions of the 'Houſe deſiring the Continuance of their Reſpects, Which, ſhe ſaid, 'ſhe ſhou'd never fail to do what lay in her Part to deſerve.' The Compliment of the Commons was ſeconded with a Preſent of ten thouſand Pounds made to her Daughter Henrietta Maria, as likewiſe the ſame Sum to the Princeſs of Orange, which prov'd very acceptable at this Time. The next Concern was to compleat the Disbanding of the Army, which had been too great a Burthen and Terror to the Nation, which was now daily diminiſh'd and reduc'd to a ſmall Compaſs. The Effect of it ſo viſibly appear'd in the Declenſion and Downfall of the Presbyterian Intereſt, that Mr. Prynne cou'd not with-hold from expreſſing his former Zeal, and after he had reported to the Houſe the Number of Regiments disbanded, he deſired the Houſe, That they wou'd be mindful not to do thoſe things that might bring them together again; which ſo rous'd the other Party, that with Difficulty he eſcap'd a ſevere Cenſure.

Their Active Proceedings.

Both Houſes apply'd themſelves to the making ſuch Laws as were moſt proper for the preſent Occaſion; in which they were the more diligent and ſpeedy, becauſe they receiv'd a Meſſage from the King informing them, That upon the Account of the Preparations for his Coronation, and other Reaſons, he had determin'd to diſſolve them in the End of December; and therefore deſired 'That they might the more vigorouſly apply 'themſelves to the Diſpatch of the moſt important Buſineſs that depend-'ed before them.' Shortly after the Houſe of Commons repreſented to his Majeſty 'The great Senſe that Houſe had of the many Expreſſions 'of Grace which they had receiv'd from him in his ſeveral Declarations; 'further acquainting him with the great Unanimity of the Houſe in 'ſettling a Revenue of Twelve Hundred Thouſand Pounds per Annum 'on his Majeſty, according to their former Vote.' To which Vote the King return'd his Thanks for their Care of him; and aſſured them, That he wou'd employ his Revenue for the Good of Them and the Kingdom. In the mean Time the Parliament order'd, 'That the ſeveral Bodies of Oli-'ver Cromwell, John Bradſhaw, Henry Ireton, and Thomas Pride, be 'taken out of their Graves, drawn on a Hurdle to Tyburn, there to be 'hang'd up from Ten a Clock till Sun-ſetting, and then bury'd under the 'Gallows.' At the ſame Time they made an Act of Attainder, which did not only extend to the Blood and Eſtates of theſe Four, but alſo to the nineteen Regicides that fled from Juſtice, namely, Liſle, Say, Waulton, Whalley, Barkſtead, Ludlow, Liveſey, Okey, Hewſon, Goffe, Holland, Challoner, Cawley, Corbet, Love, Dixwell, Blagrave, Broughton, and Dendy, who by this Act ſtood Adjudg'd, Convicted, and Attainted of High Treaſon.

The Commons likewiſe took Notice of an inferior Criminal, William Drake, a Citizen and Merchant of London, and drew up an Impeachment againſt him for writing and publiſhing a dangerous Book intituled The Long Parliament Revived, in which he endeavours to prove that the ſaid Parliament was not yet legally diſſolv'd. This rais'd a conſiderable Noiſe, but they wanted Time to bring it to a Tryal. About the ſame Time, upon the Rumour of Plots and Deſigns to ſeize the King, and the Tower, to kill the Queen Mother, and reſtore the long Parliament, of which we can give no certain and perfect Account, ſeveral old Officers were ſecured, as Overton, Desborough, Salmon, Farley, and Whitby in the City, and Duckenfield, Morgan, and ſeveral others, in the Country.

2. After a Seſſion of near two Months, and a Diſſolution expected, on the 29th of December, the King came to the Houſe of Peers, and paſs'd all the publick and private Bills that were ready for the Royal Aſſent. The Nature of thoſe that were of a publick Concern we find from the following Part of the Speaker's Speech. —— 'As I am com-'manded, I moſt humbly aſſure your Majeſty, That the many healing Ex-'pedients propounded by your Self in your ſeveral Gracious Declarati-'ons, have been the Subject Matter upon which your Commons have 'wrought all this Parliament. And in the firſt Place they took into 'Conſideration the great and growing Charges which then lay upon your 'People for the Pay of your Army and Navy. And they conceiv'd it 'neceſſary to begin with that Part wherein your People have the more 'Eaſe, and the greateſt Security and Satisfaction; Which was the diſ-'banding and diſcharging the Forces by Sea and Land: And this led them 'into a Conſideration of proper Ways and Means for raiſing Monies for 'that Purpoſe, as the Poll-Bill, and the Aſſeſsment of Seventy Thouſand 'Pounds per Month. But thoſe not having done the Works, here are 'Others

Sir, your Commons have likewiſe ‘ taken into Conſideration the Charge of your Summer's Fleet, &c. and ‘ paſs'd a Bill entituled An Act for Six Months Aſſeſsment at ſeventy ‘ Thouſand Pounds per Menſem, to begin the Firſt of January. I have ‘ three other Bills in my Hand, which have Relation to your Majeſty's ‘ Revenue, and are Branches thereof: The One entituled An Act for ‘ the better ordering the Selling of Wines by Retaile, and for preventing ‘ Abuſes in the Mingling, Corrupting and Limiting the Prices of the ‘ ſame: And this Bill is tender'd to your Majeſty to prevent all future ‘ Diſputes touching the Legality thereof; for we know it is your Ma- ‘ jeſty's Deſire that Nothing be done otherwiſe by any of your Miniſters ‘ acting under your Command. Another is entituled An Act for Ere- ‘ cting and Eſtabliſhing a Poſt-Office; and this being legally Settled, ‘ will be of a great Uſe to all your Majeſty's Subjects for holding ‘ Intelligence with their Factors and Agents in Foreign Parts. The ‘ other Bill provides for the Encreaſe of your Majeſty's Ordinary and ‘ Conſtant Revenue, by Granting of an Impoſt upon Ale, Beer, Syder, ‘ and other Liquors, therein expreſs'd, to hold for your Majeſty's Life. ‘ As it is the Deſire of your Commons, That your Majeſty might never ‘ be neceſſitated to reſort to Extraordinary or Unparliamentary Ways, ‘ for raiſing of Mony upon your People; ſo they likewiſe acknowledge ‘ it to be their Duties to ſupport and uphold, to the utmoſt of their ‘ Powers, the Honour and Grandeur of your Majeſty's State and Dig- ‘ nity. And for a further Evidence of your Commons dutiful Affecti- ‘ ons to your Majeſty's Royal and Dear Perſon, they have paſs'd another ‘ Bill for Raiſing ſeventy Thouſand Pounds for your Majeſty's further ‘ Supply. All which Bills I am commanded humbly to preſent to your ‘ Majeſty; and to pray your Majeſty's gracious Acceptance and Royal Aſſent.

‘ There are other Bills of Publick Concernment which have paſs'd both ‘ Houſes, and now attend upon your Majeſty for your Royal Aſſent: ‘ The One entituled An Act for Attainder of ſeveral Perſons guilty of ‘ the horrid Murther of his late Sacred Majeſty, your Royal Father of ‘ ever Bleſſed Memory. Another entituled An Act for Confirmation of ‘ Leaſes and Grants for Colleges and Hoſpitals, which will tend much ‘ to the Quieting of Mens Eſtates, that in the late Unhappy Times were ‘ forc'd to renew and change their Revenues much for the worſe, were ‘ it not for the Favour your Majeſty intends them in this Bill. There ‘ is another Bill entituled An Act to prohibit the Exportation of Wooll, ‘ Wooll-Fells, Fullers-Earth, or any other Scouring Earth; which will ‘ be the beſt Encouragement for the Woollen Manufactures; and with- ‘ out which there wou'd be a double Loſs; Firſt to your Majeſty in your ‘ Cuſtoms, and next to your People, who wou'd be diſcourag'd, and in ‘ a ſhort Time beaten out of that ancient Native Staple Trade, upon ‘ which depends the Subſiſtence of many Thouſand Families. There is ‘ another Bill entituled An Act for prohibiting the Planting, Setting, or ‘ Sowing of Tobacco in England and Ireland; which if permitted wou'd ‘ occaſion the Abatement of your Majeſty's Cuſtoms, the Deſtru- ‘ ction of your Plantations abroad, and the Diſcouraging of Navigation, ‘ and conſequently the Decay of Shipping, which are the Walls and Bul- ‘ warks of your Majeſty's Kingdom. There is One Bill more, entituled, ‘ An Act for taking away the Court of Wards and Liveries, together ‘ with Tenure in Capite, Knights Service, and Purveyances, and for ſet- ‘ tling a Revenue upon his Majeſty in lieu thereof. This Bill Ex re nata

‘ may properly be call'd A Bill of Exchange; for as Care is therein ta‘ ken for the Eaſe of your People, ſo the Supply of that Part of your ‘ Majeſty's Revenue, which formerly came into your Treaſury, by your ‘ Tenures and Purveyances, is thereby likewiſe fully provided for by the ‘ Grant of another Impoſition upon Ale and Beer, and other Liquors, ‘ to hold to your Majeſty, your Heirs, and Succeſſors for ever. And ‘ yet they ſhou'd not look upon the Conſiderations mention'd in this Bill
‘ as a full Compenſation for your Majeſty's parting with two ſuch Royal ‘ Prerogatives and Ancient Flowers of the Crown, if more were not ‘ imply'd than is expreſs'd. For your Tenures in Capite are not only ‘ turned into a Tenure of Soccage (which alone will for ever give your ‘ Majeſty a juſt Right and Title to the Labour of our Ploughs, and the ‘ Sweat of our Brows) but they are likewiſe turn'd into a Tenure in ‘ Corde. What your Majeſty had before in your Court of Wards, you ‘ will be ſure to find hereafter in the Exchequer of all your Peoples ‘ Hearts. The King of Spain's Mines will ſooner deceive Him, than
‘ this Revenue will fail you: For his Mines have Bottoms, but the deeper ‘ your Majeſty ſinks into the Hearts and Affections of your People, the ‘ greater will you find your Wealth, and the more invincible your ‘ Strength. —— Royal Sir, you have deny'd us Nothing we have ask'd
‘ this Parliament. Indeed you have out-done your Parliament, by doing much ‘ more for us, than we cou'd agree among our ſelves to ask. And there‘ fore we muſt needs be a Happy Parliament, a Healing Parliament, a ‘ Reconciling and Peace-making Parliament, a Parliament propter Ex- ‘ cellentiam that may truly be call'd Parliamentiſſimum Parliamen-
‘ tum ——

The King's Speech to the Parliament.

Upon paſſing the foremention'd Acts, the King made the following Speech, which ought to be inſerted without any Abridgement: My Lords and Gentlemen, ‘ I will not entertain you with a long Diſcourſe; the Sum
‘ of all I have to ſay to you, being to give you Thanks. very Hearty ‘ Thanks: And I aſſure you I find it a very difficult Work to ſatisfy my ‘ Self in my own Expreſſions of thoſe Thanks. Perfunctory Thanks, Or‘ dinary Thanks for Ordinary Civilities are eaſily given; but when the ‘ Heart is full as mine is, it is a Labour to thank you. You have taken ‘ great Pains to oblige me; and therefore it cannot be eaſy for me to ‘ expreſs the Senſe I have for it. I will enlarge no further to You on this ‘ Occaſion, than to tell you, when God brought me hither, I brought with ‘ me an Extraordinary Affection and Eſteem for Parliaments. I need not ‘ tell you how much it is improv'd by your Carriage towards Me: you ‘ have out-done all the good and obliging Acts of your Predeceſſors to‘ wards the Crown; and therefore you cannot but believe my Heart is ‘ exceedingly enlarg'd with the Acknowledgment. Many former Parlia‘ ments have had particular Denominations for what they have done:
‘ They have been ſtiled Learned, and Unlearned, and ſometimes have ‘ had the worſt Epithets: I pray let us Reſolve that This be for ever call'd
‘ the HEALING, and the BLESSED PARLIAMENT. As I ‘ thank you, tho' not enough, for what you have done, ſo I have not the ‘ leaſt Doubt, but when I ſhall call the next Parliament (which I ſhall do ‘ as ſoon as you can reaſonably expect or deſire) I ſhall receive your hear‘ ty Thanks for what I ſhall then have done ſince I have parted with ‘ you. For I deal truely with you: I ſhall not more propoſe any one Rule ‘ to my Self in my Actions and Counſels than this: What is a Parlia- ‘ ment like to think of this Action, and this Counſel? And it ſhall be ‘ Want of Underſtanding in me, if it will not bear that Teſt. I ſhall ‘ conclude with this, which I cannot ſay too often, nor you too often ‘ where you go: That, next to the miraculous Bleſſing of God Almigh‘ ty, and indeed as an immediate Effect of that Bleſſing, I do impute the

'good Diſpoſition and Security we are all in, to the happy Act of Indemnity and Oblivion: That is the Principal Corner Stone which ſupports 'this excellent Building, that creates Kindneſs in us to each other, and 'Confidence in our joint and common Security. You may be ſure I will 'not only obſerve it Religiouſly, and Inviolably my Self, but alſo exact 'the Obſervation of it from Others: And if any Perſon ſhall ever have 'the Boldneſs to attempt to perſwade me to the contrary, he wou'd find 'ſuch an Acceptation from Me, as He wou'd have, who ſhou'd perſwade 'me to burn Magna-Charta, cancel the old Laws, and erect a new Go'vernment after my own Invention and Appetite.

The Subſtance of the Chancellor's Speech.

After this he referr'd them to the Lord Chancellor, who diſplay'd his uſual Eloquence in a very long Speech, conſiſting of variety of Matter, chiefly tending to the healing of all former Differences, and expreſſing the great Happineſs of the preſent State of Affairs, together with the glorious Harmony between the King and his People, the beſt of Princes, and the moſt loyal Subjects. He applauded the Wiſdom of the Houſes in the King's Reſtoration, and likewiſe in all ſeveral Proceedings, and particularly told them, 'That he made no doubt but all ſucceeding Parlia'ments wou'd pay to Them their Thanks for all they had done, and look 'upon their Actions, and their Example, with all poſſible Approbation 'and Reverence.' As to the Reſtoration of the languiſhing Church to Peace, Unity and Order, he told them, 'the King had been ſo careful, 'that Conſtantine himſelf had hardly ſpent ſo much of his own Time in 'private and publick Conferences to that Purpoſe.' After many Topicks, entering upon the Glory and Reputation of England, he freely told them, 'That they were too partial to it, who believ'd it the beſt Country in 'the World: There was better Earth, better Air, and a warmer Sun in 'other Countries; but he was not unjuſt when he ſaid, That England 'was an Incloſure of the beſt People in the World, when they were well in'form'd and inſtructed: A People in Sobriety of Conſcience, the moſt 'devoted to God Almighty; in the Integrity of their Affections, the moſt 'dutiful to the King; in their good Manners and Inclinations, moſt re'gardful to their Superiors!' Therefore he deſired the Houſe of Commons, in their Return home, to aſſure them, 'That his Majeſty 'thinks himſelf the happieſt and greateſt Prince in the World, not from 'the Situation of his Dominions, and the Power of his great Navy, with 'which he can viſit his Neighbours, and keep them from viſiting him; 'but from being poſſeſs'd of the Affections and Hearts of ſuch Subjects; 'that he does ſo entirely love them, and depend upon them, That all 'his Actions, and all his Counſels ſhall tend to no other End, but to make 'them happy and proſperous.' But notwithſtanding all this Care and Tenderneſs of his Majeſty, there were ſtill ſome Men, who by their Writings and Preachings endeavour'd to continue the former Breaches; and ſome others had been ſo dangerous to the publick Peace, that they had lately been ſecured in Priſon. And then he proceeded to give them a Narrative 'how a Party of the late disbanded Officers and Soldiers, 'and others full of Diſcontent and ſeditious Purpoſes, had reſolv'd to at'tempt the Change of the preſent Government, and to erect a Common'Wealth; in which Ludlow, and other deſperate Perſons, were con'cern'd.' Therefore, upon the Account of theſe unexpected Plots and Conſpiracies, he wiſh'd, 'That their other weighty Affairs wou'd have 'given them Time to have publiſh'd their Opinion and Advice in the Buſineſs of the Militia; That the People, after ſo many Diſputes upon 'that Argument, might have found, That the King and his two Hou'ſes of Parliament, were as much of the ſame Mind in That, as in other 'Things. Therefore to ſecure the Peace of the Nation, he acquainted them

them 'That the King wou'd be constrain'd to establish it for the present, 'as formerly his Predecessors had done.' Then speaking of the former Successes so often insisted on by the Heads of the ruin'd Party, he retorted their Arguments, in the wonderful Preservation of the King's sacred Person, and alledg'd, 'That God Almighty wou'd not have led him 'through so many Wildernesses of Affliction of all Kinds, conducting 'him through so many Perils by Land; snatching him out of the midst 'of his Kingdom, when it was not worthy of him, and when the Hands 'of his Enemies were upon him, when they thought themselves so sure 'of him, that they wou'd bid so cheap and vile a Price for him: He 'wou'd not then have so cover'd him with a Cloud, that he travell'd with 'some Pleasure, and great Observation through the midst of his Enemies: 'He wou'd not so wonderfully have modell'd that Army; so inspired 'their Hearts, and the Hearts of the whole Nation, with an honest and 'impatient Longing for the Return of their dread Sovereign; and in the 'mean Time have so exercis'd him with those unnatural, or at least unu-'sual Disrespects and Reproaches abroad, that he might have a harmless 'and innocent Appetite to his own Country, and return to his own Peo-'ple full Value, and the whole unwasted Bulk of his Affections, without 'being corrupted or biass'd by extraordinary Foreign Obligations: God 'Almighty wou'd not have done all This, but for a Servant whom he 'will always preserve as the Apple of his own Eye, and always defend 'from the most secret Machinations of his Enemies.' In Conclusion, by the King's Command, he declar'd the present Parliament dissolv'd.

The Dissolution of the First PARLIAMENT.

Thus ended the famous CONVENTION, about eight Months after the first Meeting, and seven after the Restoration, when it receiv'd the Royal Stamp of PARLIAMENT: An Assembly that began with the greatest Expectation, and ended with the greatest Satisfaction of all People. Never was so glorious a Harmony between the King and Parliament of England for many Years before. And here we may observe, with an ingenious Modern Writer, that it looks as if Heaven took a more than ordinary Care of the English, that they did not throw up all their Liberties at once, upon the Restoration of the King; for, tho' some were for bringing him back upon Terms, yet after he was once come, he so entirely possess'd the Hearts of his People, that they thought nothing too much for them to grant, or for him to receive. Among other Designs to oblige him, there was one form'd to settle such a Revenue upon him for Life, as shou'd place him beyond the Necessity of asking more, except in the Case of a War, or some such Emergency. And as to Particulars, another Writer informs us, That Mr. Alexander Popham, a Man of Intrigue and great Capacity, offer'd the King, with the Assistance of a Party he had in the Parliament, to procure an Act for settling on Him and his Predecessors above two Millions a Year by way of Subsidy; which, with the Revenue of the Excise and other Duties, must have made him a very rich Prince. The King was well pleas'd with the Proposal, especially since the Want of Money had occasion'd his Father's unfortunate Projects; but advising about it with Chancellor Hyde, that Minister told him, That the best Revenue he cou'd have, wou'd be the gaining the Hearts of his Subjects; that if he wou'd trust to them, he wou'd find such Supplies as shou'd never fail him in Time of Need. Therefore it may be added, with another Writer, It is to his Memory, that we owe our being a free People; for He with his two great Friends, the Duke of Ormond and the Earl of Southampton, check'd the Forwardness of some who were desirous to load the Crown with Prerogative and Revenue. He put a Stop to all this, which being afterwards odiously represented, brought on that great and lasting, but honourable Disgrace. However, one Project for additional Authority took Place without any present Opposition; which was, That upon the disbanding of the Army, the King, besides his usual Band of Pensioners, thought fit, in Imitation of France and Foreign Kingdoms, to establish a considerable Number of both Horse and Foot Guards, commonly call'd the Life-Guard; which, tho' not dislik'd at present, as being of special Use at this Time, was afterwards complain'd of as a considerable Grievance to the Nation, and as having too near an Alliance with a Standing Army. 1660. Car. 12 Ref. 1.

3. While the King was busily employ'd in setling and establishing the grand Affairs of England, in this memorable Year, he was no ways negligent with respect to the Peace and Happiness of his two other Kingdoms of Scotland and Ireland. As to Scotland, the English Commissioners having been employ'd as Judges for the Government of that Nation, and having had their Commissions continu'd for some Time after the King's Restoration, they were at length by Letters from the Duke of Albemarle acquainted with the King's Pleasure, 'That from the 22d of 'August they shou'd cease to act in this their Judicatory Power, in re'gard that Kingdom was thenceforth to be reduc'd to its ancient Form 'of Government:' In order to which, Proclamation was made in the King's Name, for the speedy convening of the Committee of the Three Estates of Scotland; and a Parliament also was to be call'd there within a few Months. In the Interim, the chief Ministers of State were constituted; the Earl of Glencarn was made Lord Chancellor, the Lord Crawford-Lindsey Lord Treasurer, the Earl of Cassiles Justice General, the Earl of Lauderdale chief Secretary of State, and General Middleton the King's Commissioner, with several others. The Committee of Estates being assembled, made it their first Care to keep all Things in Peace and full Obedience to the present Government: For, notwithstanding the late Unanimity of the People at Edinburgh, as well as other Places, in the publick proclaiming of his Majesty, yet after a short Space, a Spirit of Discontent began to discover it self among certain prime Ministers of the Kirk Party, as appear'd by their meeting together at an appointed Place, for the drawing up a Remonstrance concerning certain Things in which they thought themselves aggriev'd: Of which the Committee of Estates having Notice, sent immediately to apprehend them, and secured them in Prison; and to prevent the like Disturbance for the future, they set forth a Proclamation against all unlawful Meetings, and seditious Papers. The like Imprisonment hapned also to their Country-Man the famous Marques of Argyle, who notwithstanding he came to the English Court, with other of the Scotch Nobility and Gentry, upon Pretence of rendering his Service to his Majesty, was found so culpable, that he was committed to the Tower for High Treason, and afterwards sent to be try'd in his own Country. The Affairs of Scotland.

But to make a perfect Settlement of the Peace and Prosperity of Scotland, as well as England, the King thought it necessary to summon a Parliament to meet at Edinburgh the 12th Day of December. And to prepare the Way, he issu'd out a Proclamation in that Kingdom, which shew'd him to be of the same Disposition in all his Dominions. By this he solemnly declared, 'That he rely'd so much on the Loyalty, Pru'dence, and Care of his Parliament, as absolutely to commit to Them 'the trying and judging of the Carriage of his Subjects during the late 'Troubles, concerning which he wou'd receive Addresses and Informa'tions only from his Parliament or Committee of Estates. To whom, in 'the mean Time, he recommended the ordering and preparing that Af'fair, and to whom alone any of his People that were interested, might 'freely,

'freely, and ſhou'd Only make their Applications; aſſuring them, That 'his own Honour once vindicated, and the ancient Prerogatives of the 'Crown once aſſerted, he wou'd grant ſuch a full and free Pardon, An 'Act of Indemnity, as might witneſs, That he deſired nothing more than 'that his People ſhould be ſettled with abundance of Happineſs, Peace 'and Plenty, under his Government.

And of Ireland.

As to the Kingdom of Ireland, his Majeſty very early iſſu'd out his Proclamation againſt all Diſturbers of the Peace in thoſe Parts, and with good Effect; and Colonel Eyres, who had endeavour'd to raiſe a Party there, was ſoon reduced by Sir Charles Coot. The Convention that had aſſembled in that Kingdom upon the Change of Government, as ſoon as they had taken Order for the ſettling of the publick Affairs, and had appointed certain Commiſſioners to wait upon his Majeſty with their congratulatory Addreſſes, thought fit to diſſolve themſelves, in Expectation of the King's Pleaſure for the calling of a full Parliament, and to make Way for the ancient Conſtitution of the Government by a Lord Lieutenant, as had been determin'd by the King and his Council. But in the mean Time, for the preſent Government of that Kingdom, his Majeſty made Sir Maurice Euſtace Knight Lord Chancellor of Ireland, Roger Earl of Orrerey Lord Preſident of Munſter, and Charles Earl of Montraith Lord Preſident of Connaught, to be Lords Juſtices, who manag'd and govern'd there with great Candor and Moderation. So that excepting from ſome whoſe Diſcontent and Guilt wou'd allow them no Reſt, there was now a general Quiet throughout the King's Dominions.

4. And now, to draw towards a Concluſion of this wonderful Year, we may take ſome Notice of the general Joy and Felicity that ſhined through the Britiſh Dominions, after ſuch Clouds of Darkneſs and Confuſion; which was introduc'd without one Drop of Blood, and afterwards eſtabliſh'd with the Execution of but ten Perſons in England, and the leſſer Puniſhment of a few more. This Revolution, begun by an over-ruling Providence, was moderated and compleated by the Wiſdom and Clemency of the preſent Adminiſtration, which ſo work'd up the Candour and Moderation of the Convention Parliament, that, in ſpite of the Repinings of ſome reſtleſs Perſons, the Happineſs was in Effect made univerſal. All Arts and Sciences at this Time acquired new Life and Vigour; all Sorts of Knowledge and Learning met with Countenance and Incouragement; all curious Inventions and Experiments were approv'd of and promoted, and Politeneſs and good Taſte came more and more into Faſhion; and even the Engliſh Tongue was daily more improv'd and refined, both as to Verſe and Proſe, by the ingenious Men of the Age, ſuch as Waller, Cowley, Denham, Davenant, Sprat, Leſtrange, Dryden, Etheridge, and others, beſides thoſe of the Court, as the King himſelf, the Lord Chancellor, the Duke of Buckingham, and the Earl of Rocheſter; who altogether introduc'd a more juſt and judicious way of Writing and Speaking than had been known before in England.

The Beginning of the Royal Society.

This great Year likewiſe had the Fame of producing that memorable Eſtabliſhment, ſo much encourag'd by the King and the Court, call'd The Royal Society; a celebrated Body of Men, who this Year laid a glorious Foundation for the fineſt Inventions and Experiments in Mathematicks, Phyſick, Philoſophy, &c. which ſince then have met with innumerable Additions and Improvements, to the Glory of Learning, and the Honour of the Engliſh Nation. The chief Promoters of this Society in its Infancy were Dr. Ward, Mr. Boyl, the Lord Brouncker, Dr. Wilkins, Dr. Wallis, Sir William Petty, Dr. Goddard, Dr. Willis, Dr. Bathurſt, Dr. Wren, and Mr. Rook; which afterwards receiv'd a great Addition

Addition of the moſt eminent Men in the Nation. The Felicity of this Year, being leſs reſiſtable by many than the preceding Adverſity, likewiſe unhappily produc'd other Sorts, or rather other Effects of Politeneſs and genteel Education, ſuch as jovial Entertainment, loyal Remembrances, free Converſation, amorous Intrigues, refined Courtſhip and Gallantry, with other ſoftning and faſhionable Expreſſions, which ſerv'd to cover the moſt enormous Viciouſneſs in the Court and other Places. All which was incourag'd and promoted by the Licentiouſneſs of the two new erected Theatres or Play-houſes, where there ſeem'd to have been very little Reſtraint, and where a new Cuſtom was now introduced of bringing in Women upon the Stage, which before had been perſonated by Boys or young Men. Thus the Felicity of the Times was firſt ſully'd, and afterwards corrupted, ſo as by degrees to bring inſuperable Inconveniencies upon the Nation. 1660. Car. 12 Ref. 1.

The general Joy of this Year was much interrupted at the Concluſion of it, by the immature Death of the King's beloved Siſter Mary Princeſs of Orange, who on the 24th of December dy'd of the Small-Pox, a Diſtemper that has been fatal to the Royal Family. Her Death was a moſt ſenſible Affliction to the King and all the Court, being a Lady of a noble Soul, of admirable Virtues, and all Princely Endowments, and one who had been the great Support and Comfort to her three Brothers in the Time of their greateſt Diſtreſs. She was now twenty nine Years of Age, and was bury'd in the ſame Place, and after the ſame Manner with her Brother the Duke of Gloceſter. She left only one Son behind her, about ten Years of Age, William Prince of Orange, who afterwards became the prime Inſtrument in the wonderful Revolution that happened in the Year 1688. The Princeſs's Death was uſher'd in by a fatal Accident, the Overſetting of the Aſſurance Frigate, riding at Anchor at Wolledge, by a ſudden Blaſt of Wind, by which Misfortune ſeveral Perſons in the Ship were drown'd. Her Death was likewiſe in ſome Meaſure accompany'd by the Deaths of two of the Nobility, William Marqueſs of Hertford, lately advanc'd to the Dukedom of Somerſet, and John Lord Colepeper; both Perſons of great Worth and ſingular Loyalty, whoſe Characters have been given in the other Part or Volume of this Hiſtory. The Deaths of Mary Princeſs of Orange, The Marqueſs of Hertford, The Lord Colepeper, Beſides thoſe of the higheſt Quality, this Year is remarkable for the Deaths of ſeveral others, whoſe Names ought to be remember d in Hiſtory; the firſt of which was Dr. Henry Hammond, the famous Divine, and the Glory of the Engliſh Nation, not only for Theology, but for many other learned Acquiſitions. He had been made Arch-deacon of Chicheſter, Canon of Chriſt-Church in Oxford, and Orator to that Univerſity, and likewiſe made Chaplain in Ordinary to the late King, to whom he was ſignally ſerviceable in the Treaties of Uxbridge, the Iſle of Wight, and in other Emergencies. Notwithſtanding his admirable Learning and Piety, he was driven from Oxford; from whence he retired to the Houſe of Sir John Packington in Worceſterſhire, where after ſeveral Years living in the profoundeſt Devotion and Humility, and moſt unparallell'd Charity, he expired in the 56th Year of his Age, about a Month before the glorious Reſtoration; which if he had ſurviv'd, he wou'd have adorn'd the Church in one of its higheſt Stations. The next Perſon to be nam'd is Dr. Richard Zouche, a moſt celebrated Civilian, Profeſſor of that Faculty, Principal of St. Alban's-Hall in Oxford, and Judge of the Court of Admiralty; a Perſon noble by Birth, and highly accompliſh'd by Learning, whoſe Judgment and Works were not only held in great Eſtimation in England, but alſo in foreign Countries. Beſides this great Civilian, this Year, there dy'd a famous Common Lawyer, Mr. Walter Rumſey; educated in the Univerſity of Oxford, made a Bencher of Gray's-Inn, Dr. Hammond, Dr. Zouche, Mr. Rumſey,

1660. Car. 12 Ref. 1.

Mr. Oughtred,

Inn, and afterwards a Judge in South-Wales, being ſo noted for his Profeſſion, that he was uſually ſtil'd The Pick-Lock of the Law; and beſides, he was not a little admir'd for his Philoſophical and Muſical Genius, and his ſeveral curious Inventions. We ought likewiſe to mention Mr. William Oughtred, a Gentleman of an ancient Family, educated in Cambridge Univerſity, and Fellow of King's-Colledge; and afterwards Rector of Albury in Surrey; where, tho' he worthily perform'd the Offices of his Function, he moſt of all excell'd in the moſt difficult Parts of the Mathematicks, ſo that all his Contemporaries unanimouſly acknowledg'd him the Prince of Mathematicians; and he had the particular Happineſs to be a great Inſtructor of ſeveral of thoſe who form'd the Royal Society. And becauſe the moſt vile, as well as the moſt valuable Perſons, are ſometimes to be mention'd in Hiſtory, we ſhall laſtly take Notice of James Nailor the Quaker, whoſe ſtrange Crime and Puniſhment is already remember'd: The Extravagance of the former caus'd him, for a while, to be diſown'd by the Quakers; but upon his Repentance, as it is ſaid, he was again receiv'd into their Society, and ſo continu'd one of their Preachers till his Death, which happen'd this Year in the County of Huntingdon.

And James Nailor.

The Inſurrection of the Fifth-Monarchy Men.

Heath. Manley. Philips. Ogilby. Baxter. Calamy. Collier. &c.

V. 1. While the Affairs of the Nation ſeem'd to be in Peace and Tranquillity, in the Beginning of the new Year there happen'd a ſtrange and unparallel'd Action in London, which ſtrengthen'd the Belief of thoſe ſecret Plots and Conſpiracies mention'd by the Lord Chancellor in his laſt Speech to the Parliament. This was occaſion'd by a ſmall Body of Fifth-Monarchy Men, who hating all Monarchy, and the Appearance of it, had formerly made an Attempt againſt Cromwell's Government, but eſcap'd beyond Expectation. The Head of them was one Thomas Venner, ſometime a Wine-Cooper, who by the King's Indulgence held a Conventicle in Coleman-ſtreet, where he, and others, us'd to preach to them out of the Prophecies of Daniel and the Revelations, and from thence drew ſtrange Inferences, perſwading their Congregation to take up Arms for King JESUS, againſt the Powers of the Earth, the King, the Duke of York, General Monk, &c. aſſuring them, That no Weapons form'd againſt them ſhould proſper, nor a Hair of their Heads be touch'd; for One ſhould chace a Thouſand, and Two put Ten Thouſand to Flight. Upon which they got a Declaration printed, entitled, A Door of Hope open'd; in which they ſaid, and declared, 'That they wou'd never ſheath 'their Swords till Babylon, as they call'd Monarchy, became a Hiſſing 'and a Curſe, and there be left neither Remnant, Son, nor Nephew: 'That when they had led Captivity Captive in England, they wou'd go 'into France, Spain, Germany, &c. and rather dye than take the wicked 'Oaths of Supremacy and Allegiance: That they wou'd not make any 'Leagues with Monarchiſts, but wou'd riſe up againſt the Carnal, to 'poſſeſs the Gate, or the World, to bind their Kings in Chains, and their 'Nobles in Fetters of Iron.' And ſo to accompliſh this heroick Deſign, they obſerv'd ſo much Policy as to put it in Execution when the King was attending his Mother and Siſter to embark at Portſmouth, for their Return into France. Accordingly on Sunday the 6th of January, being fully animated by the Sermon, which hinted to them, that they had been praying and preaching, but not acting for God, they ſally'd out well arm'd from their Meeting-Houſe, and march'd to St. Paul's Church-Yard in the Dark of the Evening. Here they muſter'd their Party, amounting to above Fifty, and plac'd their Centinels for the Time, one of whom kill'd a poor innocent Man, who upon Demand had anſwer'd, He was for God and King Charles! This gave an Alarm to the City, and the

the Lord Mayor, Sir Richard Brown; and the Train'd-Bands being upon the Guard, ſome Files of Men were ſent againſt them, whom theſe deſperate Men quickly routed, and ſo march'd on to Biſhops-Gate, where they paſs'd without Oppoſition, and from thence to Cripple-Gate, where they came into the City again, and ſo to Alders-Gate. Here threatning the Conſtable, who was weakly attended, they were let out again. Then they declared themſelves for KING JESUS, and thus proceeded to Beech-Lane, where they kill'd a Headborough that oppos'd them, and ſo haſtned to Cane-Wood, about two Miles from the City, between Highgate and Hampſted, where they repos'd themſelves for that Night. 1660/61. Car. 13 Reſ. 1.

The Noiſe of this ſtrange Inſurrection caus'd the General to ſend a Party of Horſe and Foot the next Day, who drove them out of the Wood, and took ſome of them Priſoners, who were committed to the Gate-Houſe. The reſt having rally'd again, on Wedneſday Morning return'd to London, with Aſſurance by Venner their Leader That no Weapon form'd againſt them ſhou'd proſper: Therefore they might look upon the Example of Gideon: It was the ſame Thing to God, whether he ſav'd by a Few or a Multitude. Their firſt Appearance was in Threadneedle-Street, behind the Exchange, where they beat back a Party ſent by the Guard there. But, upon the Advance of more Forces, they retreated to Biſhop-Gate-Street; where, after a ſharp Encounter, two of each Side being ſlain, they gradually ſlipt away and diſappear'd. A while after, like the gathering of Clouds, they were ſeen again at Colledge-Hill and Maiden-Lane, where they deſign'd to ſacrifice the Lord-Mayor. But miſſing of him, they croſs'd Cheapſide, and paſs'd into Wood-Street. Here began a cruel Fight, wherein they ſhew'd Skill as well as great Valour; and having ruffled ſome Train'd-Bands, and repell'd the Horſe-Guards that came to aſſiſt them, they did not give Way till Venner was knock'd down and ſeverely wounded, and Tuffney and Cragg, two of their fierceſt Preachers and Combatants, were ſlain. Whereupon the greateſt Part of them retreated to Cripple-Gate, firing in good Order in their Rear upon the Train'd-Bands, who were in cloſe Purſuit of them. Colonel Cox, who commanded, lodg'd ten of them in an Ale-Houſe near the Poſtern, which Houſe they obſtinately maintain'd. The Houſe being ſurrounded, ſome of the Soldiers untiled the next Houſe, and ſhot in upon them, being in the upper Room, who ſtill refus'd Quarter: At the ſame Time another Party of Musketeers got up the Stairs, broke down the Door, and enter'd their Garriſon. Six of them were kill'd before, another refuſing Quarter was firſt knock'd down, and then ſhot with a Musket. The reſt being demanded why they did not ask Quarter before, anſwer'd They durſt not for fear their own Fellows ſhou'd have ſhot them. In this Inſurrection, twenty of the King's Men were ſlain, and as many of the Rebels. Thoſe taken were Venner himſelf, Hodgkins, Gowler, Allen, Pym, Aſhton, Prichard, Fall, Hopkins, Wells, and about as many more, not much worth the Naming; who blaſphemouſly alledg'd, That if they were deceiv'd or miſ-led, 'twas God that deceiv'd them.

Their Enthuſiaſm.

They are defeated.

Theſe, to the Number of twenty, were ſoon after arraign'd at the Old Baily for Treaſon and Murder; which being fully prov'd, with all the forementioned Particulars, they were all found guilty, except Hopkins and Wells, againſt whom the Evidence was not full, and againſt one Patſhul only a ſingle Witneſs: Wherefore they were acquitted by their Jury. When Sentence was pronounc'd againſt them, and the Lord Chief Juſtice Foſter ſeriouſly charg'd Venner with the Blood of his unhappy Accomplices, he impudently reply'd, It was not he, but Jeſus that led them. Three of them confeſs'd their Crime, and crav'd Mercy, but the reſt continu'd obſtinate. Being ſentenc'd to be hang'd drawn and quarter'd, Venner and others executed.

1660/61. Car. 13 Ref. 1.

Venner and Hodgkins were on the 19th of January executed over-against their Meeting-House in Coleman-Street. The former spoke little but in Vindication of himself and his Fact, and something of his Opinion, with an Assurance That the Time was at Hand when other Judgment wou'd be; highly reflecting upon the present Government. Hodgkins rav'd and curs'd in the Manner of Praying, calling down Vengeance from Heaven upon the King, the Judges, and the City of London; nor wou'd he desist, till the Executioner put an End to all his Extravagancies. Two Days after nine more were executed in five several Places of the City, without being quarter'd, as the two first were. All persisted, like the Regicides, in justifying their Crimes, except one young Man, who shew'd great Signs of Repentance.

The Consequence of the Insurrection.

Thus ended a Rebellion of a very strange Nature, which was begun and carry'd on with such infernal Rage, that if their Numbers had been equal to their Spirits, they wou'd have overturn'd the City, and the Nation, and the World, which in their Imagination they had divided among themselves. Tho' this was look'd upon as an Excursion so wild and extravagant, as not to be attributed to a whole Party; yet several Persons being seiz'd not long before, it was thought to be a Branch of the main Design against Monarchy and the present Establishment, and that only the over-hot Zeal of these Enthusiasts fired the Train before the grand Mine was ready to spring. However it was thus taken by the Government, which, having been merciful to the utmost Degree, now began otherwise to exert it self, and to bear a little harder upon a Party who had formerly promoted the most furious Methods. Accordingly a Proclamation was issu'd out 'Prohibiting all seditious and unlawful 'Meetings and Conventicles, under Pretence of Religious Worship; and 'commanding that the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy be tender'd to 'all Persons disaffected to the Government, and in Case of Refusal, that 'they be proceeded against, and suffer the severe Penalties of the Statute 'of the Seventh of King James.' So, for the present, all Things were reduced to Peace and Quietness; which was establish'd by the total disbanding of the Army in England, except the Lord General's Regiment of Foot, and Life-Guard of Horse, who were all paid off and disbanded on Tower-Hill the 14th of February, by the Commissioners nominated by Parliament, who intimated to the Officers and others, 'That tho' 'they were disbanded as to the Kingdom's Pay, yet they were to be 'timely advanc'd into his Majesty's Service, as an extraordinary Guard 'to his Royal Person.

Preparations for the Coronation.

2. And now the King was preparing for two great Affairs, besides the Meeting of a new Parliament, a Coronation, and a Marriage. The first was appointed to be solemniz'd on the 23d Day of April; and was resolv'd to be made more pompous and magnificent than those of his two last Predecessors, who were thought too little mindful of what regarded the outward Grandeur and Honour of the Crown, which had been so wisely and visibly supported by the great Queen before them. These, for Reasons of State, had omitted the most chargeable and glorious Part of the Solemnity, the triumphant Cavalcade from the Tower to Westminster, which Sight had been much incourag'd and promoted by popular Princes. This was now resolv'd to be reviv'd; and Care was taken that no Expences shou'd be wanting that might compleat the Delight and Splendor of the Day. In order to which the City of London, according to their Charter, erected four Triumphal Arches of more than ordinary Magnificence, for his Majesty and his Train to pass through to the Coronation. The first in Leaden-Hall-Street, near Lime-Street End, made made after the Dorick Order; nobly repreſenting his Majeſty's happy Arrival in England. The Second, being a fine Naval Repreſentation, was near the Royal Exchange in Cornhill. The third, conſiſting of the Corinthian and Compoſite Order, and repreſenting the Temple of Concord, was plac'd in Cheapſide, near the End of Wood-Street. The Fourth, conſiſting of the Dorick and Ionick Orders, and repreſenting the Garden of Plenty, ſtood in Fleet-Street, near White Friars. All which, with their ſeveral Inſcriptions, Mottoes, &c. are fully deſcrib'd by Mr. Ogilby and others. 1661. Car. 13 Reſ. 1.

The better to grace the Solemnity, the King advanc'd ſeveral eminent Perſons to higher Degrees of Dignity. And firſt he ſettled and compleated the Number of Knights of the noble Order of the Garter, which on the 16th of April ſtood as following: Charles, King of Great Britain, &c. James, Duke of York; Charles Lodowick, Prince Elector Palatine; Frederick William, Elector of Brandenburg; Rupert, Count Palatine of the Rhine, and Duke of Cumberland; Edward, Count Palatine of the Rhine; William of Naſſaw, Prince of Orange; Barnard, Duke of Eſpernon; Charles, Prince of Tarante; William, Earl of Salisbury; Thomas, Earl of Berkſhire; Algernon, Earl of Northumberland; James, Duke of Ormond; George, Duke of Buckingham; Thomas, Earl of Southampton; William, Marqueſs of Newcaſtle; George, Earl of Briſtol; Gaſper, Count of Marſin; George, Duke of Albemarle; Edward, Earl of Sandwich; Aubery, Earl of Oxford; Charles, Duke of Richmond and Lenox; Montague, Earl of Lindſey; Edward, Earl of Mancheſter; and William Earl of Strafford. About the ſame Time the King thought fit to create ſix Earls, and ſix Barons, ſome of whom are already mention'd: The Lord Chancellor was created Earl of Clarendon; Arthur, Lord Capel, Earl of Eſſex; Thomas, Lord Brudenel, Earl of Cardigan; Arthur, Viſcount Valentia, Earl of Angleſey; Sir John Greenvile, Earl of Bath; Charles Howard, Earl of Carlile; Denzil Hollis, Lord Hollis of Ifeld; Sir Frederick Cornwallis, Lord Cornwallis of Eye in Suffolk; Sir George Booth, Lord de-la-Mere; Sir Horatio Townſhend, Baron of Lyn Regis; Sir Anthony Aſhley-Cooper, Baron of Winterburn St. Giles; and John Crew made Lord Crew of Stene. The Knights of the Garter.

Beſides theſe Noblemen, for the greater Ornament of the Coronation, his Majeſty was pleaſed to make ſixty eight Knights of the Bath, intituled alſo Knights of the Holy Trinity; which, for the Curioſity of ſome Readers, are here nam'd. The Fifteen firſt were Sons, or Relations to Noblemen, as Sir Edward Clinton, Son and Heir to the Earl of Lincoln; Sir John Egerton, Eldeſt Son to the Earl of Bridgewater; Sir William Egerton, ſecond Son to the ſame Earl; Sir Philip Herbert ſecond Son to the Earl of Pembroke; Sir Vere Fane, ſecond Son to the Earl of Weſtmorland; Sir Charles Berkley eldeſt Son to the Lord Berkley; Sir Henry Bellaſis, eldeſt Son to the Lord Bellaſis; Sir Henry Hyde, eldeſt Son to the Earl of Clarendon; Sir Rowland Bellaſis, Brother to the Lord Faulconbridge; Sir Henry Capel, Brother to the Earl of Eſſex; Sir John Vaughan, ſecond Son to the Earl of Carbury; Sir Charles Stanley, Grandſon to the Earl of Derby; Sir Charles Cornwallis, eldeſt Son to the Lord Cornwallis; Sir Francis Fane, and Sir Henry Fane, Grandſons to the Earl of Weſtmorland. The next Six were Baronets, as Sir William Portman, Sir Richard Temple, Sir William Ducy, Sir Thomas Trevor, Sir John Scudamore, and Sir William Gardiner. The reſt were Sir John Nicholas, Sir John Monſon, Sir John Bramſton, Sir Bourchier Wray, Sir John Coventry, Sir Edward Hungerford, Sir John Knevet, Sir Philip Butler, Sir Adrian Scroop, Sir Richard Knightley, Sir Henry Heron, Sir John Lewknor, Sir George Brown, Sir William Tyringham, Sir Francis Godolphin, Sir Edward Baynton, Sir Grevil Verney, Sir Edward Harley, Sir Edward Walpole, Sir Francis Popham, Sir Edward Wiſe, Sir Chriſtopher The Knights of the Bath.

pher Calthorp, Sir Richard Edgecomb, Sir William Bromley, Sir Thomas Bridges, Sir Thomas Fanſhaw, Sir John Denham, Sir Nicholas Bacon, Sir James Altham, Sir Thomas Wendy, Sir George Freeman, Sir Nicholas Slanning, Sir Richard Ingoldsby, Sir John Bates, Sir Edward Heath, Sir William Morley, Sir John Bennet, Sir Hugh Smith, Sir Simon Leach, Sir Henry Cheſter, Sir Robert Atkins, Sir Robert Gayre, Sir Richard Pawle, Sir Hugh Ducy, Sir Stephen Hales, Sir Ralph Buſh, and Sir Thomas Whitmore. Theſe all receiv'd their Honours with very great Ceremony, and a Feſtival Solemnity.

The Solemnity of the CORONATION.

All Things being prepar'd, on Monday the 22d of April, his Majeſty, attended by all his Nobility, Judges, Officers, &c. made his grand Cavalcade from the Tower to Weſtminſter, in ſuch a glorious and ſplendid Manner, and with ſuch a ſurprizing and aſtoniſhing Appearance, that it ſeem'd as if the Riches of both the Indies were ſent over to adorn this Day's Triumph. The Streets and Houſes were prepared after an extraordinary Manner, and fill'd with innumerable Multitudes of People from all Parts of the Country, beſides many Foreigners, who acknowledg'd they had never ſeen, among all the great Sights of the World, any that cou'd equal This: Even the French themſelves confeſs'd their late Nuptial Solemnities at their King and Queen's Entrance into Paris to be inferior in Pomp, State and Riches, to this illuſtrious Cavalcade. Nothing cou'd vie with it but the wonderful Reſtoration it ſelf, the Remembrance of which being now reviv'd, occaſion'd incredible Tranſports in the People. The next Day, being St. George's Day, the Coronation was Solemniz'd at Weſtminſter, in the Preſence of ſeveral Foreign Ambaſſadors, after the uſual and ancient Manner, yet with ſeveral Additions as to Ceremony, Habit, Feaſting, and the greateſt Magnificence: So that it was very wonderful to all Strangers, that ſo much Wealth and Grandeur ſhou'd appear in a Kingdom ſo lately over-run with Confuſion and Deſolation. It is obſervable that theſe two Days were the only Days clear from Rain for above a Month together; but as ſoon as the whole Solemnity was over, and the King at Dinner in Weſtminſter-Hall, there fell ſuch a Storm of Thunder, Lightning and Rain, as had never been known at that Time of the Year; which ſeveral were ready to look upon as Ominous, and portending ſome future Calamities.

3. While Preparations were making for theſe great Solemnities, and the Meeting of a new Parliament, the King was buſily and ſecretly imploy'd in the Affair of a Marriage with the Infanta of Portugal; in which he came to ſuch a Reſolution, as to think it convenient to diſcover and lay it before his Parliament; the Steps and Proceedings of which will be mention'd in a more proper Place. In the mean Time his Majeſty was likewiſe carrying on another Deſign, purſuant to his large Declaration in October laſt, which began to take Place before the Meeting of the Parliament, and which was an Attempt and Endeavour to reconcile the different Parties as to Religious Matters, more eſpecially the Church of England and the Presbyterian. This was judg'd a very laudable Deſign; and accordingly the King iſſu'd out a Commiſſion directed to twelve Biſhops, and nine Epiſcopal Divines as Aſſiſtants, on one Side; and to twelve Presbyterian Divines, as Principals, and nine Others, as Aſſiſtants, on the other Side. The Biſhops were Fruen of York, Couſens of Durham, Sheldon of London, Warner of Rocheſter, King of Chicheſter, Henchman of Salisbury, Morley of Worceſter, Sanderſon of Lincoln, Laney of Peterborough, Walton of Cheſter, Sterne of Carliſle, and Gauden of Exeter: Their Aſſiſtants were Dr. Earl, Dr. Heylyn, Dr. Hacket, Dr. Barwick, Dr. Gunning, Dr. Pearſon, Dr. Price, Dr. Sparrow, and Mr. Thorndike. The twelve Presbyterian Divines were Dr. Reynolds, Dr. Tuckney,

The Divines concern'd in the Savoy Conference.

Tuckney, Dr. Conant, Dr. Spurſtow, Dr. Wallis, Dr. Manton, Mr. Calamy, Mr. Baxter, Mr. Jackſon, Mr. Caſe, Mr. Clark, and Mr. Newcomen: Their Aſſiſtants were Dr. Horton, Dr. Bates, Dr. Jacomb, Dr. Lightfoot, Mr. Cooper, Mr. Collins, Mr. Drake, Mr. Rawlinſon, and Mr. Woodbridge. All theſe were commiſſion'd by the King to act for four Months from the 25th of March, and more particularly 'To adviſe upon, and review the Book of Common-Prayer, comparing the ſame with 'the moſt ancient Liturgies which have been us'd in the Church in the 'primitive and pureſt Times, and to take into their ſerious and grave 'Conſiderations the ſeveral Directions and Rules, Forms of Prayer, and 'Things in the ſaid Book of Common-Prayer contained; and to adviſe and 'conſult upon and about the ſame, and the ſeveral Objections and Exceptions which ſhall now be rais'd againſt the ſame; and, if Occaſion be, to 'make ſuch reaſonable and neceſſary Alterations, Corrections and Amendments, as ſhall be agreed upon to be needful and expedient for giving 'Satisfaction to Tender Conſciences, and the Reſtoring and Continuance 'of Peace and Unity in the Churches under his Majeſty's Government 'and Protection.—And to certify to his Majeſty in Writing, under their 'ſeveral Hands, the Matters and Things whereupon they ſhall ſo determine, to be by his Majeſty approv'd, &c. 1661. Car. 13 Reſ. 1.

Great were the Expectations of all Parties what the Reſult wou'd be of the Meeting of ſo many conſiderable Divines, who cou'd not be ſuppos'd to aſſemble without ſome Prejudices and Reſentments. The Biſhop of London's Lodgings in the Savoy was the Place appointed for their Meeting; and when the Parties appear'd, that Biſhop, as One in Poſſeſſion, acquainted the Presbyterian Miniſters, That Themſelves, and not the Biſhops, had requeſted the Conference for making ſome Alterations in the Liturgy: That therefore nothing was to be done, till they had deliver'd their Exceptions in Writing, together with the additional Forms and Alterations which they deſired. This Method had before been declin'd by the Presbyterian Miniſters, when firſt offer'd by the King, and next by the Chancellor, excuſing themſelves, as not having a Commiſſion from their Brethren, who were very numerous: And when they were urg'd to declare their own Senſe, excluſive of their Party, they endeavour'd to evade it by begging, That if they made their Propoſals, the other Party might bring in their utmoſt Conceſſions at the ſame Time, ſo that when both were compared, ſome Judgment might be made of the Succeſs. According to this reſerved Way the Presbyterian Commiſſioners objected againſt the Propoſal of the Biſhop of London, and mov'd for an amicable Conference, according to the Intent, as they preſum'd, of the Commiſſion, and which they thought more likely to contribute to a Diſpatch of their great End of Meeting; whereas Writing wou'd be a tedious endleſs Buſineſs, and prevent the Familiarity and Acquaintance with each others Minds, which wou'd beſt facilitate Peace and Concord. But Biſhop Sheldon firmly adhered to the ſafer and more certain Way of bringing all their Exceptions, Alterations and Additions in one View in Writing, to which, in the ſame Manner, they ſhou'd likewiſe receive diſtinct Anſwers. After ſome Debate, it was finally agreed, 'That they ſhou'd bring in all 'their Exceptions at one Time, and all their Additions at another 'Time. Their Meeting.

Accordingly the Exceptions were drawn up by Dr. Reynolds, Dr. Wallis, Mr. Calamy, Mr. Newcomen, Dr. Bates, &c. and preſented to the Biſhops under this Title, The Exceptions of the Presbyterian Brethren againſt ſome Paſſages in the preſent Liturgy. In which Paper, their general Allegation and Requeſt was, 'That as the Reformers at firſt ſo com-'poſ'd the Liturgy, as might be moſt likely to win upon the Papiſts, 'and The Presbyterian Exceptions.

1661 Car. 13 Ref. 1.

'and draw them into their Church Communion by varying as little as well 'they cou'd from the Romiſh Forms before in uſe; ſo it might, accord-'ing to the ſame Rules of Prudence, be then ſo compos'd, as to gain up-'on the Judgments and Affection of Thoſe, who in the Subſtantials of 'the Proteſtant Religion are of the ſame Perſwaſion.' In Order to this they began with an impracticable Propoſal, namely, 'That the Prayers 'and Materials of the Liturgy might have nothing in them Doubtful or 'Queſtion'd among pious, learned and orthodox Perſons.' Then they proceeded to deſire 'That the Repetitions and Reſponſals of Clerk and 'People might be omitted: That the Petitions in the Litany might be 'caſt into one ſolemn Prayer to be offer'd up by the Miniſter alone: 'That there be nothing countenancing the Obſervation of Lent as a 'Religious Faſt: That the Obſervation of Saints Days, &c. be omitted: 'That the Gift of Prayer be not excluded from being a Part of Publick 'Worſhip: That the new Tranſlation of the Scriptures be every where 'us'd inſtead of the Old Verſion: That all Apocryphal Leſſons be omit-'ted: That no Part of the Liturgy be read at the Communion-Table: 'That the Word Prieſt and Curate be turn'd into that of Miniſter, and 'Sunday into Lord's-Day. And, beſides Others, That no Ceremonies of 'Habit or Poſture be impos'd, but left to the Diſcretion of the Miniſter.' After theſe general Propoſals, they added their particular Exceptions to ſeveral Parts and Paſſages in the Liturgy, and expreſs'd or ſuggeſted many Alterations and Amendments to be made in them. To theſe the Epiſcopal Clergy gave in their Anſwer, and accepted of the other's Reply; and at length ſeveral Amendments and Alterations were made in the Publick Liturgy. But after all, it was an unfortunate Prejudice to the Peace of the Church and Nation, that the Presbyterian Divines thought theſe Conceſſions and Amendments not ſufficient for their own Honour, and the general Satisfaction of their Party: And on the other Side, the Biſhops and Clergy, that the more they yielded, the more importunate Demands wou'd be made upon them; as they found by the Practice of the aſſiduous Mr. Baxter. For when the drawing up the Additions to be made to the Liturgy, was by the Brethren committed to him alone, he ſhew'd ſo mean an Opinion of it, as if incapable of Amendments, that he drew up One in effect New, which he intituled the Reformed Liturgy. This, tho' perform'd by a ſingle Hand, not well vers'd in Antiquity, was read by the Presbyterian Miniſters, and generally approv'd, to the Diſſatisfaction of the other Party, who thought ſuch a total Alteration too great a Preſumption for any One to undertake; eſpecially ſince the old Liturgy had been compiled by learned Confeſſors and Martyrs, and conſider'd and approv'd by many eminent Foreign Divines.

And now the Diviſions were more ſenſibly encreas'd than diminiſh'd; after ſeveral ineffectual Papers of Propoſals, Exceptions, Anſwers, Replies and Rejoynders, when the Commiſſion was within ten Days of expiring, the Presbyterian Divines earneſtly deſired the Biſhops to admit them to a Perſonal Conference, upon the Subject Matter of the Papers that had paſs'd between them. To remove all Complaints, the Biſhops who always declin'd this Way of Altercation, did now yield to it; and Three of each Party were appointed to manage the Diſpute: The Biſhops choſe Dr. Pearſon, Dr. Gunning, and Dr. Sparrow; and the other Side choſe Dr. Bates, Dr. Jacomb, and Mr. Baxter. When they met, the Conference through Want of Order, frequent Interruptions, and perſonal Reflections, turn'd to little or no Account. Time being thus ineffectually ſpent, Biſhop Coſens at length produc'd a Paper, containing an Expedient to end the Controverſy, by a Motion 'To put the Complain-'ants upon diſtinguiſhing between the Things they charg'd as Sinful, and 'thoſe

A Perſonal Conference.

'thoſe they excepted againſt as only Inexpedient.' The Presbyterian Miniſters being deſired to draw up an Anſwer to it, they comply'd the next Morning, and deliver'd it, but in their own Names only. In this they charg'd eight things in the Liturgy as flatly ſinful, and contrary to the Word of God: 1. 'That no Miniſter be admitted to baptize without 'the tranſient Image of the Croſs. 2. That no Miniſter be permitted 'to Read, Pray, or exerciſe the other Parts of his Office, that dares not 'wear a Surplice. 3. That none be admitted to the Communion of the 'Lord's Supper, that dare not receive it kneeling. 4. That Miniſters 'be forced to pronounce all Baptized Infants Regenerate by the Holy 'Ghoſt. 5. That Miniſters be forced to deliver the Sacrament unto the 'Unfit, both in Health and Sickneſs, and that with Perſonal Applicati-'on, putting it into their Hands. 6. That the Miniſters be forced to ab-'ſolve the Unfit, and that in abſolute Expreſſions. 7. That Miniſters 'are forced to give Thanks for all whom they Bury, as Brethren whom God 'hath deliver'd and taken to himſelf. 8. That none may be a Preacher 'that dares not ſubſcribe, That there is nothing in the Common-Prayer 'Book, Book of Ordination, and the thirty nine Articles, that is contra-'ry to the Word of God.' Theſe were ſhocking Things; and, as an ingenious Modern Author obſerves, this Charge looks like a naked Affirmation: For ought appears, they either begg'd the Queſtion, or elſe fail'd in the Proof. Beſides, in the fifth and ſixth Particulars, they went upon a Suppoſition evidently falſe: For, notwithſtanding Dr. Calamy's Plea, by the Common-Prayer Book the Miniſter was never forc'd to adminiſter either the Sacrament, or the Abſolution, to any Perſon Unfit. 1661. Car. 13 Reſ. 1.

This Way of Management on the Presbyterian Side, gave but a ſlender Proſpect of an Accommodation. However the Epiſcopal Divines, being willing the others ſhou'd exert their whole Force, came to an Agreement to argue in Writing, and that each Party ſhou'd oppoſe and anſwer by Turns. And ſo they proceeded to diſpute upon this Queſtion, Whether it was ſinful to enjoin Miniſters to deny the Communion to thoſe that dare not receive it Kneeling? And here many Arguments were warmly urg'd about making Things, in their own Nature Indifferent, to become Neceſſary as to their Uſe, when commanded by lawful Authority. In this Debate, Mr. Baxter is repreſented to have been either perplex'd in his Underſtanding, or indiſpos'd for cloſing the Difference, for no Propoſition cou'd be made plain enough to gain his Aſſent. His Talent is ſaid to have layn in retiring to Foreign Diſtinctions, and Miſapplications of the Rules of Logick; and it was hard to ſay whether his involving an Argument, and raiſing a Miſt, was Art or Infirmity. Thus, after much Diſputing, ſome Cavilling, and ſeveral warm Expreſſions, the famous Conference ended without Union or Accommodation; the Presbyterian Divines depending too much on the Encouragement they had receiv'd from the King and the Miniſtry, on the Aſſurances from ſome leading Members in Parliament, and on the Affections of the People: In all which they found themſelves miſtaken. Mr. Baxter lays all the Blame upon the Managers of the Church Side; and that at a Time ſo proper for the Reconciling of Differences, they wou'd yield nothing at the Deſire of the Presbyterians, and the more paſſionately they preſs'd for any thing, the more tenacious they were of it. But others are of Opinion that he himſelf was much too forward, and to blame in the Management of this Conference; and notwithſtanding all his Induſtry and Activity, and his no ſmall Parts, he was inferior in Temper, Judgment and Learning to ſeveral of his Brethren. However in Concluſion, it was mutually agreed, That the Report of the Conference ſhou'd be deliver'd to the King in Writing: And that each Party ſhou'd give in this general Account, The Meeting breaks up.

1661. Car 13 Ref. 2.

'That the Welfare of the Church, Unity and Peace, and his Majeſty's Satisfaction, were Ends upon which they were all agreed; but as to the Means, they cou'd not come to any Accommodation.

The Second PARLIAMENT.

VI. 1. Some Time before the finiſhing of this Conference, the much expected Parliament met, on the 8th Day of May, with unuſual Solemnity. It was the firſt that was regularly choſen in this Reign, and continu'd, with ſeveral Intermiſſions, for above ſeventeen Years; ſo that in Time it obtain'd the Name of the Long Parliament. In the main, and in general, it muſt be ſaid to have been excellently well and wiſely choſen for the good and peaceable Eſtabliſhment of the Publick Affairs; the Houſe of Commons conſiſting of the moſt conſiderable and eminent Perſons for Birth, Eſtates, Knowledge and Experience, that were to be found in three Kingdoms: Tho' by Length of Time, Changes upon Deaths, and other Accidents, ſeveral of the Members were thought to be too liable to Impreſſions from a degenerate and corrupted Court; for which Reaſon ſome afterwards gave it the opprobrious Name of the Penſionary Parliament. Being met upon the appointed Day, the King, to revive and eſtabliſh the ancient Grandeur of the Crown, rode in State from his Palace to Weſtminſter-Abby, attended with the whole Body of the Nobility in their Robes, and all his great Officers in Order, with Drums, Trumpets and other Muſick, after ſuch a ſolemn and pompous Manner, as was little inferior to the Glories of a Coronation. Rot. Parl. Heath. Wood. Synodus Anglicana. &c.

After this Ceremonial was over, and a learned Sermon preach'd before him by Dr. Ironſide Biſhop of Briſtol, his Majeſty went into the Houſe of Peers, and from his Throne open'd the Parliament with this following Speech to both Houſes, which deſerves to be inſerted without any Abridgment:

The King's Speech to both Houſes.

'My Lords, and Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons, I will not ſpend the Time in telling you why I call'd you hither; I am ſure I am glad to ſee you here. I do value my ſelf much upon keeping my Word, upon making good whatſoever I promiſe to my Subjects: And I well remember when I was laſt in this Place, I promis'd that I wou'd call a Parliament as ſoon as cou'd be reaſonably expected or deſired; and truely, conſidering the Seaſon of the Year, and all that has been done ſince we parted, you cou'd not reaſonably expect to meet ſooner than now we do. If it might have been a Week ſooner, you will confeſs there was ſome Reaſon to defer it to this Day: For this Day, we may without Superſtition love one Day, prefer one Day before another, for the Memory of ſome Bleſſings that befel us that Day; and then you will not wonder that the Memory of the great Affection the whole Kingdom ſhew'd to me this Day Twelve-Month, made me deſirous to meet you again this Day, when I dare ſwear you are full of the ſame Spirit, and that it will be laſting in you. I think there are not many of you who are not particularly known to me; there are very few of whom I have not heard ſo much Good, that I am ſure, as I can be of any thing that is to come, that you will all concur with me, and that I ſhall concur with you in all Things which may advance the Peace, Plenty and Proſperity of the Nation, I ſhall be exceedingly deceiv'd elſe.

'My Lords and Gentlemen, you will find what Method I think beſt for your Proceeding, by two Bills I have caus'd to be prepar'd for you, which are for Confirmation of all that was enacted at our laſt Meeting: And above all, I muſt repeat what I ſaid when I was laſt here: That next to the miraculous Bleſſing of God Almighty, and indeed, as an immediate Effect of that Bleſſing, I do impute the good Diſpoſition and Security we are all in, to the happy Act of Indemnity and Oblivion: That is the principal Corner-Stone which ſupports this excellent Building,

'that creates Kindneſs in us to each other, and Confidence in our joint 'and common Security. I am ſure I am ſtill of the ſame Opinion, and 'more, if it be poſſible, of that Opinion, than I was, by the Experience 'I have of the Benefit of it, and from the Unreaſonableneſs of what ſome 'Men ſay againſt it, tho' I aſſure you not in my Hearing. In God's 'Name provide full Remedies for any future Miſchiefs; be as ſevere as 'you will againſt new Offenders, eſpecially if they be ſo upon Old Prin- 'ciples, and pull up thoſe Principles by the Roots. But I ſhall never 'think him a wiſe Man, who wou'd endeavour to undermine or ſhake 'that Foundation of our Publick Peace, by infringing that Act in the 'leaſt Degree; or that he can be my Friend, or wiſh me well, who 'wou'd perſwade me ever to conſent to the Breach of a Promiſe I ſo ſo-'lemnly made when I was abroad, and perform'd with that Solemnity; 'becauſe, and after I promis'd it, I cannot ſuſpect any Attempts of that 'kind by any Men of Merit and Virtue.

'I will not conclude without telling you ſome News; News that I 'think will be very acceptable to you; and therefore I ſhou'd think my 'ſelf unkind and ill-natur'd, if I ſhou'd not impart it to you. I have 'been often put in Mind by my Friends, That it was now high Time to 'Marry; and I have thought ſo my ſelf ever ſince I came into England: 'But there appeared Difficulties enough in the Choice, tho' many Over-'tures have been made to me; and if I ſhou'd never marry till I cou'd 'make ſuch a Choice, againſt which there cou'd be no Foreſight of any 'Inconvenience that may enſue, you wou'd live to ſee me an old Batchelor, 'which I think you do not deſire to do. I can now tell you, not only 'that I am reſolv'd to marry, but to whom I reſolve to marry, if God 'pleaſe: And towards my Reſolution, I have us'd that Deliberation, and 'taken that Advice as I ought to do in an Affair of that Importance; and 'truſt me, with a full Conſideration of the Good of my Subjects in ge-'neral, as of my ſelf: It is with the Daughter of Portugal. When I 'had, as well as I cou'd, weigh'd all that occur'd to me, the firſt Reſo-'lution I took, was to ſtate the whole Overtures which had been made 'to me, and in Truth, all that had been ſaid againſt it, to my Privy- 'Council; without hearing whoſe Advice, I never did, nor ever will re-'ſolve any thing of Publick Importance. And I tell you with great Sa-'tisfaction and Comfort to my ſelf, that after many Hours Debate in a full 'Council, for I think there was not above one abſent; and truly I be-'lieve, upon all that can be ſaid upon that Subject, for or againſt it, my 'Lords, without one diſſenting Vote, yet there were very few ſate ſilent, 'advis'd me with all imaginable Chearfulneſs to this Marriage: which I 'look'd upon as very Wonderful, and even as ſome Inſtance of the Ap-'probation of God Himſelf; and ſo took my own Reſolution, and con-'cluded all with the Ambaſſador of Portugal, who is departing with the 'whole Treaty ſign'd, which you will find to contain many great Advan-'tages to the Kingdom: And I make all the Haſte I can to fetch you a 'Queen hither, who I doubt not will bring great Bleſſings with Her, to 'Me and You.

The Subſtance of the Chancellor's Speech.

He referr'd the reſt to the Lord Chancellor, who made an elegant Speech, too long to be inſerted but by way of Abridgment. He told them, 'That the King had call'd them hither by his Writ, which was the 'only good and lawful Way to the meeting of a Parliament; and they 'ought to thank God he had reſerv'd them to that Day, a Day that ma-'ny good Men had dy'd praying for, that after all the Prodigies in 'Church and State, they had liv'd to ſee the King at the opening of the 'Parliament. That his Majeſty had caus'd a Bill or two to be prepared 'for the Confirmation of all that was enacted in the laſt Parliament;

1661. Car. 13 Ref. 2.

'which, tho' not call'd by the King's Writ, might be reaſonably thought 'to have been call'd by God Himſelf, upon the Prayers of the whole 'Kingdom, as the only Means to reſtore the Nation to its Happineſs, to 'its Self, to its Honour, and even to its Innocence. That for the King 'after ſo many Injuries and Loſſes to have been not only willing to con-'firm and enact the Act of Oblivion and Indemnity, but to prepare ſuch 'an Act for them, to conjure them by that was precious, by their 'Friendſhip to him, to diſpatch thoſe Acts with Expedition, was ſuch a 'Piece of Fatherly Tenderneſs and Piety, as cou'd proceed from no 'Heart, but ſuch a one in which God had treaſur'd up a Stock of Mer-'cy, and Juſtice and Wiſdom, to redeem a Nation. That the laſt Par-'liament which had done ſuch Wonders, had ſtill left great Things for 'them to do: They wou'd find the Revenue the laſt Parliament in-'tended to raiſe for the King, very much ſhort of what they promis'd: 'They wou'd find the publick Debts for the Diſcharge of the Army and 'the Navy, which the laſt Parliament thought ſufficiently provided for, 'to be ſtill in Arrear, and unpaid. That they were now the great Phy-'ſicians of the Kingdom; and God knows had many wayward, froward 'and diſtemper'd Patients; ſome who in truth were very ſick, others 'who thought themſelves ſicker than they were, and ſome who thought 'themſelves in Health, and were moſt ſick of all: They were therefore 'to uſe all the Diligence, Patience and Compaſſion, which good Phyſi-'cians have for their Patients; all the Chearfulneſs, Complacency and 'Indulgence, their ſeveral Habits, Conſtitutions and Diſtempers might 'require. But there were a ſort of Patients who deſerv'd none of their 'Lenity; ſuch who were ſo far from valuing their Preſcriptions, that 'they accounted them not as their Phyſicians, but as their Patients: Theſe 'were the ſeditious Preachers, who cou'd not be contented to be diſ-'pens'd with for their full Obedience to ſome Laws eſtabliſh'd, without 'reproaching and inveighing againſt thoſe Laws how eſtabliſh'd ſoever.' After ſome ſevere Expreſſions againſt theſe Preachers, he told them, 'That when the King ſpoke laſt in this Place, he ſaid, He ſhou'd not 'more propoſe to himſelf any one Rule in his Actions or Councils, than 'this: What is a Parliament like to think of this Action, or of that 'Counſel? and that it ſhou'd be want of Underſtanding in him, if it 'wou'd not bear that Teſt. That in a little Time after the Diſſolution of 'the laſt Parliament, while his Majeſty accompany'd his Mother to the 'Sea-Side, the moſt deſperate and prodigious Rebellion broke out in this 'City, that had been heard of in any Age; and by the Multitude of in-'tercepted Letters from and to all the Counties of England, in which 'the Time was ſet down wherein the Work of the Lord was to be done, 'by the deſperate Carriage of the Traytors themſelves, and the Brag-'ging of their Friends, it might be concluded the Combination reach'd 'very far; and if the indefatigable Induſtry of the Lord-Mayor had not 'prevented it, probably the Fury wou'd not have been extinguiſh'd, be-'fore this famous City, or a great Part of it, had been burnt to Aſhes: 'And therefore it wou'd become their Wiſdoms to provide new Reme-'dies for new Diſeaſes, and to ſecure the precious Perſon of their So-'vereign from the firſt Approaches of Villany, and the Peace of the King-'dom from the firſt Overtures of Sedition.' Then he proceeded to ſpeak of the King's intended Marriage, which he ſaid, 'wou'd be the 'moſt grateful News that the whole Kingdom cou'd receive: That it 'wou'd be judg'd an irrecoverable Error in Policy, if Portugal ſhou'd be 'ſuffer'd again to be ſwallow'd up by Spain: That the Spaniſh Ambaſſa-'dor was ſolicitous to obſtruct the Match; and the King had not con-'ceal'd from his Council, what that Ambaſſador had offer'd againſt this 'Marriage;

'Marriage; what Proffers he had made of Others, what Threats of War in one Caſe, what Advantage of Dowry in another; nay, that he had pretended to be ſo ſolicitous for the Advancement of the Proteſtant Religion, that he had offer'd ſeveral Proteſtant Princeſſes, to whom his Maſter ſhou'd give a Portion, as with the Infanta of Spain: But he had withal preſs'd very earneſtly the Delivering up of Dunkirk and Jamaica; by what it was plain the Spaniſh King wou'd have that Recompence for the Portion he wou'd give. That there being an unanimous Advice from his Council to make this Marriage, his Majeſty had ſent for the Portugal Ambaſſador, had declared his Reſolution to him, had writ himſelf to Portugal, and was preparing his Fleet to fetch home their Queen.' In the laſt Place he told them, 'There were ſome other Particulars of Weight, but he wou'd reſerve them till they met again, after they had choſen their Speaker. 1661. Car. 13 Reſ. 2.

The Houſe of Commons having the King's Licence to chuſe their Speaker, where was a noble Appearance of worthy Patriots, upon the Motion of Sir Charles Berkley Comptroller of his Majeſty's Houſhold, they made Choice of the Duke of York's Solicitor-General, Sir Edward Turner, a worthy, ingenious, and experienc'd Perſon, whoſe great Modeſty in declining the Office, heighten'd the Deſire of the Houſe for him to undertake it; and thereupon was led up to the Chair by three eminent Servants of his Majeſty, Sir Charles Berkley, Sir George Carteret, and Sir Heneage Finch. On the tenth of May he was preſented to the King in the Houſe of Peers, where having again declin'd the Office, and receiv'd an Anſwer from the Lord Chancellor that he cou'd not be excus'd, he proceeded to make a full and elegant Speech concerning the late Troubles of the Nation, and the happy deliverance out of them, and particularly obſerv'd, 'That as the former Spirit of Reformation at firſt brought us into this Miſery; ſo the Spirit of Giddineſs which God ſent among our Reformers, at length cured us.' Then applying himſelf to the King, he ſaid, 'As we have Cauſe at all Times to bleſs God, that he hath thus brought your Majeſty to your People; ſo we have juſt Cauſe at this Time to return our hearty Thanks unto your Majeſty, that you have thus brought your People to your Self. The Sun exhales the Vapours from the Earth, and then ſends them down in Showers of Plenty; ſo we joyfully find that our Obedience and Affection to your Majeſty, are return'd upon our Heads in Plenty, Peace and Protection. The laſt Meeting here in Parliament was happy in healing the bleeding Wounds of this Nation; they were bleſs'd alſo, even for their Works ſake, your ſacred Majeſty did bleſs them, and therefore they ſhall be bleſſed to all Poſterity. But, Sir, we hope you have a Bleſſing left for us too: That was your Parliament by Adoption, but this is yours by Birth-Right: This Parliament is Free-Born: I hope this Honour will beget in us an Emulation to exceed the Actions of our Predeceſſors, and not only to meet your Majeſty as our Sovereign, with the Duty of Subjects, but with the Love of Sons to a moſt indulgent Father.—If the Affections of all Engliſhmen can make you Happy; if the Riches of this Nation can make you Great; if the Strength of this warlike People can make you Conſiderable at Home and Abroad, be aſſured you are the greateſt Monarch in the World. Give me Leave to double my Words and ſay it again, I wiſh my Voice cou'd reach to Spain, and to the Indies too, 'You are the greateſt Monarch in the World!' Then he concluded with the uſual Requeſt for the Commons wonted Priviledges, Freedom of Speech, Protection from Arreſts, and Acceſs to his Majeſty upon all Occaſions.

The Chancellor's ſecond Speech.

Upon the finiſhing of this, the Lord Chancellor made a ſecond Speech by way of Supplement to his former; in which he told the Speaker and the Commons, 'That the King had done his Part, by publiſhing the very 'Day he intended the Parliament ſhou'd meet, a good Time before the 'Writs were ſeal'd, that the Country might not be ſurpriz'd in their 'Elections; but that they might ſend up ſuch a Repreſentative to him 'as he might make a clear View and Proſpect of the Affections and De-'ſires of his People: And He is perſwaded that the Commons of Eng-'land were never more exactly repreſented than they were in the preſent 'Knights, Citizens and Burgeſſes.' After that he took Notice of the 'great Priviledge of the common People of England to be repreſented 'by the greateſt, and learnedeſt, and wealthieſt, and wiſeſt Perſons that 'cou'd be choſen out of the Nation: But, added he, the compounding 'the Commons of England, that noble Repreſentative, with the com-'mon People of England, was the firſt Ingredient of that accurſed Doſe 'which intoxicated the Brains of Men with that Imagination of a Com-'mon-Wealth; a Government as impoſſible for the Spirit and Genius of 'the Engliſh Nation to ſubmit to, as it is to perſwade them to give their 'Cattle and their Corn to other Men, and to live themſelves upon Herbs 'and Roots.' He told them, 'There was not a Common-Wealth in 'Europe, where every Man that was worth one Thouſand Pounds, did 'not pay more to the Government, than a Man of a Thouſand Pounds a 'Year ever did to the Crown here before the late Troubles; and he was 'perſwaded that that Monſter Common-Wealth coſt this Nation more in 'the few Years ſhe was begot, born and brought up, and in her Funeral, 'than the Monarchy had done theſe ſix Hundred Years.' Then he pro-ceeded to other Heads, and particularly urg'd them to provide againſt the exceſſive Drinking and Expences that prov'd inconvenient in Elections; and recommended to them the great Improvements to be made by drain-ing of Fens, and the like. Laſtly he deſired them 'That they wou'd 'uſe ſuch Expedition in their Counſels of moſt Importance, that the reſt 'may be left to a Receſs in the Winter, after an Adjournment, that his 'Majeſty might have Time to beſtow himſelf upon his Subjects in a Pro-'greſs which he wou'd be glad to begin before the End of July. That 'his Majeſty deſired again to ſee his good City of Worceſter, and to 'thank God for his Deliverance there; and to thank God even in thoſe 'Cottages, and Barns, and Hay-Lofts, wherein he was ſhelter'd, and 'feaſted, and preſerv'd: And in the Cloſe of that Progreſs he hopes he 'ſhall find his Queen in his Arms; and ſo return to meet them there in 'the Beginning of Winter.

Both Houſes approve the King's Marriage.

2. Theſe uſeful Ceremonies being over, the Parliament proceeded to the great Affairs of the Kingdom; and within three Days both Houſes came to a Vote and Reſolution concerning the King's intended Marriage, and accordingly attended his Majeſty at Whitehall with their 'humble 'Acknowledgment and Thanks for the free and gracious Communicati-'on of his Reſolution to marry with the Infanta of Portugal; which 'they conceiv'd to be of ſo high a Concernment to this Nation, that 'they receiv'd it with great Joy and Satisfaction, and did with all Earneſt-'neſs beg a Bleſſing upon, and a ſpeedy Accompliſhment of it; and they 'cou'd not but expreſs their own unanimous Reſolutions, which they 'were confident wou'd have a general Influence upon the Hearts of all 'his Subjects: That they ſhou'd upon all Occaſions be ready to aſſiſt his 'Majeſty in the Purſuance of theſe his Intentions againſt all Oppoſitions 'whatſoever.' To which the King return'd his particular Thanks, de-claring, claring, That he did, in the Matter of the intended Marriage, as much ſtudy their Good, as his own. 1661

While this was tranſacting, the Houſe of Commons, for the greater Solemnity of their Proceedings, and to teſtify their Approbation of the eſtabliſh'd Church, order'd all their Members to receive the Sacrament according to the preſcrib'd Liturgy, within a certain Time, upon Pain of being prohibited the Houſe. Then proceeding with the ſame Zeal, and joining with the Houſe of Peers, on the 20th of May they order'd, 'That the Inſtrument of Writing, that had caus'd ſo much Miſchief, 'call'd, The SOLEMN LEAGUE AND COVENANT, 'ſhou'd be burnt by the Hand of the common Hang-Man, in the Pa- 'lace-Yard at Weſtminſter, in Cheapſide, and before the Old Exchange, 'on the 22d of May; and be forthwith taken off the Record in the Houſe 'of Peers, and all other Courts and Places where the ſame is recorded; 'and that all Copies thereof be taken down out of all Churches, Cha- 'pels, and all other publick Places in England and Wales. All which was perform'd in Triumph, to the great Mortification of the Adorers of this Idol. A few Days after, May 28, The Act for Erecting a HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE, for Trying and Judging Charles Stuart, was burnt by the Hands of the Common Hang-Man in the midſt of Weſtminſter-Hall, while the Courts were ſitting. Likewiſe the Act for Subſcribing the ENGAGEMENT againſt a King and Houſe of Peers; Another, for declaring the People of England to be a COMMON-WEALTH and Free State; Another, for Renouncing Title of CHARLES STUART, and alſo another for the Security of the Lord PROTECTOR's Perſon, were all burnt with the ſame ſolemn Abhorrence and Deteſtation. During the Debate of the Houſe of Commons on theſe Subjects, and Matters of the like Nature, the warm Mr. Prynne, againſt the Privilege of the Houſe, cou'd not withhold from publiſhing certain Reaſons againſt an intended Bill for regulating Corporations, as contrary to Magna Charta; for which the Houſe cenſur'd him: But upon his Submiſſion, and Recantation, and in Conſideration of his good Services towards the King's Reſtoration, he was by the Houſe remitted of the Cenſure and Puniſhment he had incurr'd by his Overſight.

The Covenant, and other Papers burnt.

The Commons were ſo unanimous and zealous in their Loyalty and Affections to their Soveraign, that the Republican Party began to be apprehenſive that the late Act of Oblivion and Indemnity wou'd not ſecure them from an After-Reckoning. They fear'd that the Validity of that Act might be queſtion'd, unleſs confirm'd, and expreſly eſtabliſh'd by the preſent Parliament; therefore they had ſollicited the King for this new Security, and he had promis'd to procure it for them. But leſt the Inclinations of the Houſe ſhou'd not ſo readily concur with the King's Deſire, upon the Importunity of thoſe who were conſcious of their Guilt and Danger, his Majeſty, on the 20th of June, ſent this following kind and obliging Letter to the Houſe of Commons: 'At the Opening our 'Parliament you were told, That we had a great Deſire this Summer to 'make a Progreſs through ſome Parts of our Kingdom, which we reſolve 'to begin in Devotion to our City of Worceſter, that we may pour out 'our Thanks to God for our Deliverance there; and the Seaſon of the 'Year quickens us in that Inclination, as we preſume it diſpoſes you to a 'Deſire to withdraw from this City, and to viſit your Countries. But 'you may remember we told you then, That we had caus'd ſome Bills to 'be prepared for you, for Confirmation of what we enacted in our laſt 'Meeting; and we ſaid all we cou'd to you of the Value we ſet upon 'the Act of Indemnity (as we have great Reaſon to do) and if we cou'd 'have

'have us'd ſtronger Expreſſions to have conjur'd you ſpeedily to have 'diſpatcht it, we aſſure you we wou'd have done it. And we did think 'what we ſaid wou'd have made an Impreſſion in all who profeſs a De-'ſire to ſerve us; and therefore we expected every Day, that the ſame 'Bill wou'd have been preſented to us for another Aſſent. We muſt con-'feſs, we hear you have ſhewed great Affection to us, ſince your coming 'together, and that you have already prepared and paſs'd ſome very good 'Bills (for which we heartily thank you) that are ready for the Royal 'Aſſent: Yet we cannot but tell you, That tho' we are enough con-'cern'd to expedite thoſe Bills, we have no mind to paſs them till the Act 'of Indemnity be likewiſe preſented to us, upon which, if you take our 'Word, moſt of our Quiet and Good depends, and in which we are 'ſure our Honour is concern'd. Therefore we muſt again, and as earneſtly 'as is poſſible, conjure you to uſe all poſſible Expedition in Paſſing that 'Act in the ſame Terms we already paſs'd it (to which we take our 'Self oblig'd) and that you will for the preſent lay aſide all private Bu-'ſineſs, that ſo betaking your ſelves only to the Publick, you may be 'ready to adjourn by the Middle of the next Month, which will beſt ſuit 'with all our Occaſions.

The Commons Care of the King's Revenues.

This Letter had the deſired Effect of prevailing with the Commons, and obliging the People; but firſt they reſolv'd to do ſomething for the King in the Matter of his Revenues, 'and to conſider of ſettling ſo 'much as might maintain the Splendor and Grandeur of his Kingly Of-'fice, and preſerve the Crown from Want, and from being undervalu'd 'by his Neighbours.' In which Sir Philip Warwick made a Report, That upon a full Examination he found the Cuſtoms, eſtimated at 500000 Pounds per Annum, wou'd fall ſhort 100000: That the Crown Lands, valu'd at 120000 Pounds per Annum, wou'd fall ſhort 40000: That the Exciſe, valu'd at 300000 Pounds per Annum, wou'd fall ſhort 50000: That the Eſtimate upon the Advance of the Queen's Joynture, at 50000 Pounds, wou'd fall ſhort 40000: That the Eſtates forfeited, eſtimated at 38000 Pounds, wou'd fall ſhort 25000: And that the Wine Licences, eſtimated at 25000 Pounds, wou'd fall ſhort 10000: The Total of the Defect was 265000 Pounds. But that no Time might be loſt, in the Point of the King's Revenues, the Commons order'd, 'That forthwith be pro-'vided a plentiful Supply for his Majeſty's preſent unavoidable great Oc-'caſions, as well as a Settlement of a conſtant and ſtanding Revenue:' And accordingly they order'd a Bill to be brought in, 'To enable his Majeſty 'to ſend out Commiſſions to receive the free and voluntary Contributi-'ons of his People, towards the preſent Supply of his Majeſty's Affairs, '&c.'

The Speaker's Speech to the King.

Having finiſhed this, and afterwards the Bill for Confirmation of the Act of Oblivion and Indemnity, on the 8th Day of July the King came to the Houſe of Peers, where being ſeated on his Throne, the Speaker of the Houſe of Commons, among other things, ſpoke thus to his Majeſty: 'Your Majeſty was pleas'd, at the Opening of the Parliament, to re-'commend unto us two Bills; one for Confirmation of publick Acts, a-'nother for the private Acts that paſſed the laſt Parliament: They were 'ſo many in Number, and great in Weight, that hitherto we cou'd not 'conſider of them all; but ſome we have peruſed, as the Act for Confir-'mation of Judicial Proceedings, that for taking away the Court of Wards 'and Liveries, and alſo all thoſe that relate to your Majeſty's Cuſtoms 'and Exciſe. And that we might with ſome Chearfulneſs ſee your Ma-'jeſty's Face, we have brought our Brother Benjamin with us, I mean 'Your Act of Oblivion. I take the Boldneſs to call it Yours, for ſo it is 'by many Titles: Your Majeſty firſt conceiv'd it at Breda, you help'd to

'contrive

'contrive and form it here in England, and we muſt all bear you Witneſs, you labour'd and travell'd till it was brought forth: And ſince it had a Being, ſome Queſtion being made of its Legitimation, your Royal Heart is not at Eaſe until it be confirm'd. And now, Sir, give me Leave to ſay, By the Suffrage of a Full, a Free, and Legal Parliament, it is preſented to your Majeſty to be naturaliz'd. Your Majeſty's Deſires are fully anſwer'd by all the Repreſentatives of the People; and their hearty Prayer to God is, That all your Subjects may be truly thankful to you, and that your Majeſty may long live to enjoy the Fruits of the unparallel'd Mercy. Your Majeſty was pleas'd lately to intimate to us, That you ſo valu'd the Quiet and Satisfaction of your People, and the Keeping of your Royal Word, that tho' divers other Bills were made ready for you, you wou'd vouchſafe the Honour to this Bill alone, your Favourite, to come and paſs it. Sir, hereby you have made this a great Holiday, and we ſhall obſerve it with Joy and Thankſgiving. Upon ſuch ſolemn Feſtivals, there us'd to be a ſecond Service, and Anthem, and a Collect, or at leaſt an Offering: My Anthem ſhall be, Quid tibi retribuam Domine? and my Collect A ſhort Report of your Revenue.' Then mentioning the King's Patience, Providence, and Frugality abroad, in not bringing home any Debts for the Nation to pay, &c. he thus concluded: 'The Commons of England do by me their Servant humbly preſent you with this Bill, intitled, An Act for a free and voluntary Preſent, and wiſh it a Succeſs anſwerable to your Royal Heart's Deſire.' 1661. The King's Speech at his paſſing two Bills.

In the paſſing of the two Bills mention'd in the Speaker's Speech, the King himſelf ſpoke as follows: 'My Lords and Gentlemen, It is a good Time ſince I heard of your paſſing this Bill of Money, and I am ſure you wou'd have preſented it to me ſooner, if you had thought I had deſired it; but the Truth is, tho' I had need enough of it, I had no Mind to receive it from you, till I might at the ſame Time give my Aſſent to this other very good Bill that accompanies it, for which I long'd very impatiently. I thank you for Both with all my Heart; and tho' there are other good Bills ready, with which you will eaſily believe I am very well pleas'd, and in which I am indeed enough concern'd, yet I choſe rather to paſs theſe two Bills together, and to paſs them by themſelves without any other, that you may all ſee, and in you the whole Kingdom, that I am at leaſt equally concern'd for You and them, as for my ſelf: And in Truth it will be want of Judgment in me, if ever I deſire any thing for my ſelf, that is not equally good for you and them. I am confident you will believe that my Well-Being is of ſome Uſe and Benefit to you, and I am ſure your Well-Being, and being well pleas'd, is the greateſt Comfort and Bleſſing I can receive in the World. I hope you will be ready within a few Days to diſpatch thoſe other publick Bills which are ſtill depending before you, that I may come hither and paſs all together, and then adjourn till Winter, when what remains may be provided for. The laſt Parliament by God's Bleſſing laid the Foundation of the Happineſs we all enjoy; therefore I thought it but Juſtice to the Memory of it, to ſend you Bills for the Confirmation of what was then enacted; and I cannot doubt but you will diſpatch what remains of that kind with all convenient Speed; and that you will think, that what was then thought neceſſary for the publick Peace, ought not to be ſhaken now, or any good Man leſs ſecure of what he poſſeſſes, than he was when you came together. It is to put my ſelf in mind, as well as you, that I ſo often mention to you my Declaration from Breda: And let me put you in mind of another Declaration publiſh'd by your ſelves about the ſame Time, and which I am perſwaded made mine the more effectual, an honeſt, generous, and

'christian Declaration, sign'd by the most eminent Persons, who had 'been the most eminent Sufferers, in which you renounc'd all former A- 'nimosities, all Memory of former Unkindnesses, vow'd all imaginable Good- 'Will to and all Confidence in each other. Therefore let it be in no Man's 'Power to charge Me or You with Breach of our Word or Promise: 'Let us look forwards, and not backwards, and never think of what is 'pass'd, except Men put us in mind of it by repeated Faults we had for- 'got, and then let us remember no more than what concerns those very 'Persons. God hath wrought a wonderful Miracle in settling us as he 'hath done; I pray let us do all we can to get the Reputation at Home 'and Abroad of being well settled. We have Enemies and Envyers e- 'nough, who labour to have it thought otherwise; and if we wou'd in- 'deed have our Enemies fear us, and our Neighbours love and respect 'us, and fear us enough to love us, let us take all the Ways we can, 'that as the World cannot but take Notice of your extraordinary Affe- 'ction to me, and of the Comfort I take in that Affection, so that it 'may likewise take Notice of your Affection to, and Confidence in each 'other; which will disappoint all Designs against the publick Peace, and 'fully establish our joint Security.'

Proceedings against some of the Regicides.

3. All this Time the Parliament proceeded with Vigour in finishing the other Bills projected and intended; and tho' the Act of Indemnity was the King's Favourite Act, yet they resolv'd to consider the Honour of his injur'd Father in some Particulars, and so proceeded to the Confiscation of the Estates of twenty one Regicides deceas'd, viz. Pelham, Skippon, Edwards, Constable, Dean, Danvers, Moore, Alured, Stupeley, Frye, Allen, Maleverer, Blakestone, Hammond, Bourchier, Horton, Purefoy, Norton, Ewer, Ven, and Andrews. They likewise order'd the Lord Mounson, Sir Henry Mildmay, and Mr. Robert Wallop, who had been favour'd, as the others had been reserv'd in the Act of Indemnity, to be brought to the Bar of the House of Commons; where confessing their Crimes, a Bill was order'd to be brought in to confiscate their Estates, as also Sir James Harrington and John Phelps, not yet apprehended: And it was farther order'd, 'That the Lord Mounson, Sir James 'Harrington, and Sir Henry Mildmay shou'd be degraded of their several 'Honours and Titles; and that those now in Custody, and the other 'two, when apprehended, shou'd all be drawn upon Sledges with Ropes 'about their Necks, from the Tower of London to, and under the Gal- 'lows at Tyburn, and thence convey'd back to the Tower, there to re- 'main Prisoners during their Lives.' Which Sentences were solemnly executed upon the 30th of January following.

As much Business being effected, and as many Acts prepared as cou'd well be compleated in a limited Time, the King came to the House of Peers on the 30th Day of July, when he thought a Recess very necessary. Being seated on his Throne, the Speaker of the House of Commons presented the several Bills for the Royal Assent, the Nature of which will be best understood by giving the Substance of his Speech to his Majesty: 'Your loyal House of Commons have with unwearied La- 'bour consulted for the Service of your Majesty, and the Good of this 'Nation; and now the Fields grow white to Harvest. In the great Field 'of Nature all Fruits do not grow ripe together, but some in one Month, 'some in another: So it is in the Course of our Proceedings; some of 'our Fruits are in the Blossom, when others are in the Bud; some are 'near ripe, and others fit to be presented to your Majesty. Amongst the 'Number of our choicest ripe Fruits, we first present you with a Bill 'for the Safety and Preservation of your Majesty's Royal Person and Go- 'vernment;

'Temporal Lords follow'd, and the King himſelf: Nor did the Humour
'reſt there, but in the Round, the Houſe of Commons was firſt garbled,
'and then turn'd out of Doors. It is no Wonder, when a Sword is put 'into a Mad-man's Hand, to ſee him cut off Limb by Limb, and then

We have also ascertained 'the Pains and Penalties to be impos'd upon the Persons or Estates of 'those Miscreants who had a Hand in the Murder of your Royal Father 'of blessed Memory, and were excepted in your Majesty's Act of Oblivi- 'on: Wherein we have declared to all the World, how just an Indigna- 'tion we had against that horrid Regicide. We have likewise prepared 'a Bill for the Collection of great Arrears of the Duty of Excise, which 'I do here, in the Name of the Commons of England, present unto your 'Majesty.—— Your Majesty was pleas'd, at the Opening of the Parlia- 'ment, to tell us you intended this Summer to take a Progress, and see 'your People, and at your Return hop'd to bring a Queen home with you. 'Sir, this welcome News hath made us cast about all Ways for your Ac- 'commodation; and therefore that no Conveniencies might be wanting 'for your Self, your Queen, or Attendants, we have prepared a Bill in- 'tituled, An Act for providing necessary Carriages in all your Royal Pro- 'gresses and Removals. Your Majesty was likewise pleas'd, at our first 'Meeting, to say, You wou'd not tire us with hard Duty, and therefore 'about this Time intended a Recess. That Royal Favour will now be 'seasonable, and we hope advantagious to your Majesty, and our selves. 'We know in our Absence your Princely Heart and Head will not be 'free from Cares and Thoughts of our Protection: And when we leave 'our Hive, like the industrious Bee, we shall but fly about the several 'Countries of the Nation to gather Honey; and when your Majesty shall 'be pleas'd to name the Time, return with loaded Thighs unto our 'House again.'

The King's Speech at the same Time.

At the passing of the afore-mention'd Bills, the King made this follow- ing Speech, which cannot conveniently be abridg'd: 'My Lords and Gen- 'tlemen, I perceive by the thin Appearance of the Members of both Houses 'this Day, that it is high Time to Adjourn: In Truth, the Season of 'the Year, as well as your particular Affairs, require it, and therefore I 'do willingly consent to it. I thank you for the many Bills you have 'presented me with this Day, of which I hope the Benefit will redound 'to the whole Kingdom. I thank you for the Care you have taken for 'the Safety of my Person; which, trust Me, is the more valuable to Me, 'for the Consequence I think it is of to you, and, upon my Consci- 'ence, there is no Body wishes ill to Me, but they who wou'd quickly 'revenge themselves of You, if they cou'd. I thank you for the Care 'you have taken of Your Selves, of your own Safety and Honour, in 'the Act against Tumults and Disorders upon Pretence of Petitions; 'to which Licence we owe much of the Calamities we have undergone: 'But I thank you with all my Heart, indeed as much as I can do for 'any Thing, for the Repeal of that Act which Excluded the Bishops from 'Parliament: It was an unhappy Act in an unhappy Time, pass'd with 'many unhappy Circumstances, and attended with miserable Events, and 'therefore I do again thank you for Repealing it. You have thereby 'restored Parliaments to their Primitive Institutions; and I hope, my 'Lords and Gentlemen, you will in a short Time restore them to the Pri- 'mitive Order, and Gravity of Debates and Determinations, which the 'Licence of the late distemper'd Times had so much corrupted; which

'is the only Way to reſtore Parliaments to their Primitive Veneration with the People, which I heartily wiſh they ſhou'd always have. 1661.

'My Lords and Gentlemen, You are now going to your ſeveral Countries, where you cannot but be welcome for the Services you have perform'd here: I do very earneſtly recommend the good Government and Peace of your Countries to your Care, and your Counſel, and your Vigilance. There are diſtemper'd Spirits enough, which lie in wait to do Miſchief, by laying Reproaches upon the Court, upon the Government, Reproaches upon Me, and Reproaches upon You; your Wiſdoms and Reputations, and Authority will, I doubt not, weigh down their light Credit; and the old and new good Laws will, I hope, prevent any Miſchief they intend. However you have done very well, and I do very heartily thank you for it, in declaring my ſole Right over the Militia, the Queſtioning of which was the Fountain from which all our bitter Waters flow'd. I pray make haſte to put the whole Kingdom into ſuch a Poſture, that evil Men, who will not be converted, may yet chuſe to be quiet, becauſe they find that they ſhall not be able to do the Harm they deſire to do. I know you have begun many Bills in both Houſes which cannot be finiſh'd till your Meeting again; and that they may be finiſh'd then, I forbear to make a Seſſions now, but am contented that You adjourn till the twentieth of November, when I hope, by God's Bleſſing, we ſhall come happily together again. In a Word, my Lords and Gentlemen, I thank you for what you have done, and am confident, that what you have left undone you will diſpatch with all Alacrity, and to all our Satisfactions at our next Meeting: And ſo you may adjourn till the twentieth of November. And thus ended the Firſt Meeting of the ſecond Parliament of this Reign, after it had ſat with great Satisfaction to the King and Kingdom two Months, three Weeks, and one Day. Car. 13 Reſ. 2.

The End of the Firſt Meeting of the Second Parliament.

4. At the Summoning this Parliament, the Church was not perfectly re-eſtabliſh'd; and the King having granted a Commiſſion to Divines of both Parties to treat of an Union at the Savoy, as is remember'd, the Court had once almoſt reſolv'd not to call a Convocation with the Parliament, as was uſually done. But before the Matter was fully ſettled, the learned Dr. Heylin wrote a Letter to a principal Miniſter to ſolicit the King, That the Clergy might be continu'd in their ancient Priviledge of holding Synods: of which ſome Part ought to be here mention'd: 'If 'tis objected, That the Commiſſion, now on foot, for altering and explaining certain Paſſages in the Publick Liturgy, may either paſs inſtead of a Convocation, or is thought to be neither compatible nor conſiſtent with it; I hope better in the One, and I can ſee no Reaſon in the Other. For firſt, the ſelecting ſome few Biſhops and other learned Men of the lower Clergy, to debate on certain Points contain'd in the Common-Prayer-Book, is not intended for a Repreſentation of the Church of England, which is a Body more diffuſed, and cannot legally ſtand bound by their Acts. And if this Conference be for no other Purpoſe, but only to prepare Matters for the Convocation, why may not ſuch a Conference and Convocation be held at once? For neither the ſelecting of ſome learned Men out of both the Orders for the compoſing and reviewing the two Liturgies in the Reign of King Edward the Sixth, prov'd any Hindrance to thoſe Convocations held in the ſeveral Years of that Reign. Nor did the holding of a Convocation together with the firſt Parliament under Queen Elizabeth, prove any Hindrance to that Conference or Diſputation which was deſign'd between the Biſhops and ſome learned Men of the oppoſite Parties. All which conſider'd, I do moſt humbly

1661. Car. 13 Ref. 2.

'beg your Lordſhip to put his Majeſty in mind of ſending out his Mandates to the two Arch-Biſhops for Summoning a Convocation, according to the uſual Form; that this poor Church may be beheld with ſome Degree of Veneration, both at Home and Abroad.' Upon the Strength of theſe Arguments, and the Seaſonableneſs of this Application, the King, as it is ſaid, thought fit to diſpatch his Mandates for a Convocation in each Province; the Writs for ſummoning the Parliament having been iſſu'd ſome unuſual Time before.

Proceedings of the Convocation.

The 8th of May, which was the Day of the Meeting of the Parliament, was alſo that of the Convocation, which was ſolemnly open'd at St. Pauls by Divine Service and a Latin Sermon preach'd by Dr. Thomas Pierce, upon a very healing and accommodating Subject; which ſoon after was ſucceeded by the Election and Confirmation of a Prolocutor for the lower Houſe, Dr. Henry Fearne, Dean of Ely. But the Buſineſs they did, during the Sitting of the Parliament, was much the leſs, by reaſon of the foremention'd Meeting and Conference of the Savoy; from which many Things were expected proper to be tranſmitted to them. However they proceeded to draw up a ſolemn Thankſgiving for the King's Birth-day and Reſtoration, the 29th of May; and another ſpecial Form of Prayer to be us'd on that Calamitous Day, the 30th of January. Which done, the Preſident intimated to the Aſſembly the Want of a particular Form in the Liturgy For the Miniſtration of Baptiſm to thoſe of riper Years; and referr'd it to a ſelect Committee of both Houſes. They likewiſe proceeded to examine the Canons already made, and to conſider of Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction, and the Regulation of Spiritual Courts and Officers; as alſo to form a Book of Articles of Enquiry to be us'd in the Viſitation of every Biſhop, with ſome other leſſer Matters. Laſtly, ſince the granting of Mony was then their inherent Right, they made a particular Subſcription for a Royal Benevolence to be preſented to the King; and ſo broke up at the ſame Time with the Parliament.

Proceedings in Scotland.

VII. 1. While Affairs were carry'd with ſo much Eaſe and Succeſs in England, the Parliament in Scotland proceeded with no leſs Satisfaction to the Court and loyal Party. And firſt they proceeded to reſcind that great Engine of Trouble and Confuſion, The Solemn League and Covenant; in which Caſe they expreſsly declar'd, 'That there is no 'Obligation upon this Kingdom by Covenant, Treaties, or otherwiſe, 'to endeavour by Arms a Reformation of Religion in the Kingdom of 'England, or to meddle with the Government or Adminiſtration of that 'Kingdom.' They commanded, 'That none of his Majeſty's Subjects 'preſume, upon any Pretext of any Authority whatſoever, to require a 'Renewing or Swearing to the ſaid League and Covenant, or any other 'Covenants, or publick Oaths concerning the Government of the Church 'or Kingdom, without his Majeſty's ſpecial Warrant and Approbation.' They next proceeded to declare the Power of the Militia to be in the King's Majeſty alone; and after that they put a particular Brand upon the Act of the 16th of January 1647, which related to the Sale and Diſpoſal of the King's Perſon, and declared 'That it was carry'd on and con-'cluded by a prevalent Party, againſt the Judgment of many of his Maje-'ſty's Loyal Subjects; And that it was a moſt ſinful, diſloyal, and unwor-'thy Act, contrary to the Will and Commandment of God; con-'trary to all Laws, Divine and Humane; contrary to the Duty and 'Allegiance of Subjects; contrary to all the Rules of Juſtice, Ho-'nour, Gratitude and Humanity, and highly reflecting on the Honour 'of this ancient Kingdom, and the Reputation of his Majeſty's good Sub-'jects therein. And therefore they do hereby Annull and Condemn the 'ſame for ever; and Ordain it to be expung'd out of all Records, and 'never

'tion.

Epiſcopacy likewiſe reviv'd in this Kingdom, as well as in England: Car. 13
In order to which Mr. James Sharp, Mr. Hamilton, Mr. Barwell and Reſ. 2.
Mr. Leighton, all in Presbyterian Orders, came to London; where after being ordain'd Deacons and Prieſts, they were conſecrated Biſhops by the Biſhop of Winchester, with the Aſſiſtance of two other Engliſh Prelates. At the Solemnity, they expreſsly diſclaim'd the Validity of their former Ordination; and likewiſe procured a Proclamation, declaring the King's Pleaſure for reſtoring the Government of the Church by Arch-Biſhops and Biſhops, as it was eſtabliſh'd in the Year 1637. It was likewiſe ſignify'd in this Inſtrument, That his Majeſty had nominated Arch-Biſhops and Biſhops to their reſpective Sees, to exerciſe the ſame Authority, with which the Prelates govern'd that Church in the Reign of his Royal Grand-Father. Purſuant to this Proclamation, the Privy-Council of Scotland ſtrictly diſcharg'd all Eccleſiaſtical Meetings at Synods, Presbyteries, &c. till they ſhou'd be authoriz'd by the Arch-Biſhops and Biſhops. Not long after, on the 8th Day of May, the Reſtoration of Epiſcopacy was confirm'd by Act of Parliament. The Preamble of which Act ſets forth, Epiſcopacy there reviv'd.
'That in the Beginning of, and by the late Rebellion within this King- And eſtabliſh'd.
'dom, in the Year One Thouſand Six Hundred and Thirty Seven, the 'ancient and ſacred Order of Biſhops was cut off; their Perſons and 'Rights were injured and overturn'd, and a ſeeming Parity among the 'Clergy factiouſly and violently brought in, to the great Diſturbance of 'the Publick Peace, the Reproach of the Reformed Religion, and Vio-'lation of the Excellent Laws of the Realm, for Preſerving an Orderly 'Subordination in the Church, &c.' Another Statute was made, which Enacted Obedience from the inferior Clergy to their Dioceſans, and likewiſe prohibited all Meetings or Conventicles in Houſes for Religious Exerciſes. Another Act was made for Reviving the Right of Patronages which had been ſeiz'd by the Presbyterian Party. Beſides all theſe, Proviſion was made by another Act, that all Perſons in Publick Truſt or Office ſhou'd Sign a ſolemn Declaration againſt the National Covenant in 1638, and the Solemn League and Covenant in 1643; in which they declared it unlawful to Subjects, upon Pretence of Reformation, or other Pretence whatſoever, to enter into Leagues and Covenants, or take up Arms againſt the King, or thoſe Commiſſion'd by Him, &c.

Notwithſtanding theſe ſeveral Laws, Mercy was ſhewn to innumerable Offenders here, as well as in England: Only ſome few were excepted; more particularly the famous Marqueſs of Argyle, who had been ſo deeply ingag'd in the late Miſeries, and of whom much has been ſaid in the former Volume of this Hiſtory. Being brought before the Parliament, and many Articles of High-Treaſon exhibited againſt him, he made a long and ſubtle Defence; and afterwards preſented a Paper call'd a Submiſſion to the King's Majeſty; in which he acknowledg'd his Treſpaſſes in General, and ſaid, That he had rather lye at the Mercy of the Prince, than plead any Thing tending to his own Juſtification. This Paper was rejected, as being not fully ſubmiſſive and ſatisfactory, in regard he acknowledg'd no Treaſonable Guilt in it; but extenuating his Crimes, he call'd them only Treſpaſſes, either through the Fatality or Neceſſity of the Times, wherein many others were involv'd as well as he. He afterwards pleaded, 'That ſince his Majeſty in the Year 1641 had ratify'd in Parliament 'Things that he now ſtood indicted for, he ought not to be queſtion'd 'for them, and hoped that none thirſted after his Life or Eſtate; for his 'Life wou'd little avail them, and his Eſtate wou'd be but of ſmall Va-'lue, when every Man had his own.' But they prov'd ſeveral Treaſona- Proceedings againſt the Marqueſs of Argyle.

ble Actings after that Year, and likewiſe ſome Expreſſions that aggravated his Crimes; as particularly he had diſſwaded the Presbyterians, both in Scotland and in London, not to pray for the King, as One whom God had rejected; and that he had ſaid, If all were to do, that are done in theſe paſt Times, he wou'd do them over again. After all his Apologies, in which he ſhew'd he cou'd fence well, he was found guilty of High-Treaſon, condemn'd to be beheaded, and his Head plac'd on the Tol-Booth, in the Room of that of his great Enemy the renowned Marqueſs of Montroſs. Being brought to the Scaffold on the 28th Day of May, he made there a ſhort Speech, in which he deny'd all Treaſon againſt his Majeſty, and much rejoyc'd that he was reſtored: He confeſs'd he had us'd Compliance with the Engliſh, but not to extirpate the King and his Family, but, as others of that Nation did, to ſecure his Eſtate. He likewiſe declared himſelf a great Friend to the Covenant; and at laſt tearing his written Speech into ſix Parts, and giving it to ſix Friends, he ſubmitted his Head to the Block, upon which Head the Blood of ſeveral was thought to lye heavy. Sure it was no ſmall Mortification to him to ſee the Funeral of the Marqueſs of Montroſs ſolemniz'd in Edinburgh, a few Days before he ſuffer'd, by Order of the Government, with a Pomp and Magnificence not inferior to that of a King.

He is beheaded.

2. To return to England, in the like manner as the great Montroſs had been interr'd, ſo with proportionable Solemnity the two moſt loyal Commanders Sir Charles Lucas and Sir George Liſle were re-interr'd at Colcheſter, the 7th of June, the ſame Day thirteen Years they took up Arms for the King in that Town, which they nobly defended to the laſt. The neighbouring Gentry and Townſ-men, in Arms and deep Mourning, in a noble Proceſſion attended their Hearſes; and both Corps were depoſited in a Vault ſet apart for the Burying Place of Sir Charles's Family. His Majeſty very much promoted all ſuch honourable Remembrances; but either did not, or cou'd not do much for that Party that had been ſuch ſignal Sufferers for his Perſon and Cauſe. He had once reſolv'd this Year upon a Summer Progreſs, and more eſpecially to Worceſter, and to the Royal-Oak, that he might the better manifeſt the Senſe of his Deliverance, and teſtify his Gratitude and Acknowledgments in thoſe Parts. In Order to which his Tent-Office was held at Clarken-Well-Green, to prepare all Things for his Equipage and Accommodation. But either Cares, Buſineſs, or Pleaſures intervening, the Progreſs was deferr'd till another Summer, and then not made. However the principal Inſtruments of his wonderful Eſcape were not forgotten: The Parliament took Notice of ſome of them, and particularly allow'd a thouſand Pounds to Mrs. Jane Lane; and the Penderels, thoſe faithful Brothers, waiting upon his Majeſty, were diſmiſs'd with a Princely Reward.

Great Complaints of the Cavaliers.

Yet ſtill the Cavalier Party had too much Reaſon to complain of the Hardſhips they labour'd under from the Neglect of the Government; and this very Year they were not ſparing of their Exclamations againſt many that were encourag'd and favour'd by the King, and againſt ſeveral Preachers who had ſhewn themſelves ungratefully diſſatisfy'd with the preſent Eſtabliſhment. In the Month of Auguſt a notable Book was publiſh'd by Mr. Leſtrange in Favour of the diſtreſſed Cavaliers; which took ſo wonderfully in the Nation, and contain'd ſo many bold Truths, that it will not be improper here to inſert ſome few Paſſages, leaving the Reader to make Allowance for the Vehemence of his Stile. He declar'd, 'That 'he verily believ'd the King was betray'd; That many of his Favours 'were ſurreptitiouſly obtain'd, and others abus'd and miſapply'd by ſe-'cond Hands, that were entruſted to diſpoſe of them better.' He likewiſe wiſe ſaid, 'He that ſaw Cromwell's, Bradſhaw's, and Saint John's Creatures, nay and the meaneſt of them, laden with Offices and Honours, might give himſelf a ſecond Thought to underſtand the Meaning of it: Eſpecially conſidering how many Thouſands of loyal Subjects were ready to periſh for want of That, which was ſuperfluouſly ſcatter'd among ſcarce ſo many ſingle Perſons on the other Side.' He then laid down one General Rule for his Majeſty to obſerve: 'The Prince who pinches his Subjects Bellies, will loſe their Hearts: And Sir Francis Bacon obſerv'd, That the Multiplying of the Nobility, and other Degrees of Quality, doth ſpeedily bring a State to Neceſſity: Which becomes yet more dangerous, where it happens that the ancient Nobility is ſhrunk into Nothing, and the new Nobility are rais'd out of Nothing.' In other Places he tells us, 'The Court was dangerouſly throng'd with Paraſites; Knaves repreſented to the King for honeſt Men, and honeſt Men for Villains; a Watch upon the King's Ear, to keep out better Information; ſeditious Miniſters protected and encourag'd; Libels againſt the King's Authority and Perſon diſpers'd even by his Majeſty's ſworn Servants; and to diſcover Treaſon, was, in ſome Reſpects, more hazardous, than to committ it.' Afterwards ſpeaking of the Act of Indemnity, he declar'd, 'That Act made the Enemies to the Conſtitution Maſters, in effect, of the Booty of three Nations, bating the Crown and Church Lands, all which they might now call their own; while thoſe who ſtood up for the Laws, were by theſe People abandon'd to the Comfort of an irreparable, but an honourable Ruin.' Then ſpeaking of many of the preſent Preachers, and the Non-Conformiſts in General, he ſays, 'As to their Numbers, upon a moderate Calculation, there wou'd ariſe at leaſt Thirty againſt One throughout the Nation; even in Covent-Garden, a Pariſh of the Geneva Stamp, the Odds was little leſs, betwixt the late Petitioners for the Common-Prayer, and the Oppoſers of it. And yet ſtill the Pulpits were profaned by unqualify'd and ſeditious Lecturers, and Thoſe too out of the rankeſt of the old Separatiſts, both Presbyterian and Independent, the better to advance the Common Work of ſtirring up the Rabble againſt his Sacred Majeſty; whom they more than covertly aſperſe with Rottenneſs of Heart; preſſing the Calamities of the Nation, and the Danger of Perſecution, ſo cloſe and home to the People, as if the Knife were already at their Throats. They pray for the King's Converſion, rather than his Eſtabliſhment. Hancock prays, Give the King another, a New Heart, Lord! Mead ſeconds him with a Word of Conſolation; Ye do not know what a Year, nay what a MONTH may bring forth: This laſt was repeated ſo often, and with ſuch an Accent, that it look'd more like the Timing of a Plot, than Preſſing of a Duty. Theſe Lecturers, he ſaid, were increas'd, both in Number and Boldneſs, to a moſt ſcandalous and prodigious Degree, even ſince the late Receſs of the Parliament, not only to the Hazard of the Publick Peace, but to the Diſhonour of the Engliſh Church.' In Sum he very freely declar'd his Thoughts, and let his Majeſty know, 'That miſ-plac'd Mercy was his Father's Ruin.

1661. Car. 13 Ref. 2.

However, about this Time there was a great Noiſe of Projects and Plots carry'd on by a reſtleſs Party; which, ſeveral ſay, was an Invention to take Advantage againſt them. Heath tells us, That the good Progreſs made by this Parliament, highly rais'd the Diſcontents of the late Anarchy; and their Anger ſuggeſting ſome Hopes of undoing all, they parted themſelves, becauſe they ſaw the Presbyterians concern'd, who either muſt comply, or ſuffer with them by ſuch Proceedings: And therefore new Deſigns were thought of, and divers Conſpiracies fram'd, and Councils and Meetings held by ſeveral of that Party, who were afterwards taken into Cuſtody, after they had vainly endeavour'd and projected new Troubles; ſuch were Praiſe God Barebone, Samuel Moyer, Colonel Salmon, Major Wildman, late Alderman Ireton, Major Hains, and others. The Presbyterian Defenders alledge that theſe were only ſham Plots to help forwards the ſevere Act of Uniformity then in Embryo; but others believe the Contrary. We cannot fully determine a Matter that at this Time wants ſo much Light: We only take Notice that the People generally believ'd them to be true; and they are always ready to believe the worſt of ſuch as have once given them Occaſion.

Thus ſtood the Affairs of the Nation at the ſecond Meeting of the Parliament; about which Time the remaining Regicides were ſent away from the Tower to remote Priſons, in Caſtles and Iſlands, there to continue for Life. But before we proceed to the Parliament, we ſhall juſt take Notice of the Motions of our Fleet, now under the Command of the Earl of Sandwich, who ſet Sail with his Vice-Admiral Sir John Lawſon, on the 19th of June, toward the Streights to reduce the Pirates who had much obſtructed the Engliſh Trade and Navigation. On July the 29th he came before the Port of Algier, and ſent a Meſſage to the Dey of that Place, to come out and confirm the League formerly made with England. A Treaty accordingly began, but the Algerines appear'd ſo inſolent in their Terms, that the Admiral weigh'd and ſtood into their Harbour, but found it ſo well ſecur'd by a new Mole, with Forts and Batteries, that after firing ſome Ships, and ſtriking the Town into a great Conſternation, he found it adviſable to bring off the Fleet, which had ſuffer'd extreamly in their Sails and Rigging: Then, leaving Sir John Lawſon to block them up, he ſet Sail with part of the Fleet to the Coaſt of Spain; from thence croſſing to Tangier, he return'd back to Lisbon, according to his firſt Orders. The old Republicans made their envious and ſeditious Remarks, That the Naval Power of England wou'd never be ſo formidable under Monarchy, as it had been under a Common-Wealth.

The Motions of the Fleet.

The SECOND SESSION of the Second Parliament.

3. After a Receſs of three Months, and as many Weeks, the Parliament met a ſecond Time on the 20th Day of November, in a full and compleat Manner, now conſiſting of the three Eſtates of the Realm. The King being ſeated on his Throne, made the following Speech, which to prevent the Danger of Mutilations, is inſerted in full Length:

The King's Speech to both Houſes.

'My Lords, and Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons, I know the Viſit I make you this Day is not neceſſary, is not of Courſe; yet if there were no more in it, it wou'd not be ſtrange that I come to ſee what you and I ſo long deſired to ſee: The Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and the Commons of England met together to conſult for the Peace and Safety of the Church and State; by which Parliaments are reſtored to their primitive Luſtre and Integrity. I do heartily congratulate with you for This Day. But, My Lords and Gentlemen, as my coming hither at this Time is ſomewhat extraordinary, ſo the Truth is, the Occaſion of my coming is more extraordinary: It is to ſay ſomething to you on my own Behalf, to ask ſomething of you for my ſelf; which is more than I have done of you, or of thoſe that met here before you, ſince my coming into England. I needed not have done it to them; and, upon my Conſcience, I need not do it now. They did, and you do, upon all Occaſions, expreſs ſo great an Affection and Care of all that concerns me, that I may very well refer, both the Matter and Manner of your doing any thing for me, to your own Wiſdoms and Kindneſs: And indeed, if I did think that what I am to ſay to you now did alone, or did moſt concern my ſelf; if the uneaſie Condition I am in, if the Streights and

'Neceſſities I am to ſtruggle with did not manifeſtly relate to the Publick 'Peace and Safety, more than to my own Particular, otherwiſe than I am con- 'cern'd in the Publick, I ſhou'd not give you this Trouble this Day. I can bear 'my Neceſſities, which meerly relate to my ſelf, with Patience enough.

'Mr. Speaker, and you Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons, I do not 'now importune you to make more Haſte in the ſettling the conſtant Re- 'venue of the Crown, than is agreeable to the Method you propoſe to 'your ſelves: I deſire you ſeriouſly to conſider the inſupportable Weight 'that lies upon it, the Obligations it lieth under to provide for the Inte- 'reſt, Honour and Security of the Nation in another Proportion than 'in any former Times it hath been oblig'd to. I know very well, you 'have very affectionately and worthily taken all this into your Thoughts, 'and will proceed in it with as much Expedition, as I can reaſonably 'wiſh; but I come to put you in Mind of the crying Debts which do e- 'very Day call upon me for ſome neceſſary Proviſions, which are to be 'made without Delay, for the very Safety of the Kingdom; of the great 'Sums of Mony that ſhou'd be ready to diſcharge the ſeveral Fleets when 'they come home, and for the neceſſary Preparations that are to be 'made for the ſetting out new Fleets to Sea againſt the Spring; that Re- 'venue being already anticipated to as important Services, which ſhou'd 'be aſſign'd to thoſe Preparations. Theſe are the preſſing Occaſions 'which I am forc'd to recommend to you with all poſſible Earneſtneſs, 'and do conjure you to provide for as ſpeedily as poſſible, in ſuch 'a Manner, as may give us Security at home, and ſome Reputation a- 'broad. I make this Diſcourſe to you with ſome Confidence, becauſe 'I am very willing, and deſirous, that you ſhou'd throughly examine 'whether theſe Neceſſities I mention, be Real, or Imaginary; or whether 'they be fallen upon Us by my Fault, by my own Managery, or Exceſ- 'ſes, and provide for them accordingly. I am very willing that you 'make a full Inſpection into my Revenue, as well the Diſburſements, 'as Receipts; and if you find it hath been ill manag'd by any Corrupti- 'on in the Officers I truſt, or by my own Unthriftineſs, I ſhall take the 'Information and Advice you ſhall give me very kindly: I ſay, if you 'find it; for I wou'd not have you believe any looſe Diſcourſes, how 'confidently ſoever urg'd, of giving away eighty thouſand Pounds in a 'Morning, and many other Extravagancies of that kind. I have much 'more Reaſon to be ſorry that I have not to reward thoſe who have e- 'ver faithfully ſerv'd the King my Father, and my ſelf, than aſham'd of 'any Bounty I have exercis'd towards any Man.

'My Lords and Gentlemen, I am ſorry to find that the general Temper 'and Affections of the Nation are not ſo well compos'd, as I hop'd they 'wou'd have been, after ſuch ſignal Bleſſings from God Almighty upon 'us all, and after ſo great Indulgence and Condeſcenſions from me to- 'wards all Intereſts. There are many wicked Inſtruments ſtill as active 'as ever, who labour Night and Day to diſturb the publick Peace, and 'to make all People jealous of each other. It will be worthy of your 'Care and Vigilance, to provide proper Remedies for the Diſeaſes of that 'kind; and if you find new Diſeaſes, you muſt ſtudy new Remedies. 'Let us not be diſcourag'd, if we help one another, we ſhall by God's 'Bleſſing maſter all our Difficulties: Theſe which concern Matters of 'Religion, I confeſs to you are too hard for me; and therefore I do re- 'commend them to your Care and Deliberation, which can beſt provide 'for them: I ſhall not need to recommend, or put you in mind of the 'good Correſpondence that ought to be kept between you for the Good 'of your Selves, and Me, and the whole Kingdom; and I may tell you, 'it is very neceſſary for us all. You will find Whoſoever doth not be'lieve Me, doth not love You; and they who have not Reverence for 'You, have little Kindneſs for Me. Therefore, I pray let us adhere faſt 'to each other, and then we ſhall, with the Help of God, in a ſhort 'Time perſwade, or oblige all Men to that Submiſſion, and Obedience 'to the Law, as may conſtitute a full Meaſure of Happineſs to Prince 'and People, and perſwade our Neighbours to that Eſteem and Value 'they have formerly had for us.

Purſuant to this Speech the Parliament proceeded diligently to Buſineſs, and the better to preſerve the Peace of the Nation, both Houſes immediately agreed to petition for a Proclamation, 'For diſarming the 'diſbanded and caſhier'd Officers and Soldiers, and to command them 'to depart twenty Miles from the City of London, for ſuch Time as his 'Majeſty ſhall think fit.' And the Commons, to ſhew their Readineſs to aſſiſt the King in his Wants, on the ſame Day, voted, 'That the Sum of 'twelve Hundred Thouſand Pounds ſhou'd be ſpeedily paid and rais'd 'for the Supply of the King's Majeſty's preſent Occaſions;' and ſo proceeded accordingly. For which the King ſoon after return'd his hearty Thanks, and particularly expreſs'd how exceeding much he was beholden to the Houſe of Commons for their great Gift, and the Manner of it, in giving ſo freely. After which he ſent a Meſſage to the Commons, 'That making the Good of his People the Subject of his Thoughts, 'and conſidering that the calling in the Mony call'd The Common-'Wealth's Mony by the laſt of this Month, might be prejudicial to 'his People, and hazard the Exportation of a great Part thereof, was 'graciouſly pleas'd, by the Advice of his Privy-Council, to direct a Pro-'clamation to be iſſu'd, ſignifying his Majeſty's Pleaſure to accept of the 'ſaid Mony in any Payment to be made to him till the 25th Day of 'March next.

A Vote for Twelve Hundred Thouſand Pounds.

Proceedings againſt the Regicides.

The firſt Parliament having reſpited the Puniſhments of ſeveral of the Regicides, as well thoſe that lay under Condemnation, as others not ſo flagrantly guilty of that Crime; the Houſes reſum'd the Matter, and on the 25th of November thoſe Regicides that came in upon Proclamation, were brought to the Bar of the Houſe of Lords, to anſwer what they cou'd ſay for themſelves, why Judgment ſhou'd not be executed againſt them. They ſeverally alledg'd, 'That upon his Majeſty's gracious 'Declaration from Breda, and the Votes of Parliament, and his Majeſty's 'Proclamation, publiſh'd by the Advice of the Lords and Commons then 'aſſembled in Parliament, they did render themſelves, being adviſ'd that 'they ſhou'd thereby ſecure their Lives; and humbly crav'd the Benefit 'thereof, and the Mercy of the Houſes, and their Mediation to his Ma-'jeſty in their Behalfs.' Harry Marten briskly added, That he had never obey'd any Proclamation before This, and hop'd that he ſhou'd not be hang'd for taking of the King's Word now. New Debates aroſe about them, and a Bill was brought in for their Execution, which was read twice, but afterwards dropt; and ſo they were all ſent to their ſeveral Priſons, and but little more heard of them. The Difficulty had like to have been the heavier upon them, by reaſon of ſeveral ſeditious Pamphlets publiſh'd about this Time; and likewiſe by reaſon of a Meſſage from the King, deliver'd by the Lord Chancellor in a Conference between both Houſes. At which Time the Chancellor declar'd, 'That the ſame 'did concern Things of a high and dangerous Nature, and that there had 'been a real Deſign, which had been forming ever ſince March laſt, to 'diſturb the Union and Peace of this Kingdom:' And ſo proceeded to name ſeveral of the Parties engag'd, with the Manner and Contrivance of their barbarous Deſigns, and the Progreſs they had from Time to Time made therein. 'And that although their Deſigns were at preſent 'diſor-

'made a general Invitation of disbanded Soldiers, and disaffected Per'sons, to resort hither about the 11th of this Month; yet they were still Car. 13
'practising to put the same in Execution in the Country: And that the Ref. 2.
'Lords, to provide a Remedy against these Evils, had appointed a Com'mittee of Twelve, of their House, and desired that an answerable
'Number of the other House be joyn'd with the Lords, who might, du'ring the Recess, examine the said Traiterous Designs, and find out
'such Expedients, as they shou'd perceive necessary for the preventing
'and suppressing them, and securing the Peace of the Kingdom.' All which they agreed to, and put in Practice.

The next Day, which was the 20th of December, the Mony Bill, and three other Bills being ready for the Royal Assent, the King came to the House of Peers, where the Commons Speaker presented to his Majesty a Bill for granting Twelve Hundred and Sixty Thousand Pounds to the King, to be levy'd by an Assessment of Seventy Thousand Pounds by the Month, for Eighteen Months. At the passing of this Bill, the King, in a short Speech, 'gave very hearty Thanks to the House for their Great 'Present, and declared That he had receiv'd the Benefit of it before he 'had it; the Reputation thereof having given him Credit both at Home 'and Abroad: And that he was not more willing to give his Royal As-'sent to that Bill, than he shou'd have been to pass any Bills whatsoever, 'which that House shou'd present to him for his People's Good.' He likewise pass'd other three Bills at this Time; the First, An Act for the regulating Corporations; the Second, For preventing vexatious Delays in Law-Suits; and the Last, for impowering his Majesty to make Leases of his Lands in the Dutchy of Cornwall. The First, since usually call'd the Corporation Act, made the greatest Noise, and met with some Struggles in the House. It prov'd a severe Mortification and a Blow to one Party, and made a mighty Alteration in several Places, which the Court look'd upon as Nests of Sedition. Part of the Preamble very well shews the Design of the Act, namely, 'That the Succession in such Corporations may 'be most probably perpetuated in the Hands of Persons well affected to 'his Majesty, and the establish'd Government; it being too well known 'that notwithstanding all his Majesty's Endeavours, and unparallel'd Indul-'gence in pardoning all that is past, nevertheless many evil Spirits are 'still working:' Therefore for the preventing this, every Mayor, Alder-man, Common-Council Man, or any other Officer in a Corporation, was oblig'd, besides the common Oath of Allegiance and Supremacy, and a particular Declaration against the Solemn League and Covenant, to take an Oath, declaring, That it was not lawful, upon any Pretence whatsoever, to take Arms against the King; and that he did abhor that traiterous Position of taking Arms by his Authority against his Person, or against those commission'd by Him. And to put this in Execution the King was authoriz'd to grant a Commission to such Persons as he thought fit, to last above two Years, with sufficient Powers to answer the Ends of the Act. Upon the passing of these Acts, the Parliament was adjourn'd to the 10th Day of January; and so, breaking up, had a Recess for near three Weeks.

The King passes some Acts.

The Corporation Act.

4. During the Recess of Parliament, it being now Christmas, the Town was fill'd with extraordinary Feastings, Revellings, Mirth, Pleasure and Luxury, as well in rich Cloaths and Habits, as choice Eating and Drinking. The Honourable Society of Lincolns-Inn renew'd their old Custom of the Inns of Court, by chusing a Prince, who during the solemn Festival commanded like a Sovereign in, and in the Places adjoyning ing to, the ſaid Inn. The Gentleman elected at this Time was John Lort Eſquire, of a good Family in Wales, who invited the King Himſelf to the Inn, and gave him a noble Entertainment at Dinner. The King was pleas'd to ſee all the Ceremonies due to a Prince exactly obſerv'd in every Reſpect, as a Council, Judges and Officers of State, Honour and Nobility attending upon this his Highneſs; and his Majeſty, at the Expiration of the Term of his Royalty, was pleas'd to preſent him with the Honour of a Baronet of England.

The Death of the Queen of Bohemia.

And now, according to our uſual Method, we ſhall conclude the old Year with the Deaths of ſome Perſons of moſt eminent Conſideration: And firſt we ſhall begin with the renowned Lady, Elizabeth Stuart Queen of Bohemia, eldeſt Daugher of King James the Firſt, and the only remaining Child of that Prince. She had been marry'd to the unfortunate Elector Palatine in the Year 1612; and having, with great Conſtancy and Nobleneſs of Spirit, endured and ſurviv'd all the poſſible Misfortunes of her Family, ſhe this Year came to congratulate the Reſtoration of her Nephew the King, and to die in Peace in her Father's Dominions, on the 13th of February. Her Body was convey'd to Somerſet-Houſe, and from thence by Water to Weſtminſter-Abby; where, being accomany'd with Prince Rupert her Son, and many of the Nobility, it was privately interr'd in the ſame Vault with Prince Henry her eldeſt Brother. She had a numerous and noble Progeny of ſeven Sons and five Daughters, of whom the youngeſt ſurviving, the Princeſs Sophia, was after many Years declared and created Heir to the Crown of Great-Britain.

The Deaths of Biſhop Walton,

Beſides this illuſtrious Perſon, we are to take Notice of ſeveral others, that deſerve to be recorded in Hiſtory: And of theſe, we ſhall firſt mention two Biſhops, both of the ſame See of Cheſter, and educated both in the ſame Univerſity of Cambridge. The firſt was Dr. Brian Walton, admitted in Magdalen, and remov'd to Peter-Houſe-Colledge, and ſo to the City of London; a Perſon highly remarkable for his excellent Virtues, Learning and Sufferings for his Loyalty; but ſtill more eminently diſtinguiſh'd for his indefatigable Labours in bringing into the World that noble Work the Biblia Polyglotta, which, by the Aſſiſtance of many great Men, was brought to that Perfection, that it is confeſſedly the moſt abſolute, and moſt famous Edition of the BIBLE, that the Chriſtian World ever enjoy'd. After the Reſtoration he was juſtly preferr'd to the Biſhoprick of Cheſter; but he poſſeſs'd that See but a few Months, before his Death made Room for his Succeſſor, Dr. Henry Ferne, the other Biſhop we are to mention, who alſo dy'd in the ſame Year, after he had been but a while remov'd from his Prolocutor's Place in Convocation. This pious and learned Man, tho' continuing a ſhort Time in Oxford, was both Fellow and Maſter of Trinity Colledge in Cambridge, and then became Dean of Ely, beſides Prolocutor, before he mounted the Epiſcopal Chair. He was celebrated in the late Times for his clear Reſolutions of the Differences between the King and Parliament, and between the Churches of England, Geneva, and Rome; which he perform'd with ſo mighty a Strength and Perſpicuity, that the two adverſe Parties confeſs'd, That the Church of England's Cauſe never look'd ſo clearly and devoutly in any Writings, as in thoſe of Dr. Ferne. After theſe two Prelates, we are to mention three Divines of different Talents and Characters; and firſt Dr. John Oliver, the worthy Preſident of Magdalen Colledge in Oxford, and Prebendary of Wincheſter; from which Preferments he was ejected by the late prevailing Powers, notwithſtanding his eminent and conſpicuous Learning, Charity, and Humility; till in the great Year 1660, he was both reſtored, and made Dean of Worceſter by the Intereſt of the preſent Lord Chancellor, to whom he had the Honour

Biſhop Ferne,

nour to be Tutor in the Univerſity. Before his Death he was infinitely deſirous to leave the World at a Time when all learned Men wou'd naturally have the ſtrongeſt Deſires to ſtay in it. The next to be mention'd was Dr. Barten Hollyday, a Perſon educated in Chriſt-Church in Oxford, and one of a very various Genius; being a forward and eloquent Preacher, and a skilful Philoſopher, yet ſtill more diſtinguiſh'd by his Poetical Labours, both Tranſlations and Originals, of which ſome, tho' not ſo agreeable at this Time, were produc'd at an Age ſo young, as is not eaſily to be parallel'd. The third was Dr. Thomas Fuller, an eminent London Divine, Chaplain to his preſent Majeſty, educated in the Univerſity of Cambridge, both in Queen's and Sidney Colledge, who by his particular Temper and Management weather'd the late great Storm with more Succeſs than many other great Men. He was a general Scholar, an extenſive Hiſtorian, and a walking Library, and had a prodigious Memory, a moſt quick Wit, and a luxuriant Fancy and Invention, but not the moſt exact Judgment: He publiſh'd many Pieces, but was moſt of all diſtinguiſh'd by that laborious, but imperfect Work, The Hiſtory of the Worthies of England.

1661. Car. 13 Reſ. 2.

Beſides theſe, we are to take Notice of four or five other Perſons of a different Character, as firſt Sir John Glanvill, Serjeant at Law, a famous Orator both in the Houſe and at the Bar, excellently skill'd in, and an Ornament to his Profeſſion; a Perſon who bravely ſtood in the Gap in the late Reign, both when the Prerogative was carry'd too high, and when it was too much depreſs'd, and for both which he was a remarkable Sufferer. Next, we are to mention two brave Loyaliſts and valiant Soldiers, Sir Marmaduke Langdale, and Sir John Stawell, both magnanimous Sufferers for their King and Country; of whom leſs need to be ſaid, becauſe ſo particularly taken Notice of in the laſt Volume; only that the Former of the two was, before the Reſtoration, made a Baron of the Realm, by the Title of Lord Langdale of Holme in Spalding-Moor, in the County of York. Another Perſon ought likewiſe to be mention'd, which was Henry Cary, Earl of Monmouth, a noted Traveller, a general Scholar, and well skill'd in modern Languages, which Talents he honourably employ'd in tranſlating the beſt Spaniſh, French, and Italian Authors, during the Time of the Nation's Troubles; while Others of the Nobility were too often forc'd to ſubmit to the Company and Converſation of their aſſuming Inferiors. Laſt of all we ſhall mention Sir Arthur Hazelrigg, that implacable Incendiary, who had been ſo deeply involved in the Miſeries of the Kingdom, and of whom ſo much has been ſaid in the laſt Volume. Tho' he had the good Fortune to meet with an extraordinary Friend in General Monk, and ſo to eſcape both with Life and Eſtate, yet being made a Priſoner in the Tower, he pin'd away with Anger and Grief, being unable to bear either his own Diſgrace, or the common Felicity of theſe Times.

Serjeant Glanvill,

Lord Langdale, Sir John Stawell,

Earl of Monmouth,

And Sir Arthur Hazelrigg.

VIII. 1. After the Feaſtings and Revellings were ſomewhat abated, the Parliament met on the 10th of January according to Adjournment, and proceeded to Buſineſs with all Vigour, ſhewing themſelves ready both to advance the Prerogative, as well as the Revenue of the King. They were now farther alarm'd with the Noiſe of Plots and Conſpiracies; and they began with receiving the Report of the ſelect Committee of Lords and Commons, appointed juſt before the Receſs. In this the Lord Chancellor gave an additional Account of the traiterous Deſigns ſet on foot at ſeveral Times, and acquainted them with the Names of ſuch as were engag'd, as Wildman, Salmon, and others before mention'd. He told them, 'That there was found with Salmon a Liſt of a 'hundred

'hundred and ſixty Officers of the late Army: That it was further diſ-
'cover'd that there ſhou'd have been a Meeting in London about the 10th
'of December, and that they intended about the End of January to 'have made ſure of Shrewsbury, Coventry, and Briſtol, and that they
'ſhou'd riſe in ſeveral Parts at once: That where they were prevalent,
'they ſhou'd begin with Aſſaſſination, which mov'd one of them to re-
'late, That ſome of the late King's Judges were entertain'd in France,
'Holland, and Germany, and held conſtant Correſpondence with thoſe,
'and were fomented by ſome foreign Princes. That many Arms were 'bought in order to this Deſign, and that they bragg'd, If they once got
'Footing, they ſhou'd not want Means to carry on their Work. That they 'were diſcover'd by one of their Party, and his Relation confirm'd by
'ſuch Intelligence from abroad, as never fail'd.' He further told them,
'That at Huntington many there met under the Name of Quakers, that 'were not ſo; and rode there in Multitudes by Night, to the great Ter'ror of his Majeſty's good Subjects. That it might be wonder'd at that
'ſome Propoſals were not made to remedy this impending Evil: But the 'King had advis'd with the Duke of Albemarle, now preſent at this Com'mittee, and has put two Troops into Shrewsbury, and as many into 'Coventry, who by the Way had broken a great Knot of Thieves, and 'taken twenty. That a Rumour was ſpread, That the appointing of this 'Committee was only a Plot to govern by an Army; but the Commit'tee was very ſenſible of the real Danger, and hop'd the Houſes wou'd
'be ſo too; and that ſince all their Adverſaries were united to deſtroy
'them, ſo they ſhou'd unite to preſerve themſelves.' Upon this Report, the Houſe of Commons reſum'd their former Order of proceeding againſt Vane, Lambert, Waller, and ſome others that were ſtill under the Power of the Law, and proceeded with greater Activity in finiſhing the two great Bills for the Eſtabliſhment of the Crown and Church, one for in-ſuring the Militia to the Crown, and the other for ſettling Uniformity in the Church.

Nor were the Commons leſs careful in the improving and advancing his Majeſty's Revenues, and proceeded to offer great Incouragement to all who ſhou'd ſend him any Mony for his preſent Occaſions. While they were conſidering of this Point, on the 18th of February, they re-ceiv'd a very obliging Meſſage from the King by Mr. Secretary Morrice, who inform'd the Houſe, 'That he had Directions from his Majeſty to 'deſire the Houſe, That they wou'd put a Superſedeas to any further

'Debate upon the Bill for Permiſſion to ſuch Perſons as ſhou'd advance
'Mony for his Majeſty's preſent Occaſions, to take Intereſt at Ten per 'Cent. That his Majeſty, finding the Bill might have ſome ungrateful Re-
'liſh in it, reſolv'd to put himſelf upon the greateſt Streights, rather than
'adventure upon any Courſe, that might in the leaſt ſeem to diſguſt this
'Houſe, or prejudice his good Subjects; and therefore wou'd endeavour
'to find ſome other Means to ſupply his preſent urgent Occaſions, and 'deſir'd the Bill might be laid aſide.' This Meſſage affected them ſo much, that they immediately return'd their humble Thanks to the King for his Tenderneſs to his People, and order'd, 'That his Majeſty be made 'acquainted, That this Houſe wou'd leave no Means unattempted to 'advance his Majeſty's Revenue, and ſupply his preſent urgent Occa-
'ſions.'

The King finding his Neceſſities to encreaſe, within ten Days after, order'd the Houſe of Commons to attend him at White-Hall, in a Body by themſelves: Which was accordingly done upon the Firſt of March; when his Majeſty, after ſome remarkable Acknowledgments of their extraordinary Services, and having declared, That he knew moſt of their Faces, Faces, and never hop'd to find better Men in their Places, he proceeded thus: ‘ Mr. Speaker, and you Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons, you ‘ will wonder now, after I have willingly made this juſt Acknowledgment ‘ to you, that I ſhou'd lament, and complain That I, and You, and the King- ‘ dom are yet without that preſent Fruit and Advantage, which we might ‘ reaſonably promiſe our ſelves, from ſuch a Harmony of Affections, and ‘ an Unity in Reſolutions, to advance the Publick Service, and to pro- ‘ vide for the Peace and Security of the Kingdom, that you do not ex- ‘ pedite thoſe good Counſels that are moſt neceſſary for Both. I know ‘ not how it comes to paſs, but for theſe many Weeks paſt, even ſince ‘ your laſt Adjournment, private and particular Buſineſs hath almoſt thruſt ‘ the Conſideration of the publick out of Doors: And in Truth, I do not ‘ know that you are nearer ſettling my Revenue than you were at Chriſt- maſs: I am ſure I have communicated my Condition to you without ‘ Reſerve; what I have coming in, and what my neceſſary Disburſements ‘ are; and I am exceedingly deceiv'd, if whatſoever you give to me, be ‘ any other ways given to me, than to be iſſu'd out for your own Uſe ‘ and Benefit. Truſt me, it ſhall be ſo; and if you conſider it well, you ‘ will find that you are the Richer by what you give, ſince it is all to be ‘ laid out, that you may enjoy the reſt in Eaſe and Security. Gentlemen, ‘ I need not put you in mind of the miſerable Effects which have attend- ‘ ed the Wants and Neceſſities of the Crown. I need not tell you that ‘ there is a Republican Party ſtill in the Kingdom, which had the Cou- ‘ rage to promiſe themſelves another Revolution: And you know the only ‘ Way, with God's Bleſſing, to diſappoint their Hopes, and reduce them ‘ from thoſe extravagant Deſires, is to let them ſee that you have ſo provided ‘ for the Crown, that it hath wherewithal to ſupport it ſelf, and to ſecure you; which is all that I deſire, and do deſire it only for your Preſerva- ‘ tion. Therefore I do conjure you by all the Profeſſions of Affection ‘ you have made to me, by all the Kindneſſes I know you have for me, ‘ to betake your ſelves to ſome ſpeedy Reſolutions, and ſettle ſuch a re- al and ſubſtantial Revenue upon me, as may hold ſome Proportion with ‘ my neceſſary Expences for the Peace and Honour of the Kingdom; ‘ that they who look for Trouble at home, may deſpair of their Wiſhes; ‘ and that our Neighbours abroad, by ſeeing all is well at home, may have ‘ that Value and Eſteem for us, as may ſecure the Honour and Intereſt ‘ of the Nation, and make the Happineſs of this Kingdom, and of this ‘ City, once more the Admiration and Envy of the World.

A particular Speech to the Commons alone.

‘ Gentlemen, I hear you are very zealous for the Church, and very ſo- ‘ licitous, and even jealous that there is not Expedition enough us'd in ‘ that Affair. I thank you for it, ſince I preſume it proceeds from a good ‘ Root of Piety and Devotion: But I muſt tell you, I have the worſt ‘ Luck in the World, if after all the Reproaches of being a Papiſt, while ‘ I was abrord; I am ſuſpected of being a Presbyterian, now I am come ‘ home. I know you will not take it unkindly, if I tell you I am as zea- ‘ lous for the Church of England, as any of you can be, and am enough ‘ acquainted with the Enemies of it on all Sides; That I am as much in ‘ love with the Book of Common-Prayer, as you can wiſh, and have Pre- ‘ judice enough to thoſe who do not love it, who I hope in Time will ‘ be better inform'd, and change their Minds; and you may be confi- ‘ dent, I do as much deſire to ſee an Uniformity ſettled as any amongſt ‘ you. I pray truſt me in that Affair: I promiſe you to haſten the Diſ- ‘ patch of it with all convenient Speed; you may relye upon me in it. ‘ I have tranſmitted the Book of Common Prayer, with thoſe Alterati- ‘ ons and Additions, which have been preſented to me by the Convo- ‘ cation, to the Houſe of Peers, with my Approbation, that the Act

166½. Car. 14 Ref. 2.

'of Uniformity may relate to it; ſo that I preſume, it will be ſhortly di-
'ſpatch'd there: And when we have done all we can, the well ſettling
'that Affair will require great Prudence and Diſcretion, and the Abſence
'of all Paſſion and Precipitation. I will conclude with putting you in 'Mind, that the Seaſon of the Year, and the Good you may do, will re'quire a Receſs into the Country, where you will find that many Tares
'have been ſown in your Abſence: The Arrival alſo of my Wife, whom
'I expect the next Month, and the Neceſſity of my being out of Town
'to meet her, and to ſtay ſome Time before ſhe comes hither, makes it
'very neceſſary that the Parliament break up before Eaſter, to meet again
'in the Winter: And that it may do ſo, I pray lay aſide all private Bu-
'ſineſs, that you may in that Time diſpatch the Publick. — The mention
'of my Wife's Arrival puts me in Mind to deſire you to put that Com'pliment upon her, That her Entrance into the Town may be with 'more Decency, than the Ways will now ſuffer it to be; and to that 'Purpoſe, I pray you wou'd quickly diſpatch and paſs ſuch Laws as are
'before you in Order to the amending of thoſe Ways, and that ſhe may 'not find White-Hall ſurrounded with Water. I will detain you no 'longer, but do promiſe my ſelf great Fruits of this Converſation with 'you, and that you will juſtify the Confidence I have in your Affections,
'by letting the World ſee, that you take my Concernments to Heart,
'and are ready to do what I deſire for the Peace and Welfare of the 'Kingdom.

The Commons Vigour.

Upon this Speech, which we do not find in Print, the Commons proceeded with more Vigour in the diſpatching of the ſeveral Bills before them; and in a ſhort Time they finiſh'd that, which his Majeſty had propos'd to them, For the repairing of the Streets and High-Ways in and near London and Weſtminſter, and Parts adjacent; together with another Againſt the People call'd Quakers, which inflicted certain Penalties upon them, both for their Meeting, and their refuſing the Oaths: Both which were paſs'd by Commiſſion. In the ſettling of the King's Revenue, they took into Conſideration, the Wants and Neceſſities of many of the Loyal Cavaliers, who had loſt their Eſtates in his Father's Service, and appointed threeſcore thouſand Pounds, out of the eighteen Months Aſſeſſment, to be diſtributed amongſt them by Commiſſioners of their own Nomination.

The Proceedings of the Convocation.

2. All this while the Convocation was buſily employ'd about ſeveral Matters, but principally ſuch as were for the perpetuating and eſtabliſhing the Church of England. They had now choſen a new Prolocutor in the Room of Dr. Fearne, remov'd to the See of Cheſter, namely Dr. John Barwick, Dean of St. Paul's, a Man of great Worth and Conſideration. Among various Debates a remarkable Piece of Law was conſider'd and examin'd, as how far it was ſafe or lawful for the Biſhops to join in the Houſe of Lords, in the Tryal and Condemnation of Perſons impeach'd of Treaſon; and after many Arguments, it was agreed to take Advice of the chief common Lawyers, and Civilians, in the Nation: Theſe, after ſeveral new Arguments, deliver'd in their Opinion in Writing, 'That the Biſhops might ſit and act with other Peers in Parlia'ment, without Detriment or Prejudice, during the Tryal and Condem'nation of Perſons guilty of Treaſon and Blood.' But the greateſt Buſineſs of the Convocation was, their reviewing the Book of Common-Prayer, and making Amendments and Alterations in it, in order to prepare it for the intended Act of Uniformity. This important Buſineſs took up the Care and Application of both Houſes for a conſiderable Time; who made ſome few Alterations in the Liturgy, and added three Prayers, particularly one for the High Court of Parliament, beſides a new Office for Baptiſm to ſuch as are of riper Years, and two more, one for the 30th of January, the other for the 29th of May. The Work being finiſh'd, it was ſolemnly receiv'd, approv'd, and ſubſcrib'd by all the Members of each Houſe. After that, being ſent to the Houſe of Lords, it was receiv'd with the utmoſt Satisfaction; and the Lord Chancellor, as well in his own Name, as in the Name of all the Peers in Parliament, return'd Thanks to the Archbiſhops and Biſhops of both Provinces, for their great Care and Induſtry in reviſing the ſaid Book of Common Prayer; and return'd the like Thanks to the Prolocutor, the Dignitaries and Clergy, for their reſpective Care and Labour in the ſaid Work. 1662. Car. 14 Reſ. 2.

The Act of Uniformity, and ſeveral others being ready for the Royal Aſſent, on the 19th Day of May the King came to the Houſe of Peers, and paſs'd all that were ready. The Nature of them will in ſome Meaſure appear from the following good Speech of Sir Edward Turner the Speaker, who, after ſome introductory Compliments, proceeded thus:

'If your Majeſty but pleaſe to caſt your Eyes upon the Table, and behold the great Number of Bills that there preſent themſelves before you, like ſo many Sheafs of Corn bound up, and ready to be houſed; and will vouchſafe to ſee how both my Hands are fill'd with no light Preſents from your Loyal Commons; and if your Royal Majeſty, the great Lord of the Harveſt, ſhall vouchſafe to crown this Day by your Conceſſions to our Deſires, the World will then ſee how great a Duty your People chearfully pay both to your Royal Perſon and your Government, and likewiſe how great a Zeal your Majeſty hath, by the faithful Advice of your Lords and Commons, to ſettle the Church in her ancient Glory, and to reſtore the happy People of this Nation to their ancient Rights and Priviledges. Some Foreign Writers, that envy the Happineſs of our Government, injuriouſly aſperſe this Nation with a reproachful Saying, That the Crown of England is only maintain'd by the Benevolence of the People, which is never granted, but in Exchange of ſome Royal Prerogative. Great Sir, we know the ſtrongeſt Building muſt fall, if the coupling Pins be pull'd out; therefore our Care hath been to prepare ſuch Conſtitutions, that the Prerogative of the Crown, and the Propriety of the People, may like ſquared Stones in a well built Arch, each ſupport the other, and grow the cloſer and ſtronger for any Weight or Force that ſhall be laid upon them. We cannot forget the late Diſputing Age, wherein moſt Perſons took a Liberty, and ſome Men made it their Delight, to trample upon the Diſcipline and Government of the Church; the Hedge being trod down, the Foxes and the Wolves enter'd, the Swine and other unclean Beaſts defiled the Temple: At length it was diſcern'd, the Smectymnian Plot did not only bend it ſelf to reform Ceremonies, but ſought to erect a popular Authority of Elders, and root out Epiſcopal Juriſdiction. In Order to this Work, Church Ornaments were firſt taken away, then the Means whereby Diſtinction or Inequality might be upheld among Eccleſiaſtical Governors; then the Forms of Common Prayer, which, as Members of the Publick Body of Chriſt's Church, were enjoin'd us, were decry'd as ſuperſtitious, and in lieu thereof, Nothing, or worſe than Nothing, introduced. Your Majeſty having already reſtored the Governors and Government of the Church, the Patrimony and Priviledges of our Church-Men; we held it now our Duty, for the Reformation of all Abuſes in the publick Worſhip of God, humbly to preſent to your Majeſty a Bill for The Uniformity of Publick Prayers, and Adminiſtration of Sacraments. We hope the God of Order

1662. Car. 14 Ref. 2.

‘ and Unity will conform the Hearts of all the People in this Nation, to ‘ ſerve him in this Order and Uniformity.

‘ Next to the Worſhip and Service of God, we apply'd our ſelves to ‘ the ſettling our great Concern, the Militia. We have already, ac- ‘ cording to our Duties, and the Laws, declared the ſole Right of the ‘ Militia to be in your Majeſty: And we humbly tender your Majeſty ‘ a Bill for the better Regulation and Ordering the Standing Forces of the ‘ Nation; wherein we have taken Care to make all Things ſo certain, ‘ that your Lieutenants and their Deputies may know what to command, ‘ and all the People learn how to obey. And becauſe our late Wounds ‘ are yet but green, and poſſibly before the Body Politick be well purg'd, ‘ may incline to break out again, whereby your Majeſty may be forc'd ‘ to draw your Sword before your Treaſury be ſupply'd with Mony; ‘ We have conſented that your Majeſty may raiſe for the three next en- ‘ ſuing Years, one Month's Tax in each Year, after the Rate of Seventy ‘ thouſand Pounds per Menſem, if Neceſſity ſhall ſo require. In the next ‘ Place, according to your Majeſty's Commands, we have ſurvey'd the ‘ waſted Revenue of the Crown; and in Purſuance of our Promiſes, do ‘ humbly propound to your Majeſty a fair Addition: We conſider'd that ‘ great Part of your Revenue is but for Life, and depends upon the Peace ‘ and Trade of the Nation, and therefore may be much impaired by Fo- ‘ reign Wars; therefore we have ſought ſomething that might ariſe ‘ within our own Walls, and not be ſubject to ſuch Contingencies. We ‘ fix'd at laſt upon thoſe Places where we enjoy our greateſt Comforts ‘ and Securities, our Dwelling-Houſes; and conſidering even that Secu- ‘ rity is ſecured to us by your Majeſty's Vigilance and Care in the Go- ‘ vernment, we have prepared a Bill, That all Houſes in this Kingdom, ‘ of the yearly Value of above twenty Shillings, and not inhabited by Almeſ- ‘ men, ſhall pay to your Majeſty, your Heirs and Succeſſors, two Shillings ‘ yearly, for every Chimney-Hearth in each Houſe for ever. When the ‘ great Achitophels of our latter Age had by Force raviſh'd the venerable ‘ Laws of this Nation, then every petty Artiſt in his Way, yea the very com- ‘ mon Beggars had the Confidence to offer Violence to their Chaſtity. We ‘ have therefore been conſtrain'd to prepare ſeveral Bills for the Regulati- ‘ on of Trade, our Cloathing-Trade, our Fiſhing-Trade, our Trade for ‘ Stuffs, our Trade for Silks; and for the better Maintenance of Inter- ‘ courſe in Trade, to re-inforce our former Laws for maintaining the ‘ High-Ways, with ſome Additions for Decency and Pleaſure of Tra- ‘ vellers. God in his Providence hath determin'd, That the Poor we ‘ muſt have always with us: Some are made ſo by the immediate Hand ‘ of God; others by their Loyalty, Duty and Service to your Royal Per- ‘ ſon, and your bleſſed Father; others by their own Wickedneſs and Idle- ‘ neſs: We have taken care to relieve the Firſt, to encourage the Se- ‘ cond, and to reform the laſt. Nor hath the Caſe of any Private Per- ‘ ſon been unwelcome to us; thoſe many Private Bills that lye before ‘ your Majeſty do enough confirm this Truth, That where we found ‘ it juſt and honourable, we have deny'd our helping Hand to none that ‘ pray'd it. And now, great Sir, after theſe many Months moſt painful ‘ and faithful Service of your Majeſty and our Countries, we hope we ‘ ſhall have leave to go home, to viſit our Relations, to tell our Neigh- ‘ bours what great Things your Majeſty hath done for us, what great ‘ things, abſit Invidia Verbo, we have done for your Majeſty, and what ‘ great Things God hath done for us all; and to pray Almighty God for ‘ his Mercy to this Nation, in the Continuance of your Majeſty's long ‘ and happy Reign over us.

The King's Speech to both Houſes at the Prorogation.

At the paſſing of the foremention'd Bills, the King made the following Speech, which is here inſerted without the leaſt Abridgement or Alteration: ‘ My Lords, and you Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons, I ‘ think there have been very few Seſſions of Parliament, in which there ‘ have been ſo many Bills, as I have paſs'd this Day: I am confident, ne- ‘ ver ſo many Private Bills, which I hope you will not draw into Ex- ‘ ample. It is true, theſe late ill Times have driven Men into great ‘ Streights, and may have oblig'd them to make Conveyances colourably, ‘ to avoid Inconveniencies, and yet not afterwards to be avoided; and ‘ Men have gotten Eſtates by new and greater Frauds than have been ‘ heretofore practis'd; and therefore in this Conjuncture, extraordinary ‘ Remedies may be neceſſary, which hath induced me to comply with ‘ your Advice, in paſſing theſe Bills; but I pray let this be very rarely ‘ done hereafter. The good old Rules of the Law are the beſt Securi- ‘ ty; and let not Men have ſo much Cauſe to fear, That the Settlements ‘ they make of their Eſtates, ſhall be too eaſily unſettled, when they are ‘ dead, by the Power of Parliaments.

‘ My Lords and Gentlemen, You have ſo much oblig'd me, not only ‘ in the Matter of thoſe Bills which concern my Revenue, but in the ‘ Manner of Paſſing them, with ſo great Affection and Kindneſs to Me, that ‘ I know not how to thank you enough. I do aſſure you, and I pray aſ- ‘ ſure your Friends in the Country, That I will apply all you have given ‘ me, to the utmoſt Improvement of the Peace and Happineſs of the King- ‘ dom; and will, with the beſt Advice and good Husbandry I can, bring ‘ my Expences within a narrower Compaſs. Now I am ſpeaking to you ‘ of my own good Husbandry, I muſt tell you, that will not be enough: ‘ I cannot but obſerve to you, That the whole Nation ſeems to me a little ‘ corrupted in their Exceſs of Living. Sure all Men ſpend much more ‘ in their Clothes, in their Diet, in all their Expences, than they have ‘ us'd to do. I hope it hath only been the Exceſs of Joy, after ſo long ‘ Sufferings, that hath tranſported us to theſe other Exceſſes; but let us ‘ take heed that the Continuance of them doth not indeed corrupt our ‘ Natures. I do believe I have been faulty my Self; I promiſe you, I ‘ will reform, and if you will joyn with me in your ſeveral Capacities, ‘ we ſhall by our Examples do more good, both in City and Country, ‘ than any new Laws wou'd do. I tell you again, I will do my Part, ‘ and I will tell ſome of you, if you do not do Yours. I hope the Laws ‘ I have paſs'd this Day, will produce ſome Reformation with ‘ Reference to the Multitude of Beggars and poor People which ‘ infeſt the Kingdom: Great Severity muſt be us'd to Thoſe who ‘ love Idleneſs and refuſe to Work, and great Care and Charity to Thoſe ‘ who are willing to Work. I do very heartily recommend the Execu- ‘ tion of thoſe good Laws to your utmoſt Diligence; and I am ſure I ‘ need not put you in mind ſo to ſettle the Militia, that all Seditious ‘ Inſurrections may not only be prevented, to which the Minds of too ‘ Many are inclined, but that the People may be without reaſonable Ap- ‘ prehenſion of ſuch Inſecurity. You will eaſily believe, that it is very ‘ neceſſary for the Publick Juſtice of the Kingdom, and even for the Pre- ‘ ſervation of the Reverence due to Parliaments, that I make this a Seſ- ‘ ſion; and it will be worthy of your Wiſdoms when you come together ‘ again, to provide that there be not ſo great a Clamour againſt the Mul- ‘ titude of Protections. I will ſay no more, but renew my hearty Thanks ‘ to you All, and refer the reſt to the Chancellor.

The Subſtance of the Chancellor's Speech.

Accordingly the Lord Chancellor made a long and affecting Speech, of which ſome Account ought to be given. He told them, ‘ That they ‘ had, like the richeſt and nobleſt Soil, yielded the King two full Harveſts ‘ in one Year; and therefore it was but good Husbandry to lye Fallow for

‘ ſome

‘ ſome Time: They had not only ſupply'd the Crown to a good Degree ‘ for Diſcharging many Debts and Preſſures, under which it even groan'd, ‘ and enabled it to ſtruggle with the preſent Streights and Neceſſities, ‘ Debts not contracted, and Neceſſities not run into by Improvidence ‘ and Exceſs; but they had wiſely provided ſuch a conſtant growing Re- ‘ venue, as might with God's Bleſſing preſerve the Crown from thoſe ‘ ſcandalous Wants and Neceſſities, as had lately expos'd it and the King- ‘ dom to thoſe diſmal Miſeries, from which they were but even now ‘ buoy'd up: For whatſoever other Human Cauſes might be aſſign'd, ac- ‘ cording to the ſeveral Fancies of Men, of the late miſerable Diſtractions, ‘ they could not be ſo reaſonably imputed to any one Cauſe, as to the extream ‘ Poverty of the Crown: The Want of Power cou'd never have appeared, ‘ if it had not been for the Want of Money. They had therefore wor- ‘ thily provided for the Vindication and Manifeſtation of the One by the ‘ Bill of the Militia, and for the Supply of the Other by the Act for the ‘ Additional Revenue; and he doubted not but both the preſent and ſuc- ‘ ceeding Ages wou'd bleſs God, and celebrate their Memories for ‘ thoſe two Bills, as the Foundation of their Peace, Quiet and Secu- ‘ rity. Then he proceeded to take Notice ‘ That the Spirit of Libelling ‘ was never more pregnant than at preſent; neither King, Parliament, ‘ Church, nor State cou'd eſcape thoſe Strokes of the Tongue, from ‘ which God alone cou'd preſerve the moſt innocent and excellent Per- ‘ ſons. Men, he ſaid, were no ways diſpos'd to remember the general ‘ excellent Temper of the Time of Queen Elizabeth, the bleſſed Reſig- ‘ nation of the People then to the Crown, the awful Reverence they then ‘ had to the Government, and to the Governors both in Church and ‘ State; but they remember, as if it was but Yeſterday, how few ‘ Subſidies Parliaments then gave to the Queen, how ſmall Supplies the ‘ Crown then had from the People, and wonder that the ſame Meaſures ‘ ſhou'd not give the ſame Reputation, and make the ſame Noiſe in Chriſten- ‘ dom. But they were ſuperior to ſuch Reproaches, and well knew, that as to ‘ his preſent Majeſty, at leaſt Two Parts of Three, that have been given to ‘ him, have been iſſu'd out for Disbanding Armies never rais'd by Him, and ‘ for Payment of Fleets never ſent out by him, and of Debts never contra- ‘ cted by him. They alſo knew the vaſt Diſparity between the former Times ‘ and the Preſent, upon the Account of the mighty Encreaſe of Com- ‘ merce, Naval Powers, and other extraordinary Things, in the ſeveral ‘ Parts of the World; ſo that the Crown was now at the neceſſary Ex- ‘ pence by Sea and Land, of eight hundred Thouſand Pounds a Year, ‘ which formerly did not coſt it Eighty Thouſand Pounds a Year.

After this he proceeded to other Topicks, and intimated the Neceſſity of making the People underſtand ‘ the Profit, Benefit and Eaſe, which ‘ always attended a chearful Obedience, and Submiſſion to Laws and Go- ‘ vernment; and declar'd that a little Pains, Kindneſs and Condeſcenſion ‘ in the Wiſe, towards the Weak, Half the Diligence and Dexterity in ‘ Converſation and Example, which had been us'd to corrupt the People ‘ in their Loyalty and Underſtanding, wou'd quickly reduce them to ‘ their Primitive Temper, namely, to be the beſt Neighbours, and the ‘ beſt Friends, and the beſt Subjects in the World. And he doubted not ‘ but the great Piety and Devotion, the Moderation, Charity and Hoſ- ‘ pitality of the Biſhops, in their ſeveral Dioceſes, wou'd in a ſhort Time ‘ recover the poor miſ-led People: And tho' the Frowardneſs and Pride ‘ of ſome of their Teachers was not enough ſubdued; tho' ſome of the ‘ Clergy ſtill repeated their old Errors, and did ſtill diſcredit all their ‘ other Doctrine, with the Abſence of any viſible Repentance; yet he ‘ hop'd the Laity wou'd ſoon return into the Boſom the Church, and ea- ‘ ſily diſcern the Fraud and Impoſture of their Seducers; and that all

'Diligence wou'd be us'd, heartily to reconcile both Clergy and Laity, 1662.
'by all Means which may prove effectual.' Then ſpeaking of the Sharpneſs of the new Laws, he intimated, That the Execution of them 'ſtill Car. 14
'depended upon the Wiſdom of the moſt diſcerning, generous, and mer- Reſ. 2.
'ciful Prince, who having had more Experience of the Nature and Hu'mour of Mankind, than any Prince living, cou'd beſt diſtinguiſh between
'the Tenderneſs of Conſcience, and the Pride of Conſcience, between
'the real Effects of Conſcience, and the wicked Pretences to Conſci-
'ence; who knew how to guard Himſelf and the Kingdom from the 'Violence of a malicious corrupted Will and Underſtanding, and to ſe-
'cure both from the feeble Nets of deluded Fancies and Imaginations:
'In a Word, a Prince of ſo excellent a Nature, and ſo tender a Conſci-
'ence Himſelf, that he had the higheſt Compaſſion for all Errors of that 'Kind, and wou'd never ſuffer the Weak to undergo the Puniſhment or-
'dain'd for the Wicked.' Then he intimated to them, 'That many ho-
'neſt Perſons, in the late Times, were miſ-led by not diſcerning Conſe-
'quences, who wou'd as ſoon have renounc'd their Part in Heaven, as 'concurr'd in the firſt unwarrantable Action, if they had ſuſpected what 'follow'd. But the moſt dangerous Enemies to the publick Peace, he
'ſaid, were the Republicans, the Common-wealths-Men, who were every 'Day calling in the Aid of the Law, that they might overthrow the 'Law, which they knew to be their irreconcilable Enemy; a People
'reſtleſs in their Counſels, and no leſs punctual and induſtrious in their
'Correſpondencies, abroad as well as at home: Therefore they cou'd
'not be too vigilant and inquiſitive as to thoſe Men.' Then ſpeaking of the Happineſs they had procured, he told them, 'That they wanted
'only one Bleſſing, the Arrival of their Queen, whom God had now
'ſafely brought to the Nation; a Queen of ſuch rare Perfection in Bo'dy and Mind, of ſuch great Endowments of Wiſdom, Virtue, and Pi-
'ety, that they might from her reaſonably promiſe themſelves all the 'Happineſs they were capable of; and there cou'd not be a more tran-
'ſcendent Inſtance of the King's Love and Paſſion for his People, than
'that he had ſtay'd theſe four Days to take his Leave of them; and that 'he might give them this Day's Work, all theſe good Laws, had deny'd
'himſelf ſo long the enjoying the greateſt Comfort he is aſſured of in 'this World.' Then exhorting them again to teſtify their Joy, and tranſ- The End of the Second Seſſion of the Second Parliament.
mit it into their Countries, he by the King's Commands prorogu'd the Parliament till the 18th Day of February.

3. And thus ended the ſecond Meeting of the ſecond Parliament, after it had ſate, with ſome inconſiderable Intermiſſions, ſix Months wanting one Day. And here we may properly take Notice of two or three Acts now paſs'd, more particularly than what we find in the Speaker's Speech; as the Militia Act, and that for Uniformity; but firſt obſerve how far the Prerogative was advanc'd, or at leaſt confirm'd in the preceding, as well as the preſent Parliament. The preceding Parliament, tho' elected with Reſtrictions as excluſive as well cou'd be of the late and preſent King's Friends, was ſo forward, as in the Act of Attainder of the Regicides, to uſe theſe remarkable Words; Be it hereby declared, That by the undoubted and Fundamental Laws of this Kingdom, neither the Peers of this Realm, nor the Commons, nor Both together in Parliament or out of Parliament, nor the People Collectively or Repreſentatively, nor any other Perſons whatſoever, ever had, have, hath, or ought to have any Coercive Power over the Perſons of the Kings of this Realm. Anſwerable to this Declaration the Militia Act, paſs'd in this Parliament, begins with theſe Words; Foraſmuch as within all his Majeſty's Realms and Dominions, the ſole The Militia Act.

Not ſatisfy'd with theſe Words, which ſeem'd to fence againſt all Evaſion and Reſerve, a particular Oath was added to be neceſſarily taken by all Lord-Lieutenants, Deputy-Lieutenants, Officers and Soldiers, in theſe Words; I A. B. do declare and believe, That it is not lawful upon any Pretence whatſoever to take Arms againſt the King; and that I do abhor that traiterous Poſition, That Arms may be taken by his Authority againſt his Perſon, or againſt thoſe that are Commiſſion'd by him in purſuance of ſuch Military Commiſſions. All theſe, put together, were ſo ſtrong and expreſſive, that they ſeem'd at once to give up the whole Conſtitution; and no Wonder if many of the Laity, as well as Clergy, upon the Account of theſe Acts, eſpous'd a Doctrine, which, if rigidly taken, was ſo hard to be reconciled to the great Deliverance afterwards. But ſomething ought to be remember'd by way of Explanation; that when the latter Part of the Oath, the Words Commiſſion'd by him, which ſeem'd moſt dangerous to the Conſtitution, came to be debated, it was mov'd in the Houſe of Commons, and particularly preſs'd by the great Lawyer Sir John Vaughan, that the Word Lawfully might be added, to make all clear. But the Attorney-General, Sir Heneage Finch, anſwer'd, 'That it was not neceſſary, for the very Word Com- 'miſſion imported it, ſince if it was not Lawfully iſſu'd out to Lawful 'Perſons, and for a Lawful Reaſon, it was no Commiſſion;' and the whole Houſe aſſented to this Interpretation. The ſame Word Lawfully was likewiſe preſs'd to be added in the Houſe of Peers by the Earl of Southampton himſelf; but much the ſame Anſwer, given in the Houſe of Commons, was made to him by the Earl of Angleſey. But the former inſiſted to have the Word added, 'Becauſe it wou'd clear all Difficulties 'with many, who not having heard the particular Senſe of both Houſes, 'might fancy, That if any ſort of Commiſſion was granted, it wou'd not 'be lawful to reſiſt it.' He did not prevail: for it was alledg'd as a ſatisfactory Anſwer, That this Explandtion being the Senſe of both Houſes, it wou'd be ſoon ſpread and known over the Nation.

The Act of Uniformity. As to the Act of Uniformity, it was form'd with as much Skill and Exactneſs as it well cou'd be for introducing a ſtrict Miniſterial Conformity, according to the new Book of Common-Prayer, and for excluding thoſe Miſchiefs that at firſt had crept into, and afterwards over-run the eſtabliſhed Church. By this Act every Parſon, Vicar, or other Miniſter was oblig'd to conform before the Feaſt of St. Bartholomew next, upon Pain of loſing all his Eccleſiaſtical Preferments; for the compleating of which, theſe Words were to be us'd, I A. B. do here declare my unfeigned Aſſent and Conſent to all and every thing contain'd and preſcrib'd in and by the Book intituled the Book of Common-Prayer, &c. Every Perſon was likewiſe oblig'd to ſubſcribe a Declaration, containing the very Words of the foremention'd Oath in the Militia Act; in which Declaration he was not only to promiſe to conform to the Liturgy of the Church of England, but likewiſe to renounce the ſolemn League and Covenant, declaring it to be an unlawful Oath, and impos'd upon the Subjects of this Realm againſt the known Laws and Liberties of the People. Several Penalties were annex'd to this Act; particularly, 'No Perſon 'ſhou'd be capable of any Benefice, or preſume to conſecrate and admi-

Nation, none were allow'd by this Act, unleſs approv'd and licens'd by the Archbiſhop or Biſhop of the Dioceſe; and as to reading the Common-Prayer, making the Declarations, &c. they were put under ſtricter Limitations than the legal Miniſters of Pariſhes. Theſe and ſeveral other things were contain'd in this famous Act, commonly call'd The Bartholomew Act, becauſe it took Place on that Day; an Act highly extoll'd and exclaim'd againſt by different Parties, as it ſupported or diſappointed their Expectations: accordingly it has been call'd both the Glory and Diſgrace of the Church, tho' the Laity as well as the Clergy were equally concern'd in the making of it. It preſs'd hard indeed upon the Principles of ſome good, as well as turbulent Miniſters, and caus'd great Numbers of both to quit their Preferments, as will be afterwards remember'd: But, notwithſtanding what has been alledg'd of late in their Favour, we think there is much Truth in theſe Words of a modern Hiſtorian; 'It was undoubtedly the Faction and Sedition of the ſeveral Sects
'and Parties, that work'd up the Wiſdom of the Nation into this expe'dient Awe and Reſtraint upon them.'

Something likewiſe ought to be ſaid of the Act for ſettling an annual Revenue of Two Shillings upon every Fire-Hearth, commonly call'd by the Name of Chimney-Mony. It was a new Revenue deſign'd to be for ever annex'd to the Crown of England; a Burthen that afterwards lay upon the Minds much heavier than the Fortunes of the People, eſpecially upon the Account of the arbitrary way of collecting it; and therefore the Remiſſion of it by King William was thought a wiſe Act of Popularity. This Tax afterwards amounted to about two hundred and fifty ſix thouſand Pounds a Year; which, together with Tunnage and Poundage, Exciſe, and other Duties, in length of Time made the Revenue of this King to be more than double to any of his Predeceſſors ſince the Reformation. Yet the Power and Prerogative of the Crown, notwithſtanding ſome extraordinary Words in the Militia Act and others, was not in ſeveral Caſes ſo great and extenſive as in the laſt three Reigns: For, beſides that the Act for Triennial Parliaments was in Force, the Crown had before the Year 1641 ſeveral legal Powers and Privileges ariſing from the Star-Chamber, the High-Commiſſion Court, the Clerkſhip of the Markets, the Foreſts, &c. which were then entirely given up, and never reſtored again; not to mention the Court of Wards, which was yielded for an annual Revenue of a hundred thouſand Pounds, immediately after the Reſtoration. Chimney-Mony.

IX. 1. Before the Parliament broke up, the Court, as well as the King himſelf, were buſily employ'd in making Preparations for the Royal Marriage, the new Queen being juſt landed at Portſmouth. This Marriage having made a great Noiſe, and occaſion'd innumerable Reflections, the Steps and Progreſs of it ought to be a little traced, tho' with ſome ſmall Repetitions of ſome things formerly remember'd; eſpecially ſince they have been ſo little known, and ſo much miſtaken by the Nation; and this we ſhall do from a Manuſcript of Sir Robert Southwell, an intimate Friend to the great Duke of Ormond, and from ſome other Informations of unqueſtionable Veracity. The Occaſion and Root of this Marriage ſprung from the famous Pyrenean Treaty in 1659, concluded by the two great Miniſters of France and Spain, Cardinal Mazarine, and Don Lewis de Haro; in which the Former gain'd ſo much the Advan- Reſ. 3. The Steps towards the King's MARRIAGE.

tage of the Latter, as to bring it ſo about, That his Enemy ſhou'd leave him in Peace, and he his Enemy in War. This War was with Portugal, which Spain now hop'd to recover, after near twenty Years Revolt, ſince France promis'd not to intermeddle directly or indirectly in the Affairs of that Kingdom, or give the leaſt Aſſiſtance either by Sea or Land. Tho' this Agreement was very unfaithfully obſerv'd by the Cardinal, yet the very Name of it gave great Terror to the Portugueſe; and his Eminence was willing to excite them to look out for other Help at preſent, that he might the more privately relieve them. This had its Effect; for Don Franciſco de Mello, afterwards Marqueſs de Sandy, being their Ambaſſador in England, ſo induſtriouſly apply'd himſelf to the Powers then uppermoſt, as that the Council of State did actually ſign with him a Treaty for the Defence of Portugal, as appears in the Paper-Office at Whitehall. But General Monk coming in this Juncture to London, and ſuperſeding all before him, the ſaid Ambaſſador as diligently apply'd to him for Aſſiſtance; and began with diſcovering a moſt uſeful Secret, 'That 'the Spaniards had reſolv'd, if the King was call'd home, to detain him 'at Bruſſels, till he ſhou'd deliver up Dunkirk and Jamaica: This cauſing his Majeſty's ſudden Removal to Breda, where he was out of the Power of Spain; De Mello proceeded to other Matters with the General, and propos'd a new Alliance, a Marriage between the King and the Infanta of Portugal. He then inſiſted, 'That this Match wou'd be the 'moſt advantagious to England of any in Chriſtendom; ſince, beſides the 'greateſt Portion in Mony that ever Queen had, the Infanta was to bring 'with her Tangier, which wou'd make the Engliſh Maſters of the Trade 'in the Mediterranean, and Bombaim, which wou'd give them the like 'Advantage in the Eaſt Indies; and over and above, wou'd ſerve to humble the proud Spaniard;' which the General, according to the Notions he had imbibed in his younger Days, thought to be the greateſt Advantage of all.

Firſt propos'd to General Monk,

Theſe ſpecious Propoſals were very acceptable to the General, who taking all theſe things in their full Extent, and eſpecially conſidering, That nothing was at preſent deſired but Forces, and that hereby the moſt mutinous of thoſe Regiments, bred up by Cromwell, might be ſent away, and the Peace of the Nation he had undertaken ſecured, he entirely clos'd with what was offer'd. This Affair was negotiated between Mr. Morrice, then in moſt Confidence with the General, and Mr. Ruſſel a Prieſt, then Engliſh Secretary and Interpreter to the ſaid Ambaſſador: And no ſooner did his Majeſty land in England, but the General offer'd him this Marriage Propoſal; which coming from one now reverenc'd as his Reſtorer, it was immediately embrac'd and purſu'd. When it was once well ſet on foot, it was highly encourag'd by ſuch as were Enemies to Spain, and by ſome who really thought the Power of that Monarchy ſtill too exorbitant; but what was further remarkable, Cardinal Mazarine, always fertile in Expedients, was a particular Promoter and Actor in it; which caus'd him to ſend over the Queen-Mother to countenance the Treaty in England, if the Propoſal concerning his Niece ſhou'd be ineffectual, as it ſoon prov'd. In ſum, the Portugal Intereſt was ſo puſh'd forward, that France engag'd to eaſe the Engliſh Tranſport-Charge of the Forces that were deſired; and promis'd two hundred thouſand Crowns, aſſoon as the Treaty ſhou'd be ſign'd and ratify'd, and before thoſe Forces cou'd be ready to embark; and tho' Mazarine dy'd in March $16\frac{60}{61}$, yet was his Undertaking punctually obſerv'd by his Succeſſor Monſieur Colbert, as was before mention'd. Yet after all this Induſtry, this Marriage Treaty in its Progreſs met with ſuch Obſtacles, that it was not not concluded and ſign'd till the 23d Day of June 1661, the Parliament being then ſitting. 1662.

One conſiderable Obſtacle was the Lord Chancellor Hyde, without whoſe Knowledge this Treaty was begun, and without his Approbation it was concluded; therefore he endeavour'd to overthrow it, while it continu'd in any Ballance. It is true, he did for ſome Time come in to the general Meaſures then on foot, till he made ſome Diſcovery of the probable Conſequences of the Marriage. Therefore upon one Sunday he begg'd of his Majeſty to call a Secret or Cabinet Council in the Red-Chamber in White-Hall; to which the King immediately conſented. At this Council, by the Chancellor's Management, none were preſent but the King himſelf, the Chancellor, the Lord Treaſurer Southampton, and the Duke of Ormond. The Chancellor acquainting the King with the Occaſion of his having deſired this private Meeting, ſaid, That he had hitherto, in Obedience to his Majeſty's Orders, chearfully gone on with the Marriage Treaty, without regarding what the Spaniſh Ambaſſador had to object againſt it, which he conſider'd as coming from an Enemy: But that now he had certain Information that this Match, if concluded, wou'd bring ſuch a Calamity upon the Nation, as he was ſure his Majeſty wou'd prevent, if it were poſſible: For he had now undoubted Proofs that the Infanta of Portugal was not capable of having Children. He then produc'd a Liſt of ſix Princeſſes, all Proteſtants, out of which his Majeſty might chuſe a fit and proper Wife. But the King frowning and ſwelling, anſwer'd That this was all a Lie of the Spaniſh Ambaſſador, adding, My Lord, I command you to go on with this Treaty; and ſo the Meeting broke up. This Incapacity of having Children was publickly talk'd of among the Engliſh Merchants at Lisbon before this Princeſs left the Place; and they remonſtrated the ſame to the Earl of Sandwich, when he came to bring her to England: Of this Incapacity Sir Robert Southwell was fully aſſur'd afterwards by the Dutcheſs of Guadiloupa at Madrid, a Lady who had been acquainted with her from her Infancy, and in her Nurſery. But this is not to be imputed either to her Age, or her Country, but to ſome peculiar Infirmities of Body; and it is manifeſt from the Teſtimony of ſome Ladies about her, that ſhe was in a Child-Bearing Condition till after the King's Death, which was twenty two Years after her Marriage.

The Chancellor oppoſes it;

But in vain.

The worthy and virtuous Princeſs Donna Catharina, Infanta of Portugal, was born on the 14th Day of November, 1638, ſo that ſhe was full twenty four Years of Age at this Time: She was Daughter of Juan Duke of Braganza, reſtored to the Crown of Portugal after that Monarchy had been interrupted for about ſixty Years, and only Siſter of Don Alphonſo the ſixth, and of Don Pedro, ſucceſſively Kings of Portugal. The Portion which ſhe brought with her was two Millions of Croiſadoes, about three hundred thouſand Pounds Sterling, with the Inheritance of Tangier in Barbary, and the Iſle of Bombaim in the Eaſt-Indies; in Conſideration of which ſhe had a Jointure ſettled on her of thirty thouſand Pounds a Year. After the Return of the Conde de Mello with the Articles of Treaty and Marriage to Lisbon, and Tangier deliver'd into the Hands of the Engliſh, this Princeſs was marry'd by ſolemn Proxy in the Perſon of his Excellency the Earl of Sandwich, with great Joy and Triumph; and under his Conduct ſhe embark'd for England on the 23d of April, attended by a noble Squadron of the Royal Navy, and was met at the Iſle of Wight by the Duke of York, Lord High Admiral of England, with many triumphant Salvos of the Navy. At Portſmouth ſhe was welcomed by a glorious Show of Nobility, Gentry and Citizens of London, who appear'd with the richeſt Habits and Equipages that cou'd be procured.

cured. Here in a little Time ſhe was received by the King himſelf, and there on the 21ſt of May privately marry'd to him by Dr. Gilbert Sheldon Biſhop of London, as was commonly reported to ſatisfy the People of England; tho' others report that the new Queen refus'd to be marry'd by any but a Prieſt of her own Religion. From Portſmouth the Royal Pair remov'd to Wincheſter, to Farnham, and to Windſor, and ſo to Hampton-Court, where their Majeſties took up a conſiderable Part of the Summer. Here the Queen receiv'd the Addreſſes of all the Nobility, and Submiſſions of the ſeveral Deputies for the Cities of England; more particularly from the Lord-Mayor and Aldermen of London, who, by Sir William Wylde their Recorder, pronounc'd a Spaniſh Oration, and preſented her with a rich Purſe of Gold. On the 23d of Auguſt ſhe was with great Pomp and Splendor brought by Water from Hampton-Court, to finiſh her Voyage to Whitehall. Upon which Occaſion all the Companies in their Barges, nobly ſet out, attended the Lord-Mayor at the Solemnity, and ſeveral Pageants were plac'd upon the River, and Speeches made; all which made a very noble Sight, compleated by the glorious ſetting out of the King's own Barge. The whole Nation upon this Occaſion was fill'd with new Triumphs, Rejoicings and Feaſtings; which bore hard upon many of the old Cavaliers, who were moſt ready, and leaſt able to join in the Extravagancy of the Times.

The Marriage compleated.

The Queen Mother ſettles in England.

Upon the compleating of this Marriage, the Queen Mother, with the Earl of St. Albans and others, came over a ſecond Time into England, and had a ſplendid Court ſettled for her in Somerſet-Houſe, which ſhe propos'd to be the Abode of her remaining Widowhood. Another Effect of this Marriage was the Sale of Dunkirk, which happen'd not long after the Conſummation of it; of which the Foundation was laid by the very Treaty it ſelf: For the Portugueze had ſo far prevail'd, that by the nineteenth Article of the ſaid Treaty, it was expreſsly ſtipulated, 'That 'Dunkirk ſhou'd never be parted withal to the Spaniard;' which gave France a fair Opportunity to cloſe with the King, and to make a Bargain with him at a Time when he wanted ready Mony for the extraordinary Expences of this Year, and particularly the Payment of his Siſter's Portion. Many Reaſons were urg'd for the parting with this important Place; and the firſt Motive to the King, as I am aſſur'd by a knowing Man, was the great Expence in the keeping of it, which Rutherford the Governor had encreas'd to an exorbitant Degree ſince the Diſmiſſion of Sir Edward Harley. And the Earl of Sandwich particularly alledg'd to his Majeſty, That the Coaſt was generally ſo tempeſtuous, and the Grounds ſo rowling upon every Storm, that there wou'd never remain a certain Steerage to that Port. Theſe and other Reaſons being alledg'd in Council, tho' oppos'd by Chancellor Clarendon, and Treaſurer Southampton, the King was content to deliver up the Town and Port of Dunkirk, with all the Ordnance and Ammunition, for the Sum of five hundred thouſand Pounds Sterling; one half to be paid down, and the other in a ſhort Time after. Several Books were written in Vindication of this Sale, ſhewing how uſeleſs the Place was to England, unleſs Millions of Mony were expended upon it; and at this Time we do not find many Complaints againſt either this, or the Portugal Match: But when the ill Effects of both began afterwards to appear, as the increaſing Power of France, and the Queen's want of Iſſue, great Outcries were made, and Chancellor Hyde was unreaſonably charg'd with the Scandal of both, when he was really free from the Guilt, or rather Misfortune of either.

The Sale of Dunkirk.

2. While the great Match was preparing, and Mens Minds taken up in the Joy and Triumph of the Times, ſeveral high Criminals were taken ken and brought to their Execution; many being animated by the Zeal of the Parliament, fell again upon enquiring after the Regicides and Traytors excepted from the Act of Indemnity and Oblivion. Several of them had fled beyond the Seas, among whom were Miles Corbet, Colonel Okey, and Colonel Berkſtead; who, having wander'd through many Parts of Low and High Germany, and for a while ſettled at Hanow under borrow'd Names, return'd in the Spring to Delf in Holland, having appointed their Wives to meet them there, to underſtand the Condition of Affairs in England. Their Letters being intercepted by the Vigilance of Sir George Downing, the King's Reſident at the Hague, one formerly of their own Party, they were all three ſuddenly ſeiz'd, and by the States Conſent put on Board the Blackmore Frigate, then lying at Helvor-Sluce, and ſo brought over and committed to the Tower at London. In this Affair, we are told that the States were very much ſurpriz'd, and wou'd have willingly revok'd their Orders when it was too late; ſo that they do not deſerve the high Exclamations againſt them, made by Ludlow and others, as if they, by delivering theſe Perſons, had broken a Fundamental Maxim of all Free Eſtates. 1662. Car. 14 Reſ. 3.

Corbet, Okey, and Berkſtead ſeiz'd in Holland.

After they had been ſome Time in the Tower, theſe three were brought to the King's-Bench Bar, and there demanded what they cou'd ſay for themſelves, why they ſhou'd not die according to Law, the Act of Attainder being read to them: To which they alledg'd, they were not the ſame Perſons mention'd in that Act; whereupon Witneſſes being ready, they were call'd, and a Jury impannell'd, who gave Verdict that they were the ſame Perſons; upon which the Lord Chief Juſtice Foſter proceeded to Sentence, which was the ſame with the former Accomplices and Sufferers for that Fact. They were ſoon after executed at Tyburn, where they made better Ends than moſt of the reſt of the Regicides, and particularly acknowledg'd their reſolv'd Acquieſcence under the King's Government, as of God, and exhorted others to do the ſame; eſpecially Colonel Okey, a Perſon that for his Valour, and other good Qualities, was pity'd by all Men, for having been ſo blindly engag'd in his own Deſtruction. They all profeſs'd they had no Malice to his late Majeſty, and that they had miſtaken the Parliament's Authority for good and ſufficient in that unhappy Act. Being all three hang'd, bowell'd and quarter'd, his Majeſty was graciouſly pleas'd, in Regard to Colonel Okey's Chriſtian and dutiful Carriage, to return his Quarters to his Friends to be interr'd; which was done in the Chappel of the Tower, according to the Liturgy of the Church of England, to prevent the tumultuous Concourſe of the Fanaticks, who met in ſuch Numbers to attend the Corps, that the City Sheriffs were forc'd to diſperſe them. The Quarters of Berkſtead, and Corbet were ſet upon the City Gates; the Head of the former was plac'd upon a Pole on Traitor's-Gate in the Tower, and that of the other on London-Bridge. We have little to ſay of theſe three unhappy Criminals; only Corbet was a Gentleman of an ancient Family in the County of Norfolk, and brought up in the Society of Lincoln's-Inn, and being Member of Parliament, he was a great Actor in purging the Houſe of Commons, in Favour of the Independent Party, being one of the Congregational Way. Berkſtead and Okey were both Citizens of London, the firſt a Working Silver-Smith, and the latter a poor Chandler; but by their Induſtry, and the Commotions of the Times, rais'd to be Colonels in the Army, where, with the reſt of their Party, they effectually compleated the Miſeries of the Nation.

They are executed.

Some little Account of them.

Their Execution was not long after ſucceeded by that of a Superior Criminal, the famous Sir Henry Vane, whoſe Blood ſeems to have been demanded by the peculiar Vengeance of Heaven. This prodigious Man had been moſt deeply ingag'd in the darkeſt Scenes of the late Calamities, lamities, which he carry'd on with infinite Subtlety and Artifice, to the Deception of incredible Numbers in the Nations; and tho' he cunningly kept himſelf from the impious Court that condemn'd the King, it was ſufficiently known that none contributed more to the bringing Him thither; and after that, none more zealouſly promoted the Eſtabliſhment of the new Common-Wealth; and his Actions daily diſcover'd ſo much of Republican Rancour, that it was impoſſible for him to live in Quiet under any Reſemblance of Monarchy. So after the Reſtoration, having been found tampering with ſome Malecontents of the Army, and Others, in Order to freſh Diſturbances, the Government thought fit to confine him; and tho' He, with Lambert, was particularly excepted in the Act of Indemnity, yet he found ſo much Favour afterwards from the Houſe of Commons in the ſame Parliament, that they petition'd the King, in which they were joyn'd by the Houſe of Peers, That he might yet be exempt from ſuffering the Pains of Death; to which, as his Friends alledge, his Majeſty conſented. This was look'd upon as ſufficient Security; yet either upon the Account of his own Behaviour, or that of his Party, or ſome private Reſentment, the preſent Houſe of Commons thought fit to addreſs the King to bring Him, together with Colonel John Lambert, to their Tryals.

Accordingly, on the 4th of June, they were both arraign'd at the King's-Bench Bar, before Sir Robert Foſter Lord Chief-Juſtice, and other Judges, and Indicted; Sir Henry, for imagining and compaſſing the Death of the King, and for taking upon him, and uſurping the Government; and Colonel Lambert, for levying War againſt the King in ſeveral Parts of this Kingdom. The Carriage and Behaviour of the Former was very extraordinary: for being charg'd by the King's Council with a continu'd Series of Treaſons from the King's Murder to the Reſtoration, without inſiſting upon the Rebellion with which they might have begun, he abſolutely deny'd they had any Power to try him, and declar'd, That neither the King's Death, nor the Members themſelves cou'd diſſolve the Long Parliament, whereof he being One, no inferior Court cou'd call him in queſtion. Then as to his Behaviour in the other Governments in Being after the King's Death, he urg'd this Pretence of Law, 'That his preſent 'Majeſty being at that Time but King de Jure, and not de Facto, he 'cou'd not be indicted for Treaſon before his Reſtoration.' He alſo alledg'd the Petitions of the Lords and Commons, and the King's Concurrence with them for the ſaving his Life, which he look'd upon as equivalent to an Act of Parliament. To which he was anſwer'd, That unleſs it had been paſs'd into an Act, it cou'd not be pleaded; and Replies were given to all his Queries and Difficulties, which he ſo often repeated, and with ſo many Pauſes, that he very much exercis'd the Patience of the Court. His whole Behaviour was ſo aſſuming and inſolent, that the Court and King's Council told him, That his own Defence was a freſh Charge againſt him, and the higheſt Evidence of his inward Guilt, had there not been ſuch a Cloud of Witneſſes to prove the Particulars. He ſtill found Means to ſpin out the Time with new Digreſſions and Queries, till with great Difficulty he was ſilenc'd, after he had often complain'd of his broken Memory, and long Impriſonment. At laſt the Jury, after a very ſhort Stay, brought him in guilty of High-Treaſon. Colonel Lambert's Behaviour was quite contrary, full of Submiſſion and Diſcretion; ſo that the King's Council confeſs'd That his Carriage had been much different from the Other, not troubling the Court with Seditious Queries, but modeſtly urging his own Defence; but they added, That good Manners muſt not commute for Treaſon, and therefore demanded Judgment. He was likewiſe condemn'd, but when he was to receive Sentence with Sir Henry Vane, he was by the King's Favour repriev'd at the Bar, upon the Report that the Judges

Judges had given of his ſubmiſſive and handſome Deportment at his Tryal: upon which he deſired the Judges to return to his Majeſty his moſt humble Thanks for his ſo unexpected Mercy; which, the Judges ſaid, might have been, and was once thought to be extended to Sir Henry, if his Frowardneſs and Contemptuous Behaviour had not precluded the Way to it. The Colonel was confin'd during Life in the Iſle of Guernſey, where he continu'd a patient and diſcreet Priſoner for above Thirty Years. 1662. Car. 14 Reſ. 3.

The reſt of Sir Henry Vane's Behaviour was ſo fill'd with Pride and Enthuſiaſm, that nothing can be more ſurprizing and ſhocking to Human Nature. According to Ludlow He acquired Eternal Reputation by nobly Pleading for the dying Liberties of his Country. His Friends Account of his Tryal, and Deportment afterwards, tends directly to this main End, That in Right of Jeſus Chriſt, and his People, it was juſtifiable to ſtand up againſt any Government, and to Controll, and Subvert at Pleaſure. Accordingly, when he receiv'd Sentence, at his Departure he us'd the Words of the bloody Venner, Whom Man judges, God will not Condemn! In like Manner, becauſe he was not ſuffer'd to defend the Treaſons he had acted for twenty Years together, he ſaid It was a Violation of the Right of every Free-Born Engliſh-Man. The King readily favour'd his Friends with changing his Sentence, from Hanging and Quartering to that of Beheading; and ſeem'd ſtill willing to have gone further; but when ſome perſwaded Him to ſubmit to the King, and endeavour to obtain his Life, he ſaid, If the King did not think himſelf more concern'd for his Honour, and his Word, than he did for his Life, they might take it: Nay, he declar'd, That he valu'd his Life leſs in a good Cauſe, than the King cou'd do his Promiſe; with ſuch like Rants, as if he deſign'd to precipitate his own Ruin. Then for his Religious Deportment, he declar'd He had ſuch Signs of ſpecial Salvation, as to aſſure himſelf a Place no lower than the Right-Hand of Jeſus Chriſt. He further ſaid, This was the Day of his Spiritual Birth, and even whilſt here in Body, he was made Partaker of Eternal Life in the Firſt Fruits of it. Being brought to the Scaffold on the 14th of June, he there run out into ſuch Lectures of Treaſon and Enthuſiaſm, that the Sheriff and the reſt, after two or three Warnings, were forc'd to drown them with the Noiſe of Drums and Trumpets, and were going to take his Papers from him; but he with great Rage and Indignation tore them in Pieces, and ſubmitted to the Block in a very diſcompos'd Manner. Yet his Friends tell us That his laſt Words at the Block, which concluded his Prayer, were Theſe: Father, glorify thy Servant in the Sight of Men, that he may glorify Thee in the Diſcharge of his Duty to Thee, and to his Country! He dy'd in the very ſame Place on Tower-Hill with the famous Earl of Strafford, of whoſe Death he was the prime Inſtrument, and for whoſe principally he was thought now to have Suffer'd. His Character and Actions have been fully accounted for in the laſt Volume of this Hiſtory; therefore we ſhall only obſerve That ſo much Diſſimulation and Enthuſiaſm, ſuch vaſt Parts and ſuch ſtrong Deluſions, ſo much good Senſe and ſo much Madneſs can hardly be believ'd to meet in any one Man in the World. And it is further obſerv'd, That as He was the firſt Man that open'd the Fountain of Blood that over-run the Engliſh Nation, ſo he was the laſt that clos'd it up in his own Execution; for we find none that ſuffer'd in England after him, upon the Account of the Grand Rebellion.

3. For about three Months after the breaking up of the Parliament, the Diſſenting Miniſters, eſpecially the Presbyterians, were under great Conſultations and Difficulties with Relation to the formidable Act of Uni-

1662. Car. 14 Ref. 3.

Difficulties among the Diſſenting Miniſters.

Uniformity. Some indeed were poſitive and reſolute againſt any Compliance with it, but great Numbers were very doubtful and uncertain, and appear'd to have had hard Struggles among the various Attractions of Conſcience and Honour, Intereſt and Humour. The Act was ſtrictly penn'd, and preſs'd hard upon late Principles and Practices; and the Severity of it was, no doubt, promoted by ſome who were concern'd in it, to keep out ſeveral particular Teachers, who they thought did not deſerve to enter into the Church. A continual Intercourſe of Letters and Meſſages paſs'd between thoſe in the City and the reſt in Countries, how to proceed in this nice Affair: Sometimes the Chief of them were for Compliance, as I have been aſſur'd by the beſt Hands; and then, upon further Conſideration, they chang'd their Minds. They were under conſiderable Temptations on both Sides: On one Side their Livings and Preferments were no ſmall Inducement towards their Compliance: On the other Side, beſides their Conſciences, they were much incourag'd by the Greatneſs of their Numbers, and were made to believe, That if they unanimouſly ſtood out, the Church muſt come to them, ſince the People wou'd never bear ſo ſhocking a Change, nor endure ſo great a Silence of the Word, as muſt happen if the Act took Place. Beſides they had great Expectations from ſeveral Friends at Court, and particularly the Popiſh Party, who gave them great Incouragement, not only by a Promiſe of Penſions to ſome, but alſo by a Toleration, and a Suſpenſion of the Act it ſelf, which not long after was partly made good. No doubt but the Non-Compliance of ſeveral proceeded purely from a Tender Conſcience; and in that Caſe ought not only to be pityed, but rather applauded than condemn'd.

Two thouſand ſilenc'd.

However it was, it appear'd upon the 24th Day of Auguſt, which they call'd The Fatal Bartholomew, that tho' the Grounds for Non-Complyance were not the ſame to every individual Perſon, yet about two thouſand of them quitted their Preferments, or refus'd new Offers, upon ſcrupling ſome Parts of the Statute. We have a tragical Account from ſome Writers of the great Miſchiefs that hapned to the Church, and to Chriſtianity it ſelf, by the Loſs of ſo many eminent Preachers and Divines, and it is repreſented as a Caſe not to be parallel'd. On the other Side we are told, That there was more Senſe and ſound Doctrine preach'd throughout the Kingdom in one Twelve-Month after their Fatal Bartholomew, than had been in nigh twenty Years before. We believe neither of them to be exactly true, but both over-ſtrain'd in the Expreſſion at leaſt. But if we come to examine the Catalogue of the two thouſand Miniſters, we may find many conſiderable Abatements in ſeveral Reſpects, and ſuch as may extreamly leſſen the Horror expreſs'd by their greateſt Friends. If we ſtrictly enquire into the Titles and Preferments of ſome, the Principles and Opinions of others, with the real Deſerts and Practices of others of theſe two thouſand, we ſhall find the Loſs ſuſtain'd, or at leaſt the Hardſhips ariſing from this Act, very much to diminiſh, and to be much more inconſiderable than of late repreſented. If conſider'd all together, they were a confus'd Maſs and Body of ſeveral Sects, and Men of different Principles, many of whom mortally hated each other; but the Presbyterians bearing ſo great a Share in the Catalogue, the reſt ſeem'd to have been taken in to fill up the Number. But after all, if it be remember'd how many of them had been unjuſt Intruders, how many had been Trumpets and Incendiaries in the late Miſeries of the Nation, and how many had been unmerciful Perſecutors of the legal Clergy of England, and likewiſe how few were willing to diſown their ſeditious Practices, it is no Wonder that they met with no more Favour from the Parliament and Convocation, tho' they did ſhortly after after from the Court. It ought alſo to be acknowledg'd, that among Theſe there were ſeveral Men of real and conſiderable Worth, both as to Piety and Learning, who felt the Severity of this Act of Parliament, and who might, if conforming, been Ornaments to the Church of England. 1662. Car. 14 Reſ. 3.

Of the Two Thouſand Catalogue of thoſe Miniſters ejected or ſilenc'd, we find about Sixſcore about London and Middleſex, and above Fourſcore in the two Univerſities; the reſt being interſpers'd through the Kingdom. We ſhall mention about Forty of the moſt conſiderable and moſt noted amongſt them; either for Ability or Activity; whether they were Presbyterian, Independent, Anabaptiſt, or bare Non-Conformiſts: In and about London were Dr. Thomas Jacomb, Dr. Ezekiel Hopkins, Dr. William Bates, Dr. William Spurſtow, Dr. Thomas Manton, Dr. Lazarus Seaman, Mr. Stephen Charnock, Mr. Edmund Calamy, Mr. Thomas Gouge, Mr. Matthew Pool, Mr. Joſeph Caryl, Mr. Thomas Caſe, Mr. William Jenkin, Mr. Zachary Crofton, Mr. Philip Nye, and Mr. Matthew Mead. In the Univerſity of Oxford were Dr. John Owen, Dr. John Conant, Dr. Thomas Goodwin, and Mr. Theophilus Gale. In the other of Cambridge were Dr. Anthony Tuckney, and Mr. John Ray. In the ſeveral Parts of the Country we may mention Dr. Francis Cheynell, Dr. Cornelius Burgeſs, Mr. Benjamin Woodbridge, Mr. Richard Baxter, Mr. John How, Mr. Samuel Cradock, Mr. Ralph Ward, Mr. David Clarkſon, Mr. Matthew Newcomen, Mr. Jonathan Jephcot, Mr. John Harmar, Mr. Joſeph Allen, Mr. Richard Heath, Mr. John Tombes, Mr. Joſeph Truman, Mr. John Hieron, Mr. George Hughs, Mr. John Rogers, Mr. John Shaw, Mr. Edward Bowles, Mr. Edward Reyner, and Mr. John Corbet. Of theſe, ſome few afterwards conformed, as Dr. Hopkins and Dr. Conant. The Chief of them.

The Reaſons of the Nonconformity of ſuch great Numbers have been variouſly judg'd and reported; but as they and their Friends have given them, they are reduceable to theſe Five. 1. By the Act of Uniformity they were oblig'd to be re-ordain'd, if not Epiſcopally ordain'd before; which was the Caſe of only ſome of them. 2. They muſt declare their Aſſent and Conſent to every thing contain'd in the Book of Common-Prayer, &c. 3. They muſt take the Oath of Canonical Obedience. 4. They muſt abjure the ſolemn League and Covenant; and, 5. They muſt abjure the taking Arms upon any Pretence whatſoever againſt the King, &c. Tho' theſe Reaſons have been enlarg'd, and inſiſted on with the utmoſt Advantage every Particular wou'd admit of; yet it is juſtly believ'd, That that Temporary Part of the Act which was for the abjuring the ſolemn League and Covenant, rais'd greater Difficulties among many, than the conforming to the Ceremonies of the Church. Many People had ſtill an unaccountable Fondneſs and Veneration for it, therefore the Difficulty was inſuperable to ſeveral who thought themſelves under a perpetual Obligation to that lawleſs Engine of Miſery, which had been invented to eſtabliſh Presbytery, yet fram'd and finiſh'd by thoſe who hated both the Name and Thing. Their Reaſons for Non-Conformity.

And here in this Place we may properly take Notice of the Caſe of the Church of England, and that of the Diſſenters, both with Relation to the preſent, and ſome other Times of this Reign; which ſhall be in the Words of a knowing Writer, who never was thought partial to the Former, or unfavourable to the Latter. Dr. Burnet, before he was Biſhop, in the Year 1688, writing againſt the Author of Parliamentum Pacificum, proceeds thus: ‘ The King did indeed in his Declaration ‘ from Breda promiſe Liberty of Conſcience, on which he inſiſted in a ‘ large and wiſe Declaration, ſet out after he was ſettled on the Throne; ‘ but after he had got a Parliament, who for many Years granted him ‘ every The Caſe of the Church of England with that of the Diſſenters.

'every thing that he desired, a severe Act of Uniformity was pass'd; and 'the King's Promise was carry'd off by this, That the King cou'd not re- 'fuse to comply with so loyal a Parliament. It is well known, that those 'who were then secretly Papists, and who disguised their Religion for 'many Years after this, as the King himself did to the last, animated the 'chief Men of our Church to carry the Points of Uniformity as high as 'was possible, --- that there might be many Nonconformists, and great 'Occasion given for a Toleration, under which Popery might insensibly 'creep in: For if the Expedients that the King himself propos'd in his 'Declaration had been stood to, it is well known, That of the two 'thousand Conscientious Ministers, as our Author calls them by an Affe-'ctation too gross to pass on them that were turn'd out, above seventeen 'hundred had staid in. Their Practices had but too good Success on 'those who were then at the Head of the Church; whose Spirits were 'too much soured by their ill Usage during the War, and whose Prin-'ciples led them to so good an Opinion of all that the Court did, that 'for a great while they wou'd suspect nothing. But at the same Time 'that the Church Party, that carry'd all before them in that Parliament, 'were animated to press things so hard, the Dissenters were secretly en-'courag'd to stand out, and were told, That the King's Temper and Prin-'ciple, and the Consideration of Trade, wou'd certainly procure them a 'Toleration: And ever since, that Party that had thus set us together 'by the Ears, has shifted Sides dexterously enough; but still they have 'carry'd on the main Design, which was to keep up the Quarrel in the 'Intervals of Parliament. Liberty of Conscience was in vogue; but 'when a Session of Parliament came, and the King wanted Mony, then 'a new severe Law against the Dissenters was offer'd to the angry Men 'of the Church Party, as the Price of it; and this seldom fail'd to have 'its Effect: So that they were like the Jewels of the Crown, pawn'd 'when the King needed Mony, but redeem'd at the next Prorogation.'

In another Book written by the same Author a little after, with the same healing Design, we may justly take Notice of what follows: 'I am 'sorry that I must confess, That all the Parties among us have shew'd, 'that as their Turn came to be uppermost, they have forgot the same 'Principles of Moderation and Liberty which they all claim'd when they 'were oppress'd. If it shou'd shew too much ill Nature to examine 'what the Presbytery did in Scotland when the Covenant was in Domi-'nion, or what the Independents have done in New-England; why may 'not I claim the same Priviledge with relation to the Church of England, 'if Severities have been committed by her while she bore Rule? Yet 'it were as easy, as it wou'd be invidious, to shew, That both Presbyte-'rians and Independents have carry'd the Principle of Rigour in the Point 'of Conscience much higher, and have acted more implacably upon it, 'than ever the Church of England has done, even in its angriest Fits.' Then he proceeded to declare, in Opposition to that of Rome, 'That 'the Church of England was the least Persecuting in her Principles;' and particularly manifested her wonderful Moderation after the blackest Persecutions in Queen Mary's Reign; 'which, he says, is an Instance of 'the Clemency of our Church, that perhaps cannot be match'd in Hi-'story.' Then he thus states the Case in the present Reign of King Charles: 'It is to be consider'd, That upon the King's Restoration, the 'Remembrance of the former War, the ill Usage that our Clergy had 'met with in their Sequestrations, the angry Resentments of the Cavalier 'Party, who were ruin'd by the War; the Interest of the Court to have 'all those Principles condemn'd that had occasion'd it; the Heat that all 'Parties that have been ill us'd, are apt to fall into upon a Revolution;

'portunity offer'd in the Year 1660, to have heal'd all our Diviſions, and Reſ. 3.
'to have triumph'd over all the Diſſenters; not by ruining them, but by 'overcoming them with the Spirit of Love and Gentleneſs. In ſhort,
'ſevere Laws were made at ſeveral Times,— But this Spirit of Severity
'was heighten'd by the Practices of the Papiſts, who engag'd the King
'in December 1662, to give a Declaration for Liberty of Conſcience.
'Thoſe who knew the Secret of his Religion, as they ſaw that it aim'd
'at the Introduction of Popery, ſo they thought there was no Way ſo
'effectual for the keeping out of Popery, as the maintaining the Uniformity, and the ſuppreſſing of all Deſigns for a Toleration.— And thus
'all the Slacknings of the Rigour of the Laws, during the firſt Dutch
'War, that were ſet on upon the Pretence of Quieting the Nation, and 'Encouraging of Trade, were reſiſted by the Inſtruments of an honeſt
'Miniſter of State, the Lord Clarendon, who knew as well then, as we 'do now, what lay ſtill at Bottom, when Liberty of Conſcience was pre'tended.' In this Manner he goes on with the reſt of the Deſign, and towards the latter End owns, 'That many Church-men, who underſtood
'not the Principles of Human Society, and the Rules of our Govern'ment, ſo well as other Points of Divinity, writ ſeveral Treatiſes con'cerning the Meaſures of Submiſſion, that were then as much cenſured,
'as their Performances ſince againſt Popery have been deſervedly admir'ed.' Then ſpeaking of their Proſecution of the Diſſenters, he ſays,
'Self-Preſervation is very natural: And it is plain, that many of them
'took that to be the Caſe; ſo that truly ſpeaking, it was not ſo much
'at firſt a Spirit of Perſecution, as a Deſire of diſabling thoſe, who they
'believ'd intended to ruin them, from effecting their Deſigns, that ſet
'them on thoſe unhappy things that follow'd.— I will not deny but ma'ny of the Diſſenters were put to great Hardſhips in many Parts of Eng- 'land: But this I will poſitively ſay, having obſerv'd it all narrowly, That 'he muſt have the Brow of a Jeſuit, that can caſt this wholly on the 'Church of England, and free the Court of it.' He concludes thus:
'Upon the whole Matter, all that can be made out of this is, That the
'Paſſions and Infirmities of ſome of the Church of England being un-
'happily ſtirr'd up by the Diſſenters, they were fatally conducted by the 'Popiſh Party to be Inſtruments of doing a great deal of Miſchief.

The Caſe of the Revenues of the Church.

4. But to return to the Hiſtory of the preſent Year; We are to remember, That no ſooner was the Church of England eſtabliſh'd by the noted Act of Uniformity, but the next Conſideration was, the providing a better Maintenance for the conformable Clergy. The Appropriations of Rectories made by the Popes to Religious Houſes; the Secular Views of ſome great Lay Perſons at the Reformation, continuing the Alienation of the great Tithes, and reſerving them to Themſelves, and the further Depredations afterwards made upon the Patrimony of the Church, had altogether reduc'd many of the Parochial Clergy to a lamentable Condition: In many Towns the whole Profits were appropriated, and only a ſlender Stipend allow'd to the Perſon officiating; and in many others a Vicarage was ſettled, but ſo meanly endow'd, that the Vicar, tho' without the Charge of a Family, cou'd not tolerably ſubſiſt upon it. This Defect, which had been the Burden and Scandal of the Nation, was often conſider'd after the King's Return; and all Men of Senſe and Conſcience ſaw that the Church of England cou'd not be eſtabliſh'd with Honour and Safety, without a more competent Maintenance for the Parochial Clergy. And in regard many of the Impropriate Rectories were annex'd to Sees, or Cathedral and Collegiate Bodies, or to other Eccleſiaſtical Dignities, it was thought proper, that the good Example ſhou'd begin amongſt the Clergy themſelves; who were then more eſpecially enabled to augment the Cures, by reaſon of the conſiderable Fines lately receiv'd by them. Hence a Bill was depending in Parliament, for Rules and Orders to be obſerv'd in ſuch Augmentation of poor Vicarages and other inſufficient Cures: But, for particular Ends, it was thought more adviſable to refer the Matter to the King's Inſtructions. Purſuant to this Suggeſtion, his Majeſty directed his Royal Letters to the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Deans and Chapters, requiring them, 'That forthwith Proviſion be made 'for Augmentation of all ſuch Vicarages and Cures where the Tithes 'and Profits are appropriated to them and their Succeſſors in ſuch Man-'ner, that they who immediately attend upon the Performance of Mini-'ſterial Offices, in every Pariſh, may have a competent Portion out of 'every Rectory Impropriate, &c.' Theſe Letters met with a chearful Compliance, and very conſiderable Augmentations were made in moſt of the Pariſhes appropriated to Eccleſiaſtical Corporations: But the Lay Impropriators too cloſely adhered to the Point of Intereſt, and refus'd to be govern'd by the King's Directions. Indeed, many of the Houſe of Commons ſeem'd well diſpos'd to a Remedy for this Evil, and ſeveral good Reſolves were made to that Purpoſe: But theſe pious Advances came to no Effect. The Miſcarriage is attributed either to the Members being diverted and call'd off by the King's preſſing Neceſſities, the Jealouſie and Avarice of ſome Lay Patrons and Impropriators, or the Profaneneſs and Irreligion of many of the leading Courtiers, who began to diſregard all that was good and ſerious.

A Deſign for Augmentation.

The Progreſs of the Fleet.

Before the Concluſion of the Year, we are to take Notice of ſome few other Particulars; and among the other Occurrences of it, it is to be remember'd, that the Vice-Admiral Sir John Lawſon, leaving the Earl of Sandwich this Summer to convoy the Queen from Lisbon, ſail'd with a ſtrong Squadron into the Streights, and there ſtruck ſuch a Terror into all the Neſts of Pirates, Tunis, Tripoli and Algiers, where Admiral Blake's Actions were freſh in Remembrance, that he made them all yield to the Offer of a Treaty, and to the Acceptance of former Articles. Upon the Concluſion of this Peace, the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Deans and Chapters, to their eternal Commendation, contributed a noble Sum of Mony, and ſent their Collection by two of their own Number, the Arch deacon of Bath, and a Prebendary, to Algiers, with which they redeemed above a hundred and fifty Chriſtian Slaves, Engliſh, Scotch and Iriſh, from the ſad Miſeries of a Turkiſh Captivity. The King of England had the greater Advantage of keeping the African Parts in Awe by the new Poſſeſſion of Tangier; to which the Lord Rutherford, late Governor of Dunkirk, newly made Earl of Tiviot, was ſent to be Governor in the Room of the Earl of Peterborough; and his Majeſty made it now a free Port, and granted it all the Priviledges of a Merchant City, being ſeated very commodiouſly for Strength and Safety to guard any Naval Power, and to command thoſe Seas. But the vaſt Expence in Fortifying and Defending, and the Neceſſity at laſt of demoliſhing that Place, in Time made it more a Burden than a Portion to the Crown of England.

Tangier a free Port.

All this Year the Commiſſioners for regulating Corporations, as they were empower'd by Act of Parliament, proceeded to the Diſmiſſion of ſuch from all Offices and Places in Council, and otherwhere, who refus'd to renounce the Solemn League and Covenant, and who were juſtly ſuſpected for Diſaffection to the preſent Government. For the Peace of the Nation, beſides the diſplacing of Officers, they order'd that the Walls of the reſpective Cities and Towns of Gloceſter and Coventry, Northam- thampton, Taunton and Leiceſter, together with other Places which had maintain'd the War againſt the late King, ſhou'd be entirely demoliſh'd, as Examples and Security to ſucceeding Times; and the Country Troops and reſpective Train'd-Bands guarded thoſe Places when they were demoliſh'd. Whether diſguſted at theſe, or other Proceedings, a new Plot was form'd againſt the Government, and diſcover'd juſt about the End of the Year, carry'd on chiefly by Fifth-Monarchy Men and Anabaptiſts. The Diſcovery began from one Captain Baker a New-England Man, an Acquaintance of Hugh Peters, and one of Cromwell's Band of Penſioners, who firſt in the Street inform'd one Hill, the Son of an Independent Preacher, of the whole Deſign, and brought him acquainted at ſeveral Meetings of divers of the Conſpiracy; of which he having ſufficient Information, reveal'd it, with the Names of the Conſpirators, to Sir Richard Brown, late Lord Mayor of London. For this, on the 11th of December, ſix of them were arraign'd for High-Treaſon at the Old-Baily, namely George Philips, Serjeant to a Company of Foot, Thomas Tongue, a Diſtiller of Strong-Waters, Francis Stubbs, a Cheeſemonger, James Hind Gunner, John Sellars Compaſs-Maker, and Nathaniel Gibs Felt-Maker. The following Particulars were prov'd againſt them, 'That they 'had a Deſign to ſeize and deſtroy his Majeſty's Perſon, the Duke of 'York, the Duke of Albemarle, and Major-General Brown, to ſeize the 'Tower of London, and Windſor-Caſtle; and that they had already de-'liver'd out ſix hundred Arms: That this Deſign was firſt manag'd by a 'Council of Forty, afterwards by a Council of Six, viz. Thomas, Nye, Elton, Rawdon, Spurway and Ward: That this Council was to unite 'the Congregated Intereſts: That an Agitator was ſent into every Coun-'ty, to draw in the late disbanded Soldiers: That old Army Colonels were to 'head the ſeveral Regiments, and Ludlow in chief: That ſeveral Forces were 'already liſted in London, and the Country, and that All-Hallow's Eve 'was the Time appointed for their General Riſing.' They were convicted by Evidence of their Fellow-Conſpirators, Rigge, Bradley, and others; but only Hind pleaded Guilty, and crav'd the King's Mercy. They alledg'd, That they never acted ſuch traiterous Intentions; but the Deſign was prov'd to have been communicated and laid open to them: After their full Defence they were all found Guilty, and on the 22d of December, Philips, Tongue, Gibs and Stubs were executed according to Sentence; but the King was graciouſly pleas'd to give their Quarters to be bury'd, and diſpos'd of their Heads on Tower-Hill. At the Place of Execution Tongue confeſs'd That he had ſeveral Times join'd with the Conſpirators at their Meetings: The reſt acknowledg'd They were at theſe Meetings, but alledg'd, They were drawn in: So that upon the whole we cannot find on what Reaſon or Authority this can be reckon'd a Sham-Plot.

Beſides theſe mean Perſons, this Year is memorable for the Deaths of many conſiderable Men, who ought to have a Name in Hiſtory; and firſt we ſhall mention two or three Prelates, as Dr. Brian Duppa, Biſhop of Wincheſter, and Lord Almoner to the King, a Perſon who had formerly gone through many Preferments, as well as Troubles, and particularly had the Honour to be for ſeveral Years Tutor to his preſent Majeſty when Prince of Wales; in all which he behav'd himſelf with ſingular Moderation, and an unblemiſh'd Reputation: He was a Man of excellent Parts, exemplary Piety, and every way qualified for his Function; more particularly as to the Comelineſs of his Perſon, and the Gracefulneſs of his Deportment, which render'd him worthy of the Service of a Court, and moſt fit to ſtand before Princes: And he was ſo much belov'd and eſteem'd by his grateful Sovereign, that the Day before his Death, he made him him a Visit at Richmond, and at his Bed-side crav'd his last Blessing in the most humble Posture of a Subject. The next was Dr. Robert Sanderson, Bishop of Lincoln, a Person of a still greater Genius than the other, and one of the bright Ornaments of England, who was admired by all Learned Men, as well as by the late and present King; but signally distinguish'd for the Strength and Clearness of his Head and Judgment, and esteem'd the most knowing Casuist that the Nation ever produc'd: To compleat his Character from an eminent Hand, we are assur'd, 'That 'whether you consider him in his Writings, or Conversation, from his 'first Book of Logick to his Divinity Lectures, Sermons, and other Di- 'scourses, the Variety of his Learning, his unparallel'd Meekness, Hu- 'mility, and Constancy, you cannot but confess that the Church of Eng- 'land cou'd not lose a greater Pillar, a better Man, and more accom- 'plish'd Divine.' The third Prelate was Dr. John Gauden, Bishop of Worcester, a Person in some Respects inferior to both the other, yet not to be forgotten upon several Accounts: For he was a Man of very great Parts and Industry, and celebrated for an admirable Preacher; but cou'd not altogether preserve himself from the Disreputation of a Time-Server, nor his Memory from the Character of one criminally aspiring after Preferments, and falsly assuming to himself the Honour of Writing a Royal Treatise, and one of the most excellent of the Age; for which he is believ'd likewise to have suffer'd in his Posterity, being reduc'd to perfect Beggary. Next to these Bishops, we may properly mention a Divine, in several Respects, not inferior to any of them, which was Dr. Peter Heylyn; a Person of whom it can hardly be said which was most to be admired, his natural Parts and Abilities, or his active Pains and Industry; in both which he became remarkably conspicuous by the vast Variety of his Works and Writings, but more particularly in History and Cosmography; and all notwithstanding the innumerable Oppositions and Interruptions he met with from the late Sectaries, who cou'd not forgive so great a Favourite of Archbishop Laud, and so zealous an Advocate for the Crown and Church of England. After all his Services, Labours and Sufferings, he never arriv'd at any higher Church-Preferment than the Sub-Deanery of Westminster; which seems most justly to be attributed to a violent and inflexible Spirit, which had prov'd highly prejudicial to that very Church he had so often strenuously and nobly defended.

Bishop Sanderson,

Bishop Gauden,

Dr. Heylyn,

Mr. Ley,

Mr. Jeanes,

The Lord Say,

After these of the Church of England, we may justly mention two Presbyterian Divines, namely, Mr. John Ley, and Mr. Henry Jeanes: The First was justly esteem'd one of the Pillars of Presbytery, being a Person well vers'd in various Authors, and a most ready Writer and Preacher; who, after he had been one of the Assembly of Divines, and gone through divers Fortunes and Preferments, he dy'd in Retirement at Sutton Coldfield in Warwickshire. The Other, Mr. Jeanes, was Rector of Chedsey in Somersetshire; of whom Wood says 'He was a most excellent 'Philosopher, a noted Metaphysician, and well grounded in Polemical 'Divinity; a Scholastical Man, a Contemner of the World, gene- 'rous, free-hearted, jolly, witty and facetious;' He wrote many Books, and dy'd a little before the Fatal Bartholomew, and therefore not so properly, as Dr. Calamy has done, to be reckon'd among the ejected Ministers. After these we shall mention two famous Parliamentarians, the old Lord Say, and the Speaker Lenthall, whose Characters and Actions have been given and displaid in the last Volume of this History, yet something may here be properly added. The Former, after he had liv'd to see all his fine Projects, and ambitious Designs defeated by the over-ruling Power of his Friend Cromwell, was first content with a voluntary Retreat, or rather Imprisonment in the Isle of Lundy, and after that to employ the same ſame Parts and Induſtry in Promoting the Reſtoration of the old Government: For which the Merciful King not only forgave all his former Crimes, but rewarded him with the Privy-Seal, to the great Diſguſt and Diſappointment of many of the old Cavaliers, who probably cou'd not then judge of the real Inducements to this Preferment. He dy'd in Peace after fourſcore Years ſpent in Variety of Troubles, at his Houſe at Broughton in Oxfordſhire, where he had help'd to lay the Foundation of our Civil Wars. The Other, Mr. William Lenthall, the famous Time-Server, after all his weak and wicked Proceedings, found Means at the Reſtoration, to ſave both Himſelf and great Eſtate, and ſo likewiſe dy'd quietly, and was bury'd moſt obſcurely at Burford in Oxfordſhire; only we are to obſerve, That at his Death, contrary to moſt of his Party, he ſhew'd himſelf a great Penitent, as far as related to a free Acknowledgment, Confeſſion and Sorrow for the Crimes he had committed, and yielded to, when he was Speaker of the Houſe of Commons. After him we may well enough mention John Biddle, the famous Heretick, who by his Parts, Induſtry and Writings made ſo much Noiſe in the late Times, when it was thought they were ſcarcely capable of any additional Diſturbance; After various Confinements, Strugglings and Tryals, in which his Life was often in Danger, he at laſt dy'd in Priſon, leaving ſome Works behind him, whoſe Venom has not yet been wholly cured. To make a Tranſition from the Worſt to the Beſt, we ſhall laſt of all mention Mr. Lurence Rooke, Profeſſor both of Aſtronomy and Geometry in Greſham-Colledge, and One of the Firſt and moſt glorious Members of the Royal Society; an admirable Man, not only in Mathematicks, but in all Sorts of Learning, 'in whom an incorrupt Probity of Manners, was joyn'd with 'an univerſal Knowledge of Things; a more than Virgin Modeſty, with 'a more than Virile Underſtanding; a moſt candid Simplicity, with a 'moſt ſagacious Prudence; a penetrating Sharpneſs of Wit, with a pro-'found Solidity of Judgment; an invincible Patience of Labour, with a 'vivid Chearfulneſs of Mind, and laſtly a ſevere unblameable Life, 'with a moſt ſweet Converſation; all which conſpired in Him, by a rare 'and almoſt incredible Temperament.

X. 1. For above two Years after the Reſtoration, and till after the King's Marriage and the Queen Mother's Settlement in England, while Chancellor Hyde continu'd prime Miniſter without any Rivalſhip, his Majeſty's Councils were for the moſt part regular and ſteady, and were carry'd on with Wiſdom and Forecaſt. But before the Beginning of this Year, as the Popiſh Intereſt gather'd Strength at Court, ſo that of the Chancellor, and his true Friends, began to decline, and his mighty Influence and Authority ſenſibly to diminiſh; tho' he ſtill retain'd his Place, and a conſiderable Power, for ſome Years. This firſt appear'd at the Removal of his Friend Sir Edward Nicholas, that wiſe and faithful Servant to two Kings, who is ſaid to have reſign'd his Secretary's Place upon the Account of his Age. However he readily parted with it for a good Conſideration, and the King offer'd further to reward him with making him a Baron of England; but this worthy Gentleman modeſtly declin'd the Honour, That his Majeſty might not too much increaſe the Nobility. He was immediately ſucceeded in his Place by Sir Henry Bennet, lately the King's Reſident in Spain, a Perſon of no mean Abilities, but One who ſecretly eſpous'd the Cauſe of Popery, and one who had much influenc'd the King towards the embracing that Religion, the Year before his Reſtoration, at Fontarabia; for which he was ſo much threatned by the Lord Colepeper, that it is believ'd he durſt not return into England till after the Death of that Nobleman. Not only the Removal of of Secretary Nicholas, and the Settlement and Influence of the Queen Mother, but likewiſe the Abſence of the Duke of Ormond ſeem'd to conſpire towards the Diminution of the Chancellor's Intereſt. That great Man and Friend had been ſent over into Ireland, where, as Lord-Lieutenant, he was receiv'd with greater Honour and Triumph, with more Magnificence and larger Preſents, than was ever known in that Kingdom.

After this new Alteration and Eſtabliſhment, which happen'd towards the End of the laſt Year, the King's Counſels began to be more unſteady and variable, and ſome different Meaſures began to be taken, which prov'd not altogether ſo agreeable to the Parliament, which till this Time had never differ'd with him in any Thing. The only Matter where they ſeem'd to have any Difference, was that of Indulgence and Toleration to the Nonconformiſts; of whom, the Presbyterians had the beſt Pretenſions to be favourably conſider'd: For they had been conſiderably inſtrumental in the King's Return, and had the Promiſe of his Favour; and moſt of their Divines had expreſs'd a good Temper for Moderation and Union, declaring for a Regulated Epiſcopacy, and a Reformed Liturgy. For which Reaſons the King had been particularly kind and gracious to them, and had given them great Hopes, that he wou'd either not paſs the Bill for Uniformity, or procure them ſome Clauſe of Exception and Exemption in it: But finding themſelves diſappointed in both theſe Expectations, and generally agreeing to ſuffer Ejectment at St. Bartholomew's Day, they ſhortly after apply'd themſelves to the King and Council for a Diſpenſation from the Penalties of that Act. The Council ſhew'd their Averſeneſs to a Diſpenſing Power in general, and eſpecially to this particular Exerciſe of it. But the King betray'd a manifeſt Inclination for it, and ſeem'd to labour under a Promiſe that he wou'd effect it. And therefore to introduce it with leſs Offence and Surprize, he publiſh'd a handſom Declaration to all his loving Subjects, conſiſting of ſeveral Particulars.

The King's Declaration.

'In this, He firſt of all complains of four Things unjuſtly charg'd upon 'him: 1. That he intended nothing leſs than the Obſervation of the 'Act of Indemnity. 2. That upon the Pretence of Plots, he intended to 'introduce a Military Way of Government. 3. That notwithſtanding 'his Promiſe from Breda, and Declaration for Liberty of Conſcience, 'he had fetter'd the Scrupulous by the Act of Uniformity; and 4. That 'he was indulgent to Papiſts to ſuch a Degree, as might endanger the 'Proteſtant Religion. To all theſe he gave particular and direct Anſwers; 'but as to the Act of Uniformity, he declar'd his own firm Adherence 'to it, only, for the Sake of Others, he was ready and willing to 'Diſpenſe with ſome Matters in it.' In the Concluſion he promis'd 1. 'To 'puniſh by ſevere Laws that Licentiouſneſs and Impiety, which ſince the 'Diſſolution of the Government, had overſpread the Nation. 2. As well 'by Sumptuary Laws, as his own Example of Frugality, to reſtrain the 'Exceſs in Mens Expences, which was grown ſo general and exorbitant, 'beyond all Bounds, either of their Qualities or Fortunes. 3. So to re-'trench all his own ordinary and extraordinary Charges, as to bring them 'within the Compaſs of his ſettled Revenue, that thereby his Subjects 'might have little Cauſe to fear his frequent Preſſing them for new 'Aſſiſtances. And laſtly, ſo to improve the good Conſequen-'ces of theſe Three Particulars to the Advancement of Trade, that all 'his Subjects finding the Advantage of them in that prime Foundation 'of Plenty, they might all with Minds happily compos'd by his Indulgence, 'apply themſelves comfortably to their ſeveral Vocations, in ſuch a Man-'ner as the private Intereſt of every One might encourage him to con-'tribute to the general Proſperity.

This

This Declaration, which was ſpread through the Nation in the Beginning of January, is believ'd to have been fram'd at Somerſet-Houſe, where the Queen-Mother kept her Court; and it was generally perceiv'd that the chief Deſign was to make way for a Toleration of Diſſenters, contrary to the Act of Uniformity. This preſently appear'd in the particular Inſtance of Mr. Calamy, one of the Heads of the Preſbyterians, who, notwithſtanding he was diſabled by the Act, as ſoon as the Declaration was publiſh'd, ventur'd to preach at his former Church of Aldermanbury, upon the Default of a Preacher there expected. Upon which he was committed to Newgate by the Lord-Mayor, not only upon the Account of the Breach of the Act, but upon a Repreſentation that his Sermon tended to Sedition; yet in a few Days he was ſet at Liberty by the King's expreſs Order, without the due Manner of a legal Diſcharge; which gave a particular Offence to the Houſe of Commons, who, ſitting ſoon after, made a ſtrict Enquiry into the Fact. The King had partly ſatisfy'd the more ſober Diſſenters, that he had a tender Regard for their Eaſe and Indemnity; but they ſoon found that they had leſs Intereſt in the Parliament than in the Court. It was undoubtedly a preſent Unhappineſs, that they found ſo much Countenance from the Unſteadineſs of the King, and ſome of his Miniſters; for this did but ſerve to heighten their Prejudices againſt the eſtabliſhed Church, and render'd them ſtill leſs inclinable to Conformity and Union, becauſe they continually ſupported themſelves with the Hopes of Liberty and Toleration. Whereas if they had loſt all Dependence on a Court Intereſt, and had found the King and the Miniſtry as intent upon the Obſervance of the Act of Uniformity, as the Commons of England, moſt of the ſober Sort wou'd in all Probability have been brought over, and ſo added great Strength and Glory to the Church and Nation. What Motives diſpos'd his Majeſty to be ſo favourable to them, and to encourage their contending with the Laws of the Land, was not at this Time ſo eaſily determinable: Whether it was his Temper, whether it was his Promiſe, whether it was his Gratitude, and whether it was his real Judgment, or Political Opinion, it was then uncertain; but ſince then it has been gradually diſcover'd, that tho' theſe might all have their Weight and Influence, yet a main Reaſon was, under the Cover of an Indulgence to Proteſtant Diſſenters, to give the better Protection and Advantage to Popery; of which the Chancellor ſeem'd moſt ſenſible during the reſt of his Miniſtry.

Deſign'd for the Eaſe of Diſſenters.

2. Thus ſtood the Affairs of the Nation at the Third Meeting of the preſent Parliament, which, according to Prorogation, fell on the 18th Day of February, after a long Receſs of about nine Months. The King's Speech to both Houſes was in theſe Words: ‘ My Lords and Gentlemen, I am very glad to meet you here again, having thought the Time ‘ long ſince we parted, and have often wiſh'd you had been together to ‘ help me in ſome Occaſions which have fallen out: I need not repeat ‘ them to you, you have all had the Noiſe of them in your ſeveral Counties; and, God be thanked, they were but Noiſe without any worſe ‘ Effects. To cure the Diſtempers, and compoſe the differing Minds among us, I ſet forth my Declaration of the 26th of December, in ‘ which you may ſee I am willing to ſet Bounds to the Hopes of Some, ‘ and to the Fears of Others; of which, when you ſhall have examin'd ‘ well the Grounds, I doubt not but I ſhall have your Concurrence therein. The Truth is, I am in my Nature an Enemy to all Severity for Religion and Conſcience, how miſtaken ſoever it be, when it extends to ‘ Capital and Sanguinary Puniſhments, which I am told were begun in ‘ Popiſh Times: Therefore when I ſay this, I hope I ſhall not need to ‘ warn 'warn any here not to infer from thence I mean to favour Popery. I 'muſt confeſs to you, There are many of that Profeſſion, who having 'ſerv'd my Father and my Self very well, may fairly hope for ſome Part 'of that Indulgence I wou'd willingly afford to Others who diſſent from 'us: But let me explain my ſelf, leſt ſome miſtake me herein, as I hear 'they did in my Declaration: I am far from Meaning by this, a Tolera- 'tion, or Qualifying them thereby to hold any Offices or Places in the 'Government; nay further, I deſire ſome Laws may be made to hinder 'the Growth and Progreſs of their Doctrines. I hope you have all ſo 'good an Opinion of my Zeal for the Proteſtant Religion, as I need not 'tell you I will not yield to any therein, not to the Biſhops themſelves, 'nor in my Liking the Uniformity of it, as it is now eſtabliſhed; which 'being the Standard of our Religion, muſt be kept pure and uncorrupt- 'ed, free from all other Mixtures: And yet if the Diſſenters will de- 'mean themſelves peaceably and modeſtly under the Government, I 'cou'd heartily wiſh I had ſuch a Power of Indulgence, to uſe upon Oc- 'caſions, as might not needleſly force them out of the Kingdom, or ſtay- 'ing here, give them Cauſe to conſpire againſt the Peace of it. My 'Lords and Gentlemen, it wou'd look like Flattery in me to tell you to 'what Degree I am confident of your Wiſdom and Affection in all things 'that relate to the Greatneſs and Proſperity of the Kingdom. If you 'conſider well what is beſt for us all, I dare ſay we ſhall not diſagree. I 'have no more to ſay to you at preſent, but once again to bid you hear- 'tily welcome.'

This Speech, together with the late Declaration, gave ſome little Alarm to the Houſe of Commons, who were juſtly apprehenſive of the Dangers of a Toleration, becauſe the Papiſts, as well as other Sectaries, wou'd find their Advantage in it. Therefore they appointed the 25th of February, to take into Conſideration his Majeſty's gracious Declaration of the 26th of December laſt, and his Speech made at the Opening this Seſſion: At which Time they unanimouſly reſolv'd, That the Thanks of the Houſe ſhou'd be return'd to the King's Majeſty for all the other Parts of his Declaration; but as to the Point of Indulgence, they reſolv'd, That it be preſented to the King's Majeſty, as the humble Advice of this Houſe, That no Indulgence be granted to the Diſſenters from the Act of Uniformity. And they order'd, That a Committee be appointed to collect and bring in the Reaſons of this Houſe for this Vote upon the preſent Debate. On the next Day, a Report was made to the Houſe from the Committee by Sir Heneage Finch, his Majeſty's Sollicitor-General; and after ſome Amendments and Additions, the Reaſons and Addreſs were agreed to, and preſented to his Majeſty at the Banquetting-Houſe in White-hall the 27th of February, where it was read and deliver'd by the Speaker.

The Commons are againſt Indulgence.

In the Addreſs it ſelf, after they had return'd their particular Thanks for the ſeveral Parts of the Declaration, they proceeded thus: 'It is 'with extream Unwillingneſs and Reluctancy of Heart, that we are 'brought to differ from any thing which your Majeſty has thought fit to 'propoſe: And tho' we do no way doubt, but that the unreaſonable Di- 'ſtempers of Mens Spirits, and the many Mutinies and Conſpiracies 'which were carry'd on, during the late Intervals of Parliament, 'did reaſonably incline your Majeſty to endeavour by your Declaration 'to give ſome Allay to thoſe ill Humours, till the Parliament aſſembled; 'and the Hopes of Indulgence, if the Parliament ſhou'd conſent to it; 'eſpecially ſeeing the Pretenders to this Indulgence, did ſeem to make 'ſome Titles to it, by vertue of your Majeſty's Declaration from Breda. 'Nevertheleſs, we your Majeſty's moſt dutiful and loyal Subjects, who are 'now

'formity, and the Religion eſtabliſh'd: For theſe Reaſons, we have con-
'ſider'd the Nature of your Majeſty's Declaration from Breda, and are 'humbly of Opinion, That your Majeſty ought not to be preſs'd with it
'any further; 1. Becauſe it is not a Promiſe in it ſelf, but only a graci'ous Declaration of your Majeſty's Intentions, to do what in you lay,
'and what a Parliament ſhou'd adviſe your Majeſty to do; and no ſuch
'Advice was ever given, or thought fit to be offer'd; nor cou'd it be o-
'therwiſe underſtood, becauſe there were Laws of Uniformity then in 'being, which cou'd not be diſpens'd with, but by Act of Parliament.
'2. They who do pretend a Right to that ſuppoſed Promiſe, put the 'Right into the Hands of their Repreſentatives, whom they choſe to
'ſerve for them in this Parliament, who have paſs'd, and your Majeſty
'conſented to the Act of Uniformity. If any ſhall preſume to ſay, That
'a Right to the Benefit of this Declaration doth ſtill remain after this 'Act paſſed, 3. It tends to diſſolve the very Bonds of Government, and 'to ſuppoſe a Diſability in your Majeſty and the Houſes of Parliament,
'to make a Law contrary to any Part of your Majeſty's Declaration,
'tho' both Houſes ſhou'd adviſe your Majeſty to it.

'We have alſo conſider'd the Nature of the Indulgence propos'd, with 'Reference to thoſe Conſequences which muſt neceſſarily attend it. 1.
'It will eſtabliſh Schiſm by a Law, and make the whole Government of 'the Church precarious, and the Cenſures of it of no Moment or Con-
'ſideration at all. 2. It will no way become the Gravity or Wiſdom of 'a Parliament, to paſs a Law at one Seſſion for Uniformity, and at the 'next Seſſion (the Reaſons of Uniformity continuing ſtill the ſame) to 'paſs another Law to fruſtrate or weaken the Execution of it. 3. It will
'expoſe your Majeſty to the reſtleſs Importunity of every Sect or Opi'nion, and of every ſingle Perſon alſo, who ſhall preſume to diſſent from 'the Church of England. 4. It will be a Cauſe of increaſing Sects and
'Sectaries, whoſe Numbers will weaken the true Proteſtant Profeſſion
'ſo far, that it will at leaſt be difficult for it to defend it ſelf againſt
'them: And, which is yet further conſiderable, thoſe Numbers which,
'by being troubleſome to the Government, find they can arrive to an
'Indulgence, will, as their Numbers increaſe, be yet more troubleſome,
'that ſo at length they may arrive to a General Toleration, which your
'Majeſty hath declared againſt; and in Time, ſome prevalent Sect will
'at laſt contend for an Eſtabliſhment; which, for ought can be foreſeen,
'may end in Popery. 5. It is a thing altogether without Precedent, and 'it will take away all Means of convicting Recuſants, and be inconſiſtent
'with the Method and Proceedings of the Laws of England. Laſtly,
'It is humbly conceiv'd, That the Indulgence propos'd will be ſo far from
'tending to the Peace of the Kingdom, that it is rather likely to occaſion
'great Diſturbance. And on the contrary, That the aſſerting of the 'Laws, and the Religion eſtabliſh'd, according to the Act of Uniformi-
'ty, is the moſt probable Means to produce a ſettled Peace and Obedi'ence throughout your Kingdom: Becauſe the Variety of Profeſſions
'in Religion, when openly indulg'd, doth directly diſtinguiſh Men into 'Parties, and withal gives them Opportunity to count their Numbers;
'which, conſidering the Animoſities that out of a Religious Pride will 'be kept on foot by the ſeveral Factions, doth tend directly and inevi'tably to open Diſturbance. Nor can your Majeſty have any Security,
'that the Doctrine or Worſhip of the ſeveral Factions, which are all

'govern'd by a ſeveral Rule, ſhall be conſiſtent with the Peace of your 'Kingdom. And if any Perſons ſhall preſume to diſturb the Peace of 'the Kingdom, we do in all Humility declare, That we will for ever, 'and on all Occaſions, be ready with our utmoſt Endeavours and Aſſiſtance 'to adhere to, and ſerve your Majeſty according to our bounden Duty and 'Allegiance.

The King's Anſwer,

To this notable Addreſs, his Majeſty gave this gracious Anſwer: That He gave them hearty Thanks for their many Thanks; That never any King was ſo happy in a Houſe of Commons, as He in This; That the Paper and Reaſons were long, and therefore he wou'd take Time to conſider of them, and ſend them a Meſſage; That they cou'd never differ but in Judgement, and that muſt be when he did not rightly expreſs Himſelf, or They did not rightly underſtand Him; but their Intereſt was ſo far linkt together, that they cou'd never diſagree. According to this Promiſe, a little above a Fortnight after, on the 16th of March, he ſent this Meſſage to the

And Meſſage.

Houſe of Commons: 'That he was unwilling to enlarge upon the Ad- 'dreſs lately made to him by his Houſe of Commons, or to reply to 'the Reaſons, tho' he found what he ſaid not much underſtood; but he 'renew'd his hearty Thanks to them, for their Expreſſions of ſo great Duty 'and Affection, and for their free Declaration That if any Perſon ſhall pre- 'ſume to diſturb the Peace of the Kingdom, they will for ever, upon all 'Occaſions, be ready with their utmoſt Endeavours and Aſſiſtance, to ad- 'here to, and ſerve his Majeſty; and did very heartily deſire them ſo 'to enable Him, and to put the Kingdom into ſuch a Poſture of Defence, 'as that if any Diſturbance or Seditious Deſigns aroſe, they might be ea- 'ſily ſuppreſs'd.' To all which the Houſe of Commons return'd their particular Thanks and Promiſes.

1663. Car. 15 Ref. 3.

3. As the Houſe of Commons were ſo ſtrict and exact with Relation to the Proteſtant Diſſenters, ſo they were no leſs careful and diligent againſt the Papiſts. They perceiv'd that the King's Profeſſion of Indulgence towards the Former, did very much encourage the Confidence of Romiſh Prieſts and Jeſuits; and therefore joyning with the Houſe of Lords, within a ſhort Time they together agreed and drew up A humble Repreſentation and Petition of the Lords and Commons aſſembled in Parliament, concerning Romiſh Prieſts and Jeſuits, to the King's moſt excellent Majeſty. This was preſented to the King by both Houſes, on the firſt of April, and was as following: 'The humble Repreſentation and Petition 'of the Lords and Commons, Sheweth, That notwithſtanding your Ma- 'jeſty's unqueſtionable Affection and Zeal for the true Proteſtant Religi- 'on, manifeſted in your conſtant Profeſſion and Practice, againſt all 'Temptations whatſoever; yet, by the great Reſort of Jeſuits and Ro- 'miſh Prieſts into this Kingdom, your good Subjects are generally much 'affected with Jealouſie and Apprehenſion, That the Popiſh Religion may 'much increaſe in this Kingdom, which your Majeſty hath moſt piouſly 'deſired may be prevented; and ſo the Peace both in Church and State 'may be inſenſibly diſturb'd, to the great Danger of Both. Your two 'Houſes of Parliament are therefore humble Suitors to your Majeſty to 'iſſue out your Proclamation to command all Jeſuits, and all Engliſh, 'Iriſh and Scottiſh Popiſh Prieſts, and all ſuch other Prieſts as have taken 'Orders from the See of Rome, or by Authority thereof (except ſuch 'Foreign Jeſuits or Prieſts as by Contract of Marriage are to attend 'the Perſons of either of the Queens, or by the Law of Nations to at- 'tend Foreign Ambaſſadors) to depart this Kingdom by a Day, under 'Pain of having the Penalties of the Law inflicted upon them.

Lords and Commons petition againſt Papiſts.

This

This Repreſentation having been read to his Majeſty, he immediately made the following Speech to both Houſes: ‘ My Lords and Gentlemen, ‘ You do not expect that I ſhou'd give you an Anſwer preſently to your ‘ Petition, yet I tell you That I will ſpeedily ſend you an Anſwer, which ‘ I am confident will be to your Satisfaction. It may be the general Jea- ‘ louſie of the Nation hath made this Addreſs neceſſary; and indeed I ‘ believe nothing hath more contributed to that Jealouſie than my own ‘ Confidence, That it was impoſſible there ſhou'd be any ſuch Jealouſie, ‘ and the Effects of that Confidence: But I ſhall give you Satisfaction, ‘ and then I am ſure you will eaſily ſatisfie and compoſe the Minds of the ‘ Nation. I confeſs, my Lords and Gentlemen, I have heard of one Jea- ‘ louſie, which I will never forgive the Authors of, That I had a Jealou- ‘ ſie of your Affections, That I was offended with the Parliament to that ‘ Degree that I intended to diſſolve it. They ſay Men are naturally moſt ‘ Angry with thoſe Reports which reflect upon their Underſtanding, ‘ which makes them thought weak Men: Truely, I ſhou'd appear a very ‘ weak Man, if I ſhou'd have any ſuch Paſſion, any ſuch Purpoſe. No, ‘ my Lords and Gentlemen, I will not part with you upon thoſe Terms! ‘ Never King was ſo much beholden to a Parliament as I am to you; and ‘ if my Kindneſs to you, and my Confidence in you be not Proportiona- ‘ ble, I am behind hand with you, which, God willing, I will not be.

1663. Car. 15 Reſ. 3.

The King's Reply to it.

‘ Mr. Speaker, and you Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons, I am wil- ‘ ling to take this Occaſion to give you my particular Thanks for your ‘ great Kindneſs in taking hold upon an eaſie Intimation, rather than an ‘ Invitation from Me, to enter upon the Conſideration of my Revenue: ‘ It was kindly done, and I ſhall never forget it. I have given Order, ‘ that you may be fully inform'd of the true State of it, and then I know ‘ you will do that which is good for Me, and You: And I pray purſue ‘ your good Reſolution, in putting the Kingdom into ſuch a Poſture, ‘ that we may prevent, at leaſt not fear any deſperate Inſurrection.

The King according to his Promiſe, the very next Day ſent an Anſwer to the Petition in Writing to the Houſe of Lords, which, in a Conference between both Houſes, was likewiſe deliver'd to the Commons, and was as following: ‘ His Majeſty having ſeriouſly conſider'd and weigh'd ‘ the humble Repreſentation and Petition of his Lords and Commons aſ- ‘ ſembled in Parliament, and the great Affection and Duty with which ‘ the ſame was preſented to him; and after having made ſome Refle- ‘ ctions on Himſelf and his own Actions, is not a little troubled that his ‘ Lenity and Condeſcenſions towards many of the Popiſh Perſwaſion ‘ (which were but natural Effects of his Generoſity and Good-nature, ‘ after having liv'd ſo many Years in the Dominions of Roman Catholick ‘ Princes; and out of a juſt Memory of what many of them had done ‘ and ſuffer'd in the Service of his Royal Father of bleſſed Memory, and ‘ of ſome eminent Services perform'd by Others of them, towards his ‘ Majeſty Himſelf in the Time of his greateſt Affliction) have been made ‘ ſo ill uſe of, and ſo ill deſerv'd, that the Reſort of Jeſuits and Prieſts ‘ into this Kingdom hath been thereby increas'd; with which his Maje- ‘ ſty is, and hath long been highly Offended. And therefore his Majeſty ‘ readily concurs with the Advice of his Two Houſes of Parliament, and ‘ hath given Order for the Preparing and iſſuing out ſuch a Proclamation ‘ as is deſired, with the ſame Clauſe referring to the Treaty of Mar- ‘ riage, as was in the Proclamation, which, upon the like Occaſion, iſſu'd ‘ out upon the Advice of both Houſes of Parliament in the Year 1640. ‘ And his Majeſty will take farther Care, that the ſame ſhall be effectual, ‘ at leaſt to a greater Degree than any Proclamation of this Kind hath ‘ ever been. And his Majeſty further declares, and aſſures both his ‘ Houſes

A Second Anſwer.

'Houſes of Parliament, and all his loving Subjects of all his Dominions, That 'as his Affection and Zeal for the Proteſtant Religion and the Church of 'England hath not been conceal'd, or untaken Notice of in the World: 'So he is not, nor ever will be, ſo ſolicitous for the ſettling his own Re-'venue, or providing any other Expedients for the Peace and Tranquil-'lity of the Kingdom, as for the Advancement and Improvement of the 'Religion eſtabliſh'd, and for the uſing and applying all proper and ef-'fectual Remedies to hinder the Growth of Popery; both which he doth 'in Truth look upon as the beſt Expedient to eſtabliſh the Peace and 'Proſperity of all his Kingdoms.

Immediate Thanks were return'd to the King for this obliging Anſwer; and his Majeſty, according to Promiſe, did within a few Days after publiſh ſuch a Proclamation as was deſired, commanding all Jeſuits, and Popiſh Prieſts to depart this Kingdom, &c. But it did not appear to be much more in the real Intentions of the Court, than another Popular Proclamation, not long after iſſu'd out for the better Obſervation of the Lord's Day, and likewiſe for renewing a former Proclamation againſt vitious, debauch'd and profane Perſons: For notwithſtanding theſe Publick Profeſſions towards pleaſing of the People, it became more viſible that Popery and Profaneneſs were both in the Increaſe at Court; and that the former, if it was not the Occaſion, was the unfortunate Concomitant, or near Attendant of the latter.

Ref. 4. The Commons Care of the King's Revenue.

4. The Commons in Parliament were now buſily employ'd, among other Things, in examining the true State of the King's Revenue, as his Majeſty had deſired them in his laſt Speech. They proceeded to inquire into all the particular Branches, as the Cuſtoms, the Exciſe, the Crown Lands, the Hearth Mony, the Poſt-Office, the Firſt Fruits and Tenths, the Coynage, the Alienation, and other Offices, with ſeveral other leſſer Matters; and found that all together did not at this Time amount to buite eleven hundred thouſand Pounds a Year. While they were conſidering and inquiring into theſe Matters, on the 12th of June the King ſnet for the Speaker, and the whole Houſe, to the Banquetting-Houſe at White-Hall, where he made a remarkable and affecting Speech to them, which ought not to be omitted; and, tho' ſomewhat long, ſhou'd not be abridg'd; eſpecially ſince we do not find that it ever was in Print, or any other Book beſides the Journals of the Houſe of Commons: And it is ſo contriv'd, that it will hardly bear any Sort of Mutilation; therefore the Reader may be pleas'd to accept of it in full Length.

The King's Speech to them alone.

'Mr. Speaker, and you Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons, I have ſent 'for you this Day to communicate with you, as good Friends ought to 'do, when they diſcover the leaſt Jealouſie growing, which may leſſen 'their Confidence in each other. It is a Freedom very neceſſary to be 'us'd between me and you: And you may all remember, That when 'there was lately a little Jealouſie amongſt you, upon ſomewhat I had 'ſaid or done, I made all the Haſte I cou'd to give you Satisfaction; for 'which you all return'd me your hearty Thanks; and were, I think, ſa-'tisfy'd. Gentlemen, it is in no Man's Power, no not in your own Pow-'er, to make me ſuſpect, or in the leaſt Degree imagine it poſſible, That 'your Affections and Kindneſs is leſſen'd or diminiſh'd towards me. I 'know very well, That the People did never in any Age uſe that Vigi-'lance and Circumſpection, in the Election of Perſons of known and 'try'd Affections to the Crown; of your good Principles, and unque-'ſtionable Inclinations to the Peace of the Church and the State, for their 'Repreſentatives in Parliament, as they did when they choſe You. You 'are the very ſame Men, who at your firſt coming together, gave ſuch

'ſignal

1663. Car. 15 Ref. 4.

'ſignal Teſtimonies of your Affection and Friendſhip to my Perſon, of 'your Zeal for the Honour and Dignity of the Crown, and liberal Sup- 'port of the Government, and of your Horror and Deteſtation of thoſe 'Men, whoſe Principles you diſcern'd keep them awake to take all Oc- 'caſions to diſturb the Peace of the Kingdom, and to embroil us in a new 'Civil War; which is as much their Endeavour now as ever, and it may 'be not enough abhorr'd by Others, whoſe Principles and Ends are very 'different from them. You are the ſame Men, who at your firſt 'Meeting by a wonderful and chearful Harmony and Concurrence in 'whatſoever I cou'd wiſh, gave me Reputation Abroad, and Security 'at Home, made our Neighbours ſolicitous for our Friendſhip, and 'ſet a juſt Value upon it. And, truſt me, ſuch a Reputation is of ſuch 'a vaſt Importance, as made my Evil Subjects even deſpair of bring- 'ing their wicked Purpoſes to paſs. And is it poſſible that the ſame 'Perſons can continue the Same together, without the ſame Affection 'for Me? I am ſure it is impoſſible!

'And yet, I muſt tell you, the Reputation I had from your Concur- 'rence and Tenderneſs towards me is not at all improv'd ſince the Be- 'ginning of this Seſſion: Indeed it is much leſſen'd. And I am ſure I 'never ſtood in more need of that Reputation than at preſent, to carry me 'through the many Difficulties, in which the Publick is at leaſt concern'd, 'as much as my ſelf. Let Me and You think never ſo well of our ſelves, 'if all the World knows or believes that we are poor, that we are in Ex- 'tremity of Want, if our Friends think we can do them no Good, and our 'Enemies believe we can do them no Harm, our Condition is far from being 'proſperous. You cannot take it amiſs (you ſhall uſe as much Freedom 'with me) That I tell you there hath not appeared that Warmth in you of 'late in the Conſideration of my Revenue, as I expected, as well from 'ſome of your Meſſages, as my own Confidence in your Care and Kind- 'neſs. It hath been ſaid to my ſelf, That it is uſual for the Parliament 'to give the Crown extraordinary Supplies upon emergent Occaſions, but 'not to improve the conſtant Revenue of the Crown. I wiſh, and ſo do 'you, that nothing had lately been done in and by Parliaments but what 'is Uſual: But if ill Parliaments contrive the Ruin and Diſinheriſon of 'the Crown, God forbid but good Parliaments ſhou'd repair it, how 'Unuſual ſoever it is. If you your ſelves had not in an extraordinary 'Manner improv'd my Revenue, the Government cou'd not have been 'ſupported; and if it be not yet improv'd to the Proportion you have 'deſign'd, I cannot doubt but you will proceed in it with your old Ala- 'crity. I am very well contented that you proceed in your Inſpection; 'I know it will be to my Advantage, and that you will neither find my 'Receipts ſo great, nor my Expences ſo exorbitant, as you imagine: 'And for an Evidence of the laſt, I will give you an Account of the Iſ- 'ſues of the twelve hundred thouſand Pounds you ſo liberally gave me; 'one Penny whereof was not diſpos'd but upon full Deliberation with 'my ſelf, and by my own Order, and I think you will all ſay for the 'Publick Service. But, Gentlemen, this Inquiſition cannot be finiſh'd in 'the ſhort Time we can now conveniently ſtay together: And yet if you 'do not provide before we part, for the better Paying and Collecting 'what you have already given me, you can hardly preſume what it will 'amount to; and if you do not ſupport what you have already given me 'by ſome Addition, you will quickly ſee Lawful Ways found to leſſen the 'Revenue more than you imagine: And therefore I cannot but expect 'your Wiſdoms will ſeaſonably and ſpeedily provide a Remedy for that 'growing Miſchief. Believe me, Gentlemen, the moſt diſaffected Sub‘ jects in England are not more unwilling to pay any Tax or Impoſition ‘ you lay upon them, than I am to receive it: God knows I do not long ‘ more for any Bleſſing in this World, than that I may live to call a ‘ Parliament, and not ask or receive any Mony from them; I will do all ‘ I can to ſee that happy Day. I know the vaſt Burthens the Kingdom ‘ hath born the laſt twenty Years and more; that it is exceedingly im- ‘ poveriſh'd: But, alas! what will that which is left do them good, if ‘ the Government cannot be ſupported; if I am not able to defray ‘ the Charge that is neceſſary for their Peace and Security? I muſt deal ‘ plainly with you (and I do but diſcharge my Conſcience in that ‘ Plainneſs) if you do not, beſides the improving my Revenue in the ‘ Manner I have recommended to you, give me ſome preſent Supply ‘ of Mony to enable me to ſtruggle with thoſe Difficulties I am preſs'd ‘ with, I ſhall have a very Melancholick Summer, and ſhall much appre- ‘ hend the Publick Quiet.

'jects

1663. Car. 15 Ref. 4.

‘ You have heard, I preſume, of the late Deſign in Ireland for the Sur- ‘ prize of the Caſtle of Dublin, which was ſpread all over that Kingdom, ‘ and many Parliament-Men were engag'd in it. There is an abſolute ‘ Neceſſity that I forthwith ſend over a Sum of Mony thither, for the ‘ Payment of the Army, and putting the Garriſons there in good Order. ‘ You will not doubt but that thoſe ſeditious Perſons there, had a Cor- ‘ reſpondence with their Friends here: And I pray let us not be too ‘ careleſs of them. I aſſure you, I have ſo great Occaſion for Mony here, ‘ which my Revenue cannot ſupply me with, that I every Day omit the ‘ doing ſomewhat that is very neceſſary for the Publick Benefit. Theſe ‘ ſure are juſt Motives to perſwade you to give me a Supply, as ever ‘ mov'd a Houſe of Commons. And therefore I conjure you to go chear- ‘ fully about it, and let me not be diſappointed in my Confidence of your ‘ Affections: And I pray remember the Seaſon of the Year; and how ne- ‘ ceſſary it is that we make a Receſs at, or about Midſummer. I have ‘ enlarg'd much more to you upon this Occaſion than I have us'd to do; ‘ and you may perceive it hath not been very eaſie to me: But I was wil- ‘ ling that you ſhou'd underſtand from my ſelf what I deſire, and expect ‘ from you: and the rather, becauſe I hear ſome Men have confidently ‘ undertaken to know my Mind, who have had no Authority from me, ‘ and to drive on Deſigns very contrary to my Deſires. I do pray hear- ‘ tily that the Effect of this Day's Converſation may be the renewing of ‘ our Confidence in each other, and raiſing our joint Reputation, which ‘ will be our ſtrongeſt Security, with God's Bleſſing, the Kingdom can ‘ have for its Peace, Plenty and full Proſperity: And upon my Word, ‘ you ſhall have great Comfort in what you ſhall do for me, upon this ‘ very earneſt and hearty Recommendation.

They, and the Clergy, grant Supplies

This Speech, together with the affecting Way of Delivery, had ſuch an Influence upon the Minds of the Commons, that they immediately reſolv'd upon a preſent Supply, and in a ſhort Time gave his Majeſty four entire Subſidies. The Clergy in Convocation, following their Example, likewiſe gave four Subſidies; which, in Reality, was the laſt Mony that ever was given to the Crown by that Reverend Body or Aſſembly.

Deſigns againſt the Chancellor.

5. During this Seſſion of Parliament, it became viſible that the Lord Chancellor Clarendon began to decline as to his great Power and Influence at Court; and he ſeem'd to ſtand ready to be given up to his Enemies, and to bear the Odium of every publick Miſcarriage or Misfortune. This great Man was ſenſible that the late Alterations in Court, and particularly in the Secretary's Office, were no ways to his Advantage, and there-therefore arm'd himſelf againſt all Enemies from thence; well knowing that the King ſtill retain'd a conſiderable Eſteem and Affection for him. But now aroſe a Storm from an unexpected Quarter: There had been a long Courſe of uninterrupted Friendſhip, both in Adverſity and Proſperity, between the famous Earl of Briſtol and the Chancellor, ſo that the Band ſeem'd almoſt indiſſolvable. But gradually falling into different Meaſures, upon the Account of Religion or Politicks, and the Chancellor refuſing a ſmall Boon, as the Earl of Briſtol took it to be, which was ſaid to be the paſſing a Patent in Favour of a Court Lady, the latter thought himſelf ſo diſoblig'd, that letting looſe his fiery Temper, he reſolv'd upon nothing but Revenge. And having digeſted all things within himſelf, which might tend to the Overthrow of the Chancellor, he firſt made a bitter and artful Speech againſt him in the Houſe of Lords; and then, on the 10th of July, exhibited Articles of High-Treaſon, and other Crimes, againſt him.

1663. Car. 15 Ref. 4.

Articles exhibited againſt him by the Earl of Briſtol.

The Subſtance of the whole Accuſation was as following: 'That the 'Chancellor, being in Place of higheſt Truſt and Confidence with his 'Majeſty, and having arrogated a ſupream Direction in all things, had, 'with a Traiterous Intent to draw Contempt upon his Majeſty's Perſon, 'and to alienate the Affections of his Subjects, abus'd the ſaid Truſt in 'Manner following. 1. He had endeavour'd to alienate the Hearts of 'his Majeſty's Subjects, by artificially inſinuating to his Creatures and De-'pendents, That his Majeſty was inclined to Popery, and deſign'd to al-'ter the Eſtabliſh'd Religion. 2. He had ſaid to ſeveral Perſons of his 'Majeſty's Privy-Council, That his Majeſty was dangerouſly corrupted in 'his Religion, and inclined to Popery: That Perſons of that Religion 'had ſuch Acceſs, and ſuch Credit with him, that unleſs there were a 'careful Eye had upon it, the Proteſtant Religion wou'd be overthrown 'in this Kingdom. 3. Upon his Majeſty's admitting Sir Henry Bennet 'to be Secretary of State, in the Place of Sir Edward Nicholas, he ſaid, 'That his Majeſty had given ten thouſand Pounds to remove a zealous 'Proteſtant, that he might bring into that high Place a concealed Papiſt. '4. In Purſuance of the ſame Traiterous Deſign, ſeveral Friends and 'Dependents of his have ſaid aloud, That were it not for my Lord Chan-'cellor's ſtanding in the Gap, Popery wou'd be introduc'd into this King-'dom. 5. That he had perſwaded the King, contrary to his Reaſons, to 'allow his Name to be us'd to the Pope and ſeveral Cardinals in the Sol-'licitation of a Cardinal's Cap for the Lord Aubigney, great Almoner to 'the Queen: In order to effect which, he had employ'd Mr. Richard 'Bealing, a known Papiſt; and had likewiſe apply'd himſelf to ſeveral 'Popiſh Prieſts and Jeſuits for the ſame Purpoſe, promiſing great Favour 'to the Papiſts here, in Caſe it ſhou'd be effected. 6. That he had like-'wiſe promis'd to ſeveral Papiſts he wou'd do his Endeavour, and ſaid, 'He hop'd to compaſs the taking away all penal Laws againſt them; to 'the End they might preſume and grow vain upon his Patronage, and 'by their publiſhing their Hopes of Toleration, encreaſe the Scandal, 'deſign'd by him to be rais'd upon his Majeſty throughout the Kingdom. '7. That being intruſted with the Treaty betwixt his Majeſty, and his 'Royal Conſort the Queen, he concluded it upon Articles Scandalous 'and Dangerous to the Proteſtant Religion: Moreover he brought the 'King and Queen together, without any ſettled Agreement about the 'Performance of the Marriage-Rites; whereby the Queen refuſing to 'be marry'd by a Proteſtant Prieſt, in Caſe of her being with Child, ei-'ther the Succeſſion ſhou'd be made uncertain for want of the due Rites 'of Matrimony, or elſe his Majeſty be expoſed to a Suſpicion of having 'been marry'd in his own Dominions by a Romiſh Prieſt. 8. That having

1663. Car. 15 Ref. 4.

'endeavour'd to alienate the Hearts of the King's Subjects upon the 'Score of Religion, he endeavour'd to make use of all his Scandals and 'Jealousies to raise to himself a popular Applause of being the zealous Up- 'holder of the Protestant Religion, &c. 9. That he further endeavour'd 'to alienate the Hearts of the King's Subjects, by venting in his own 'Discourse, and those of his Emissaries, opprobrious Scandals against his 'Majesty's Person, and Course of Life, such as are not fit to be menti- 'on'd, unless Necessity shall require it. 10. That he endeavour'd to ali- 'enate the Affections of the Duke of York from his Majesty, by suggest- 'ing to him, That his Majesty intended to Legitimate the Duke of Mon- 'mouth. 11. That he had perswaded the King, against the Advice of 'the Lord General, to withdraw the English Garrisons out of Scotland, 'and demolish all the Forts built there, at so vast a Charge to this King- 'dom; and all without expecting the Advice of the Parliament of Eng- 'land. 12. That he endeavour'd to alienate his Majesty's Affections and 'Esteem from his present Parliament, by telling him, That there was 'never so weak and inconsiderable a House of Lords, nor never so weak 'and heady a House of Commons; and particularly, That it was better to 'sell Dunkirk, than to be at their Mercy for want of Mony. 13. That 'contrary to a known Law made last Sessions, by which Mony was given 'and apply'd for the maintaining of Dunkirk, he advis'd and effected the 'Sale of the same to the French King. 14. That he had, contrary to 'Law, enrich'd himself and his Treasurers by the Sale of Offices. 15. 'That he had converted to his own use vast Sums of publick Mony rais- 'ed in Ireland by way of Subsidy, private and publick Benevolences, and 'otherwise given and intended to defray the Charge of the Government 'in that Kingdom. 16. That having arrogated to himself a supream Di- 'rection of all his Majesty's Affairs, he had prevail'd to have his Maje- 'sty's Customs Farmed at a lower Rate than others offer'd, and that by 'Persons, with some of whom he went a Share, and other Parts of Mo- 'ny resulting from his Majesty's Revenue.'

Reflections upon them.

This heavy Charge, fill'd with Insinuations and Aggravations, appear'd rather to have been a personal Quarrel, than any serious Concern for publick Truth and Justice. The Words concerning the King's private Inclinations, here charg'd as spoken by him, were generally thought to have been the real Expressions or Suggestions of that great Man; but surely it was not altogether without a Cause: They may be thought the Effect of an indecent Freedom, but can hardly be imagin'd to have proceeded from any want of Integrity or Loyalty. And indeed there appears a perverse Turn in the Articles, first to represent the Chancellor as jealous of Popery, and complaining of the King's Inclination to it, by chusing new Ministers Popishly affected; and yet after all, to make the Chancellor himself the Instrument of those very Designs laid for Popery, and the profess'd Promoter of them. This was somewhat surprizing; and what has since made the design'd Revenge more apparent, is, That the Articles should tax the Chancellor with saying Bennet was a conceal'd Papist, when Bristol himself, the Accuser, was the same, and had been privy to all that the King had done at Fontarabia, at the Pyrenean Treaty. And indeed the House of Lords seem'd sensible of the Malice of the Accusation, as soon as the Articles were exhibited and read before them. Upon which, after a short Consideration, they made this following Order: 'That a Copy of the Articles or Charge of High Treason, exhi- 'bited this Day by the Earl of Bristol against the Lord Chancellor, be 'deliver'd to the Lord Chief Justice; who, with all the rest of the 'Judges, are to consider, Whether the said Charge hath been brought in 'Regularly and Legally; and Whether it may be proceeded on, and how;

'and

1663. Car. 15 Ref. 4.

'and Whether there be any Treaſon in it or no; and make Report 'thereof to this Houſe on Monday next, if they can, or elſe as ſoon af-'ter as poſſibly they may.'

Upon this important Occaſion all the Judges met at Serjeant's Inn, and the Earl of Briſtol repaired to them, deſiring to ſee their Order; which being read, he told them, He came out of Reſpect to know of them Whether they were inform'd how it came into the Houſe of Peers, whether as a Charge or not: But one of the Judges, who had been preſent when it was deliver'd in, ſaying, They were tied up by their Order, the Earl took ſome Exception at the Manner of his Expreſſion, as if his Addreſs were unneceſſary at that Time, and taking it as a Rebuke upon him, departed. But according to their Order, which ſuppos'd it to be a Charge of High Treaſon, and not mentioning Miſdemeanour, they did upon Conſideration unanimouſly agree upon this enſuing Anſwer, which the Lord Chief Juſtice Foſter deliver'd into the Houſe of Lords: 'We conceive that a 'Charge of High Treaſon cannot, by the Laws and Statutes of this Realm, 'be Originally exhibited by one Peer againſt another unto the Houſe of 'Peers; and that therefore a Charge of High Treaſon by the Earl of 'Briſtol againſt the Lord Chancellor, mention'd in the Order of Refe-'rence to us of the Tenth of this Inſtant July, hath not been Regularly 'and Legally brought in; and if the Matters alledg'd in the ſaid Charge 'were admitted to be true, altho' alledg'd to be Traiterouſly done, yet 'there is no Treaſon in it.' Upon the reading of this Anſwer, the Earl of Briſtol took Exceptions at it; and ſome of the Lords, who were Friends to the Chancellor, inferr'd, 'That if it was not Regularly and 'Legally brought in, it was a Libel, and it ought to be condemn'd, 'and the Author of it cenſured.' To ſatisfy the Houſe, one of the Judges upon Conference with his Brethren, did the next Day deliver the Reaſons of the Opinion of the Judges in their ſaid Anſwer; when the Earl of Briſtol, a little to extenuate the Matter, ſaid the Articles were not intended by him as a Charge, but as an Information. Hereupon their Lordſhips, upon a fair Debate upon the Queſtion, did unanimouſly re- The Lords reject them. ſolve to declare their Concurrence with the Opinion of the Judges; and ſo the Contrivance of Overthrowing this great Man ſunk for the preſent. Yet this early Step to his Fall had gain'd very much of the deſign'd Effect, which was to make him leſs gracious with his Royal Maſter, leſs reſpected in the Houſes of Parliament, and leſs beloved by the People; and ſo gradually to become a more eaſy Prey, whenever his Enemies ſhou'd attempt to hunt him down.

6. Theſe Proceedings were not long finiſh'd, when the King, reſolving upon a Receſs, upon the 27th of July came to the Houſe of Peers, and being ſeated on his Throne, ſent for the Houſe of Commons, who had ſeveral Bills ready for the Royal Aſſent. The Speaker, in preſenting of them, thus handſomly addreſs'd himſelf to his Majeſty: 'The The Speaker's Speech to the King at the Prorogation. 'Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes of the Commons Houſe of Parlia-'ment, have, ſince their laſt Meeting, in many weighty and arduous Af-'fairs, preſented your Majeſty with their humble Advice; which with 'all Thankfulneſs they acknowledge, never wanted a moſt Gracious Re-'ception. Never any Prince did ſo freely commune with his People, 'and never any People did with more Joy and Duty commemorate their 'Happineſs. The laſt Seſſion of Parliament our Care was chiefly to ſe-'cure the Being of this Nation under our ancient happy Monarchical Go-'vernment: This Seſſion we have endeavour'd to advance the Peace and 'Well-being both of Church and State. Material Structures are beſt ſe-'cured by deep Foundations in the Earth; but the Foundations of true

1663. Car. 15 Ref. 4.

'Happineſs are from above: We have therefore in the firſt Place per-
'us'd the Laws, which enjoyn the Obſervation of the Lord's Day, and
'where we found any Defect, either in Rules or Penalties, we have with 'great Care ſupply'd them; well knowing, That he who doth not re'member on the firſt Day of the Week to obſerve a Chriſtian Sabbath,
'will hazard, before the Week comes round, to forget he is a Chriſti-
'an.— At the Opening of this Seſſion, your Majeſty was moſt graci-
'ouſly pleas'd to call upon us to prepare ſome Laws for the Prevention
'of the Growth of Popery; and we have heartily labour'd therein, both
'to prevent the Growth of Popery, and all ſorts of Sectaries and Non-
'conformiſts: But as the rankeſt Corn, and the fulleſt Ears are apteſt to 'be laid; ſo fares it in this Matter, theſe Fruits are not yet ready for
'the Harveſt. But we are confident, by the Wiſdom of your Majeſty's
'Government, and the Readineſs of your faithful Subjects to ſupport it,
'by the juſt and true Execution of the Laws, theſe Perſons will either
'be perſwaded to Conformity, or forc'd into a peaceable and orderly 'Converſation.' Then, in the Name of the Commons of England, praying for one Proclamation againſt Papiſts, Sectaries, and Nonconformiſts, and another againſt Profaneneſs, Debauchery, and Licentiouſneſs, he proceeded thus: 'And for the better ſecuring the Peace of the Nation a-'gainſt the united Counſels of all the Diſſenters to our Religion, and e-
'ſtabliſh'd Diſcipline, we have prepared an Additional Bill for the order-
'ing the Forces of the Kingdom; whereby your Majeſty's Lieutenants,
'and the Deputy-Lieutenants, will be enabled to train, diſcipline, and
'keep together ſuch a Party as will be able to prevent Diſorders, and
'ſufficient to check any Inſurrections, till the great Body of the Militia
'can come into their Aſſiſtance. During the late unhappy Wars in this 'Nation, our Neighbours Eyes were open to ſpy out all Advantages of 'ſpoiling our Trade, and to advance their own; but by the ſeveral good
'Bills here made ready for your Majeſty's Royal Aſſent, we hope we
'ſhall reſtore and encreaſe the flouriſhing Trade of this Nation. Great
'SIR, I have but one Word more, and that is by Command from your
'Majeſty's loyal and dutiful Subjects, the Commons of England: They 'have duly conſider'd the preſent unſettled Condition of this Nation, and 'the great Expence which muſt attend ſuch Diſtractions: And do hum-
'bly beſeech your Majeſty to accept an Aid from them, conſiſting of
'Four entire Subſidies; Two of which are to be paid by the firſt of No- 'vember next, and the other Two by the firſt of May next following.'

Upon the Finiſhing of this, and paſſing ſome Bills, of which ſeveral were not expreſly mention'd by the Speaker, the King made this following Speech to both Houſes: 'My Lords and Gentlemen, I thank you for 'the Preſent you have made me this Day; I hope your Countries will

'thank you when you come home for having done it. I am not conſci-
'ous of having brought the Streights and Neceſſities I am in upon my
'ſelf, by any Improvidence or Ill-husbandry of my own: I know the 'contrary, and I aſſure you, I wou'd not have deſir'd, or receiv'd the 'Supply you have given me, if it were not abſolutely neceſſary for the 'Peace and Quiet of the Kingdom, as well as mine: And I muſt tell
'you, it will do me very little Good, if I do not improve it by very 'good Husbandry of my own; and by retrenching thoſe very Expences,
'which in many Reſpects may be thought neceſſary enough. But you
'ſhall ſee I will much rather impoſe upon my Self, than you my Subjects;
'and if all Men will follow my Example in retrenching their Expences,
'(which it may be they may do with much more Conveniency than I 'can do mine) the Kingdom will in a very ſhort Time gain what you 'have given me this Day. I am very glad you are now going into your
'ſeveral

'ſeveral Countries, where your Preſence will do much Good: And I 1663.
'hope your Vigilance and Authority will prevent thoſe Diſturbances, Car. 15

'ing, and of which I aſſure you they promiſe themſelves ſome Effects
'this Summer. There have been more Pains and unuſual Ways taken
'to kindle the Old Fatal Fears and Jealouſies, than I thought I ſhou'd
'ever have liv'd to have ſeen, at leaſt to have ſeen ſo countenanc'd. I
'do deſire you, and conjure you, My Lords and Gentlemen, to watch
'this Evil Spirit and Temper with your utmoſt Care and Prudence, and
'ſecure the Perſons of thoſe whom you find poſſeſs'd with it, That the 'Peace of the Kingdom may not be ſacrific'd to their Pride, Humour
'and Madneſs.

'I did expect to have had ſome Bills preſented unto me againſt the
'ſeveral Diſtempers in Religion, againſt Seditious Conventicles, and
'againſt the Growth of Popery: But it may be you have been in ſome
'Fear of thoſe Contradictions in Religion in ſome Conſpiracy againſt the 'Publick Peace, to which I doubt Men of the moſt contrary Motives in
'Conſcience, are inclineable enough. I do promiſe you to lay this Buſi-
'neſs, and the Miſchiefs which muſt flow from theſe Licences, to heart;
'and if I live to meet with you again, as I hope I ſhall, I will my Self
'take care to preſent two Bills to you to that End. And as I have alrea'dy given it in Charge to the Judges, in their ſeveral Circuits, to uſe
'their utmoſt Endeavours to prevent and puniſh the ſcandalous and Sedi-
'tious Meetings of Sectaries, and to convict the Papiſts, ſo I will be as 'watchful, and take all the Pains I can, That neither the One nor the 'Other ſhall diſturb the Peace of the Kingdom. I ſhall not need to de-
'ſire you to uſe all Diligence in Levying and Collecting the Subſidies you 'have given me, and heartily wiſh the Diſtribution may be made with all
'Equality and Juſtice, and without any Animoſity or Faction, or Remem-
'bring any Thing that hath been done in the late ill Times, which you 'know we are all oblig'd to forget, as well as forgive. And indeed till
'we have done ſo, we can never be in perfect Peace; and therefore I can 'never put you too much in Mind of it. I think it neceſſary to make 'this a Seſſion, That ſo the Current of Juſtice may run the next two 'Terms, without any Obſtruction by Priviledge of Parliament: And 'therefore I ſhall prorogue you till March, when I doubt not but by 'God's Bleſſing we ſhall meet again to our joynt Satsfaction; and that 'you ſhall have Cauſe to thank me for what I ſhall have done in the In'terval.

Thus ended the Tird Meeting or Seſſion of the Second Parliament, which laſted five Months and above a week; in which Time, beſides the Subſidies, there paſs'd fourteen or fifteen Acts, of conſiderable Uſe to the Publick, as to Conveniency and Trade, but not of very great Moment in Hiſtory, and therefore not ſo proper to be inlag'd on in a Work of this Nature: Only we may remember that in this Parliament the Revenues of the Poſt-Office and Wine Licenſes, both improving, were ſettled upon his Royal Highneſs the Duke of York; by which he was enabled to keep a diſtinct Court, and gradually to obtain ſome Degree of Independence.

The End of the Third Seſſion of the Second Parliament.

7. Not long after the Breaking up of the Parliament, in the long Vacation, the King to divert Himſelf, and to oblige his People, reſolv'd upon a publick Progreſs into the Weſt, together with his Royal Conſort the Queen. He went from London to the Bath, and from thence through Gloceſterſhire to the Univerſity of Oxford; being preſented at Reading and Newbury with handſom Purſes of Gold. Coming towards Oxford, he was ſolemnly met half a Mile from the City by the Vice-Chancellor, Doctors and Scholars in all their Formalities; and entering the Suburbs, by the Militia of the City, through which he paſs'd from his firſt Entry to his Lodgings. During his Abode there, he viſited the Schools, where he was entertain'd with a magnificent Banquet; and his Son the Duke of Monmouth, now fourteen Years of Age, was formally incorporated into the Univerſity. He alſo touch'd above three Hundred Perſons for the Evil; and ſo, with great Impreſſions of Duty and Reverence left behind him, he returned to London in October, after a Progreſs of a little above five Weeks.

A new Plot diſcover'd in the North.

During this Progreſs, and both before and after it, there was a ſecret and dangerous Correſpondence carry'd on between the Zealots for Separation, and the Republican Party, to conſpire for the Advancement of the Good old Cauſe, and to take up Arms for the reſtoring it. The Place of Plotting was chiefly in the North, as being more remote from the Court, and nearer the Neighbourhood of Scotland, where they had their Agitators employ'd among the moſt violent of the Kirk-Men, as they had alſo in London, and moſt of the Counties in England. They had ſeveral Meetings in Yorkſhire, and particularly at a Place call'd Stan-houſe. They had an Oath of Secrecy among themſelves, which was ſtrictly obſerv'd for a Time; and they had agreed to riſe on the 12th of October, and gave Aſſurance to their Friends, 'That the Inſurrection wou'd be general; That White-Hall ſhou'd be ſecured; That 'Nottingham, Gloceſter and Newcaſtle ſhou'd be ſeiz'd for the moſt convenient Paſſes over the Severne, Trent and Tine; and Boſton in Lincolnſhire for a Sea-Port to receive Succours out of Holland, and other 'Foreign Parts. Their Pretences were to redeem themſelves from the Exciſe and all Subſidies; to re-eſtabliſh a Goſpel Magiſtracy and Miniſtry; to reſtore the Long-Parliament; and to reform all Orders and Degrees of Men, eſpecially the Lawyers and Clergy. In Order to this they printed a Sort of Declaration, or Call to Rebellion, beginning in theſe Words, If there be any City, Town or County in the three Nations that will begin this righteous and glorious Work, they may be aſſured, &c. according to which, a conſiderable Number of them appear'd in Arms at Farnley-Wood in Yorkſhire.

1663/4. But ſome of the principal Conſpirators having been diſcover'd and ſecur'd, and the Time and Places of Rendezvous known, the Militia were drawn out, and ſome regular Troops ſent into Yorkſhire, which took ſeveral of them up, and prevented the Execution of their Deſign. A ſpecial Commiſſion of Oyer and Terminer was ſent to York, in the midſt of Winter, for the Trying the Principal Leaders of them; moſt of whom were Conventicle-Preachers, or old Parliament Soldiers. It appear'd upon full Evidence, 'That the Plot had been on Foot two Years, carry'd 'on by a private Committee that ſat in London; that in July laſt they 'had Twelve Hundred Horſe in Readineſs in England; That they had 'a particular Deſign to unite all the Sectaries againſt the Government, and 'had propos'd Lambert and Ludlow for their Head; That the Riſing 'was to begin in Ireland, afterwards to follow in England, and then in 'Scotland. Walters, one of the Evidences, declar'd Who were to com-'mand in the Weſt-Riding, who in the Eaſt-Riding, and who in the 'North-Riding in Yorkſhire; who in Nottinghamſhire, Lancaſhire, and the their Conviction, the greateſt Part were executed at York, three at Leeds, and the reſt at their own Doors, and at other Places. Theſe ſeveral Tryals and Executions were all in the Month of January 166$\frac{3}{4}$.

The Infection of the Conſpiracy likewiſe ſpread Southwards; for in London they had retain'd a Printer to print their ſtrange Declaration; who, being taken up and found guilty, was drawn hang'd and quarter'd. Treaſonable Books, and Libels againſt the King and Government, were this Winter more than ordinary diſpers'd; and in February one John Twyn a Printer was condemn'd at the Old-Bayly Seſſions, for being concern'd in Printing a Treaſonable Libel, and was executed in Smithfield. Shortly after, Simon Dover Printer, Thomas Brewſter Bookſeller, and Nathan Brooks Book-Binder, were Indicted for Publiſhing and uttering Books written by Buchanan, Milton and others, in Juſtification of the Murder of the late King, and maintaining the Lawfulneſs of Subjects taking up Arms againſt their Soveraign, in Oppoſition to ſome late Acts of Parliament: Of which being found guilty, they were ſentenc'd to ſtand in the Pillory, pay each a Fine, and to remain in Priſon during the King's Pleaſure. Soon after there was an Account of ſeizing ſeveral of the reſt of the Northern Conſpirators; but we do not find that any more of them except Three ſuffer'd Death. Concerning the ſeveral Plots and Conſpiracies in the Beginning of the new Government and Eſtabliſhment, Ludlow and his Friends were ready to charge them upon the Government, as Sham-Plots and State Contrivances; but he ſeems to confirm this laſt, and plainly ſhew'd the Diſpoſition of Himſelf, and the Reſt of his Opinion: For he tells us, 'That about this Time, Summer 1663, their Friends 'in all Parts began to entertain Hopes they might be again employ'd to 'reſcue their Country from Servitude; and that in this Poſture of Affairs 'Colonel Algernoon Sidney, who had for ſome Time reſided in Italy, 'thought convenient to draw nearer home, that if any Opportuity ſhou'd 'offer, he might not be wanting in his Duty and the Publick Service, 'and ſo reſolv'd to Winter in Flanders. And paſſing through Switzer-'land, he made a Viſit to Ludlow and his Friends, then harbour'd there; 'and Staying with them three Weeks, he aſſured them of his Affection 'and Friendſhip, and no ways declin'd to own Them, and the Cauſe for 'which they Suffer'd. Others puniſh'd.

It is now Time to conclude the Year, after the uſual Manner, with the Death of ſeveral Perſons of the greateſt Note and Conſideration; and firſt we ſhall mention that of Dr. William Juxon, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, a moſt admirable and venerable Man, of whoſe Character and Fame, we have more than once taken Notice in the laſt Volume; Who, after he had happily weather'd the greateſt of all Storms, in Re- The Death of Archbiſhop Juxon, ward of his Wisdom, Honesty, and all other Excellencies, was advanc'd to this highest Station in the Church, in which he dy'd in Peace, Honour, and a good old Age; leaving his Body to be bury'd by that of Archbishop Laud, at St. John's Colledge in Oxford, which was perform'd by that University with a Pomp and Solemnity scarce inferior to that of Princes. His Death made way for the Translation of two great Men, Dr. Gilbert Sheldon from London to Canterbury, and Dr. Humphrey Hinchman from Salisbury to London. After this Prelate we may properly mention the Loss of two worthy Divines and eminent Preachers; the

Dr. Haywood,

First, Dr. William Haywood, educated in the University of Oxford, and successively made Chaplain to Archbishop Laud, and to the late good King, as well as Minister of St. Giles London, and Canon of Westminster: But being a true Loyalist, notwithstanding his great Learning, and mild and meek Disposition, he suffer'd a total Deprivation, Imprisonment, and other usual Calamities; till he recover'd all by the general Restoration, and dy'd in Peace and Happiness. The other was Dr. William Creed, educated in the same University; and, tho' he was a strenuous Defender of the Church of England in the most dangerous Times, he had the Happiness to escape much better than the former; and after the Restoration, upon the Account of his sublime Skill in Theology, he was not only made Arch-Deacon of Wilts, but also the King's Professor of Divinity in Oxford, in the Possession of which Honour he departed this Life. Besides these, this Year there dy'd two Judges that ought to be mention'd in History; as first, Mr. David Jenkyns, a Welsh-Man by Birth, and a Welsh Judge for many Years, who being a Person of great Abilities in his Profession, his Counsel was often us'd by the two great Attornies Banks and Noy; and being likewise of an invincible Courage, he became so strenuous an Assertor of the Rights of the King, the Laws of England, and the Liberties of the People, in the worst of Times, that, besides Imprisonments and other Hardships, his Life was often threatned, which he was always prepared to lose, with his Bible under one Arm, and Magna Charta under the other. Being now arriv'd at a good old Age, he peaceably resign'd his Breath at his own Estate in Glamorganshire.

Dr. Creed,

Judge Jenkyns,

Judge Forster,

The other Judge, who was of a higher Station, was Sir Robert Forster, an eminent Lawyer, who from one of the Justices of the King's Bench, became likewise a Sufferer in the late Times of Confusion, till at the Restoration he was made Lord Chief Justice of England: After which he became in a distinguishing Manner serviceable to the Publick in punishing the Felonies and other Outrages that proceeded from an old disbanded Army, and in restraining the over great Mercy of the King in his frequent Pardons granted to such sort of Criminals. After all these we shall mention two brave Men of the Nobility, who ought not to be forgot; the

The Earl of Portland,

first, Jerome Weston Earl of Portland, one of the Lords of his Majesty's Privy-Council, who acted and suffer'd so much for the King and his Royal Father; a Person of so many eminent Virtues, that for Largeness of Heart, Strength of Understanding, Candour, and Fidelity, with all other Characters of Honour and Greatness, he is believ'd to have left very few Equals behind him: Only we may except the other Person to be mention'd, which was Sir William Compton, the third Son of the late glorious Earl of Northampton, one of his Majesty's Privy-Council, and Master of the Ordnance; one of the most eminent Examples of Piety, Loyalty, Modesty, and Magnanimity, and briefly of all Virtues both Civil and Military, that this Age has produced. He left five heroick Brothers behind him, all Inheritors of their Father's Courage and Bravery, of whom the youngest afterwards took to the Gown, and was made Bishop of London.

XI. 1. The Noiſe of the late Plots and Conſpiracies had very much alarm'd the People, and not a little heated and exaſperated the Parliament, when both Houſes met, according to the Prorogation, on the 16th Day of March, after a Receſs of near eight Months. This was the fourth Meeting, or Seſſion, of the Second Parliament, which was open'd by a pretty long Speech, made by the King, which will be more informing to the Reader without any Abridgement; and therefore it is fully inſerted as following: 'My Lords and Gentlemen, You ſee, God be 'thanked, we have met together again at the Time appointed; and I do 'aſſure you, I have been ſo far from ever intending it ſhou'd be other-'wiſe, that I do not know one Perſon who ever wiſh'd it ſhou'd be other-'wiſe. Think therefore, I pray, what good Meaning thoſe Men cou'd 'have, who from the Time of the Prorogation to the Day of your Meet-'ing, have continually whiſper'd and induſtriouſly infus'd into the Minds 'of the People, That the Parliament ſhou'd meet no more; That it ſhou'd 'either be preſently diſſolv'd, or ſo continu'd by Prorogation, that they 'ſhou'd be kept without a Parliament. I pray watch theſe Whiſperers 'all you can, as Men who uſe their utmoſt Endeavours to ſow Jealou-'ſies between You and Me; and I do promiſe you they ſhall not prevail 'with me; and I do promiſe my ſelf they ſhall not prevail with you: And 'the Truth is, we are both concern'd they ſhou'd not; and we ſhall 'then, with God's Bleſſing, prevent all the Miſchief they intend.

'You may judge by the late Treaſon in the North, for which ſo many 'Men have been executed, how active the Spirits of many of our old 'Enemies ſtill are, notwithſtanding all our Mercy. I do aſſure you, we 'are not yet at the Bottom of that Buſineſs. Thus much appears mani-'feſtly, That this Conſpiracy was but a Branch of that which I diſco-'ver'd, as well as I cou'd, to you about two Years ſince; and had been 'then executed nearer hand, if I had not, by God's Goodneſs, come to 'the Knowledge of ſome of the principal Contrivers, and ſo ſecured 'them from doing the Miſchief they intended. And if I had not, by the 'like Providence, had timely Notice of the very Hour, and ſeveral 'Places of their Rendezvous in the North, and provided for them ac-'cordingly, by ſending ſome of my own Troops, as well as by drawing 'the Train'd-Bands together, their Conjunction wou'd have been in 'greater Numbers than had been convenient. You will wonder, but I 'tell true, they are even now in thoſe Parts, and at this Time, when they 'ſee their Friends under Tryal and Execution, ſtill purſuing the ſame 'Conſultations: And it is evident they have Correſpondence with de-'ſperate Perſons in moſt Counties, and a ſtanding Council in this Town, 'from which they receive their Directions, and by whom they were ad-'vis'd to defer their laſt intended Inſurrection. But thoſe Orders ſerv'd 'only to diſtract them, and came too late to prevent their Deſtruction. 'I know more of their Intrigues than they think I do; and I hope I ſhall 'ſhortly diſcover the Bottom: In the mean Time, I pray let us all be as 'watchful to prevent, as they are to contrive their Miſchief. I cannot 'omit upon this Occaſion to tell you, that theſe deſperate Men, as ap-'pears by ſeveral Examinations, have not been all of one Mind in the 'Ways of carrying on their wicked Reſolutions. Some wou'd ſtill inſiſt 'upon the Authority of the Long Parliament, of which they ſay they 'have Members enough willing to meet: Others have fancied to them-'ſelves, by ſome Computation of their own, upon ſome Clauſe in the 'Triennial Bill, That this preſent Parliament was at End ſome Months 'ſince; and that for want of new Writs, they may aſſemble themſelves, 'and chuſe Members for Parliament: And this is the beſt Expedient to 'bring themſelves together for their own Purpoſes. For the Long Par- 'liament, You and I can do no more to inform and compose the Minds 'of all Men; let them proceed upon their Peril. But methinks there is 'nothing done to disabuse them in Respect of the Triennial Bill. I 'confess, My Lords and Gentlemen, I have often my self read over that Bill;

'and tho' there is no Colour for the Fancy of the Determination of this 'Parliament, yet I will not deny to you, That I have always expected
'you wou'd, and even admired you have not consider'd the wonderful
'Clauses in that Bill, which pass'd in a Time very uncareful for the Dig'nity of the Crown, or Security of the People. I pray, Mr. Speaker,
'and you Gentlemen of the House of Commons, give that Triennial Bill once
'a Reading in your House; and then, in God's Name, do what you 'think fit for me, and your selves, and the whole Kingdom. I need not 'tell you how much I love Parliaments: Never King was so much be'holden to Parliaments as I have been; nor do I think the Crown can 'ever be happy without frequent Parliaments. But, assure your selves,
'if I did think otherwise, I wou'd never suffer a Parliament to come 'together by the Means prescribed by that Bill.

'My Lords and Gentlemen, I must renew my Thanks to you, for the 'free Supply you gave me the last Session of four Subsidies; yet I cannot
'but tell you, That the Supply is fallen much short of what I expected,
'or you intended. It will hardly be believ'd, yet you know it to be true,
'that very many Persons who have Estates of three and four thousand 'Pounds a Year, do not pay for these four Subsidies sixteen Pounds: So
'that whereas you intended and declared, That they shou'd be collected
'according to former Precedents, they do not now arise to half the Pro'portion they did in the Time of Queen Elizabeth; and yet sure the Crown
'wants more now than it did then, and the Subject is at least as able to 'give. The Truth is, by the Licence of the late ill Times, and ill Hu'mour of this, too many of the People, and even of those who make
'fair Promises, believe it to be no Sin to defraud the Crown of any thing
'that is due to it. You no sooner gave me Tonnage and Poundage, than 'Men were devising all the Ways they cou'd to steal Custom; nor can
'the Farmers be so vigilant for the Collection, as others are to steal the 'Duties. You gave me the Excise, which all People abroad believe to 'be the most insensible Imposition that can be laid upon a People: What
'Conspiracies and Combinations are enter'd into against it by the Brew'ers, who I am sure bear not that Burthen themselves, to bring that Re'venue to nothing, you may hear in Westminster-Hall. You have given 'me Chimney-Mony, which you have reason to believe is a growing Re'venue, for Men build at least fast enough; and you will therefore won'der that it is already declined, and this half Year brought in less than
'the former did. I pray therefore review that Bill; and since I am sure 'you wou'd have me receive whatsoever you give me, let me have the 'collecting and husbanding of it by my own Officers, and then I doubt
'not but to improve that Receipt, and will be cozen'd of as little as I can.

'I will conclude with conjuring you, My Lords and Gentlemen, to 'keep a very good Correspondence together, That it may not be in the 'Power of any seditious or factious Spirits to make you jealous of each 'other, or either of you jealous of me; till you see me pretend one 'Thing, and do another, which I am sure you have never yet done.
'Trust me, it shall be in no Body's Power to make me jealous of you.
'I pray contrive any good short Bills, that may improve the Industry of 'the Nation; and since the Season of the Year will invite us shortly
'to take the Country Air, I desire you wou'd be ready for a Session,
'within two Months or thereabouts, and we will meet next earlier in 'the Year. And so God bless your Counsels!

The

The Parliament proceeded with all Diligence and Unanimity, especially the Commons, who took three Things into their particular Consideration: First, the Triennial Act, made in the Year 1641, which had much debas'd, as well as diminish'd the Prerogative of the Crown: Next, the Dangers threatned from the late Plots and Conspiracies; which gave them both Occasion and Provocation to fall hard upon the Dissenters in general, who were look'd upon, and commonly believ'd to be too great Friends to those Insurrections: Lastly, the Injuries and Incroachments lately made by the Dutch, in which they had been incourag'd by the French Court, and had a Promise of Support and Assistance from it. As to the first Business, they soon agreed wholly to repeal the Act made in the Year 1641, and to make another in its Room, intituled, An Act for the assembling and holding of Parliaments once in three Years at least. In the Debate upon this Subject, they first took Care, and came to a Resolution, 'That there shou'd be no Clause of Coercion on his Majesty for 'the Calling of Parliaments, other than there is for the Execution of all 'other Laws.' Within a few Days they finish'd the Bill, of which the Preamble is to be remember'd, as following: Whereas the Act made, &c. is in Derogation of his Majesty's just Rights and Prerogative inherent to the Imperial Crown of this Realm, for calling and assembling of Parliaments, and may be an Occasion of manifold Mischiefs and Inconveniencies, and much endanger the Peace and Safety of his Majesty, and all his Liege People of this Realm: They therefore totally repeal'd the Act, and made another short Act, the Substance of which was, 'That 'the Sitting of Parliaments shou'd not be intermitted or discontinu'd a-'bove three Years at the most; and that within three Years after the 'Determination of the present Parliament, or of any other Parliament, his 'Majesty shou'd issue out his Writs for the calling and assembling ano-'ther Parliament.

2. This Bill having pass'd both Houses, on the 5th Day of April his Majesty came purposely to the House of Peers to give his Royal Assent to this alone; which he did with the following Speech, which we do not find in Print: 'My Lords and Gentlemen, You will easily believe that 'I have come very willingly to give my Assent to this Bill. I do thank 'you very heartily for your so unanimous Concurrence in it, and for 'your desiring me speedily to finish it. And if I understand any thing 'that concerns the Peace and Security of the Kingdom, and the Wel-'fare of my Subjects (all which I study more than my Prerogative, and 'indeed I consider my Prerogative in order only to preserving the other) 'every good Englishman will thank you for it: For the Act you have 'repeal'd cou'd only serve to discredit Parliaments, and to make the 'Crown jealous of Parliaments, and Parliaments of the Crown, and per-'swade Neighbour Princes that England was not govern'd under a Mo-'narch. It cou'd never have been the Occasion of frequent Parliaments. 'I do promise you, I will not be an Hour the less without one for this 'Act of Repeal; nor I am sure will you be the less kind to me in Parli-'ament. I do again thank you for your excellent Temper and 'Respect to me, and desire you so to proceed that the Session may be 'within the Time I proposed to you last. And I do assure you upon 'my Word, and I pray believe me, That I will have no other Thoughts 'or Designs in my Heart, but to make you all happy in the Support of 'the Religion and Laws establish'd: And if my own Wants and Necessi-'ties are at any Time grievous to me, it is only as I apprehend I may 'not be able sufficiently to provide for Those, and for the Peace and Reſolution of the Lords and Commons againſt the Dutch.

After this the Houſe of Commons proceeded to make Enquiry into the Obſtructions and Incroachments upon Trade, and more particularly thoſe of late made by the Hollanders, who, being incourag'd by the French, had made unexpected Advances. After much Time ſpent, both They and the Lords came to this grand Reſolution, viz. 'That the Wrongs, 'Diſhonours, and Indignities done to his Majeſty by the Subjects of the 'United Provinces, by invading his Rights in India, Africa, and elſe-'where; and the Damages, Affronts, and Injuries done by them to our 'Merchants, are the greateſt Obſtructions of our foreign Trade: And 'that the ſame be humbly and ſpeedily preſented to his Majeſty; and 'that he be moſt humbly mov'd to take ſome ſpeedy and effectual Courſe 'for Redreſs thereof, and all other of the like Nature, and for Preventi-'on of the like in Future: And in Proſecution thereof, they will, with 'their Lives and Fortunes, aſſiſt his Majeſty againſt all Oppoſitions what-'ſoever.' Upon this Occaſion both Houſes waited upon his Majeſty at the Banquetting-Houſe on the 27th of April, and the next Day received this following Anſwer in Writing: 'His Majeſty having conſider'd the 'Addreſs made to him by his Two Houſes of Parliament, is very well 'pleas'd with the great Zeal they have expreſs'd for the Advancement 'of the Trade of this Kingdom, and removing all Obſtructions which 'may hinder the ſame, being wholly convinc'd, That it is that which 'contributes moſt to the Honour and Glory of the Nation, and the Pro-'ſperity of his People: And therefore his Majeſty will examine and pe-'ruſe the particular Complaints, which have been repreſented to his Par-'liament; and thereupon, according to their Advice, appoint his Mini-'ſter at the Hague to demand ſpeedy Juſtice and Reparation from the 'States General, and alſo uſe his utmoſt Endeavours to ſecure his Sub-'jects from the like Violences for the Future: In the Proſecution of 'which, or upon the Denials of Juſtice, he depends upon the Promiſes of 'both Houſes to ſtand by him, and returns them his hearty Thanks for 'their frank Declaration therein.' For which Royal Aſſurance, both Houſes return'd their humble and hearty Thanks; and here was the Foundation, and the firſt Step towards the firſt Dutch War.

After this not much was done before the Prorogation, beſides the preparing ſome Bills hereafter to be mention'd, and more particularly that againſt all Diſſenters: Only we may juſt mention two things that gave ſome Conſideration to the Houſe of Commons; the Firſt was a Report from the Committee for Advancement and Improvement of Trade, which had lately laid open the Injuries and Incroachments of the Dutch; and having conſider'd ſeveral Expedients proper for that Occaſion, came to this Reſolution, 'That it is the Opinion of this Committee, That for 'the Encreaſe of Trade, the Houſe wou'd admit of a Bill for the Na-'turalization of all Foreigners, that ſhall take the Oaths of Allegiance 'and Supremacy, except Jews:' In which they wanted Time to come to a full Determination in the Houſe. The other Matter was more private, and concern'd the old Incendiary Mr. Prynne, who, by his great Officiouſneſs, fell a ſecond Time under the Diſpleaſure of this Houſe.

Mr. Prynne culpable.

The Complaint againſt him was, That after the committing of a Bill concerning Vintners, and the Retailers of Ale and Beer, he had alter'd the ſaid Bill in ſeveral Particulars. Being thus charg'd, he acknowledg'd his Error and Miſtake in altering the Bill, profeſſing That he did not do it out of any ill Intent, but to rectify ſome Matters miſtaken in it, and to make the Bill agree with the Senſe of the Houſe; for which he crav'd the the Pardon of the Houſe. Being order'd to withdraw, after a conſiderable Debate Mr. Prynne was call'd in, and the Speaker acquainted him, That the Houſe was very ſenſible of this great Error and Miſtake in ſo ancient and knowing a Member as he was, to break ſo material and eſſential an Order of the Houſe, as to alter, amend, or interline a Bill after Commitment, without Order, Knowledge, or Direction of the Committee: But the Houſe had conſidered of his Anſwer and Submiſſion, and were content at this Time, in Reſpect thereof, to remit the Offence. 1664. 3. Several Bills being ready, and a Prorogation deſign'd, on the 17th Day of May the King came to the Houſe of Peers, and being ſeated on the Throne, the Speaker of the Commons, Sir Edward Turner, made this following good Speech to his Majeſty: 'At the Opening this Seſſi- 'on, your Majeſty was pleas'd to recommend ſeveral things to the Care 'of your two Houſes of Parliament; which we deliberately conſider'd, 'and unanimouſly preſented our humble Advice thereupon. The firſt 'thing we took into Conſideration, was the Act made in the 16th of the 'late King of glorious Memory for Triennial Parliaments: When we 'had given it a Reading, we found it derogatory to the Eſſential Prero- 'gative of the Crown, of Calling, Holding, and Diſſolving Parliaments: 'We found it unpracticable, and only uſeful to learn the People how to 'Rebel; therefore we melted it down, extracted the pure Mettal from 'counterfeit and droſſy Allays, and then preſented it to your Majeſty to 'be new ſtamp'd, and made currant Coin for the Uſe of the Nation. 'We do return our moſt humble Thanks to your Majeſty, that you were 'pleas'd to accept our Advice, and to paſs our Bill; but more eſpecial- 'ly for thoſe gracious Expreſſions your Majeſty was pleas'd to uſe at that 'Solemnity, whereby we are aſſured not only of your Perſonal Affecti- 'on to Parliaments, but of your Judgment alſo, That the Happineſs of 'the Crown conſiſts in the Frequency of Parliaments. In the next Place 'we review'd the Act for Chimney-Mony, which we intended a great 'Branch of your Majeſty's Revenue, although by ſome Miſtakes it is fal- 'len ſhort: And in Hopes your Majeſty may improve that Receipt, we 'have prepared a Bill for Collecting that Duty, by ſuch Officers as your 'Majeſty and your Succeſſors ſhall from Time to Time think fit to ap- 'point.' The Speaker's Speech to the King at the Prorogation.

'Whilſt we were intent upon theſe weighty Affairs, we were often 'interrupted by Petitions, and Letters, and Motions, repreſenting the 'unſettled Condition of ſome Counties, by Reaſon of Phanaticks, Se- 'ctaries, and Nonconformiſts: They differ in their Shapes and Species, 'and accordingly are more or leſs dangerous; but in this they all agree, 'they are no Friends to the Eſtabliſh'd Government either in Church 'or State. And if the old Rule be true, Qui Eccleſiæ contradicit, non 'eſt pacificus, we have great Reaſon to prevent their Growth, and to 'puniſh their Practice. To this Purpoſe we have prepared a Bill againſt 'their Frequenting of Conventicles, the Seed-Plots and Nurſeries of 'their Opinions, under Pretence of Religious Worſhip. "The firſt Of- "fence is made puniſhable with five Pounds, or three Months Impriſon- "ment, and ten Pounds for a Peer: The ſecond Offence with ten Pounds, "or ſix Months Impriſonment, and twenty Pounds for a Peer; but the "third Offence, after a Tryal by a Jury, and the Tryal of a Peer by his "Peers, the Party convicted ſhall be tranſported to ſome foreign Planta- "tion, unleſs he lays down a hundred Pounds." Immedicabile Vulnus 'Enſe reſcindendum, ne Pars ſincera trahatur. We have had much 'Thought how to improve the Induſtry of the Nation, and prevent that 'Idleneſs and Licentiouſneſs which too faſt grow upon us, eſpecially by

'excessive and disorderly Gaming: Men are not content to sport away 'their precious Time, and play away their ready Mony, but to lose or 'pawn their Houses and Lands, their Manors, and their Honours also. 'For the Prevention of the Growth of this Disease, we have prepared 'a Bill to make Securities for Mony won at Play, whether Real or Personal, to be void.

'We have examin'd also the Reasons of the Decay of Trade: In the 'first Place we found our Merchants undermin'd by Fraud and Practice, 'and sometimes beaten out in the East and West Indies, in Turkey, and 'in Africa, by our Neighbours the Dutch, who, besides the unsufferable Indignities offer'd to your Royal Majesty, and the Crown of England, have in a few Years spoil'd your Subjects, to the Value of Seven or Eight Hundred Thousand Pounds. For Remedy whereof we have 'made our humble Address to your Majesty, and receiv'd a gracious 'Answer; and have no Cause to fear but a short Time will produce a 'just and honourable Satisfaction. The next Obstruction to our Trade, 'hath been a base degenerous Practice of some Seamen, who are willing to be robb'd by Pirates, that they may Share in the Prize: We 'have therefore prepared a Bill for the Punishment of such traiterous Actions, and for the just Reward of those honest Seamen that shall preserve their Owners Goods, and manfully maintain the Honour of the English Nation. Some other Discoveries we have made, which may be 'the Subject Matter of future Bills; but in Respect to your Majesty's 'Intimation of a short Session, we were not willing to attempt more 'than we cou'd reasonably dispatch. And now, Great Sir, give me 'Leave with Joy, to remember the Unparallel'd Unanimity that hath 'this Session attended our Counsels: Our Constancy and Resolution 'hath been try'd beyond the Precedent of former Parliaments, or any 'other Session of this Parliament. The Heathens were wont to observe 'and envy the Christians for their Unity and Love of one another, Ecce ut invicem se diligunt CHRISTIANI! And may the happy Correspondence between your Majesty, and your two Houses of Parliament, 'increase and grow to be the Envy of the World, till all your Majesty's 'Enemies are forc'd to cry, Ecce ut invicem se diligunt ANGLICANI!'

The King's Speech to both Houses.

In passing these Bills mention'd by the Speaker, the King made the following Speech to both Houses: 'My Lords and Gentlemen, I did de'sire and conjure you at the Opening this Session, that you wou'd keep 'a very good Correspondence together, that it might not be in the Pow'er of any seditious and factious Spirits to make you jealous of each O'ther, or either of you jealous of Me: And I desired you to be ready 'for a Session within two Months, or thereabouts. I must confess to 'you, you have comply'd very fully with me, for which I can never 'thank you enough: You have perform'd those good Respects towards 'me, and kept so very good Correspondence towards each other, that 'you have exceedingly disappointed those ill Men, who both at home 'and abroad had raised great Hopes and Expectations of new Troubles 'and Confusions. You have gratify'd me in all I desired, and are now 'ready for a Session within the Time proposed. This Harmony will, 'with God's Blessing, make us all esteem'd abroad, and secure at home; 'and these Obligations cannot but make me think the Time long till we 'meet again.

'This Season of the Year, and your own Affairs, will invite you into 'the Country; and your Presence there is of great Importance to my 'Service, and to the publick Peace. You will watch those unquiet Spi'rits which are still lurking, and ready to embrace all Opportunities to Second Parliament, which continu'd no longer than two Months and one Day; in which ſhort Seſſion, never was more Buſineſs done for the Time, nor with more Alacrity and Unanimity, ſince the Reign of Queen Elizabeth. This was the leſs expected upon two Accounts: Firſt the aſſiduous Endeavours of the Earl of Briſtol to raiſe a ſecond Storm againſt the Lord Chancellor; in which he was defeated by the Steadineſs of the Houſe of Peers. The other was the ſtinging Act againſt Conventicles, which did not only occaſion many Debates and Conferences between the Lords and Commons, but caus'd various Reſolutions in the King himſelf, who appear'd always more ready to oblige or eaſe the Diſſenters than the Houſe of Commons; who, upon the late Rebellion, thought nothing more beneficial to the Publick Peace than theſe new Severities.

liament it ſelf: ſo the King took timely Care to provide againſt the Storm by endeavouring for Alliances, and uſing all other proper Methods. And firſt he found it convenient to ſend a ſolemn Embaſſy into Spain, which he effected by Sir Richard Fanſhaw, a Perſon of great Worth and Experience, and equal to ſo high a Poſt. This Ambaſſador, upon his Arrival at Cadiz, and afterwards, was receiv'd with unuſual Pomp and Splendor, and treated beyond all Expectation, which gave great Hopes to the Engliſh Court; but theſe were gradually damp'd by the tedious Formality, and ſometimes by an unaccountable Coldneſs and Averſion that appear'd in the other of Spain; ſo that the Embaſſy had not all the deſired Effect, which was the Reaping ſome more immediate Advantage from that Court. The Spaniards appear'd diſpleas'd, and backwards in Treating, upon ſeveral Accounts: They were uneaſy not only for the new and ſtrict Alliance between England and Portugal, which had ſo much eſtabliſh'd the late Revolt, but alſo for the preſent Poſſeſſion of Tangier and Jamaica, and the irrecoverable Loſs of Dunkirk; all which made them the more ſtiff and dilatory in their Proceedings and Advances. The Court of England well knew France had reſolv'd to begin a War upon Spain, upon the immediate Death of his Catholick Majeſty; which being, by Reaſon of his Infirmities, much ſooner expected, the French had in two Winters provided extraordinary Magazines upon the Frontiers, to be ready upon ſo great an Occaſion. His Britannick Majeſty us'd all poſſible Means to prepare and diſpoſe the Spaniards with that Apprehenſion, and offer'd his Friendſhip to that Degree, as might be for the Benefit and Security of both Crowns: But Spain flattering her ſelf that France wou'd not break with them, at leaſt that they wou'd not give them any Cauſe, by raiſing any new Jealouſie in them, never made any ſuch Approaches as were agreeable with common Policy. Mr. Secretary tary Bennet in one of his Letters to the Lord Ambaſſador Fanſhaw thus expoſtulates, and ſtates their Caſe: 'Do they not ſee and feel their own 'Weakneſs? Have they not had Peace with all Chriſtendom beſides, on- 'ly to intend with more Vigour the Conqueſt of Portugal? What Pro- 'greſs have they made in it? Do they not ſee and feel the dying Condi- 'tion of their King, and the young, tender and uncertain Health of their 'Prince? Do they not ſee France with their Swords drawn, ready to in- 'vade them on all Sides? What Friends have they to ſtand by them? If 'the Emperor hath made Peace with the Turk, is there not a Fire alrea- 'dy kindled in Germany in their Diſputes.—— If, I ſay, to ſum up all, 'theſe Reflections do not awaken them, and oblige them to cultivate 'the King our Maſter's Friendſhip, it muſt be concluded ſome irreſiſtible 'Fate or Judgment attends that Monarchy, which their own Skill can- 'not divert.' Notwithſtanding this their Caſe, they wou'd not be induc'd this Year to finiſh any material Treaty, without the giving up of Tangier and Jamaica; and they were ſo Romantickly intent upon their firſt Deſigns, that the Ambaſſador Fanſhaw in his Reply tells the Secretary, that he found the Conſtant Poſition throughout his laſt Conference was, That his Catholick Majeſty, in Point of Honour, wou'd hazard all the Reſt of his Monarchy, rather than not atchieve the Conqueſt or Rendition of Portugal.

The Intrigues of France.

As to France, the King of England had at this Time but little to expect from that Court; tho' he ſent over the Lord Hollis as his Ambaſſador to endeavour to gain ſome Advantages there. The French King had of late profeſs'd great Friendſhip to the States-General, and had enter'd into a ſecret Alliance, and private Projects with Them, or rather the great Penſionary De-Wit, who then bore a mighty Sway in thoſe Provinces. That famous Miniſter of State, by reaſon of the Prevalency of a Party, or ſome other Inducement, had really joyn'd with the Intereſt of France againſt that of his own Country; in which he had proceeded ſo far as to enter into a moſt ſecret Correſpondence with the French King, and his reſiding Ambaſſador Count D'Eſtrades, an able Miniſter, and fit to carry on the Intriegues of his Maſter: From whoſe Memoirs we learn that, among other Deſigns and Inventions, they had form'd a remarkable Project, even in the Life of the preſent King of Spain, to divide Part of the Spaniſh Netherlands between the French King and the States-General, and with the Reſt to frame a Republick, to enter into Alliance with the United Provinces, as the Griſons are united to the Swiſs. By this, Cambray, St. Omer, Aire, all Artois, Bergue St. Vinox, Furnes and Newport, were to be added to France; and Oſtend, Bruges, with what is on the Continent, as far as l'Ecluſe, to the United Provinces: All which was to be concluded and effected by the moſt clandeſtine Ways imaginable. This Project indeed by degrees fell in Pieces, by reaſon of the Infirmities of the Spaniſh King, and once the Report of his Death, after which the King of France might expect greater Advantages in the Spaniſh Netherlands; yet ſtill ſo many Intriegues were carrying on betwen Him and De-Wit, that at this Time he had no Inclination to joyn in any Alliance againſt the United Provinces, where, by means of De-Wit's or the Louveſtine Faction, his Friends were ſo numerous and certain. So that he was ſo far from aſſiſting the Engliſh in the approaching War, that he ſeem'd more inclinable to joyn with the Dutch; tho' he generally declar'd for Peace, and more than once offer'd his Mediation in order to prevent a War. And it is obſervable that in one of his Letters to his Ambaſſador D'Eſtrades he has theſe Words: Whatever I ſhall reſolve on, it very much imports me, That the States be not born down, tho' I had no Treaty with them, becauſe the Power of England wou'd, by that Means, become too formidable at Sea.

5. Not-

5. Notwithſtanding the Diſcouragements the King of England ſuſtain'd for want of ſufficient Alliances and Support from Abroad, the Diſpoſition of the Parliament and People, together with the Inſtigation of ſome particular Perſons, made him willing to undertake and fall in with a War, which in a few Months became viſible, tho' ſtill not inevitable. His Majeſty had given his particular Inſtructions to his Ambaſſador at the Hague, Sir George Downing, who about the middle of May gave in a Memorial to the States-General, of the great Damages which the Engliſh complain'd to have Suffer'd in their Trade and Commerce by the Subjects of thoſe Provinces; which, in ſeveral Places, amounted to ſeven or eight Hundred Thouſand Pounds. This Ambaſſador is much complain'd of by the Count D'Eſtrades for his proud and inſolent Behaviour; and he was thought to be a great Promoter and Incendiary in the Quarrel between the two Nations. However it was, the States wiſely declin'd a preſent Anſwer, and paſs'd it over with a Promiſe of ſending their own Ambaſſadors to his Britannick Majeſty; which had the Appearance of a more ſolemn Reſpect, and, what was more intended, gave them the Opportunity of Deliberation and Delay. But the King, in the mean Time, to loſe no Opportunity, gave Orders for ſetting out a conſiderable Fleet, to ſecure his Subjects in their Freedom of Trade, and to vindicate the Intereſt and Honour of the Engliſh Nation. Sill he had one continual Misfortune attending him, the Want of ready Money: To ſupply this Defect, he ſent ſome of the Lords of his Privy-Council to move the City of London for the Loan of a Hundred Thouſand Pounds upon this extraordinary Occaſion. The Common-Council of the City, who were ſenſible of their Sufferings in Trade, readily comply'd with his Majeſty's Requeſt, and voted an immediate Supply of that Sum, which was to be repaid upon moderate Terms concerted with the Lord Treaſurer.

The King demands Reparation of the States of Holland.

In the mean Time, Sir George Downing, upon the dilatory Meaſures taken by the States, came over into England for more private and poſitive Inſtructions; and returning back, held ſeveral Conſultations with the Deputies of the States, and deliver'd in ſeveral Particulars of the Damages and Injuries ſuſtain'd by the Engliſh: For which he a ſecond Time demanded Reparation. The States had no preſent Inclination to a War, and leſs to anſwer the Greatneſs of theſe Demands; therefore they again declin'd giving any expreſs Anſwer, and artfully deferr'd all Propoſals of making Satisfaction. The King underſtood their crafty Deſign to be, the keeping him in Suſpence till they had got home their ſeveral rich Fleets of Merchant-Men; and therefore reſolv'd to intercept them in the Channel, by Way of Repriſal, without waiting the Ceremony of a declared War. The Heer Van Goch was ſent as an Ambaſſador from the States to endeavour an Accommodation, and had a ſolemn Audience of the King on June the 25th. His firſt Diſcourſe was upon the Affairs that concern'd the Eaſt and Weſt-India Companies of Holland: Upon which the King, among other Reaſons told him, 'That it was not 'to be ſuffer'd, That the Dutch Weſt-India Company, only by the Means of a 'few Forts and three or four Ships, ſhou'd pretend to render the 'Coaſts of Africa inacceſſible to all others, by blocking up the Havens, 'againſt their Commerce, and keeping them off, and driving them from 'every Place.' The Ambaſſador reply'd, 'That all Difficulties about that 'Affair were terminated by the laſt Treaty; and that it ought to be ex-'amin'd whether the Dutch had acted contrary to it;' and after that made his Complaints of ſome Hoſtile Attempts of Captain Holms on the Coaſt of Guiny. To which the King made him the ſame Anſwer he had 1664. Car. 16 Ref. 5. formerly done upon the like Subject, 'That he had not the leaſt Know-'ledge of that at preſent;' and ſo proceeded to complain of the great Naval Preparations that were making in Holland. The Ambaſſador anſwer'd, 'That theſe were chiefly for the great Convoys they were forc'd 'to allow their Merchant Ships, for the Security of their Commerce;' praying his Majeſty withal, 'That he wou'd give Order, as the States 'wou'd do on their Side, That Nothing might paſs between the two 'Fleets, that might interrupt the good Correſpondence ſetled between 'the two Nations.' Soon after the Ambaſſador preſented a Memorial concerning the extraordinary Naval Preparations in England, with a Renewal of ſome former Complaints againſt Captain Holms, and the Forbidding the Importation of Dutch Commodities into the Kingdom. The King gave the ſame Anſwer concerning Captain Holms; and that his forbidding the Dutch Commodities was upon the Account of a contagious Diſeaſe then reigning in Holland. Shortly after he wrote a Letter to the States, declaring his great Deſire to maintain the Peace; but then added, That he ſaw with great Regret, that they went not about to give any Satisfaction to the Engliſh for their Loſſes; and concluded with a Proteſtation before God and Man, That they wou'd be guilty of all the Inconveniencies, and fatal Conſequences, if a ſpeedy Reparation was not made.

The King's Answer to the States.

During theſe mutual Repreſentations, the French King by his Ambaſſadors at London and the Hague, preſented his Mediation in order to accommodate the growing Differences between theſe two Powers; which the United Provinces agreeably receiv'd, but England refus'd, till ſome Reparation was made: Which ſhortly after occaſion'd the Ambaſſadors of that Crown to return home ill ſatisfy'd. In the mean Time the Engliſh King made it his Buſineſs, and his great Pleaſure, to viſit his Docks and Ports in Perſon; and gave Orders for fitting and furniſhing a Fleet with all Expedition imaginable, to be under the Command of Prince Rupert, and to ſail for Guiny, if the Dutch Fleet under Admiral Obdam ſhou'd happen to paſs the Channel, and purſue their intended Voyage to thoſe Coaſts. Accordingly, on the 15th of October, Prince Rupert, with his Squadron of Sixteen Men of War, came to the Spit-head; and in the Beginning of November the Duke of York, Lord High Admiral of England, went down to Portſmouth; and joyning with the Prince and the Earl of Sandwich, took charge of the Fleet, and ſtruck ſuch a Terror upon the Coaſts of Holland, that Obdam was willing to lye ſtill with his Navy at the Goree, while the Dutch Bourdeaux Fleet, homewards bound with Wine and Brandy, fell moſt of them into the Hands of the Engliſh; and, together with other laden Ships, to the Number of above a hundred and thirty, were brought into the Engliſh Ports, and condemn'd for lawful Prizes by the Admiralty, tho' no War had been actually declared. This Proceeding was thought to be more arbitrary than was allow'd by the Law of Nations; and yet it muſt not be forgot that De Ruyter, the Dutch Admiral, did the ſame Year diſpoſſeſs the Engliſh of their Factories in Cape Verd, and the Iſle of Gogee, and committed other Hoſtilities, while there was all the Appearance of Friendſhip and Alliance. However, it is further Juſtice to obſerve, that this Way of Dealing was no Foreign Project, and Intrigue of the preſent Miniſtry, as ſome repreſent it, but it was the Voice of the Parliament and People of England, and eſpecially the Cry of all the great Merchants and Traders. The City of London was ſo fill'd with Reſentments againſt the Dutch for Engroſſing and Uſurping upon their Navigation and Commerce, that they not only lent a Hundred Thouſand Pounds upon this Occaſion, as is before remember'd; but, when the King wanted another like Sum ſhortly after, they advanc'd it with the ſame Freedom and Alacrity. 1664.

It is hard to determine the Juſtice, or exactly to ſtate the Caſe of a War beginning between two contending Nations who were Rivals, perhaps, more in Trade than Power; and whoſe increaſing Pretenſions and Complaints are not eaſily to be number'd. Yet it may not be improper to let the Reader know how the Caſe in ſhort was ſtated by Mr. Secretary Bennet to Ambaſſador Fanſhaw, in a Letter to him this Year, dated Sep. 29, in which, after other Matters, he proceeds thus: 'The Par- 'liament complains to the King, upon the Diſquiſition made by them into 'the Impediments to the common Trade of the Kingdom, That the Vi- 'olences and Depredations of the Hollanders had much prejudic'd it. His 'Majeſty anſwers them, That he wou'd enquire into it, and ſee Juſtice 'done. The Parliament thanks his Majeſty for it, and ſaith, That in the 'Proſecution thereof, they will ſtand by him with their Lives and For- 'tunes. This Compliment was accepted by his Majeſty with that Kindneſs 'it deſerved; but nothing further proceeded upon it, ſave the calling hither 'Sir George Downing, to be inform'd rightly of our Grievances. This, 'I ſay, was the only Thing done on our Side. Now ſee what they did 'on theirs: They preſently vote the ſetting out thirty Sail of Ships, and 'work Sundays and Holy-Days to make them ready with all poſſible Ex- 'pedition. Upon all this, may it not fairly be ſaid, If I diſpoſe my ſelf 'to ask a Man Satisfaction, in the Form agreed of, for Wrong done to 'me, and the Man betake himſelf to his Arms, draw his Sword, and 'cock his Piſtol; may it not, I ſay, fairly be ſaid, That the Man beha- 'ving himſelf ſo, is the Peace-Breaker, and War follow upon it, and not 'I? Is not the Peace broken till I have the Sword or the Piſtol ſhot in 'my Body? The Truth is, they are not only to blame in the Continuance 'of many Wrongs and Injuries done us heretofore, but in endeavouring 'thus violently to ſupport them; in which they are encourag'd by the 'great Power and Vogue the Eaſt and Weſt-India Companies have over 'that Government, being the principal Members of it, and who care 'not how dear it coſt the Publick, to maintain the Wealth of their Trade; 'which the Common People begin to ſee, and when they feel it a little 'more, will certainly mutiny againſt it. XII. 1. Thus ſtood the Affairs of England with Reſpect to Foreign Countries when the Parliament met again, according to Prorogation, on the 24th Day of November, after a Receſs of a little above ſix Months. This was the Fifth Meeting or Seſſion of the Second and Long Parliament; which was open'd by a very handſome Speech made by the King, which at this Time was harkned to with great Eagerneſs and Expectation; and, without any Abridgement, is as follows: 'My Lords and 'Gentlemen, When we parted laſt in this Place, I did not think we 'ſhou'd meet here again till November, though I prorogu'd you but to a Day 'in Auguſt: But muſt now tell you, that if I cou'd have ſuſpected, or 'reaſonably have imagin'd, that our Neighbours wou'd have dealt ſo un- 'neighbourly with me, and have forc'd me to make ſuch Preparations, 'as they have done, for my Defence, at ſo vaſt an Expence: I ſay, if I 'cou'd have foreſeen in Auguſt, that they wou'd have treated me thus, 'I ſhou'd not have prevented your coming together then. Yet truely 'I have Reaſon to be glad that it hath been deferr'd thus long: You have 'had Leiſure to attend your own Conveniencies in the Country, and 'the Publick Service there; and I have been able to let our Neighbours 'ſee that I can defend my ſelf and my Subjects againſt their Inſolence, 'upon the Stock of my own Credit and Reputation: And that when I 'find it neceſſary for the Good of my People, I can ſet out a Fleet to 'Sea, which will not decline meeting with all their Naval Power, even 'before the Parliament come together; which I am perſwaded if they 'had believ'd poſſible, they wou'd not ſo importunately have preſs'd me to it. 'I will not deny to you, I have done more than I thought I cou'd have 'done, which I impute to the Credit your Vote gave me, and to the 'Opinion all Men had, That I did what you wiſh'd I ſhou'd do, by bor-'rowing very liberally for my ſelf out of my own Stores, and by the 'kind and chearful Aſſiſtance the City of London hath given me, I have 'a Fleet now at Sea, Worthy of the Engliſh Nation; and, to ſay no more, 'not inferior to any that hath been ſet out in any Age; and which (if I 'may uſe all Freedom with you) to diſcharge to Morrow, and to reple-'niſh all my Stores, wou'd coſt me little leſs than eight hundred thouſand 'Pounds. What hath paſs'd between me and the Dutch, and by what 'Degrees, Accidents and Provocations, I have been neceſſitated to the 'Preparation and Expence I have made, you ſhall be told when I have 'done. I ſhall only tell you, that if I had proceeded more ſlowly, I 'ſhou'd have expos'd my own Honour, and the Honour of the Nation, 'and ſhou'd have ſeem'd not confident of your Affections, and the Aſ-'ſurance you gave me to ſtand by me on this Occaſion. That which 'I am now very earneſtly to deſire, and indeed expect from you, is, 'that you will uſe all poſſible Expedition in your Reſolutions, leaſt 'that by unneceſſary Formalities the World ſhou'd think that I have 'not your chearful Concurrence in what is done; and that you are not 'forward enough in the Support of it, which I am ſure you will be: 'and that in raiſing the Supplies you take ſure Order, that when the Ex-'pence is Obvious and Certain, the Supply be as Real and Subſtantial, not 'Imaginary, as the laſt Subſidies were, which you all well enough underſtand.

'Mr. Speaker, and you Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons, I know 'not whether it be worth my Pains to endeavour to remove a vile Jea-'louſy which ſome ill Men ſcatter abroad, and which, I am ſure, will 'never ſink into the Breaſt of any Man who is worthy to ſit upon your 'Benches, That when you have given me a noble and proportionable Sup-'ply for the Support of a War, I may be induced by ſome evil Counſel-'lors (for they will be thought to think very reſpectfully of my own Per-'ſon) to make a ſudden Peace, and get all that Mony for my own private 'Occaſions. I am ſure you all think it an unworthy Jealouſie, and not to 'deſerve an Anſwer. I wou'd not be thought to have ſo brutiſh an Inclina-'tion to love War for War's Sake: God knows, I deſire no Bleſſing in the 'World ſo much as that I may live to ſee a firm Peace between all Chri-'ſtian Princes and States. But let me tell you, and you may be confi-'dent of it, That when I am compell'd to enter into a War for the Pro-'tection, Honour and Benefit of my Subjects; I will, God willing, not 'make a Peace, but upon the obtaining and ſecuring thoſe Ends for 'which the War is enter'd into: And when that can be done, no good 'Man will be ſorry for the Determination of it. To conclude, My 'Lords and Gentlemen, I conjure you all, in your ſeveral Stations, to uſe 'all poſſible Expedition, That our Friends and our Enemies may ſee, 'That I am poſſeſs'd of your Hearts, and that we move with one Soul, 'and I am ſure you will not deceive my Expectation.

After his Majeſty had finiſh'd his Speech, he further declared to them, 'That he did intend the Lord Chancellor ſhou'd have made a Narrative 'concerning the Treaty and Manner of Proceedings with the Dutch; but the Chancellor being laid up with the Gout, he had caus'd the Narrative to be put into Writing, which being ſign'd by his Majeſty, was deliver'd to both Houſes. It is not improbable but that the Chancellor's Di-

Diſtemper at this Time was more Political than Real; and that he was willing to be abſent from Parliament at a Time when there appear'd ſo much Zeal for a War, to which he was always moſt averſe. He and the Lord Treaſurer Southampton ſeem'd much of an Opinion, and were ſenſible of the Miſchiefs that might happen to the Nation by entering into a War without proper Alliance with the Neighbour Princes. The King himſelf was not ſo heartily warm as ſome others; but his Brother the Duke of York, being prompted by his private Intereſt, as well as publick Courage, appear'd ſo vigorous, as ſeem'd much to have caſt the Scale in this Affair. How divided ſoever the Court was, the Parliament prov'd unanimous, and the very next Day after the King's Speech, both Houſes agreed in theſe two Reſolutions; Firſt, 'That the humble Thanks 'of both Houſes be preſented to his Majeſty for his moſt gracious Speech, 'and Narrative, to his two Houſes of Parliament, and his great Care 'of the Preſervation of the Honour, and Safety, and Trade of the Na-'tion, by his Preparations for the Defence thereof againſt the Dutch; and 'that his Majeſty wou'd give leave that his Speech may be printed. The next was, 'That the Thanks of both Houſes of Parliament be given 'to the City of London for their Forwardneſs in aſſiſting his Majeſty; and 'in particular, by furniſhing him with ſeveral great Sums of Mony to-'wards his Preparations for the Honour, Safety, and Trade of this Na-'tion.' This laſt was ſolemnly done by ſix Lords and twelve Commoners, who met with a Reception more ſplendid and pompous than cou'd well have been expected. At the ſame Time the Houſe of Commons let the King know, 'That they cou'd not ſufficiently expreſs their 'Loyalty and Affection to his Majeſty, nor the deep Senſe which they 'all had of the Injuries and Violations committed by the Dutch: That 'they had conſider'd the Burden of his Majeſty's Expences, and the 'Neceſſity of his Naval Preparations; and begg'd leave to aſſure him of 'their Readineſs and Conſtancy to yield him all the Duties of Aſſi-'ſtance and Obedience with their Lives and Fortunes: Accordingly they 'Reſolv'd, That five and twenty hundred thouſand Pounds Supply ſhall 'be raiſed for his Majeſty, in three Years, and apply'd towards the Main-'tenance of the Dutch War.' This was a Sum ſo great and unuſual at this Time, that it rais'd a Terror in Holland, and a Wonder in the Neighbouring Nations. Within three Weeks Time they went through the Ways and Means of raiſing this Sum, which at this Time was not eaſy to do; and ſo both Houſes adjourn'd till the 12th Day of January, and ſo had a ſhort Receſs of near a Month.

The great Reſolve of the Commons.

Immediately upon the Receſs, the King publiſh'd the following Declaration concerning Letters of General Repriſals: 'His Majeſty having 'taken into Conſideration the Injuries, Affronts and Spoils done by the 'Eaſt and Weſt India Companies, and others, the Subjects of the States 'of the United-Provinces, to the Ships, Goods and Perſons of his Sub-'jects, extending to their grievous Damages, and amounting to vaſt Sums; 'and notwithſtanding many and frequent Demands made by his Majeſty 'to the ſaid States for Redreſs and Reparation, yet none cou'd ever be 'obtain'd from them; hath, with the Advice of his Privy-Council, 'thought fit and order'd, That General Repriſals be granted againſt the 'Ships, Goods and Subjects of the ſaid States; ſo that his Majeſty's 'Fleets and Ships, and all other Ships and Veſſels commiſſioned by Let-'ters of Marque, or General Repriſal, by his Royal Highneſs the Duke 'of York, ſhall and may lawfully ſeize all Ships, &c. belonging to the 'States, or any of their Subjects, and bring the ſame to Judgment in the 'Admiralty-Court: And that the ſaid Court of Admiralty is hereby autho-'riz'd to proceed thereupon according to the Courſe of Admiralty, and Law

And ‘ further, that foraſmuch as by Order and Direction of his Majeſty many ‘ of the Ships and Goods belonging to the ſaid States, and their Subjects, ‘ have been already ſeiz'd, and remain now under Cuſtody; his Majeſty ‘ doth order and declare, That all the ſaid Ships and Goods ſo taken and ‘ ſeiz'd, &c. ſhall ſtand ſubject to the ſaid General Repriſals, and be pro- ‘ceeded againſt by the Court of Admiralty thereupon, according to the ‘ Courſe of Admiralty, and Laws of Nations, in final Judgment and ‘ Condemnation.

166⅘. 2. After a ſhort Receſs, and the ſumptuous Diverſions of Chriſtmaſs, the Parliament met again, and proceeded to the grand Buſineſs of the Nation: and the King having Notice of the Compleating the great Mony-Bill, upon the 9th Day of February he came to the Houſe of Peers, where Sir Edward Turner the Commons Speaker preſented him with the Bill, with the following Speech, which he pronounc'd with his uſual graceful Manner: ‘ May it pleaſe your moſt excellent Majeſty, The laſt ‘ Seſſion of this Parliament, the Lords and Commons did humbly pre- ‘ ſent unto your Majeſty the many Wrongs and Indignities done to your ‘ Majeſty, and the many Injuries done to your Merchants by the Subjects ‘ of the States-General of the United Provinces; and did moſt humbly ‘ beſeech your Majeſty That ſome effectual Courſe might be taken for ‘ Redreſs thereof. Your Majeſty at the Opening of this Seſſion was ‘ graciouſly pleas'd to acquaint your two Houſes, That in Purſuance of ‘ their Deſires, you had by your Agent required Satisfaction: But that ‘ Way prov'd ineffectual, and many freſh Provocations given, whereby ‘ your Majeſty was neceſſitated to a Warlike Preparation; by the ſpeedy ‘ Diſpatch whereof you had let your Neighbours ſee, That you cou'd defend ‘ your Self and your Subjects againſt their Inſolence, upon the Stock of ‘ your own Credit, before your Parliament came together. And now, Sir, ‘ give me leave to ſay; Your Neighbours may ſee, how a Great King may ‘ be made Greater by his Parliament. Your Loyal Commons after they ‘ had convened, did not ſuffer Four and Twenty Hours to paſs, be- ‘ fore they moſt chearfully gave your Majeſty more than Four and Twen- ‘ ty Hundred Thouſand Pounds.—Great Sir, Your Lords and Com- ‘ mons will not only yield Obedience with their Bodies, but with their ‘ Purſes alſo: In Token whereof I do, in the Name of all the Commons ‘ of England, preſent unto your Majeſty this Bill, whereby we have gi- ‘ ven unto your Majeſty a Royal Aid of Four and Twenty hundred ſeven- ‘ ty ſeven Thouſand and Five Hundred Pounds, to be paid in three Years ‘ by Twelve Quarterly Payments, to begin from the 25th of December ‘ laſt. And we do humbly beſeech your Majeſty to accept it as a preg- ‘ nant Demonſtration of our moſt unfeigned Duty and Thankfulneſs to ‘ your Majeſty.’ To which his Majeſty, in a ſhort Reply, ‘ Return'd ‘ his hearty Thanks, with a generous Aſſurance That the Mony ſhou'd ‘ be expended to the Advantage and Satisfaction of his People.

The Speaker's Speech at the Paſſing the Mony-Bill.

The Parliament having thus ſhewn the Senſe of the People by this Royal Aid, and the Hearts of the trading Part of the Nation being now entirely turn'd againſt the Dutch, the King order'd the drawing up a formal Declaration of War, ſign'd and approv'd the 22d of February, and is as follows: ‘ Whereas upon Complaint of the ſeveral Injuries, Af- ‘ fronts, and Spoils done by the Eaſt and Weſt-India Companies, and o- ‘ ther the Subjects of the United Provinces, unto and upon the Ships, ‘ Goods, and Perſons of our Subjects, to their grievous Damages, and ‘ amounting to vaſt Sums; inſtead of Reparation and Satisfaction, which ‘ hath been by us frequently demanded, we found that Orders had been ‘ given

The King's Declaration of War againſt the States of Holland.

'given to De Ruyter, not only to abandon the Conſortſhip againſt the Pyrates of the Mediterranean Seas, to which the States-General had invited us, but alſo to uſe all Acts of Depredation and Hoſtility againſt our Subjects in Africa. We therefore gave Order for the detaining the Ships belonging to the States of the United Provinces, their Subjects, and Inhabitants: Yet notwithſtanding we did not give any Commiſſion for Letters of Mart, nor were there any Proceedings againſt the Ships detain'd, until we had a clear and undeniable Evidence that De Ruyter had put the ſaid Orders in Execution, by ſeizing ſeveral of our Subjects Ships and Goods. But now finding by theſe freſh Injuries and Actings of theirs, and the Intelligence we have had of their great Preparations for War, and their granting of Letters of Mart againſt our People, that both our Forbearance, and the other Remedies we have us'd to bring them to a Compliance with us, have prov'd ineffectual, and that they are reſolv'd what they have done by Wrong, to maintain by Arms and War againſt us:

'We have therefore thought fit, by and with the Advice of our Privy Council, to declare, and do hereby declare to all the World, That the ſaid States are the Aggreſſors, and that they ought in Juſtice to be ſo look'd upon by all Men; ſo that as well our Fleets and Ships, as all other Ships and Veſſels that ſhall be commiſſionated by Letters of Mart from our dear Brother the Duke of York, Lord High Admiral of England, ſhall and may lawfully fight with, ſubdue, ſeize, and take all Ships, Veſſels, and Goods belonging to the States of the United Provinces, or any of their Subjects or Inhabitants within any of their Territories. And we do hereby command as well all our own Subjects, as advertiſe all other Perſons of what Nation ſoever, not to tranſport or carry any Soldiers, Arms, Powder, Ammunition, or any other Contraband Goods, to any of the Territories, Lands, Plantations, or Countries of the ſaid States of the United Provinces; Declaring, That whatſoever Ship or Veſſel ſhall be met withal, tranſporting or carrying any Soldiers, Arms, Powder, Ammunition, or other Contraband Goods to any of the Territories, Lands, Plantations, or Countries of the ſaid States of the United Provinces, the ſame being taken, ſhall be condemn'd as good and lawful Prize. And we do farther Declare, That whatſoever Ship or Veſſel, of what Nation ſoever, ſhall be met withal, having any Goods, Merchandizes, or any Number of Perſons in her belonging to the ſaid States of the United Provinces, or any of their Subjects or Inhabitants, the Whole being taken, ſhall be adjudg'd as good and lawful Prize. As likewiſe all Goods and Merchandizes, of what Nation ſoever, whether of our Own or of Foreigners, that ſhall be laden aboard any Ship or Veſſel that ſhall belong to the States of the United Provinces, or any of their Subjects, or any inhabiting with them, and ſhall be taken, the Whole ſhall be condemn'd as good and lawful Prize; except the ſaid Ship or Veſſel hath Ours, or our dear Brother's Letters of ſafe Conduct granted to them. And to the End that due Intimation and Publication of this our Declaration may be made, and publick Notice thereof be taken, it is our Will and Pleaſure that this our preſent Declaration be publiſh'd in due and uſual Form.' It is obſervable that tho' this Declaration was approv'd of by no leſs than Two and Twenty of the Privy Council, whoſe Names are plac'd in the Front, yet we find that neither the Chancellor Clarendon, nor the Treaſurer Southampton, were, or wou'd be concern'd in this great and difficult Affair.

The Speaker's Speech at the Prorogation of the Parliament.

3. Several Bills being got ready for the Royal Aſſent, and a Prorogation being reſolv'd on, the King came to the Houſe of Peers, where Sir Edward Turner, the Commons Speaker, preſented the Bills with the following Speech, which beſt ſhews the Nature of them. 'May it pleaſe 'your moſt Excellent Majeſty, The Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes of 'the Commons Houſe of Parliament, having in the Beginning of this 'Seſſion apply'd themſelves to the Aiding of your Majeſty in your Na- 'val Preparations, have of late conſider'd of ſome Bills that may be moſt 'grateful to the People, either in redreſſing things that are grievous to 'them, or in advancing their Trade and Commerce; which are the Life 'and Soul of the Nation. Evil Manners produce good Laws; but the 'beſt Laws in Time may grow obſolete: And ſuch is the wicked Nature 'of Man, that when he cannot by Force break through a Law, he will 'by Fraud and Tricks endeavour to evade it. I may with great Truth 'affirm, the Common Law of England is the beſt Municipal Law in the 'World; and yet if the Legiſlative Power were not ready to counter- 'mine the Works, and make up the Breaches that are daily made upon 'it, the Sons of Zeruiah wou'd be too ſtrong for us. We have now 'preſented to your Majeſty ſeveral Bills for the Regulation of the Law, 'which will ſerve to prune ſome exuberant Branches, and ſo pull away 'the Ivy that robb'd this Tree of her juſt Nouriſhment: And if your 'Majeſty be now pleas'd graciouſly to ſhine upon her, ſhe will flouriſh 'in great Abundance, to the Content of your Majeſty, and all your 'People.

'Coſmographers do agree, That this Iſland is incomparably furniſh'd 'with pleaſant Rivers, like Veins in the natural Body, which convey the 'Blood into all the Parts, whereby the Whole is nouriſh'd and made 'uſeful. Therefore we have prepared ſome Bills for making ſmall Ri- 'vers navigable; a thing that in other Countries hath been more experi- 'enc'd, and hath been found very advantagious: It eaſeth the People of 'their great Charge of Land Carriages, preſerves the High-ways, which 'are daily worn out with Waggons carrying exceſſive Burthens: It breeds 'up a Nurſery of Watermen, which upon Occaſion will prove good Sea- 'men, and with much more Facility maintains Intercourſe and Commu- 'nication between Cities and Countries. We have been very much af- 'fected with the Cries and Wants of the Poor this hard Seaſon, eſpeci- 'ally thoſe who are about this Town, who are ready to ſtarve for want 'of Fuel, the Price of Coals being ſo unreaſonably enhanc'd by the ex- 'torting Engroſſers. We have therefore, for their preſent and future 'Eaſe, prepared a Bill authorizing the Lord Mayor and Court of Alder- 'men of the City of London, and three Juſtices of Peace within the 'County, from Time to Time to ſet the Prices of Coals, having Regard 'to the Price paid by the Importer, and other emergent Charges. And 'now, Great Sir, having finiſh'd our preſent Counſels, we hope your 'Majeſty will give us Leave to return for a Time into our Countries, 'where in our ſeveral Spheres we ſhall be ready to ſerve you with our 'Perſons and our Purſes, and alſo with our Prayers to the great God of 'Hoſts, That he will be pleas'd to ſtrengthen your Hands in the Day of 'Battel, and make you Victorious over all your Enemies both at home and 'abroad.

The King's Speech.

In paſſing theſe Bills, the King, in a ſhort Speech, gave in ſpecial Charge to the Members of the Houſe of Commons, 'That upon their Return 'into their reſpective Countries, they wou'd as well make it their Buſi- 'neſs to ſee the Supply, they had now granted this Seſſion, Equally laid 'upon Particulars, that there might be no Cauſe of Complaint; as he both Houſes till the 21ſt of June, then to the Firſt of Auguſt, and laſtly to the 9th of October. Thus ended the Fifth Seſſion of the Second and Long Parliament, after it had continu'd Three Months and Six Days, to the ſingular Satisfaction of the King and People at home, and to the Terror of ſome, and the Wonder of other neighbouring Nations abroad.

The End of the Fifth Seſſion of the Second Parliament.

4. During this Parliament there began a very extraordinary Change in the Liberties and Properties of the Clergy of England, by altering the Way of Taxing themſelves as formerly, and being tax'd in Common with the People in Parliament. It is to be obſerv'd, that by the Original Conſtitution of the Nation, the Lords Spiritual and Prelates and Clergy were eſteem'd one of the Three Eſtates of the Realm, and therefore met in Convocation on the Civil Account of Giving their own Money, and Securing their own Secular Rights and Liberties. This Right of Taxing themſelves, and of not being Tax'd by Parliaments, had been inviolably obſerv'd before, as well as after the Reformation; only with this ſmall Difference, that after the Reformation, their Grants of Subſidy, for the more Certainty of collecting of them, were uſually confirm'd by Acts of Pa liament; and yet they gave Benevolences as formerly, to be levy'd and paid according to Rules and Conſtitutions of their own Making. The Rebellion in the late Reign, and the following Uſurpations, were the firſt that broke in upon this peculiar Priviledge: For the Miniſters of thoſe Times, either out of voluntary Compliance, Affectation of Popularity, or for Want of Proxies to repreſent their Body, had their Benefices tax'd with the Laity, in the pretended Parliaments. But at the King's Reſtoration, this ancient Right of the Church was recover'd with him; and thus the Matter continu'd for the firſt four Years. But now, as it appear'd, ſome of the Biſhops and Clergy fell into Sentiments very different from thoſe of their Predeceſſors. They began to think this cuſtomary Method of Taxing Themſelves, ſomewhat burthenſom: They probably thought the Expectations of the Court might be ſet too high upon them this Way; and that the Commons were often diſcontented, unleſs they over-charg'd themſelves, and ſwell'd their Subſidies beyond a reaſonable Proportion. We ſhall not examine how well theſe Jealouſies were founded; but it is ſaid, That the Apprehenſion of theſe and other Inconveniences, brought Archbiſhop Sheldon, and ſome other leading Prelates, into a Concert with Chancellor Clarendon, Treaſurer Southampton, and ſome others of the Miniſtry. And now at a Conſultation it was concluded, That the Clergy ſhou'd ſilently wave the ancient Cuſtom of Taxing their own Body, and ſuffer themſelves to be included in the Money Bills prepared by the Houſe of Commons: And to encourage their Aſſent to this Ceſſion, Two of their four Subſidies, they had granted laſt Year, were to be remitted; and over and above, they had the Promiſe of a Clauſe For Saving their Ancient Rights.

A great Change in the Rights of the Clergy.

This being comply'd withal, the Security was accordingly given, and a very clear comprehenſive Proviſo inſerted in the Act for Ganting a Royal Aid unto the King's Majeſty, which ought not to be forgot. It ſtands thus; 'Provided always, and be it enacted by the Authority afore-'ſaid, That all Spiritual Promotions, and all Lands, Poſſeſſions or Re-'venues annex'd to, and all Goods and Chattels growing, or renew'd 'upon the ſame or elſewhere, appertaining to the Owners of the ſaid Spi-'ritual Promotions, or any of them, which are or ſhall be charg'd, or 'made contributing to this Act towards the Payment aforesaid, during 'the Time therein appointed (which was to be rais'd, levy'd and paid 'in the Space of Three Years) shall be absolutely freed and discharg'd 'from the two last of the four Subsidies granted by the Clergy to his 'Majesty, his Heirs and Successors, by an Act made in the former Ses- 'sion of this present Parliament, Entituled, An Act for confirming of 'four Subsidies granted by the Clergy, any Clause or Thing in the said 'Act to the contrary notwithstanding.—Provided always, That Nothing 'herein contain'd, shall be drawn into Example to the Prejudice of the 'Ancient Rights belonging unto the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, or 'Clergy of this Realm, or unto either of the said Universities, or unto any 'Colledges, Schools, Alms-Houses, Hospitals, or Cinque-ports. Not- withstanding this Saving Proviso, which has expresly secured all Rights, the Clergy seem'd to have acquiesc'd for the future, and never after re- assum'd their great Claim; and from this Time, during the whole Reign, the Convocation met principally for Form Sake. The Parochial Clergy however gain'd one Priviledge, which they had not before, which was their Voting for Members of the House of Commons: But whether they were Gainers or Losers in the Whole, has been a Matter of some Dispute; yet we think a little Consideration may determine whether the Gaining of the latter Priviledge be a full Compensation for the Waving, if not the Losing the Former.

The War proclaim'd against the Dutch.

Within two Days after the Breaking up of the Parliament, March 4, the King's Declaration against the Dutch was publickly read and proclaim'd by the several Heralds and Serjeants in Westminster and London, after a very pompous and solemn Manner. And thus England, after it had a breathing Time of less than five Years, was involv'd in a very hazardous and expensive War.

And here we shall conclude both the Year, and the Period, with the Deaths of a few eminent Persons, who ought not to be altogether forgotten in History; and first we shall mention a great Prelate, Dr. Accepted Frewen, Archbishop of the Province of York, a Person educated in Oxford, and made President of Magdalen Colledge in that University, where he shew'd himself a particular Friend to Archbishop Laud. By Reason of his Parts and Abilities he was appointed to attend the late King, when Prince of Wales, in his Courtship in Spain, always shewing himself a general Scholar and a good Orator; by which Endowments he rais'd himself through several Preferments, and particularly the Bishoprick of Litchfield and Coventry, to the high Station in which he dy'd, and where he left a worthy Character behind him. He was succeeded by an eminent Man, Dr. Richard Sterne, Bishop of Carlisle. Next to him we shall take Notice of two great Divines of the Church of England, Dr. John Barwick, and Mr. Jeremy Stephens: The former was a Westmoreland Man, educated in, and made Fellow of St. John's Colledge in the University of Cambridge, and after that Prebendary of the Church of Durham; out of both which he was ejected, and, notwithstanding his pious Behaviour, us'd with inhuman Barbarities: All these he bore with a noble Constancy, and still kept an uninterrupted Correspondence with Chancellor Hyde beyond the Seas, and was not only very assisting to the Necessities of the King in his Exile, but was particularly instrumental in the Restoration it self; for which, after the King's Return, he was rewarded first with the Deanery of Durham, and then with that of St. Paul's, in which Preferment he left the World, when he had a just Expectation of something still greater. He was succeeded by Dr. William Sancroft, afterwards Archbishop of Canterbury. The next, Mr. Stephens, was a learned Oxonian by Education, who, after no very long

He was remarkably diſtinguiſh'd for his learned Skill in Antiquities, and was intimately acquainted and highly aſſiſting to the famous Sir Henry Spelman, in his Volume of the Councils, his Hiſtory of Sacriledge, and other Works of great Value: Upon the King's Return, he was reſtored to his Livings, but met with no further Reward than a Prebendary of Salisbury. In the next Place we ought not to forget one of the other Sex, Mrs. Catharine Philips, a marry'd Lady or Widow, whoſe Maiden Name was Fowler, but moſt commonly and very juſtly call'd The matchleſs ORINDA; a Perſon of that admirable Merit and Reputation for Poetry, that ſhe is believ'd to have equall'd at leaſt the Poeteſſes of Antiquity, the Lesbian Sappho and the Roman Sulpitia; and her Memory has been celebrated by the moſt eminent Poets of the Age, the great Earls of Orrery and Roſcommon, the incomparable Cowley, the ingenious Flatman, and others, who ſeem to have exhauſted their own Wit in the diſplaying of hers. This moſt excellent Lady, after ſome Removals and Travels, returning to her native City of London, was ſuddenly ſnatch'd away by the Small-Pox in the 31ſt Year of her Age, to the mighty Regret of great Numbers of her Admirers.

I. 1. FROM the Concluſion of the Pyrenean Treaty, and the King's glorious Reſtoration, for about five Years, there was a general and profound Peace throughout all Chriſtendom, except only the Remainder of a feeble War between Spain and Portugal; but now, in the Year 1665, a Fire broke out between England and Holland, which, before it cou'd be extinguiſh'd, threatned the Repoſe of many Nations. Something has already been ſaid concerning the Juſtice of this War, and of the Complaints and Provocations on both Sides. As to the latter, nothing ſeem'd to have made a more ſenſible Impreſſion upon the Engliſh than the Proceedings of De Ruyter, who deſerting the common Cauſe againſt the Pirates in the Mediterranean, had made great Depredations upon the Engliſh in Guiney, Barbadoes and Long-Iſland, tho' not with equal Succeſs; ingloriouſly beginning a Piratick War under the ſacred Bands of Friendſhip and Alliance. Upon which Proceedings the Hollanders took Occaſion to inſult the Engliſh for the Loſſes brought upon them by ſuch Treachery: For a Dutch-Man in London, pretending himſelf to be a Swede, lately come from Guiney, made it his profeſs'd Buſineſs and Pleaſure to report the utter Deſtruction of the Engliſh in thoſe Coaſts by De Ruyter; for which Inſolence he was, in the

The Firſt DUTCH WAR.

1665. Car. 17 Ref. 5.

Beginning of the Year, whipp'd through the Streets of London, both as an Impoſtor and an open Enemy.

It begins with a Paper War.

All the while the States General affected to be ſilent, and ſeem to hope to decline the Imputation of being the real Aggreſſors; tho' both their Orders, and the Execution of them, ſufficiently diſcover'd, That they did not wait to be on the Defenſive Side. When they were charg'd by the Engliſh Ambaſſador with many Inſtances of their Violation of their Faith and Honour with that Nation, they ſo far deſcended as to publiſh a diſingenuous Libel, entituled, An Extract of the Memorials of the States General of the United Provinces, upon the Memorial of Sir George Downing, Envoy Extraordinary of the King of Great Britain. In which there appear'd ſo many Invectives againſt the King, and ſo many Aſperſions upon the Engliſh Nation, that it put Sir George upon the Neceſſity of a Printed Vindication. And the States, as if intending no more than a Paper War, contented themſelves with Publiſhing a Second Libel call'd, A ſummary Obſervation and Deduction deliver'd by the Deputies of the States General, upon the Memorial of Sir George Downing, Envoy, &c. But when they ſaw the Engliſh, upon Denial of Satisfaction, to be in earneſt and reſolute as to a War, they ſent away Monſieur Beuninghen to lay their Condition, and the Proſpect of a Rupture, before the King of France, who gave them ſeveral Promiſes of his Favour and Protection, which were particularly grounded upon a ſecret Treaty between them in the Year 1662. And yet, to take Advantage of their Neceſſities, he order'd his Ambaſſador in Holland to demand the full Reſtitution of two very conſiderable Eaſt-India Ships, formerly taken from his Subjects; to which they were forc'd to yield with great Difficulty and Struggle, as at large appears in the Count D'Eſtrades Memoirs.

Encouragements given to the Dutch.

They had certainly great Expectations from the encreaſing Power of the French King, who had for ſeveral Years held a ſecret and diſreputable Correſpondence with their grand Penſionary De Wit. This great Man, being the Head of the Louveſtine Faction, and a mortal Enemy to the Pretenſions of the Naſſaw Family in Holland, carry'd on ſome unjuſtifiable Meaſures to ſupport his Deſigns; and having, by his great Parts and indefatigable Induſtry, gain'd a mighty Authority in Holland, he became the greateſt Obſtacle to all Terms of Reconciliation, and the chief Promoter of the Hatred between his Country-Men and the Engliſh; in all which he ſeem'd tranſported by an unwarrantable Zeal and Jealouſy for the Liberty of the Common-Wealth. The Dutch being by his Party gradually rous'd, they proceeded to that Arrogance, as to give it out among the People, 'That the Affairs of England were in ſuch an ill Poſture, that the Civil War being lately ended, they had not Mony ſufficient to make War abroad; and that the King was as yet ſo inſecurely eſtabliſh'd in his Government, that he cou'd not revenge the Injuries of Foreigners: That it was not ſafe for him to truſt Arms in the Hands of his Subjects, which afterwards they might be unwilling to lay down. That the Engliſh were not now the ſame formidable Enemies as the Dutch had found them under the Rump-Parliament; and that the warlike Fierceneſs of the Nation was gone off with the Sectarians, and that none remain'd amongſt them but a Company of ignorant Cowards: That there were a great many Diſſenters in England, who probably wou'd fight for the Dutch againſt the King, or at leaſt wou'd not fight for him againſt thoſe who were for Liberty of Conſcience.' Nor were there wanting a great many Engliſh Fugitives among the Hollanders, who made it their Buſineſs to cauſe theſe falſe Reports to be more credited among the People. However their Spirits were rais'd and inſtigated, the Things being in this Forwardneſs, on the latter End of March, his Royal Highneſs the Duke of York, animated with the Love of Fame, ſet out, with a glorious Attendance, to go on Board the Engliſh Fleet; which being now ready to Sail, a proper and pious Care was taken to compleat the Preparation by an Order for a General Faſt to be obſerv'd on April the 5th, To implore the Bleſſing of God upon his Majeſty's Forces employ'd againſt the Dutch. And it is obſervable, that the Queen-Mother and the Queen Conſort did both eminently manifeſt their Zeal on this Occaſion; and, by expreſs and particular Appointment, commanded all their Domeſticks to ſet themſelves apart with entire Abſtinence and extraordinary Devotions for the Service of the Day. When the Duke went on board, the Dutch were not ready to come forth; and at preſent did not ſeem in earneſt for a War: They were then ſolliciting for the Mediation of the French King; who, apprehending the Naval Power of England, accordingly ſent Meſſieurs Venevel and Courtine his Ambaſſadors Extraordinary, to the Engliſh Court, who arriv'd at London April the 6th in great State and Magnificence. Their Buſineſs was to interpoſe, and make an Accommodation between England and Holland, and particularly repreſented to the King 'The great Inconveniencies that wou'd 'happen if he carry'd on the War, or by immoderate Demands drove a 'State to Deſpair, which had great Reſources as to Mony, and had pow-'erful Friends engag'd to defend her, who wou'd not let her periſh if 'ſhe cou'd not ſupport her ſelf by her own Forces.' Several Propoſitions were made, but none prov'd acceptable to either Party at this Time; and indeed the Dutch themſelves were at preſent ſo ſtiff, that the French Ambaſſador D' Eſtrades wrote thus to his Maſter, 'It were to be wiſh'd 'that ſome ill Succeſs wou'd happen to the States, to make them more 'ſupple, and readier to give up ſome Things in order to procure an Ac-'commodation.' In the mean time all that they cou'd do for a while, was to enlarge their Embargo upon the Engliſh, and to provide, That none of the Subjects of that State ſhou'd inſure any Goods belonging to the Subjects of the King of England, and to prevent all Neuters to carry contra-band Goods to any of the Dominions of his Britannick Majeſty.

2. The opening of the War happen'd in May, when ſome of the Engliſh Cruſers began with good Succeſs, and took three Dutch Frigates; the firſt a Caper of ſeven Guns, and forty ſeven Men; the other two were Direction Ships; one of thirty two Guns and eighty Men, taken by the Diamond, in which Captain Golding, a brave Officer, loſt his Life; the other of twenty two Guns and ſixty Men, taken by the Yarmouth, after a ſtout Reſiſtance. One of theſe Direction Ships was commanded by young Everts, whom the Duke treated with ſingular Courteſy, and the King generouſly gave him his Liberty, and a hundred Pounds to carry him home, as an Acknowledgment for the good Offices he had formerly receiv'd from his Father in Holland. In the mean Time the Duke of York, with ſeveral of the Nobility, ſet ſail with the Royal Fleet of England, conſiſting of a hundred and ſeven Men of War, and fourteen Fireſhips, &c. divided into three Squadrons: The Firſt, under the Red Flag, was commanded by the Duke himſelf, Pen and Lawſon: The ſecond, being the White Squadron, was under the Conduct of Prince Rupert, Minns and Sanſon: And the third, which was the Blue Squadron, was commanded by the Earl of Sandwich, Cuttins and Sir George Ayſcough. With this formidable Navy the Duke of York ſtood off the Coaſts of Holland, before the Dutch ſo much as appear'd; and coming before

All this Daring of the Engliſh cou'd not draw out the Enemies Fleet; and therefore, after the taking many rich Merchant-Men in the Mouth of their Rivers and Ports, and meeting with ſome tempeſtuous Weather, the Duke ſet Sail for the Engliſh Coaſts. The Dutch took that Advantage and Opportunity of coming out, and by the 29th of May appear'd about the Dogger-Sands with their whole Fleet, divided into ſeven Squadrons: The firſt was under Admiral Opdam, the ſecond under John Everts, the third under Cortenaar, the fourth under Stillingwerf, the fifth under Cornelius Tromp, the ſixth under Cornelius Everts, and the ſeventh was under Schram; the whole amounting to a hundred and three Men of War, eleven Fireſhips, ſeven Yatches, with Tenders. By the Duke's retiring from the Coaſts of Holland, the Enemy took the Advantage of intercepting the Engliſh Hamburgh Fleet, who had ſent to the Duke, lying before the Texel, for a Convoy, which was diſpatcht to them: And bringing them along the Holland Coaſts, when the Duke was ſail'd away, and unhappily miſſing of the Roe-Ketch, which he had ſent to meet them, and give them Notice of his Removal, they fell in with a Squadron of the Dutch ſent out purpoſely to attend their coming, and were moſt of them taken.

The News of this rous'd the Duke of York, who reſolv'd to loſe no Time in meeting the Enemy; and on the 2d of June, not far from the Coaſt of Harwich, the two greateſt Naval Powers in the World began to face each other; which was both a glorious and a terrible Sight. The Dutch, tho' they had the Advantage of the Wind, declin'd the preſent Engagement, as ſomething ominous, becauſe juſt that Day twelve Years, Admiral Monk had given them ſo remarkable an Overthrow. The next Day, very ſoon in the Morning, the Battel began with dreadful Thundrings on both Sides, loudly reſounding through all the neighbouring Shores. After they had fired at ſome Diſtance, they came to a cloſe Fight, which for ſome Time was carry'd on with great Fury on both Sides. The Duke of York and Admiral Opdam fell Side to Side into a fierce and cloſe Ingagement, with all imaginable Bravery; in which the Duke ply'd him ſo ſharply, that he not only overpower'd him, but ſo beat his own Fire upon him, that his great Ship, himſelf and his Men were all with a prodigious Concuſſion blown up into the Air. This threw the Dutch into a great Conſternation, and a ſignal Victory follow'd on the Engliſh Side, who took eighteen Capital Men of War, and ſunk and fired about fourteen more, with the Loſs of only one of theirs, the Charity, which had been before taken from the Enemy. We have good Reaſon to believe, that the Fleet had been totally deſtroy'd, had not one Mr. Brunkard, of the Duke's Bed-Chamber, prevented the Execution of his Orders the very Night after the Victory: It ſeems the Duke, having given Orders to make all Sail, and purſue the Remainder of the broken Navy, and having laid down to take a little Reſt, that Gentleman took the Liberty to tell Sir John Harman the Captain he was too laviſh in expoſing the Heir of the Crown, and counterfeited a new Order from him for ſlackning Sail, to which the other unadviſedly conſented; for which Brunkard was afterwards tax'd in the Houſe of Commons. The Loſs of the Dutch was computed at eight thouſand Men kill'd, or taken Priſoners; that of the Engliſh was much leſs than a thouſand, of whom about ſixty were in the Duke's Ship: Indeed they loſt ſeveral brave Men of Quality and Courage; the Earl of Falmouth, the Lord Murkerry, and the honourable Mr. Boyl, fell all three by one Cannon Shot, ſo near the Perſon ſon of the Duke, that he was almoſt cover'd with their Blood and Brains, while he himſelf gave an Example of the greateſt Courage and Conduct. The Earl of Portland, the Earl of Marlborough, and Reer Admiral Sanſon, were kill'd in the Fight, and Sir John Lawſon ſoon after dy'd of his Wounds. Of theſe, the renowned Earl of Marlborough diſtinguiſh'd himſelf both in his Valour and his pious Diſpoſition, which he particularly manifeſted in a Letter to Sir Hugh Pollard ſome time before the Battel; in which he nobly vindicated Religion againſt all Infidels and Atheiſts, and proteſted that what he wrote proceeded from no fantaſtick Terror of Mind; and in Concluſion has theſe Words, Dear Sir Hugh, let us be more generous than to believe we die as the Beaſts that periſh; but, with a Chriſtian, Manly, Brave Reſolution, look to what is Eternal.

Two thouſand and ſixty three Dutch Priſoners, of whom thirteen were Commanders, were brought to Colcheſter, not long after the Battel. About the ſame Time his Royal Highneſs the Duke left the Fleet, and rode Poſt to White-Hall, accompany'd with Prince Rupert, the Duke of Monmouth, and other Perſons of Quality, and receiv'd the Congratulations of the Court and City with all the Marks of Publick Joy and Triumph. And a ſolemn Day of Thankſgiving for the late Victory was obſerv'd, firſt in London and Weſtminſter, and then in the other Parts of England and Wales. Beſides this, in Honour of the Duke himſelf, and in Memory of the great Action, there was the following Medal ſtruck: Of the Duke's Effigy in Buſt, clad in a Roman Mantle, with theſe Words round it; Jacobus Dux Ebor. & Alban. Domin. Magn. Admiralius Angliæ, &c. The Reverſe repreſenting the Admiral and whole Fleet in Conflict, with theſe Words, Nec Minor in Terris, June III. MDCLXV. Upon the ſame Action there was likewiſe ſtruck another no leſs glorious Medalion, with the Duke in Buſt, ſhort Hair, &c. having this Inſcription: Jacobus Dux Ebor. & Alban. Frater Auguſtiſſimi Caroli II. Regis. The Reverſe was a rich Trophy, and Ships in Fight, with theſe Words, Genus Antiquum. And now all Perſons began more and more to look upon the Duke, who had ſo often maintain'd the Grandeur of his Birth by his own perſonal Valour and Merit. He was now in the Heighth of his Glory; he enjoy'd moſt of the great Places of Profit and Honour in the Nation; and was not only Lord High Admiral of England, but was Governor of the Cinque-Ports, and of Portſmouth, and had the Benefit of the Poſt-Office, the Wine-Licences, &c. Then having Children, and the King none, many Perſons made their Court to him as the Heir to the Crown, which was likewiſe to paſs away to his Head, and remain in his Family; and what added to the Happineſs was, that the King was never the leaſt jealous of him or his Actions, a thing very rare between two Brothers of that Rank. In this State of Felicity the Duke continu'd for ſome Years, wanting neither the Favour of the Prince, nor the Reſpect of the People; till firſt the Suſpicion, and then the Diſcovery of his Religion, which happen'd about ſix Years after, did very much withdraw the Love and Affections of Men from him, and gave the firſt Shock to all his great Proſperity.

Honours conferred on the Duke of York,

Soon after this memorable Battel, the King took into Conſideration the valiant Behaviour of ſeveral inferior Officers, and gave the Honour of Knighthood to Captain Chriſtopher Minns, and to Captain Jeremy Smith. Soon after his Majeſty, attended by his Royal Brother, Prince Rupert, the Duke of Monmouth, and others of the Nobility, waited upon the Queen-Mother in the Catharine Yatch to the Buoy in the Nore, in order to her Return into France, where ſhe took her laſt Leave of her two Sons, and never ſaw England more. Here his Majeſty took the Oppor-

Opportunity of viſiting the Royal Navy; eſpecially the Flag-Ships; and going aboard the Royal Charles, in which his Brother had ſo bravely fought, he there beſtow'd the Honour of Knighthood on divers Officers who had nobly diſtinguiſh'd themſelves in the late Conflict; as Rear-Admiral Thomas Tyddiman, Captain Joſeph Jordan, Captain Edward Spragg, and Captain Cuttings. While Rewards were thus beſtow'd in England, the contrary chiefly appear'd in Holland; where the Misfortunes of their Fleet threw the common People into ſo many Complaints and Murmurs, that the States were forc'd to give way to the popular Paſſions, and to queſtion many Officers for Cowardiſe, or for ill Conduct, or even for Treachery it ſelf; and, for a publick Expiation, to execute three of their Sea-Captains at Helder; and to order two more to have their Swords broken over their Heads, and to make another ſtand ſome Hours upon a Scaffold with a Halter about his Neck. All which Show and Ceremony of Juſtice was thought rather to appeaſe the Madneſs of the People, than to vindicate the Honour of their Country. And Penſionary De Wit's Party met with a moſt ſenſible Shock; inſomuch that at Leyden the People threw a Drummer into the River, for beating up for Men for the Service of the Lords the States, crying out, He ſhou'd beat for the Prince of Orange, and not for Traytors. And ſeveral Sea-Captains, and others, publickly ſaid, They wou'd never go to Sea again, if the Prince of Orange's Flag was not born.

Diſcontents in Holland.

3. In England, it was thought reaſonable and proper by the King and Council, that the Lord High Admiral the Duke of York ſhou'd not venture his Perſon in another Sea Fight, therefore the chief Command of the Navy was committed to the Earl of Sandwich; who, having repaired the Loſſes ſuſtain'd in the late Action, and having fitted out ſeveral of the Dutch Prizes, on the 5th of July weigh'd about ſixty Sail from Soul-Bay, and made for the Coaſt of Holland. The Royal Standard was born by the Earl himſelf, under whom Sir George Ayſcough was Vice-Admiral, and Sir Thomas Tyddeman Rear-Admiral: Sir William Pen was Admiral of the White, and under him Sir William Berkley Vice-Admiral, and Sir Joſeph Jordan Rear-Admiral: And the Blue Flag was carry'd by Sir Thomas Allen, whoſe Flag Officers were Sir Chriſtopher Minns and Captain Harman. The Dutch all this Time waited for the Return of De Ruyter from Newfound-land, to which Place, after he had been beat off from Barbadoes, he had ſteer'd his Courſe with a Squadron of ſeventeen Men of War; and arriving at St. John's, he took the Diamond of Plymouth, and the Unity of Dartmouth, and plunder'd the Colony of their Proviſion, and their very Cloaths. At Bay-Bull's Harbour he took two Ships more, and in Pit's Harbour three other Ships, and ranſack'd all the Fiſhing-Coaſts, and brought away above a hundred able Seamen, becauſe they refus'd to enter into the Service of the States. With theſe few Prizes, and his own Ships extreamly damag'd, he crept home by the Coaſt of Norway and Denmark, and was immediately made Admiral of the Dutch Fleet, yet rather to carry the Flag than to command the Maritime Affairs, which in a new Model were put under the Superintendency of three of their great Men, De Wit, Huggens, and Boreel. Their great Fear and Concern at this Time was for the Safety and Return of their rich Fleets, particularly their Smyrna and Streights Fleet, which, together with ſeveral Eaſt India Ships, to the Value of ſome Millions, were got into the Port of Berghen in Norway, under the Protection of the Daniſh Governor of that Place. A famous Attempt was made upon theſe vaſt Prizes by the Engliſh: The Cauſes of which, together with the Miſcarriage, is a Piece of Hiſtory ſo very curious, and altogether new new to the Reader, that we ſhall be very particular in the Narrative, from a Manuſcript written by Sir Gilbert Talbot, a Perſon principally concern'd in the whole Affair, whoſe Authority we cannot queſtion. 1665. Car. 17 Reſ. 6.

A new and curious Account of their Attempt upon the Dutch in Berghen.

Sir Gilbert Talbot being the Engliſh reſiding Envoy at the Daniſh Court at Copenhagen, that King was pleas'd often to diſcourſe very freely with him; and particularly, on the 14th of June, among other Matters, took an Occaſion to complain of 'the hard Condition in which the 'Hollanders by their Treachery had involv'd him, by drawing the Swediſh War upon him, that he might be neceſſitated to have Recourſe to 'them for Supplies of Mony and Shipping, that thereby they might get 'into their Hands the Cuſtoms of Norway and the Sound for their Security.' Sir Gilbert readily told the King, That if he wou'd give him Leave, he wou'd point him out a Way whereby he ſhou'd not only free himſelf from that Bondage, but plentifully repair his Condition; but withal he ſaid, That he ſpake it as a private Perſon devoted to his Intereſt, not as a publick Miniſter. The King conjuring him to tell him what he meant, he ſaid, That his Majeſty had it in his own Hands, if he wou'd make uſe of it; but ſtill he ſeem'd not to underſtand, and deſired Sir Gilbert to explain; who then told him, That the Dutch Smyrna Fleet, worth many Millions, was within his Net at Berghen, together with many rich Eaſt-India Ships; and that they ſtaid in Expectation of more, and of the Return of De Ruyter with his Squadron. Sir Gilbert then ask'd his Majeſty Why he wou'd not make Seizure of thoſe Ships within his Harbour, before the expected Convoy came? The King anſwer'd, That he wanted Strength to do it: Sir Gilbert well knew that, but expected the Acknowledgment from his own Mouth, that he might have Occaſion to lead him to the Point: For having now in Effect diſcover'd, that it was only want of Power that hinder'd him, he the more confidently reply'd, That he doubted not but that the King his Maſter wou'd lend him Forces to effect it; But it wou'd be reaſonable, if his Maſter reduc'd them by his Power, that he ſhou'd equally partake of the Profit. The King reply'd, That he wou'd be content with all his Heart to ſhare equally with the King of England. Sir Gilbert thereupon ask'd him, If he wou'd give him Commiſſion to propoſe the Matter to the King his Maſter? He anſwer'd, Moſt willingly; and deſired him to do it with all Expedition and Secrecy.

Sir G. Talbot the Projector of it.

Upon this Incouragement, on the 17th following, Sir Gilbert propos'd it in Cypher to Mr. Secretary Bennet, lately made Lord Arlington; who in his Anſwer dated June the 30th told him, 'That he had imparted the 'Deſign to his Majeſty, who very well approv'd what he had done, and 'commanded him to purſue it, promiſing him that the Fleet ſhou'd be 'ready to put it in Execution.' As ſoon as Sir Gilbert had receiv'd this Letter, which was on the 10th of July, he immediately went to the Court, and told the King, That the King his Maſter embrac'd the Propoſal, and had given him Order to proceed to an Agreement with his Majeſty about the Particulars. Hereupon the chief Treaſurer Seſted, General Shack, and the prime Miniſter Gabel, were appointed Commiſſioners to concert with him the Agreement and Method of putting it in Execution. But no Articles were to appear in Writing, in Regard of the tender Nature of the Affair, which was juſtifiable in the King of England, but not to be publickly avow'd by his Majeſty of Denmark. All this while there was no News of De Ruyter, or the expected Eaſt India Fleet, which was order'd to come home round Scotland. But on the 20th of July, the King of Denmark receiv'd ſeveral Letters out of Norway, which brought Intelligence That De Ruyter was upon the Coaſt, and ſome Ships were come into Copenhagen, which had ſpoken with him at Sea. His Majesty immediately sent to Sir Gilbert Talbot to acquaint him with the News, and desir'd him to transmit it with all Speed to the English Fleet; thereupon he presently writ to the Earl of Sandwich, and within two Hours dispatch'd his Secretary to him. And because he had no Cypher with the Earl, he was forc'd to acquaint his Secretary with the whole Matter, and refer his Lordship to his Relation: But instead of finding the Earl upon the Dogger-Bank, he fell into the Dutch Fleet, and was carry'd away Prisoner into Holland. Yet, dissembling his Condition, and pretending that he was going to study at Leyden, he was releas'd, and came back over by Land to his Master.

The Design it self.

On the 20th, the forenam'd Day that the King receiv'd the first News of De Ruyter, his Majesty writ to his Vice-Roy of Norway, Guildenleu, and to General Alefelt, Governor of Berghen, advising them 'To use 'all fair Means to keep the Hollanders still in their Harbours, and that they 'shou'd by an Express understand the Reason of it in Cypher; and with-'al receive Instructions how they were to proceed in order to this Ser-'vice.' On the 24th that King dispatch'd the Express with the said Instructions; and Sir Gilbert Talbot by the same Express sent two Letters, one to be left with the Vice-Roy at Christiana, the other with Governor Alefelt at Berghen; to be by them convey'd to the Commanders in Chief of the English Men of War, assoon as they shou'd arrive in either of their respective Ports, and under Pretence of the Governor's Enquiry What their Designs were; and desiring them not to act any Hostility in their Harbours. These Letters were to be slipt into their Hands, and by them they wou'd know what was capitulated between the Danish King and him, which was, 'That the English shou'd boldly assault their 'Enemies in the Port, forasmuch as the Danes wou'd make no Resistance 'against them, under Pretence of Fear that the English if provoked 'might destroy their Towns, and carry all away as their Prize. But 'that a just Account was to be kept of the Whole, in regard that the 'King of Denmark was to have an equal Share; for which he wou'd re-'ly on the King of England's Justice. And since, for his Honour's sake, 'he cou'd not openly assent to the Seizure of them in his Ports, his 'Commanders, to blind the World, shou'd storm high, and pretend to 'be greatly offended; but shou'd equally seem to dread the Provocation 'of a victorious Power, such as the English then was.'

False Steps towards it.

On the 26th of July Sir Gilbert Talbot receiv'd a Letter from the Earl of Sandwich by Mr. Worden, a young Gentleman, dated the 17th; wherein his Lordship desired Sir Gilbert to send him Word by the same Messenger how they had agreed the Matter, that he might act accordingly. He now found by his Lordship's Letter that he had acquainted Mr. Worden with the whole Design, altho' it was earnestly desired, 'That, 'for the Honour of the King of Denmark, it might be imparted to as 'few as the Nature of the Employment wou'd bear;' which Sir Gilbert look'd upon as the first false Step made by the Earl. And the same Minute that Mr. Worden left him, his Lordship weigh'd Anchor, and stood over for the Coast of England, to meet a Squadron that came out to joyn him; which was no sooner done, but he precipitately steer'd his Course for Berghen. The Vessel that landed Mr. Worden in the Elve was unluckily commanded back, and to follow the Fleet assoon as he was put on Shore. Hereupon Sir Gilbert went with Mr. Worden to Elsenore, in hopes to waft him from thence in quest of the Earl; but cou'd meet with no Opportunity, till at length, on the 2d of August, Captain Motham's Frigate, having lost the English Fleet, and coming by chance into the Sound, he prevail'd with that Captain to take the Gentleman on Board, and to convey him with all Speed to the Earl of Sandwich. But the the ſame Day he ſet Sail out of the Sound, did the Engliſh Fleet attack the Enemy's Ships at Berghen; as Mr. Worden had before told Sir Gilbert Talbot that the Earl intended to do, and that he wou'd not ſtay for an Anſwer from him, but fall on, if he found the Dutch Fleet there. All which Proceeding, as Sir Gilbert obſerves, was ſo contrary to the Earl's Letters, ſo contrary to Orders, and ſo contrary to common Reaſon, that it is no Wonder that ſo great a Miſcarriage and Diſappointment attended it. This Sir Gilbert foretold to Mr. Worden, as ſoon as he perceiv'd the Proceedings of the Admiral; becauſe the Orders in Cypher, which went from Copenhagen on the 24th of July, cou'd not poſſibly ſo ſoon arrive at Berghen, ſince that Journey was ten, and uſually twelve Days by Land. Indeed the Vice-Roy, who reſided at Chriſtiana, receiv'd his Orders ſooner; and in Obedience to them ſent out two Galliots to find the Engliſh Fleet, and inform them of what Agreement was made by the Envoy, &c. but he unfortunately miſs'd them, they having made all Haſte to Berghen. 1665. Car. 17 Reſ. 6.

When the Governor of Berghen underſtood that the Engliſh Fleet was near, and riding without the Rocks, he began to dread their falling haſtily upon the Dutch, before his expected Orders and Inſtructions came how to govern himſelf in that weighty Affair. He therefore ſent one Mr. Tolner, a Gentleman of ſufficient Fidelity and Ability, to deſire them 'Not to offer any Violence to the Port at preſent, for Reaſons 'they might eaſily imagine; but to ſtay the Arrival of the Poſt, which 'was expected within two or three Days at the fartheſt, till when he 'cou'd not receive his particular Directions: And in the mean Time, 'to diſguiſe their Stay, they might pretend to want freſh Water and 'Proviſions, with which he wou'd give Order they ſhou'd be furniſh'd.' In Anſwer to this, Sir Thomas Clifford was ſent privately into the Town to diſcourſe the Governor, who clearly laid the whole Matter before him. At his Return to the Fleet the Earl of Sandwich call'd a Council of War to adviſe what was to be done. Here Sir Gilbert's firſt Letter to the Commander in Chief was produc'd and read, in which the whole Concertation between the Daniſh Commiſſioners and him was in plain Terms expreſs'd, and a Signification of the very Orders which were upon the Way to the Governor, directing him how exactly he was to carry himſelf when the Engliſh fell on. But the Captains, animated with ſome forward Counſels, and the Expectation of a vaſt Booty, were unanimouſly for engaging the Dutch without any Delay; and having form'd in their Minds the Facility of the Enterprize, they diſdain'd to wait the Arrival of the Governor's expreſs Orders. The Engliſh appear before Berghen.

According to this warm Reſolution, Sir Thomas Tiddiman boldly went in with his Squadron, under the Favour of a full Gale: But when he had gain'd the Entrance of the Port, the Wind chop'd about, and he was forc'd to drop Anchor under the Cittadel, within half Muſket-ſhot of their vaſt large Cannon. In this very Place he began to thunder out his great Shot againſt the Dutch Ships in the Harbour; and did much Damage to the Houſes in the Town, and kill'd ſeveral of the Inhabitants. The Caſtles ſeeing this open Hoſtility offer'd in the King's Chamber, and having not yet receiv'd the particular Directions from his Majeſty how to behave themſelves, furiouſly diſcharg'd upon the Engliſh, diſabled divers Men of War, and kill'd many Officers and Seamen. The Engliſh had indeed diſmounted all the Guns upon the ſmall Fort, that ſtood above; but the Cittadel ſtood ſo low, and cloſe upon the Water, that, with the Aſſiſtance of the Holland Gunners, it made no Shot in vain. So Tiddiman, finding his Squadron ruin'd, and himſelf ready to ſink, was compell'd at length to ſlip his Cables, and fall off to the grand Fleet, which Sir T. Tiddiman attempts the Port; But in vain.

which lay ſtill without the Rocks. The Governor, under a handſome Pretence of Expoſtulation with the Admiral, Why he ſhou'd violate his Maſter's Peace, ſent Mr. Tolner a ſecond time to the Fleet, to let them know 'They had ruin'd their Buſineſs by Precipitation, and had forc'd 'him to do what was as much againſt his Inclinations, as, he believ'd, 'was againſt the Mind of the King his Maſter: But if they wou'd yet 'be content to ſtay without the Rocks, he wou'd fiſh up all their An-'chors for them, and furniſh them with new Cables, for what were cut 'and loſt, and with whatſoever Proviſions the Fleet ſhou'd want.'

When the whole Work was thus deſtroy'd by the eager Impatience of the Engliſh Commanders, tho' not without great Damage to the Dutch; upon the next Day, Auguſt the 4th, the Poſt came and brought the capitulated Inſtructions. The Governor thereupon ſent once more to deſire Sir Thomas Clifford to come privately on Shore, which he did: And the Governor, to demonſtrate the real Intentions of the King his Maſter, ſhew'd him the Orders decypher'd, which were, 'That when the Eng-'liſh attack'd the Dutch Ships in the Harbour, the Governor ſhou'd ſeem 'highly affronted, and ſtorm; yet make no Reſiſtance from the Caſtles, 'but ſuffer the quiet Seizure of them by the Engliſh, under Pretence of 'Fear, That if the Forts ſhot, the Engliſh might be provok'd to fire the 'Town, which was not able to defend it ſelf againſt them.' But withal he told him, That as it wou'd have coſt him his Head, if he had conſented to the giving up the Dutch before his particular Orders came; he cou'd not, without the like Danger of his Head, execute the firſt Order, till he had certify'd the Alteration of the Caſe, and receiv'd a Confirmation of Orders, which he did in no wiſe doubt but wou'd in a ſhort Time come, if the Engliſh wou'd have the Patience to expect them. Then if the whole Fleet did not think fit to ſtay, he deſir'd the Engliſh to leave but ſix Men of War at the Mouth of the Harbour, and he wou'd engage that the Dutch ſhou'd not ſtir out, till the Fleet return'd back to take them. But they were diſguſted and ſullen, and departed without giving the Envoy a Word of their Miſcarriage, or Complaint againſt the Daniſh Governor. Nor did the King of Denmark or Sir Gilbert Talbot know any thing of the Arrival of the Engliſh or the laſt India Fleet at Berghen, but by the ſame Expreſs which brought News of the Diſaſter; which ſo afflicted his Majeſty of Denmark, that he was perfectly dejected for a Month after, as believing he ſhou'd never have the like Opportunity to repair his Condition. As to the other, the Envoy, it was ſuch a Heart-breaking to him to find his beloved Deſign ſo fatally defeated, that he thought he cou'd not have out-liv'd the Miſcarriage; now deſpairing ever to meet with an Occaſion to perform ſuch eminent Service to his King and Country: 'For, adds he, the Loſs of thoſe ſeveral Fleets, and vaſt Maſs of 'Wealth, ſuch as no Age ever ſaw together upon the Sea, had brought 'the proud States upon their Knees, and France wou'd have had but 'ſmall Encouragement to undertake their Support.'

The Engliſh totally diſappointed.

Reflections upon it.

Thus far according to the Narrative of the Envoy Sir Gilbert Talbot Himſelf, who after that makes ſeveral Obſervations and Reflections, and throws the whole Miſcarriage upon the Avarice and Ambition of the Engliſh Commanders. But Theſe, to cover their own Errors, ſoon found Means ſo to prepoſſeſs the King of England, as to charge all upon the Daniſh Court; which was done firſt by a ſevere Expoſtulation with the King of Denmark and his Miniſters: And tho' ſufficient Anſwers were made and return'd, yet it was afterwards ſucceeded by a very unkind Remonſtrance, not a little reflecting upon his Daniſh Majeſty's Conduct in this Affair. This Sir Gilbert looks upon as hard and unreaſonable, and he tells us that afterwards, He with the Daniſh Ambaſſador had an Oppor-

Opportunity ſo far to ſatisfy the King of England, that he ſaid to them, I find that Tiddiman has been very much to blame in this Matter, and that I have wrong'd my Brother of Denmark; but by the Grace of God I will make him Satisfaction. In the Concluſion he obſerves, That as to the Legality of the Deſign, which ſome have undertaken to cenſure, his Majeſty of England was excuſable before the whole World if he made uſe of any politick Means to humble an inſolent and ungrateful Enemy. Perhaps, ſays he, it may not be altogether ſo eaſy to juſtify the King of Denmark; altho' it may be argued to be a juſt Retaliation of a fraudulent Deſign upon the encroaching Hollanders, who had by a Wile engag'd that King in a War with Sweden, and got the Seizure of all his Revenues in Norway and the Sound into their Hands, purely upon that Account. 1665. Car. 17 Reſ. 6.

4. But to conclude the Sea Affairs and Actions of this Year, after this Attempt at Berghen, in which the Dutch were likewiſe great Sufferers, the Engliſh Fleet ſtood off for the Coaſt of Holland; and having been incommoded by a Storm that carry'd them back Northwards, on the Beginning of September they met with the Dutch Eaſt-India Men, and ſeveral other Merchant Ships under a ſtrong Convoy; and tho' the Stormy Weather much favour'd the eſcape of the Dutch, yet the Engliſh took eight good Men of War, two of their beſt Eaſt-India Ships valu'd at a Million of Pounds Sterling, and twenty Sail of their Merchant-Men. And a few Days after Part of the Engliſh Fleet fell in with eighteen Sail of Hollanders, and took the greateſt Part of them; bringing away, with the other Prizes, four Dutch Men of War, and above a Thouſand Priſoners. The Concluſion of the firſt Year's War.

In the mean Time the Mediterranean Seas were well ſecured by a good Squadron of Ships, under the Command of Sir Jeremy Smith; and the Channel by another ſtrong Squadron commanded by Sir Chriſtopher Minns, who hearing of a Dutch Squadron near Oſtend, made after them, and chac'd them into the Weilings: And ſo clearing the Seas, and the very Coaſts of all Dutch Veſſels, he ſtood off for the Coaſt of Sweden, and dropt Anchor at the Mouth of the Elve, where the Swediſh General Wrangle, in Compliment to the Engliſh Admiral, travell'd above thirty Miles to give him a Viſit, and he was entertain'd by him on Shipboard with great Civility and Splendor according to his Dignity. So that in this Year, notwithſtanding the Miſcarriage at Berghen, the Engliſh rod triumphant in the Sea, and manifeſtly ſhew'd themſelves ſuperior to their Enemies.

II. 1. During the Height of theſe Triumphs, God was pleas'd to puniſh the Sins of the Nation with ſuch a publick Calamity, as, in that Kind, had not been in England for ſome Centuries of Years: This was a dreadful Peſtilence which firſt appear'd, about the Middle of May, in the Vitals of the three Kingdoms, the City of London; where it gradually ſwell'd and rag'd to that Degree, and with ſuch reſiſtleſs Infection, that in the City and Suburbs it ſwept away an Hundred Thouſand Perſons, and all in leſs than the Compaſs of one Year. This hapning juſt forty Years after the Plague that fearfully, tho' not equally prevail'd in 1625, it caus'd ſeveral People to impute a Fatality to that particular Number; as if in this Senſe The Land was to have Reſt but forty Years. Death now rod triumphant after a very different Manner than it had done in the Seas and Ocean, and with a much more melancholy and formidable Aſpect; terrifying and confounding Men of all Religions and all Profeſſions. It was certainly a diſmal Thing to ſee the great Emporium of the World deſolate, and ſcarce any Thing vendible but Coffins; and to be continu- The Great PLAGUE.

ally entertain'd with the daily Cries from the Windows, Pray for us! and the Nightly Calls, Bring out your Dead! which like Dung, were thrown into Carts, and tumbled into Pits without Numbering. But it was ſtill more amazing to ſee the prodigious Mixture both of Piety and Profaneneſs at the ſame Time; which, according to the Deſcription of a good Eye-Witneſs and Obſerver, was thus: In one Houſe you might hear them Roaring under the Pangs of Death; in the next Tipling, Whoring, and belching out Blaſphemies againſt God; one Houſe ſhut up with a Red Croſs, and Lord have Mercy upon us! the next open to all Uncleanneſs and Impiety, as altogether inſenſible of the Vengeance of Heaven.

The Cauſes of it.

As to the natural Cauſes of this terrible Contagion, ſome Phyſicians were of Opinion that the Original was a heightned and venomous Pox, which advanc'd to the Poiſon of this Peſtilence, and ſo brought its natural Puniſhment with it, at a Time when Lewdneſs was moſt exorbitant and triumphant in this City. Moſt agreed that it did not ariſe from any real Infection in the Air, but by Propagation from one Perſon to another; and Dr. Skinner ſpeaks as if it was occaſion'd by the infected Goods that were brought from Holland into England. Yet ſtill Dr. Baynard obſerves, That during the Rage of it, there was ſuch a general Calm and Serenity of Weather, as if the Wind and Rain alſo had been baniſh'd the Realm; and, for many Weeks together, he cou'd not diſcover the leaſt Breath of Wind, ſo much as to ſtir a Fane: The Fires with great Difficulty were made to burn, through the great Scarcity of Nitre in the Air; there fell abundance of Mildews; and the very Birds wou'd pant for Breath, eſpecially the larger Sort, and were obſerv'd to fly more heavily than at other Times. Whatever were the Cauſes, the Effects were very direful: The whole City was abandon'd by almoſt all the Rich, who left the Poor to die by Thouſands in a Week; and ſeveral Miniſters, in this ſad Time of Tryal, deſerted their Flocks, whoſe empty Pulpits were ſometimes charitably fill'd by Thoſe of other Perſwaſions, whoſe ſeaſonable Fervour is ſaid to have had good Effects upon a wicked People. Yet there were many noble Inſtances of the Courage, Piety and Charity of the Church of England Divines at this Time, who ventur'd all in the Service of God and the poor miſerable People. The King Himſelf manifeſted a Paternal Regard to his Subjects, and tho' he retired firſt to Hampton-Court, and then to Salisbury, he left the City to the Affectionate Care of the brave Duke of Albemarle, who in the Height of the Contagion continu'd at White-Hall, and gave Orders and Relief to the Diſtreſſed with ſuch an unſhaken Courage, as if he had been born to triumph over Diſeaſes and Death. The preſent Archbiſhop Sheldon firmly continu'd all the Time of the greateſt Danger, and with his diffuſive Charity preſerv'd great Numbers alive, that wou'd have periſh'd in their Neceſſities, and by his affecting Letters to all the Biſhops, procured great Sums to be return'd out of all Parts of his Province. Nor muſt we forget the glorious Behaviour of William Earl of Craven, who freely choſe to venture his Life upon a Thouſand Occaſions, in the Midſt of the Infected, provided Nurſes and Phyſicians for the Sick, and out of his own Purſe expended vaſt Sums to ſupply the Neceſſities of many that were ready to periſh: An Honour beyond all his gallant and noble Exploits perform'd in Germany and elſewhere.

The Charitable Care of many.

The Remedies apply'd.

Several general Remedies were undertaken by the Publick for the Cure of this uncommon Diſtemper: The firſt Healing Method, was a Proclamation to command a General Faſt, to be religiouſly obſerv'd throughout the Kingdom of England, That Prayers and Supplications might be every where made for the Removal of ſo heavy a Judgment; in in a Form drawn up by the Biſhops, and appointed by the King to be likewiſe us'd in all Churches and Chappels within the Bills of Mortality, on every Wedneſday in the Week during the Contagion. This, with the real Reformation of many wicked Perſons, was believ'd to have extraordinary Effects. A ſecond Office of Piety and Charity, was to order the making of Continual Collections, Publick and Private, for Relief of the Sick and Needy in this miſerable Diſtreſs, as was partly before hinted. A Third Means of ſtoping the Plague, or hindering the Tumults and Diſtractions that might ariſe upon it, was to Publiſh a Proclamation, Requiring all disbanded Officers and Soldiers, who had ſerv'd in the Armies of any of the late Uſurped Powers, to depart the Cities of London and Weſtminſter, and not to return within Twenty Miles of the ſame, till November following. And laſtly, a new and likely Expedient for Reſtoring wholeſom Breath was put in Practice, by ordering continual Fires to be kindled and kept in all the Streets and open Places of the City, three whole Days and Nights together, to purge and purify the Air. All which ſeem'd to have taken place before the End of the Year in the City; tho' the Infection at length expanded it ſelf into many Cities and Towns in the Country, where, after an equal Mortality, it expired in the following Year. 1665. Car. 17 Reſ. 6.

2. Both the Dutch and the French took Advantage from this Calamity; and it ſeems the Republican Party took Advantage both from That and the preſent War, and did not only hold Correſpondence with the publick Enemy, but ſome of them went into the actual Service of the Dutch againſt their own natural Prince and Country. Theſe ſecret Contrivances have often been deny'd, yet of late they ſufficiently appear from the Writings of their own Party. Ludlow freely informs us, That by Means of this Dutch War, ſome of their Friends conceiving great Hopes of the Reſtitution of the Common-Wealth, enter'd into a Treaty with divers principal Miniſters of the States, for Procuring ſome Forces to joyn with their Party in England againſt the Common Enemy, the King and Parliament. His Concurrence being deſired by a Perſon of Honour, he ſtood off upon the Account of the Behaviour of the Dutch to Barkſtead, Okey and Corbet, the three Regicides formerly mention'd, which made him apprehend the ſame Uſage in caſe of an Accommodation with England. In the mean Time he receiv'd a Letter from Mr. Say, then at Amſterdam, inviting him by many cogent Arguments to quit Switzerland, that he might be Inſtrumental in the Service of his Country: In which Letter he has theſe Words, 'The Ruin of the preſent Government in England is certainly intended, and I have Cauſe to believe 'will certainly be effected; the States being unanimouſly for this War, 'and at laſt brought to ſee That their Common-Wealth cannot long Subſiſt, if Monarchy continue in England. The King of England is never 'mention'd without the utmoſt Contempt, and Writings are every Day 'publiſh'd to expoſe his Perſon and Government.— I am certainly in-'form'd, That conſiderable Numbers in England, Scotland and Ireland, 'ſenſible of their preſent Servitude, will appear for Us.' A little above a Week after, as the ſame Author tells us, he receiv'd another Letter from the ſame Perſon, deſiring Credit to the Contents of his laſt, and adding, That the Heer Newport had at a Conference aſſur'd him, 'That the In-'tentions of the States were to relieve the good People of England; 'That the Dutch had thirty Thouſand Men ready to put on Board their 'Fleet, of which Number ten Thouſand were Land Soldiers, to be 'diſpos'd as They, the Rupublicans, ſhou'd direct: That a great Sum of 'Mony was prepared for this Service, and the whole Fleet ſhou'd be 'com-

Deſigns of the Republican Party.

'commanded to favour the Enterprize: That if it ſhou'd be thought ne-
'ceſſary to tranſport Horſe into England, they wou'd comply with that 'alſo. He therefore earneſtly begg'd him to lay aſide Prejudices, and, as he
'lov'd the Cauſe, to come ſpeedily, and ſet his Hand and Heart to the 'Work: That a conſiderable Miniſter there had inquired after him, and 'given Reaſon to hope, That if he wou'd come in that Conjuncture, they
'wou'd place him at the Head of ſuch a Number of Men, as ſhou'd by
'the Bleſſing of God, and the Concurrence of their Friends in England,
'be ſufficient to reſtore the Common-Wealth.' He concludes in theſe Words, 'I dare aſſure you from the beſt Information I can get, That on
'ſuch an Occaſion there wou'd be a greater Appearance for us, than at 'the Beginning of the late War, in 1642. Let me therefore not hear 'from you, but ſee you.

The SIXTH SESSION of the Second Parliament: At OXFORD.

These and the like ſecret Projects were not altogether unknown to the Government, when the Parliament, after ſeveral Prorogations, and a Receſs of a little above ſeven Months, met on the 9th Day of October, not at Weſtminſter as uſual, by Reaſon of the grand Infection, but at the City of Oxford, where the Univerſity Schools were prepared for the Conveniency of both Houſes. Being there aſſembled and ſettled, a Meſſage was ſent from the Lords to the Houſe of Commons, that both Houſes ſhou'd attend his Majeſty at Chriſt-Church, the next Morning at nine a Clock. At which Time, the King being ſeated on a Throne at the upper End of the great Hall in that Colledge, he made this following acceptable Speech to both Houſes: 'My Lords and Gentlemen, I am con'fident you will believe, That if it had not been abſolutely neceſſary to
'conſult with you, I wou'd not have called you together at this Time,
'when the Contagion hath ſo ſpread it ſelf over ſo many Parts of the 'Kingdom. I take it for a good Omen to ſee ſo good an Appearance this 'Day; and I doubt not but every Day will add to your Number; and I 'give you all my Thanks for your Compliance ſo far with my Deſires.

The King's ſpeech to both Houſes.

'The Truth is, as I enter'd upon this War by your Advice and In-
'couragement, ſo I deſire that you may as frequently as is poſſible re'ceive Information of the Conduct and Effects of it; and that I may 'have the Continuance of your chearful Supply for the carrying it on. I 'will not deny to you, that it hath prov'd more chargeable than I cou'd
'imagine it wou'd have been: The Addition they ſtill made to their 'Fleets beyond their firſt Purpoſe, made it unavoidably neceſſary for 'me to make proportionable Preparations, which God hath hitherto
'bleſſed with Succeſs in all Encounters. And as the Enemies have us'd
'their utmoſt Endeavours, by Calumnies and falſe Suggeſtions, to make
'themſelves Friends, and to perſwade Others to aſſiſt them againſt Us;
'ſo I have not been wanting to encourage thoſe Princes who have been
'wrong'd by the Dutch, to recover their own by Force: And in order
'thereunto, I have aſſiſted the Biſhop of Munſter with a very great Sum
'of ready Mony, and am to continue a Supply to him, who is now in the 'Bowels of their Country, with a powerful Army. Theſe Iſſues, I may 'tell you, have been made with very good Conduct and Husbandry; nor 'indeed do I know, that any thing hath been ſpent, that cou'd have 'been well and ſafely ſaved. I ſay this Expence will not ſuffer you to 'wonder that the great Supply which you gave me for this War, in ſo
'bountiful a Proportion, is upon the Matter already ſpent. So that I
'muſt not only deſire Aſſiſtance from you to carry on this War, but
'ſuch an Aſſiſtance as may enable me to defend my ſelf and you againſt
'a more powerful Neighbour, if he ſhall prefer the Friendſhip of the 'Dutch before mine. I told you when I enter'd upon this War, That I had 'not ſuch a Brutal Appetite, as to make War for War ſake. I am ſtill

'of

'of the ſame Mind: I am ready to receive any Propoſitions that France 1665.
'hath thought fit to offer to that End; but hitherto nothing hath been
'offer'd worthy my Acceptance; nor are the Dutch leſs inſolent; tho' I Car. 17

'gion. God Almighty, I hope, will ſhortly deprive them of ſuch Incou-
'ragement: The Chancellor will inform you of all the Particulars.

Accordingly the Lord Clarendon, being now in his own Univerſity, exerted his uſual Talent of Eloquence in a remarkable Speech, which, tho' too long to be verbally inſerted, is too informing to be wholly omitted: Running over the whole Proceſs of State-Affairs from the King's Reſtoration to the preſent Juncture, he obſerved, 'That notwithſtanding the 'Indignities his Majeſty had receiv'd from Holland, during the late U- 'ſurpation, where he had been little leſs Proſcrib'd than in England, he 'was ſtill pleas'd to embark himſelf from thence, when he was preſs'd by 'two Neighbour Kings, from whom he had receiv'd more Civilities, to 'have made uſe of their Ports. That being return'd, he found one thing 'that exceedingly ſurpriz'd him, a thing incredible to Poſterity, that a 'triumphant Nation, which, by its numerous Sea-Fights had reign'd o- 'ver the Ocean, and made it ſelf formidable to all Chriſtendom, ſhould 'at that Time not have in all their Magazines, in all their Stores, Arms 'enough to put into the Hands of five thouſand Men, nor Proviſions enough 'to ſet out ten new Ships to Sea: All which his Majeſty, tho' he then 'liv'd upon Credit, did not deſire ſhou'd be known to his beſt Neigh- 'bours, howſoever aſſur'd of their Affections; therefore he did not ſo 'much as make it known to his Parliament: But he made it his firſt Care, 'without the leaſt Noiſe, and with all imaginable Shifts, to provide for 'the full Supply of theſe important Magazines and Stores, which had 'been ever ſince repleniſh'd as they ought. His Majeſty had not only 'done this, but alſo had provided ſeveral Fleets againſt the Pyrates in 'the Mediterranean Sea, which had happily and honourably brought 'them to Submiſſion.' Then he related the Dutch's deſerting of him in thoſe worthy Deſigns, and repeated the ſeveral Injuries and Inſolencies committed by them; the Neceſſity of vindicating the Rights and Honour of the Nation; the King's referring of this Cauſe to the Parliament, the Parliament's humble Deſires of Redreſs; the States Preparations for War, and the whole Series and Succeſs of the War, in which he repreſented the great Agony the King ſuſtain'd upon the Account of his Brother's Safety. Then ſpeaking of the Mediation of the French, he ſays, 'The Dutch reproach them for interpoſing for Peace, inſtead of aſſiſt- 'ing them in the War, boldly inſiſting upon the Advantage the Conta- 'gion gives them, alledging, That the King will be no longer able to 'maintain a Fleet againſt them; as if God had ſent this heavy Viſitation 'upon the Kingdom on their Behalf, and to expoſe it to their Malice 'and Inſolency. They load us with ſuch Reproaches, as the Civility of 'no other Language will admit the Relation: The Truth is, they have 'a Dialect of Rudeneſs ſo peculiar to their Language, and their People, 'that it is high Time for all Princes to oblige them to ſome Reformati- 'on, if they intend to hold Correſpondence and Commerce with them.

The Subſtance of the Chancellor's Speech.

Having rous'd them with Reſpect to Foreign Enemies, he proceeded to take Notice of their Domeſtick Foes, 'Thoſe unquiet reſtleſs Spirits 'in their own Bowels, in whoſe Fidelity their Enemies abroad had more 'Dependance than upon their own Fleets. I muſt appeal, added he, to 'every one of your Obſervations, Whether the Countenance of theſe 'Men have not appeared to you more erected, and more inſolent in all 'Places, ſince the Beginning of this War, than they were before. In 'what Readineſs they were, if any Misfortune had befallen the King's

1665. Car. 17 Ref. 6.

‘ Fleet, which they promis'd themſelves, to have brought the Calamity ‘ into your Fields, and into your Houſes, is notoriouſly known. The ‘ horrid Murtherers of our late Royal Maſter have been receiv'd into ‘ the moſt ſecret Counſels in Holland; and other infamous proſtituted ‘ Perſons of our Nation are admitted to ſhare in the Conduct of their Af- ‘ fairs, and maintain their Correſpondence here upon liberal Allowances ‘ and Penſions. Too many of his Majeſty's Subjects, who were ſent by ‘ this Crown to aſſiſt and defend this ungrateful State againſt their Ene- ‘ mies, have been miſerably wrought upon, for the keeping a vile mean ‘ Subſiſtence, rather than their Livelyhood, to renounce their Allegiance ‘ and become Enemies to their native Country; ſome of whom have ‘ wantonly put themſelves on Board the Enemy's Fleet, without Com- ‘ mand or Office, purely out of Appetite and Delight to rebel againſt ‘ their King, and to worry their Country. Their Friends at home, impa- ‘ tient of further Delays for the Succeſs they had promis'd themſelves, ‘ and for the Succours which others had promis'd to them, made no ‘ Doubt of doing the Buſineſs themſelves, if they cou'd but appoint a ‘ Lucky Day to begin the Work. And you had heard of them in all ‘ Places upon the third of the laſt Month, their ſo much celebrated ‘ Third of September, if the great Vigilance and indefatigable Induſtry ‘ of the good General, had not two Days before apprehended the ſediti- ‘ ous Leaders, and given Advertiſements for the Security of others in ‘ moſt Parts of the Kingdom; by the Confeſſions of many of whom their ‘ wicked Deſign is enough manifeſted, and ready for Juſtice: Yet ſome ‘ of the principal Perſons are not yet taken, and ſome others got them- ‘ ſelves reſcued after they were apprehended.— If you carefully provide ‘ for the ſuppreſſing your Enemies at home, which will put you to lit- ‘ tle other Expence than of Courage, Conſtancy and Circumſpection, ‘ you will find your Enemies abroad leſs exalted, and in a ſhort Time ‘ more inclined to live in Amity with you, than to make War upon you; ‘ eſpecially when they ſee you do in Bello Pacis gerere Negotium, and ‘ that you take the carrying on the War to Heart, as the beſt and only ‘ Expedient to produce a happy and honeſt Peace.

The Unanimity of both Houſes.

Upon this, and the King's Speech, the Houſe of Commons with great Unanimity came to theſe two preſent Reſolutions: ‘ Firſt, That the ‘ humble and hearty Thanks of this Houſe be return'd to his Majeſty for ‘ his Care and Conduct in the Preſervation of his People, and the Ho- ‘ nour of this Nation: And that this Houſe will aſſiſt his Majeſty with their ‘ Lives and Fortunes againſt the Dutch, or any other that ſhall aſſiſt ‘ them in Oppoſition to his Majeſty. Secondly, That the humble Thanks ‘ of this Houſe be return'd to his Majeſty for the Care he hath had of ‘ the Perſon of his Royal Highneſs, the Duke of York.' To both which Votes the Lords gave their chearful Concurrence; and ſo both Houſes went in a full Body to attend his Majeſty upon this Occaſion. After this they proceeded without Delay to conſider of two great Points; one, the carrying on the preſent War, the other the ſuppreſſing and reſtraining the Enemies and Oppoſers at home. As to the the Firſt, the Commons, 1250000 Pounds voted.

to make good their Promiſe, voted a new Supply of twelve hundred and fifty thouſand Pounds, to be rais'd by a proportionable Addition to the Monthly Aſſeſſment to begin at Chriſtmaſs next; all which they ſoon turn'd into a Bill. After which they brought in another Bill for a Month's further Aſſeſſment of a hundred and twenty thouſand Pounds, to commence from the Expiration of the former Aſſeſſment, to be granted to his Majeſty, with a Deſire to his Majeſty to diſpoſe of it to his Royal Highneſs the Duke of York.

3. Theſe

1665. Car. 17 Reſ. 6.

3. Theſe, and ſeveral other Bills being finiſh'd, on the laſt Day of the Seſſion, the Honourable Houſe of Commons conſidering that they ſate in the Convocation Houſe of the Univerſity, and remembring the many great and loyal Actions of that Place, in the moſt dangerous and difficult Times, they came to this grateful and acceptable Vote: 'Reſolved, That 'the Thanks of the Houſe be given to the Chancellor, Maſters, and 'Scholars of the famous Univerſity of Oxford, for their eminent Loyalty 'to his Majeſty, and his Father of ever bleſſed Memory, during the late 'Rebellion; eſpecially for their unparallel'd Zeal and Courage in refu-'ſing to ſubmit to be viſited by the uſurped Powers, and to ſubſcribe 'the Solemn League and Covenant, and for thoſe Excellent REASONS 'they publiſh'd to the World to juſtify their Refuſal, and to aſſert his 'Majeſty's Righteous Cauſe.' Theſe Thanks were in a very ſolemn Manner preſented to the Univerſity in full Convocation by four of the Houſe of Commons, Mr. Laurence Hyde and Sir Heneage Finch, Members for the Univerſity, and Sir John Berkenhead and Colonel Giles Strangeways; and all four were either now, or a little before, honour'd by the Univerſity with the Titles of Doctors of the Civil Law.

The Commons Thanks to the Univerſity.

The ſame Day that this Vote was made, October the 31ſt, the King came to the Houſe of Peers in order to paſs the ſeveral Bills, and to make a Prorogation: At which Time, the Commons being ſent for, their Speaker, Sir Edward Turner, in preſenting the Bills, made a remarkable Speech to the King, which ſhews ſo much the Zeal of the Commons, and the Nature of the Acts themſelves, that it cannot well be abridg'd. With his uſual graceful Way he deliver'd himſelf thus: 'May it pleaſe 'your moſt Excellent Majeſty, The Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes of 'the Commons Houſe of Parliament, in Obedience to your Majeſty's 'Writ of Adjournment, came chearfully to this City of Oxford to re-'ceive your Royal Commands. And when your Majeſty was pleas'd to 'acquaint them with your great Expences this Summer, and the conti-'nuing Inſolencies of the Dutch, they were ſo inflamed with an Affecti-'on and Zeal for your Majeſty's Service, that they cou'd not ſuffer the 'leaſt Juncto of Time to paſs before they had made a Return ſuitable to 'their Engagements, That they wou'd aſſiſt your Majeſty with their Lives 'and Fortunes againſt the Dutch, or any other that ſhou'd aſſiſt them in 'Oppoſition to your Majeſty. The Engliſh Man uſeth to ſpeak as he writes, 'and the Engliſh Parliament to ſpeak as they think: No Security upon 'the Earth can be greater than the Engagement of your two Houſes of 'Parliament; Sed quid Verba audiam, dum Facta videam! As a Demon-'ſtration of their Fidelity, I am commanded to preſent unto your Ma-'jeſty this Bill, whereby they have given your Majeſty twelve hundred 'and fifty thouſand Pounds, to be levy'd in two Years, beginning from 'Chriſtmaſs next, by quarterly Payments added to the former Royal Aid: 'And that your Majeſty's Occaſions may be ſupply'd with ready Mony, 'before the Additional Aid can be rais'd, we have by the Bill prepared 'an undoubted Security for all ſuch Perſons as ſhall bring their Monies 'into the publick Bank of the Exchequer. As the Rivers do naturally 'empty themſelves into the Sea, ſo we hope the Veins of Gold and Sil-'ver in this Nation will plentifully run into this Ocean, for the Mainte-'nance of your Majeſty's juſt Soveraignty on the Seas.

The Speaker's Speech to the King at the Prorogation.

'Great Sir, When firſt we beſought your Majeſty to correct the In-'ſolencies, and to repair your Subjects againſt the Rapines of the Dutch, 'we did reaſonably ſuppoſe, That the Juſtice of your Majeſty's Demands 'wou'd at leaſt have had a fair and ingenuous Reception: But the Dutch 'reſolv'd, with Machiavil, to keep by Force what they had got by

'Fraud, and to return their Answer by the thundering Noise of their 'Cannon: The great God of Hosts, to whom Vengeance belongeth, 'hath eminently appear'd in your Majesty's Quarrel, and sharply rebuk'd 'the Insolence of that proud People. It is true, our Sins do cry aloud, 'as well as theirs; but God is pleas'd in Mercy to correct us himself, 'while by our Hands he punishes them, and makes them fly before us: 'I hope his Mercy will invite us to a National Repentance, and if He be 'with us, who can be against us? We can but take Notice of the sordid 'Defection of some English Fugitives, who have traiterously joyn'd with 'the Dutch, both in their Counsels and Actions, against your Majesty, 'and this their native Country: We therefore have prepared a Bill, 'whereby they are enjoyn'd to return by a Day, and answer to the Law, 'or else they shall be attainted of High Treason. It hath been an old 'Observation, That scandalous Livings make scandalous Ministers; and 'this most frequently falls out in Cities and Corporate Towns, where are 'little or no Predial Tythes, and therefore for meer Want they are forc'd 'to chant such Tunes as may please the rich Men in their Parishes: For 'Prevention of this for the future, there is a Bill prepared for the Uniting of small Churches and Chappels in Cities and Towns Corporate, 'by the Consent of the Patron, reserving other Parochial Rights di- 'stinct as they were before. This being a Time wherein your Majesty 'needs great Supply, we held it our Duty to ease the People in some 'unnecessary Expences; and therefore we have prepared a Bill for the 'more effectual Proceeding upon Distresses and Avowries for Rent: Ano- 'ther to avoid Circuity of Actions; a Third to lessen the Charge of ne- 'cessary Suits in Law; and a Fourth to take away an ancient and bur- 'thensom Fee in the Courts of Judicature, call'd Damage Cleer, or 'Damna Clericorum.

'Tacitus has a Saying, Such as are false in their Love, are true in 'their Hatred; and this we find verify'd in our Nonconformists: While 'they were in the Bosom of the Church of England, they were like in- 'ward Vapours, and inward Bleedings, always oppressing and strangling 'the Body of the Church; and now they are rejected and excluded 'from the Ministerial Function, they have more Malice, and no less Op- 'portunity to propagate their Principles than they had before. Some of 'them are Objects of Pity; they submitted their Reason to their Leaders 'of a higher Class, who fail'd them in their Hopes, and left them to the 'Rigour of the Law. Those poor Creatures have seen their Errors, and 'felt the Smart, and wou'd live peaceably; but their Jesuitical Leaders 'keep up their Spirits, and herd with them in Cities and Corporate 'Towns, where, by the Pretence of Persecution and Self-Denial, they 'move the Pity of good-natur'd People, who with their Charity keep 'up the Party, lessen the Maintenance of Conforming Ministers, and 'spread their Contagion amongst the Youth of the Nation. For the 'Prevention of this growing Mischief, we have prepared a SHIBO- 'LETH, a Test, to distinguish amongst them who will be peaceable, 'and give Hopes of a future Conformity, and who, of Malice and evil 'Disposition, remain obdurate: The One, we shall keep amongst us with 'all Love and Charity; the Other, we shall exclude from Cities and 'Corporation Towns, like those that have an infectious Disease upon 'them.

'It is not unusual for the Commons, at the Close of a Session of Par- 'liament, by their Speaker to present a Petition to their Soveraign; and, 'with your Majesty's Leave, I am now commanded that Service: We do, 'with all humble Thankfulness, acknowledge to God our great Happi- 'ness, That we are govern'd by a Prince, whose Prudence in Council,

The End of the Sixth Seſſion of the Second Parliament.

Upon paſſing the foremention'd Bills, the King, without any particular Speech, prorogu'd the Parliament to the 20th Day of February, and ſo terminated the Sixth Seſſion of the Second Parliament, after it had ſate no longer than twenty two Days. This was the ſhorteſt Seſſion of Parliament ſince the Reformation; yet perhaps equal to any for Vigour, Unanimity, and Diſpatch; nor does it appear by any ſubſtantial Proof, that the Members had ever been yet led or induc'd to act contrary to their natural Inclination. They have indeed been cenſur'd by ſome for making this laſt ſevere Act againſt the Diſſenting Teachers; but ſtill it was their own Inclination, and not that of the Court, tho' the Chancellor himſelf encourag'd it.

The Five Mile Act.

The Subſtance of this noted Act is, 'That no Nonconform-
'ing Teacher, under what Denomination ſoever, ſhall dwell, or come,
'unleſs upon the Road, within five Miles of any Corporation, or any o'ther Place where they had been Miniſters, or had preached after the 'Act of Oblivion, unleſs they firſt took the following Oath; I A. B. do
'ſwear, that it is not lawful upon any Pretence whatſoever to take Arms
'againſt the King; and that I do abhor the traiterous Poſition of taking 'Arms by his Authority againſt his Perſon, or againſt thoſe that are
'commiſſion'd by him, in purſuance of ſuch Commiſſions; And that I will
'not at any Time endeavour any Alteration of Government, either in
'Church or State.' The Penalty was forty Pounds, and ſix Months Impriſonment, unleſs they took the ſaid Oath before their Commitment. The Reaſon of this Severity given in the Act, is, 'That theſe Teachers
'had ſettled themſelves in divers Corporations, ſometimes three or more
'in a Place, and took Opportunity to diſtil the poyſonous Principles of
'Schiſm and Rebellion, to the great Danger of the Church and King'dom.' We are told by an anonymous Author in 1675, that this Oath was ſtrongly oppos'd in the Houſe of Lords by the Lord Treaſurer Southampton, the Lord Wharton, the Lord Aſhley, and others, as a moſt unlawful and unjuſtifiable Oath; but in the Houſe of Commons it was ſo far approv'd of, that it was there ſeconded by another Bill to impoſe the ſame Oath upon the whole Nation, which was thrown out only by two or three Votes.

Reflections upon it.

It has been a general Obſervation, That whatever Hardſhips the Diſſenting Party met or felt from the Laws, they aroſe more from the ſeditious Practices of ſome of them, than the religious Exerciſes of any of them; and that every Act of Parliament made to their Detriment, was founded upon the Reality, or the certain Belief of ſome Plot or Conſpiracy againſt the Nation's Peace, which they had promoted and encourag'd: So that what the Parliament did, eſpecially in the firſt ſeven Years of the Reſtoration, look'd more like Self-Preſervation, than Perſecution. And particularly in this Year, beſides what has been already ſaid, the Correſpondence of ſome of them with the Enemy was too notorious to be deny'd; and even the more Moderate of them ſhew'd a manifeſt Diſinclination to the War againſt the Dutch, tho' begun by the Call of the main Body of the People: So that when this Parliament was rous'd by the Information of the Chancellor, they thought they cou'd do no leſs than lay a new Reſtraint upon them, which they did by this call'd The Five Mile Act. In the other Act, before mention'd, they attainted Thomas Doleman, Joſeph Bamfield, alias Stepner, and Thomas Scot, Son to Thomas Scot the Regicide formerly executed, and others in the Dutch Service, who might be ſummon'd to return by a Proclamation: Accordingly Colonel Desborough, Colonel Kelſey, Colonel White, Grove, Honywood, Nicholas, and others, were afterwards ſummon'd to return by a certain Day; but we do not find that any of them did, except Desborough. Another Cauſe or Occaſion of the Parliament's ſtrict Care of the Diſſenters, was the Conventiclers in Scotland, who were this Year very mutinous and inſolent, and were thought to have held too much Correſpondence both with the Dutch and their Brethren in England.

The Behaviour of the Diſſenters.

As to the Behaviour of the Diſſenters with reſpect to thoſe Laws that bore hard upon them, the Act of Uniformity, the Conventicle Act, and the Five Mile Act, we ſhall give ſome Account in the Words of a particular Friend; who tells us in the Year 1664, after the two firſt Acts were paſs'd, the Nonconformiſts were not a little divided among themſelves, as to the Lawfulneſs and Expediency of worſhipping God in the publick Churches, over and above their private Meetings, ſtill kept up with great Secrecy. Mr. Baxter, and Dr. Bates, and ſeveral others with them, were for frequenting the publick Churches, when better Helps were not to be had; and for reſorting to them now and then, tho' they had their Choice, to ſhew their Charity. They were for having their moſt Uſual Communion with thoſe Aſſemblies, which they thought were manag'd moſt agreeably to the Rule and End of Worſhip; and yet for having Occaſional Communion with others, as Members of the Catholick Church, to ſhew their Catholick Communion with all the Body of Chriſt. But others were vehement for an entire Separation. From this Account we learn the Riſe of OCCASIONAL CONFORMITY, which, at this Time, did not appear to be ſubſervient to any ſecular Ends or political Purpoſes. After the Five Mile Act took place, the ſame Author tells us, That thoſe Miniſters that had any Maintenance of their own, found out ſome Dwellings in obſcure Villages, or in ſome Market-Towns that were not Corporations: And ſome that had nothing, left their Wives and Children, and hid themſelves abroad, and ſometimes came ſecretly to them by Night. But the moſt reſolv'd hereupon to preach the more freely in Cities and Corporations till they went to Priſon, &c. But the Nonconformiſts being in this Act charg'd with ſeditious Doctrines, and heinous Crimes, many were much concern'd. And hereupon they endeavour'd to find out a Senſe in which the Oath might be taken ſafely, to prevent their paſſing under that Brand to Poſterity. Dr. Bates conſulted the Lord-Keeper Bridgman, who profeſs'd a great Reſpect for him, about

about his taking it in a Sound Senſe. He to ſatisfy him, promis'd to be at the next Seſſions, and there on the Bench to declare openly, That by Endeavour in the Oath to change Church-Government, was meant only Unlawful Endeavour. Upon which Declaration, He and ſundry other Nonconformiſts, to the Number of Twenty, took it at the Seſſions, to avoid the Imputation of Seditious Doctrine. 1665. Car. 17 Reſ. 6.

To this Account we may reaſonably add what is ſaid by Another, the Author of the Compleat Hiſtory of England; That tho' the Diſſenters did, for the Reaſons before mention'd, &c. happen to raiſe the Zeal or Jealouſy of the two Houſes of Parliament againſt them; yet the King, and his ſecret Council, were always diſpos'd to countenance and protect them. And the King Himſelf, in Clemency and Good-Nature, if not in Judgment and Conſcience, gave a very generous and faithful Protection to the Foreign Proteſtants, and eſpecially the French, even after the Breach with that Court; reſerving his Promiſes of Safety, and Protection to them, in his Declaration of War: For which, immediately after, ſome Deputies from the French Church in the Savoy attended his Majeſty, with 'The humble Thanks of that Church for his good Protection, and 'kind Indulgence, expreſs'd towards them in his late Declaration againſt 'France.' And to give them the greater Invitations of Security and Eaſe, the French Proteſtants had the Favour to have a new Church, and full Liberty of uſing it, granted to them in the City of Dublin: And when their firſt Aſſembly met, at the Opening of it, the Lord-Lieutenant Ormond honour'd them with his Preſence, and with a firm Aſſurance of Continuing to them their Liberty, and a peaceable Enjoyment of it. The King's Civility to them and the French Peoteſtants.

4. And now it is Time to come to a Concluſion of the old Year 1665, after having ſpoken a Word or two with Relation to Ireland and Scotland, and mention'd ſome inferior Matters in England. In Ireland, the Duke of Ormond, Lord-Lieutenant, was remanded back to that Kingdom, and being receiv'd at Dublin with great Splendor and Magnificence, held a Parliament at the End of this Year; which granted to the King eight intire Subſidies, towards Supporting the weighty Occaſions of his Majeſty's Expences. Here ſeveral of the Members were accus'd for having been in the Plot againſt the Government in 1663, and Mr. Staples and Mr. Shapcot, and five others, being call'd to the Bar, were for ever expell'd the Houſe. A Parliament was alſo held in Scotland, which being provok'd by the inſolent Carriage of one Alexander Smith, and other Conventiclers, a ſevere Proclamation was iſſu'd out in that Kingdom, December 24th, 'Commanding all Silenc'd Presbyterian Mini-'ſters to remove themſelves and their Families out of the Pariſhes where 'they were Incumbents, within Forty Days, and not to reſide within 'twenty Miles of the ſame, or within ſix Miles of Edinburgh, or any 'Cathedral Church, or within three Miles of any Burgh-Royal of the 'Kingdom, or reſide Two of them in one Pariſh, under Pain of Incur-'ring the Penalties of the Law, againſt Movers of Sedition. The Affairs of Ireland, And Scotland.

In England, upon the Account of the dreadful Peſtilence, the King by Proclamation adjourn'd the Michaelmas Term from Weſtminſter to Oxford; and ſoon after the Breaking up of the Parliament, the ſeveral Courts of Juſtice ſat in the Publick Schools of the Univerſity. Here Sir John Keeling, an eminent Lawyer, firſt appear'd on the Bench as Lord chief Juſtice of England; and Sir William Morton one of the Judges of the ſame Court, in the Place of Sir Wadham Windham deceas'd. The next Hilary Term was from thence adjourn'd to Windſor; but, upon the Plague ceaſing, was from thence reſtor'd to Weſtminſter. His Majeſty, in the mean Time, to reſtrain Extravagancy, and to promote good Huſ- The Term adjourn'd to Oxford.

Husbandry, firſt declared in Council, and then wrote to the Lord-Mayor of London, 'That both Himſelf and his Royal Conſort wou'd wear, 'neither Inſide nor Outſide of their Cloathes, any Thing but what 'was Manufactured within his Kingdom of England; and that he had en-'joyn'd his whole Court to follow their good Examples therein, expect-'ing the reſt of his good Subjects to do the ſame; with only an Except-'tion of Linnen-Cloth and Calicoes.' Then for Diverſion and Curioſity, in the Beginning of this Year the King was pleas'd to viſit the famous Colledge of Phyſicians at London, where he was very honourably receiv'd by the eminent and learned Doctors. Here he ſaw the Marble Statue of the famous Harvey, the great Diſcoverer of the Blood's Circulation; and heard the Preſident Dr. George Ent, with equal Eloquence and Art, Reading upon the Myſteries of Anatomy, whom he there honour'd with Knighthood: There he ſaw the Chief Phyſician Bates, renowned both in the Medical Skill, and his Knowledge of the Latine Tongue; and Fraſier his chief Phyſician ſince; and Gliſſon, excellent in Medicine and Natural Philoſophy; and ſucceſsful Micklethwait; and much eſteemed Cox; and Scarborough, accompliſh'd in all Philoſophy, and no leſs famous among the Muſes; with Wharton the Secretary of the Glandules; and acute Merret: Beſides many others eminent in the Art of Healing and Relieving; to whom afterwards was aſſociated Willis the noble Reſtorer of Medicine, but of too ſhort a Life, together with Lower and Needham, who have ſince illuſtrated the Faculty by their ſeveral Writings.

An Account of Mr. Greatrakes.

After theſe we may mention a prodigious Healer of another Nature, who appear'd in England this Year, and fill'd the Mouths of all People, both in the Country and City: This was Mr. Valentine Greatrakes, an Iriſh Gentleman of a good Family, and a Juſtice of the Peace in the County of Cork; whoſe apparent Simplicity of Manners was attended with a great ſhew of Piety and Religion. As he himſelf informs us, In the Year 1662, an inward Inſpiration inform'd him, that he had the Gift of Curing the King's-Evil; which Perſwaſion grew ſo ſtrong in him, that he touch'd ſeveral People, and fully cured them. After this he had a ſecond Impulſe, and then a Third, by which he was ſatisfy'd that he cou'd cure Agues, and Pains in the Head, as likewiſe Wounds and Ulcers; all which, he ſays, was confirm'd by Experience; and he even found that he cured Convulſions, Dropſies, and ſeveral other Diſtempers. People flock'd to him from all Parts, and his Reputation encreas'd to that Degree, that the Lord Conway of Ragley in Warwickſhire engag'd him to come over and attend his Lady, then labouring under a long Illneſs. As he advanc'd towards that Seat, the Magiſtrates of ſeveral Cities and Towns invited him to paſs through the ſame, to cure their Sick; and the King being inform'd of the Rarity, commanded the Earl of Arlington to order him to repair to White-Hall. From thence he daily repair-ed to Lincoln's-Inn-Fields, whither came incredible Numbers of Perſons of all Ranks and Sexes, expecting the Reſtoration of their Health. He undertook all without receiving Mony, or any other Preſent; and all he did was only to Stroak the Patients; by which all old Pains, Gout, Rheumatiſms, Convulſions, &c. were ſenſibly remov'd from Part to Part to the Extremities of the Body, after which they entirely ceas'd; which caus'd him to be commonly call'd The Stroaker. Of all which he had the Teſtimonials of ſome of the moſt curious Men in the Nation, both Phyſicians and Divines. But his Failing ſometimes, and his leaving the Nation, ſoon made the Wonder to diminiſh, and great Numbers to attribute his Cures to the Credulity of the People. Yet many eminent and wiſe Men will not allow him to be an Impoſtor; and ſeveral of the Facts were were ſo manifeſt and unqueſtionable, that ſome Vertuoſi, as Mr. Boyl, Dr. Stubbe and Dr. Henry Moor, have made a plauſible Attempt to give a natural and Philoſophical Solution of theſe Cures, too long to be mention'd in this Hiſtory. 1665. Car. 17 Reſ. 6.

After ſo many noted Men living, we are in the laſt Place to take Notice of ſome who dy'd this Year, as four of the Laity, and five Profeſſing Divinity. The Firſt was Mountague Bertie, Earl of Lindſey, and Lord Great Chamberlain of England, one of the Quadrumvirate that had been ſo eminently diſtinguiſh'd for their unparallel'd Loyalty to the late King, as has been formerly hinted; a brave and experienc'd Soldier; a great Patron of uſeful Learning and Ingenuity, an honeſt, frugal and faithful Engliſhman, and a true Patriot and Imitator of the ancient Nobility, whoſe Grandeur conſiſted neither in rich Cloaths, nor fine Courtſhip. After he had waded through an Ocean of Difficulties, he dy'd in Quiet, Peace and Honour. The two next dy'd in War and Action, and both at Sea; who were Sir John Lawſon, and Mr. Edward Mountague. The Former was a poor Man's Son of Hull, who being bred to the Sea, by his great Induſtry and Courage ſoon became Captain of a Man of War, and ſignaliz'd himſelf in all the ſeveral Battels againſt the Dutch, during the Uſurpation; and afterwards gain'd new Honours in the Mediterranean, by bringing Argiers, and other great Diſturbers of Commerce, to Terms of Reaſon and Submiſſion; till at laſt, being one of the Admirals under the Duke of York, he bravely ventur'd and loſt his Life in the late great Sea-Fight, as was before mention'd. The Other, Mr. Mountague, was Son to the Lord Mountague of Boughton, a near Relation to the Earl of Sandwich, and the Queen's Maſter of the Horſe, who, having nobly diſplay'd his Courage, he was cut off in the unſucceſsful Attempt at Berghen, under Sir Thomas Tiddiman, to the particular Regret of the Court; being a young Gentleman ſo finely accompliſh'd by Nature and his own Induſtry, that it was always a Doubt among his Friends which was moſt agreeable, his polite Wit, or his gentile Behaviour. The Fourth to be mention'd, and very different from all the Reſt, is Sir Kenelme Digby, a Gentleman of the Earl of Briſtol's Family, the head Vertuoſo of the Times, One of a ſtrange extenſive and unbounded Genius, who by his unweary'd Induſtry, and his various Travels into many Foreign Countries, brought himſelf to a prodigious Inſight into all Parts of Knowledge; ſo that he was generally ſtyl'd the Magazine of all Arts, and by ſome the Ornament of the Nation: He was beſides a Man of intrepid Courage and Gallantry; his Perſon handſom and ſurprizing, accompany'd with ſuch a graceful Elocution and noble Addreſs, as commanded Reſpect from all Strangers. Yet with all his Accompliſhments, both of Body and Mind, his Wit and Invention did ſometimes ſo tranſport him, that he is charg'd with ſuch unlimited Vanities, and Romantick Extravagancies as are hardly conſiſtent with the ſound Senſe and exact Judgment that he ſo often manifeſted to the Learned World. This excellent and exorbitant Man dy'd in the 63d Year of his Age, at his Houſe in Covent-Garden London; which had been a Rendezvous to the greateſt Wits and Vertuoſi of the Age.

The Deaths of the Earl of Lindſey,

Sir John Lawſon,

Mr. Mountague,

Sir Kenelme Digby,

Among the Divines we ſhall firſt take Notice of Dr. John Earle, Biſhop of Salisbury, a Perſon educated in the Univerſity of Oxford, and afterwards made Chaplain and Tutor to the preſent King, when Prince of Wales: After he had ſuffer'd with him in his Exile, at the Reſtoration, he was gradually made Dean of Weſtminſter, and Biſhop of Worceſter, till he arriv'd at the See of Salisbury: He was a Man of a moſt gentile and obliging Temper; and one ſays of him, 'That ſince Mr. Richard Hooker, none have liv'd, whom God had bleſs'd with more in-

Dean Warmeſtry,

'nocent Wiſdom, more ſanctify'd Learning, or a more pious, peaceable, 'primitive Temper than he.' The next was Dr. Thomas Warmeſtry, Dean of Worceſter, a worthy Divine, educated in the ſame Univerſity of Oxford; who, having loſt all his Preferments in the late Troubles, ſettled at London, and there became the Almoner General to the Sufferers for the Royal Intereſt, the chief Confeſſor to Loyal Martyrs, a conſtant and indefatigable Viſitor and Comforter of ſick and diſtreſſed Cavaliers, zealous and happy in converting Infidels, induſtrious in reclaiming the Looſe, and eſtabliſhing the Wavering, and no leſs vigorous in preparing his Auditors for the Sacrament, and for Death; in all which he out-did the contrary Party in their own Talent of Preaching. The three other Divines were all Presbyterians, Dr. William Spurſtow, Dr. Francis Cheynell, and Dr. Cornelius Burgeſs, all three celebrated Incendiaries in the late Times of Confuſion. The firſt Dr. Spurſtow, was the moſt moderate of the three, yet was one of the five who compoſed the Book that ſo boldly ſtruck at the Eſtabliſh'd Religion, call'd Smectymnuus; the other four being Stephen Marſhall, Edmund Calamy, Thomas Young, and Matthew Newcomen, the initial Letters of whoſe Names compos'd that uncommon Word: Notwithſtanding this, and ſome Sermons of his before the Long Parliament, he is ſaid to be of a peaceable and humble Diſpoſition. He was one of the Aſſembly of Divines, Maſter of Catharine-Hall in Cambridge, and Miniſter of Hackney near London; out of the Maſterſhip he was ejected for refuſing the Engagement, and out of the laſt for Non-Compliance with the Act of Uniformity. The Second, Dr. Cheynell, was likewiſe one of the Aſſembly of Divines, and a frequent Preacher before the Parliament, and Miniſter of the rich Living of Petworth in Suſſex: He was a Man of conſiderable Learning and great Abilities, and of great Perſonal Strength and Courage, all which he employ'd to good and bad Purpoſes; having ſuch a Heat in his Temper as for a while diſorder'd his Brain, the Fury of which ſufficiently ſhew'd it ſelf in his Behaviour at the Funeral of the great Mr. Chillingworth, which has been formerly mention'd. The laſt, Dr. Burgeſs, was alſo one of the Aſſembly of Divines, and a very frequent Preacher before the Long Parliament, and one of the greateſt Boutefeu's of the whole Party, being the perpetual Trumpeter to the worſt and moſt violent Proceedings of that Parliament: He was certainly a great Inſtrument in bringing on the Miſeries of the Nation, as is formerly remember'd, in which he was ſo furiouſly active, and withal ſo ſcandalouſly ſubſervient, that few or none have undertaken to vindicate him. He had been educated in the Univerſity of Oxford, and made Chaplain to the late King; but being diſguſted with a Proſecution in the High Commiſſion Court, and his Ambition unanſwer'd, he ſhew'd himſelf a true Time-Server, and gain'd ſo much as to grow rich by the Purchaſe of Biſhop's Lands: But after the Reſtoration, he loſt all, and living privately at Watford in Hertfordſhire, he there dy'd in great Want and Poverty, tormented and eaten up with a Cancer in his Neck and Cheek; a fearful Inſtance of Rebellion and Sacriledge. An Incendiary, let his Religion or Cauſe be what it will, is never to be ſpared by an impartial Hiſtorian; whoſe Buſineſs is to diſplay the Honour, and expoſe the Infamy of all that make a Noiſe in the World.

The Caſe of the Dutch,

III. 1. About the Beginning of the New Year, the two contending Nations of England and Holland were both preparing for new War and Action, which they ſeem'd reſolv'd to carry on with the utmoſt Power and Vigour. The Dutch, in the preceding Year, had been manifeſtly the greateſt Sufferers by Sea; and while they were ſtruggling with thoſe thoſe Inconveniencies, they had ſtill a greater Difficulty to defend themſelves by Land. For the Biſhop of Munſter, as was hinted in the King's Speech to the Parliament, being encourag'd by the Engliſh, and ſupported by their Mony, had advanc'd into the Country of Frieſland, and defeating ſeveral conſiderable Parties of the Dutch, had taken ſome Towns, and had pillag'd and burnt ſeveral Villages, while Prince Maurice, with eighteen thouſand Men, was little more than a Spectator. The Dutch, under this Mortification, had no Friends or Aſſiſtants but the King of France, the Lunenburgers, and the Brandenburgers; which laſt were cold in the Cauſe, and choſe rather to be negotiating a Mediation between the States of Holland and the Biſhop of Munſter. The Lunenburgers were altogether as indifferent in the Matter, and ſent to excuſe themſelves to the King of England, for what they had done, and pretended Ignorance of the Grounds and Cauſes of the Biſhop's taking Arms. The greateſt Hopes and Dependence of the States was in the French King; who, tho' provok'd by the Biſhop of Munſter, yet ſent them only a Supply of ſome ſickly Troops, which rather more infected than aſſiſted their Allies; and therefore were ſent to quarter in the Brandenburgers Country, as if they went chiefly for freſh Air. But ſtill the Biſhop of Munſter, with all theſe Advantages, thought himſelf not ſufficiently ſupported by the Engliſh Mony, and became a little wavering; which occaſion'd Chancellor Clarendon to uſe theſe Words, in a Letter to Sir William Temple at Bruſſels: 'And as the Failing towards the Biſhop of Munſter has not proceeded from any Faults of ours, but even 'from the Hand of God; ſo we ſhall out of hand repair theſe Omiſſions.' In the ſame Letter he complain'd of the great Weight that lay upon them in carrying on one War againſt the Dutch, and preparing for another againſt France; and afterwards has theſe remarkable Words, 'There is nothing now ought to be labour'd with ſo much Induſtry and 'Dexterity, as the uniting England, Spain and Flanders; which wou'd 'give, and which only can give Peace to Chriſtendom. I am ſure our 'Maſter is paſſionately inclin'd to it; and truely I think Spain is well 'diſpos'd in the main; yet I know not how by the fatal Delay in Diſ'patch there, and it may be their Expectation, that in the Straights we are 'in, we ſhall buy their Friendſhip at a Rate we ſhall never pay for, 'there is not the Haſte made that the Affair required.

Who depend upon France.

About the middle of the Winter the French King began to be very ſenſible, that the Engliſh were much ſuperior to the Dutch by Sea; and being apprehenſive of the prevailing Power of the former, he more than once threatned to declare War againſt them: But yet to make it rather a Politick Intrigue, than an open compleat Rupture, he began with acquainting the Queen Mother of England, That tho', by means of the repeated Inſtigations of the Dutch, he cou'd no longer keep off a Declaration of War againſt his Majeſty of Great Britain; yet he ſhou'd always preſerve the ſame Eſteem and Value for his Majeſty's Perſon, hoping that his Britannick Majeſty wou'd always continue the ſame Kindneſs and Affection for him. To prevent or divert this impending Storm, the Lord Hollis, the Engliſh Ambaſſador at Paris, preſented a Memorial to the French King, teſtifying his Maſter's Inclination to Peace: But knowing the Humour of the French, and finding that their Ambaſſador Courtin had ſaid at Oxford, The Parliament might give as they pleas'd, he was ſure the People wou'd never pay the Mony, he inſerted this Paragraph in his Memorial, which ſhou'd not be here omitted: 'The Dutch at 'firſt hop'd to make their Advantage of ſome ſuppos'd Diſorders in 'England, or of the King's not being able to carry on the War for want 'of Mony; which embolden'd them to injure and inſult us, and actual'ly to begin a War with us in Guiney. But, God be thanked, they are 'so out of their Calculation, That the People of England were never 'better united than at preſent: And as to Mony, the King will never 'want any to carry on the War. I can ſay this perhaps with more Aſ-'ſurance than another, having been converſant with Parliamentary Af-'fairs theſe forty Years, from the Time of King James of happy Me-'mory; and I will affirm, that the two Houſes are ſo zealous for their 'Prince's Glory, and the Publick Intereſt of the Nation, that they will 'not ſuffer the leaſt Want of what is neceſſary to finiſh this War. If what 'is already given be defective, they will give three Quarters, and reſerve 'only for themſelves what is neceſſary to keep them alive. This, Sir, 'is what I am ſure the King my Maſter will meet with in the Affection 'of his People, for the Support of his Rights, againſt the Inſults and Vi-'olences of his Enemies.

The French King's Declaration of War againſt England.

The Memorial was preſented on the 20th Day of January; notwithſtanding which, the French King within ſix Days after publiſh'd his Declaration of War againſt England, which begins with this following mild Narrative: 'His Majeſty having receiv'd Advice, that ſome Miſunder-'ſtandings had aroſe between England and the United Provinces, or-'der'd his Ambaſſadors in Ordinary to try all the good Offices in his 'Name to endeavour to ſtifle this Diviſion in its Birth; and having with 'Grief underſtood, that both Sides were ſo exaſperated as to come to 'Acts of Hoſtility, his Majeſty ſent Ambaſſadors Extraordinary to the 'King of Great Britain, to endeavour by new Offices to pacify and 'compoſe thoſe Differences by an Accommodation: But the Mediation 'not meeting with the promis'd Effect, the States General of the United 'Provinces have, with preſſing Inſtances, continu'd to ſolicite his Maje-'ſty to execute the Treaty of a Defenſive League concluded with them 'the 27th of April 1662: And his Majeſty finding himſelf oblig'd to per-'form his Royal Word, and the Engagements into which he enter'd by 'a Solemn Treaty, at a Time when England and Holland were entire 'Friends, and without any Proſpect of a Rupture; his Majeſty has de-'clared, and by theſe ſign'd Preſents does declare, that he has agreed and 'reſolv'd to aſſiſt the ſaid States General of the United Provinces, pur-'ſuant to the ſaid Defenſive League, and to join all his Forces to theirs, 'to act againſt the Engliſh, as well by Sea as by Land. And for that 'End, his Majeſty commands all his Subjects, &c. to attack the 'ſaid Engliſh; and forbids them hereafter to have any Communi-'cation, Commerce, or Intelligence with them on Pain of Death.—' Before the Publication of this Declaration, the French King and the States had in Effect made themſelves ſecure of the King of Denmark, who having been by Miſtake unkindly treated by England upon the Berghen Expedition, was privately induc'd, upon the Payment of a certain Sum of Mony, to come into this following Treaty: '1. That 'each Party ſhou'd abſolutely deſiſt from all former Pretenſions. 2. That 'all Miſunderſtandings in Norway ſhou'd be totally forgotten. 3. That 'the States General ſhou'd engage to pay the King of Denmark fifteen 'hundred thouſand Livers per Annum, as long as the War againſt Eng-'land ſhou'd continue; of which the French ſhou'd pay three hundred 'thouſand Livers yearly for their Part: For which his Daniſh Majeſty 'ſhou'd engage to maintain a Fleet at Sea of thirty Ships of War, to be 'employ'd in the Service of the States, of which ſome ſhou'd be fur-'niſh'd with a ſufficient Number of Regular Troops.' This Treaty was carry'd on with that Secrecy, that the King of England had no Notice of it till the Concluſion: For the Secretary of the Daniſh King's Embaſſy in Holland, was ſent Incognito by the Miniſters of that Prince, immediately after the finiſhing the Treaty, to the King their Maſter, to preſent it to him, and get his Ratification; after which the Secretary re-

By which clandeſtine Management, the Engliſh Reſident at Denmark, Sir Gilbert Talbot, had not Time to caution the Merchants of his own Nation; ſo that all their Effects were ſeiz'd and confiſcated throughout the whole Extent of the Kingdom. 1665. The Swedes reſent it.

This was ſo ill reſented by the Regents of Sweden, that they declared to all Publick Miniſters their Reſolution to ſtand firm to the League with England: In order to which, General Wrangle, underſtanding that ſome Dutch Frigates were come into the Elbe, where at that Time rode a Fleet of Engliſh Merchantmen, commanded a Swediſh Man of War to guard them, and rather to ſink by their Sides, than to ſuffer them to receive any Injury. The ſame Care was likewiſe taken by the Swedes to ſecure the Engliſh in Schonen. They alſo ſent an Ambaſſador into Denmark, to expoſtulate the Reaſon of their new Alliance, and to teſtify their Diſlike of the whole Tranſaction. And when the Daniſh Reſident, in a formal Speech, endeavour'd to give the Queen and Regents of Sweden 'an Account of his Maſter's Intentions in that League for the Security of the Sound, and the Provocations pretended from England, which 'forc'd him to a Retaliation, and offer'd to have the Crown of Sweden 'included in the ſame Alliance;' he was briskly anſwer'd, That the Procedure of his Maſter ſeem'd ſo unfair and diſhonourable, that they knew not how any Prince for the future wou'd treat with him. But the Swedes, ſeeing what the Danes had determined, reſolv'd by no Means to ſuffer the Sound to be ſhut up at Pleaſure; therefore they reinforc'd their Garriſons in Schonen, and prepared a ſufficient Navy for their Defence. However, to ſhew themſelves not altogether averſe from Peace, the Swedes afterwards form'd a Project for an Accommodation between the States and Themſelves, which contain'd ſo many Points of Reſtitutions and Reparations, to be made by the States, as cou'd meet with no favourable Reception: Eſpecially ſince the Swedes inſiſted to be admitted into the Trade of the Indies; a Point, above all the reſt, in which the Dutch were moſt jealous and tenacious.

Soon after the Defection of Denmark, the Biſhop of Munſter began to ſhew the ſame mercenary Temper; and being preſs'd by the French, the Dutch, and the Brandenburgers, and wanting ſome Remainder of the Engliſh Subſidies, he hearken'd to Propoſals of Accommodation. Sir William Temple, the Engliſh Envoy at Bruſſels, who had been a chief Inſtrument in the Alliance, wrote a pathetick Letter to him; and ſhortly after took a Journey to Munſter, to endeavour to keep him true to it, but in vain. But upon his Return to Bruſſels, being inform'd that Monſieur Colbert, the French Miniſter, was going to Munſter to hire the Troops the Biſhop deſign'd to diſmiſs, Sir William by a Letter repreſented to that Prince, 'How unjuſt, how treacherous, how ungrateful it wou'd appear, for thoſe Troops that were rais'd and arm'd by the 'King his Maſter's Mony, to enter into the Service of a foreign Prince, 'now at open Enmity with England; by which Means they became 'Rebels rather than Enemies: And therefore deſired that thoſe Troops 'be plac'd in the Service of the King of Spain, who had been long his 'Britannick Majeſty's Friend and Confederate.' However, the French, Dutch, and Munſter Envoys met at Cleve, and there by the Mediation of the Elector of Brandenburgh concluded a Peace, notwithſtanding Sir William's Endeavours to prevent it; who with great Difficulty and Danger, in the Diſguiſe of a Spaniard, repair'd to Munſter juſt as the Treaty was ſign'd. The Biſhop wou'd have engag'd him to ſtay there, till he had repreſented his Reaſons to the King his Maſter, and receiv'd his Anſwer; but Sir William finding his Deſign was to keep him there, while

The Biſhop of Munſter falls off from England.

1665. Car. 18 Ref. 6. while his Agent at Bruſſels receiv'd Bills of Exchange from England, wiſely refus'd to comply. So with the ſame Secrecy, and no leſs Danger and Fatigue, Sir William haſtned through the wildeſt Country, and had the good Fortune to arrive at Bruſſels Time enough to ſtop ſeveral Bills of Exchange, that wou'd otherwiſe have fallen into the Hands of the Biſhop's Agent, and to forbid the Payment of the reſt he receiv'd in his Abſence. And thus ended the whole Affair of Munſter, that made ſo much Noiſe, and rais'd ſo much Expectation in the World: However, Sir William ſo well concerted with the Biſhop, that he engag'd him to ſend five or ſix thouſand of his beſt Troops into the Spaniſh Service, upon the Governor's paying fifty thouſand Pattacoons, and obliging himſelf to reſtore them, when the Biſhop wanted them, upon the Re-payment of the like Sum; which however defeated the Negotiation of Monſieur Colbert at Munſter

England's bad Condition. Thus the King of England, before he cou'd enter upon his ſecond Year's Expedition, was abandon'd and left deſtitute of his chief Friends and Supporters, and likewiſe forc'd to contend and ſtruggle with unforeſeen and powerful Enemies; and all this while a dreadful Plague, tho' juſt expired in the City of London, ſtill rag'd in many other Cities and Towns in the Kingdom. Of his new Enemies, the French were more fair than the Danes: For upon the Lord Hollis's remonſtrating at Paris the great Injuſtice of the new Declaration of War, which ſubjected the Engliſh Eſtates and Perſons to all Acts of Hoſtility, contrary to former Treaties between the two Crowns, allowing three Months to each Party for withdrawing Effects after a Rupture; the French King thereupon iſſu'd out a ſecond Proclamation, allowing the Engliſh the ſaid Liberty of three Months to tranſport themſelves and their Goods.

The King, &c. return to London. 2. In the mean Time, the Plague being in a manner ceas'd in London, on the firſt of February the King, with his Royal Brother the Duke of York, left Hampton-Court and Oxford, and repair'd to his Palace at Whitehall, to the infinite Joy of the City, which they manifeſted with Bells, Bonfires, and more than ordinary Marks of Exultation. And the next Day the Lord-Mayor and the Sheriffs of the City of London waited upon his Majeſty with a particular Compliment from the City, in a humble and hearty Welcome to his happy Return, after ſo long and melancholy an Abſence; and were ſo graciouſly receiv'd, that his Majeſty conferr'd the Honour of Knighthood on Alderman Robert Hanſon, and Alderman William Hooker, the two Sheriffs of the City. The Queen, being much indiſpos'd, was for a while left behind, who met with an Illneſs and Misfortune that was leaſt of all expected, which was a Miſcarriage of a Child, and which her Infirmities wou'd not permit her to bring to Maturity. Of which Affair, we find theſe Words in a Manuſcript of a knowing Miniſter, ‘ February the 10th, It is whiſper'd that the Queen ‘ gives out, That the true Cauſe of her Miſcarriage was a Longing to ‘ ſee the King, and not ſhe her ſelf, who ſaid, She was ſure ſhe cou'd ‘ never eſcape it! So great was her Paſſion at that Time.'

The Queen miſcarries.

The King being ſettled again at Whitehall, and finding the hearty Zeal of his Subjects, without any Fear or Delay publiſh'd his Declaration of War againſt the French; which began in theſe modeſt Terms: ‘ Where- ‘ as the French King, pretending the Execution of a Defenſive Treaty ‘ with the States General of the United Provinces, and thereby deter- ‘ mining us to be the Aggreſſors and Invaders of them (the contrary to ‘ which is moſt notoriouſly known to all the World) did on the $\frac{16}{26}$th of ‘ January laſt declare War againſt our Subjects, making himſelf thus the ‘ Aggreſſor, and rendring the Peace we have always deſired with the ‘ ſaid

His Majeſty then iſſu'd out his Orders to all the Maritime Counties to put themſelves into a Poſture of Defence; which they did with all poſſible Readineſs and Alacrity, and offer'd their continual Attendance of their Militia in Arms; but the King unwilling to give them a needleſs Trouble and Expence, was pleas'd to direct their Diſmiſſion and return home, till farther Occaſion ſhou'd require. Thus early were the People warm'd and animated againſt the Power of France, before they cou'd foreſee the Swelling Exorbitance of it: For at this Time the French King, tho' he had undoubtedly form'd vaſt Deſigns in his Head, had himſelf done nothing ſo great either by Sea or Land, as to give any direful Apprehenſions to his Neighbours, beſides the Purchaſe of Dunkirk; which at that Time was not look'd upon as a Matter ſo formidable, as it afterwards appear'd.

caus'd them to put to Sea with great Readineſs and Forwardneſs. The Engliſh Fleet was no ways defective in Expedition; and becauſe it was ſtill reſolv'd that the Admiral the Duke of York ſhou'd not adventure his Perſon, and that the Earl of Sandwich was now ſent Ambaſſador to Spain, it was therefore appointed that Prince Rupert and the Duke of Albermarle, two intrepid Commanders, ſhou'd be his Majeſty's Generals at Sea for this Summer's Expedition; having Sir George Ayſcough Admiral of the White, and Sir Thomas Allen of the Blue Squadron. Theſe, with other brave Soldiers, on the 23d of April, went down to the Fleet, and enter'd on the Command of it. They lay for ſome Time at the Buoy in the Nore, where they were ſolemnly viſited by the King Himſelf and his Royal Brother, on the 3d of May. On the 23d they arriv'd at the Gun-Fleet, and were riding in the Downs on the 29th, when Prince Rupert receiv'd particular Orders to leave the grand Fleet, and ſail with twenty great Ships and joyn with ten more at Plymouth, to meet and intercept the French Fleet under the Duke of Beaufort, which were believ'd to be then coming from Belle-Iſle into the Engliſh Channel. This was thought an artificial Rumour to divide the Engliſh Fleet: The Orders however were too haſtily obey'd; and at the ſame Time it was reported that the Dutch Fleet wou'd not be out in ſix Weeks.

Neither of theſe prov'd true; and the Want of exact Intelligence prov'd very pernicious, tho' not fatal to the Engliſh, who on Friday the 1ſt of June, diſcover'd the whole Dutch Fleet under De Ruyter and Tromp, at Anchor near Newport, conſiſting of ninety one Sail, when theirs amounted to a little above Fifty. Upon which Admiral Monk call'd a Council of the Flag-Officers, who agreed with him, 'That, conſidering the preſent 'State and Circumſtances, it wou'd be unſafe and diſhonourable to retire 'and decline the Battle;' and ſo, with this great Inequality, they reſolv'd to engage the Enemy; and tho' the Height of the Wind hinder'd them from uſing their loweſt Tire of Guns, they fell in with ſo briſk a Reſolution, that the Dutch were forc'd to cut their Cables, not having Time to weigh Anchor. And thus, with ſuch Thunderings as reach'd the City of London, began that bloody and celebrated Battle of four Days, 'the Memory of which, according to the Words of a Dutch Writer, 'ought to be preſerv'd to all Poſterity, as well for the unexampled 'Bravery of the Engliſh, tho' over-power'd by Numbers, becauſe divi-'ded in Force, as for the dear bought Advantage of the Hollanders, 'which yet was far from meriting the Name of a Victory, tho' State 'Policy requir'd it ſhou'd be extoll'd and proclaim'd abroad as one of the 'moſt compleat Kind.

The Second BATTLE.

First Day.

The Particulars of this Battle are ſomewhat variouſly related, according to the Judgement and Opinion of each Party: But in General all agree that the Duke of Albemarle, the Engliſh Admiral, with his unequal Numbers moſt glorioufly engag'd and fought the whole Dutch Fleet for the beſt Part of three Days. The Firſt Day's Fight was manag'd with great Bravery on both Sides, and with almoſt equal Advantage. After which, ſoon in the next Morning, calling the Commanders and Captains to a Council of War, he ſpoke to them after this Manner: Had we fear'd the double Number of the Enemy, we ſhou'd have fled Yeſterday; for tho' we are inferior to them in Ships, in all Things elſe we are Superior. Numbers make them bold, and couragious: Let us reflect upon that Fortune and Valour, which the Dutch have ſo often felt to their woful Experience. Let our Adverſaries find to Day, that tho' our Fleet be divided, our Courage is entire; and when we conſider our own Glory and ancient Renown, how much more honourable will it be to dye reveng'd upon the Seas, than to be carry'd Priſoners, as a Spectacle of Triumph to the Dutch? It is leſs Diſgrace to be overcome than fly; and Death is to be prefer'd before Fear. This was immediately ſucceeded with the ſecond Day's Fight, which was more terrible and bloody than the Former, eſpecially in the Afternoon; ſo that there were few Ships of either Fleet but ſufficiently felt the Effects of it by the Loſs of their Maſts, Round-Tops, Sails and Rigging. And, notwithſtanding the Dutch receiv'd that Day a new Supply of ſixteen Ships, both Fleets parted that Night without any apparent Advantage on either Side. In the Third Day's Fight, the Numbers being ſtill more unequal, the Engliſh retired towards their own Shore: Yet in this the Valour and Conduct of their Admiral appear'd in full Splendor; for being Himſelf ever in the Rear, he ſo bravely and warmly receiv'd the Purſuers, and ſo skilfully cover'd and protected the weakeſt of the Engliſh Ships, that moſt of them made a commodious and ſafe Retreat.

Second Day.

Third Day.

Fourth Day.

The Duke having thus unequally and bravely fought for three Days, Prince Rupert, hearing the Noiſe of the Cannon, came up and joyn'd him; and ſo there began a fourth Day's Fight, which was continu'd in ſeveral veral Forms and Ways, with incredible Bravery and Reſolution: And it may be ſaid, that there and then it was, that the Valour of all in general and of every One in particular, appear'd in its full Power and Luſtre. The Conſequence of which was ſufficiently hideous and diſmal; on both Sides a ſad Spectacle to be ſeen of dead and wounded Men, and a terrible Harveſt of Maſts mown down, and of Sails and all ſorts of Tackle tumbling into the Sea, with all the Mixtures of Horror and Confuſion. Prince Rupert, with a Courage and Heat peculiar to Himſelf, with his Squadron fought four or five Times through the whole Body of the Dutch Fleet with good Advantage; but when he thought Himſelf ready to reap the Fruits of his Valour, he found his Maſts were ſhot off, and his Ship diſabled for any Purſuit. And now both Sides being miſerably ſhatter'd, as the Evening came on, they retired to their own Coaſts, each of them Challenging the Victory; but the Dutch coming out firſt, were reputed to be Maſters of the Sea. The Loſſes were conſiderable on both Sides, but variouſly related. The Dutch are ſaid to have loſt above fifteen Ships and twenty one Captains, and above five thouſand common Seamen. The Engliſh had nine Men of War taken or burnt, of which the chief was the Prince, a firſt Rate Ship commanded by Sir George Ayſcough, which being unfortunately ſtranded, Sir George was taken Priſoner, and the Ship burnt. The Ships that eſcap'd ſuffer'd terribly for the moſt part, eſpecially in their Rigging; and of thoſe Men that were kill'd, which were ſtill leſs numerous than the Dutch, Sir William Berkley and Sir Chriſtopher Minns were the moſt noted, and lamented.

1666. Car. 18 Reſ. 7.

Both Sides challenge the Victory.

In this memorable Battle of four Days, there were diſcover'd innumerable Inſtances of the Valour and Bravery of particular Men; of which we ſhall only mention two of the Engliſh, and both taken from the Accounts publiſh'd by the Dutch, which were thoſe of Sir John Harman, and Sir William Berkley. The Former was Rear-Admiral of the White, and Commander of the Henry of ſeventy ſix Guns, of whom they give us this Account. —'Whoſe Ship having been vigorouſly attack'd by De 'Ruyter, and ſome other Ships of his Squadron, and being very much 'ſhatter'd, De Ruyter ſent out a Fireſhip, which faſtned upon her and 'ſet her on Fire; but the firſt Fireſhip was put off and ſunk, and the 'Flames in the Rear-Admiral extinguiſh'd. Then another Fireſhip of 'the Zealand Squadron was ſent to burn her; and again ſet the Engliſh 'Ship in Flames, but that was likewiſe repell'd, and the Fire quencht. 'A Third Fireſhip, under the Covert of Admiral Evertz's Guns, was 'once more ſent to try to repair the former Miſcarriages, but was no 'more fortunate; for faſtning upon the Engliſh Rear-Admiral, he indeed 'ſet fire to him; but in a Moment that was quencht, and the Fireſhip 'ſunk with the Cannon-Shot: So that according to the Teſtimony of all 'the Dutch Officers, who were Spectators of that glorious Action, the 'undaunted Bravery of the Engliſh Commander cou'd not be ſufficiently admired; which was ſo much the more remarkable, becauſe near 'three Hundred of his Men had deſerted him, and leapt into the Sea, 'at the Approach of the two firſt Fireſhips. And at the End of the 'Conflict, the ſame Rear-Admiral perform'd likewiſe an Action glorious to Him, but fatal to Us, by a Cannon-Shot, that took away the 'Life of the illuſtrious Admiral Evertz, whoſe good Conduct and 'great Courage had made him admired both in this and other Encounters.' As to the other Inſtance of Sir William Berkley, they write thus: 'Among other remarkable Paſſages in the Fight, the undaunted Reſolution of Vice-Admiral Berkley was particularly admired; who having 'had forty Men kill'd on board him, and being no longer able to make Great Inſtances of Valour.

'Reſiſtance, yet was ſo obſtinately bent to fight, that he wou'd take no 'Quarter; and wou'd have kill'd with his own Hand three or four of his 'Enemies that had boarded his Ship: But at laſt being ſhot into the 'Throat with a Musket Bullet, he retired into his Cabbin, where laying 'himſelf at Length on the Table, he was in that Poſture found dead by 'the Victors, all cover'd with the Blood that flow'd out of his Wounds. After all the ſame Writers tell us, 'That under God, the undaunted 'Courage and wiſe Conduct of Admiral De Ruyter had the greateſt 'Share in what Advantage was gotten in that fierce Battel againſt the 'Potent and Warlike; who, tho' out-number'd and overpower'd, yet 'fought ſo obſtinately, that they wou'd in all Probability have raviſh'd 'the Victory from a leſs expert and valiant Commander than himſelf.

The Dutch appear a ſecond Time.

4. Both Parties being retired to their own Coaſts and Harbours, the Dutch, eſpecially De Wit's Party, ſhew'd all the Marks of Joy and Triumph for their dear bought Victory; and, being again encourag'd by the Promiſes of the French Ambaſſador, they us'd all poſſible Vigour and Diligence to put to Sea again. They had the Credit and Reputation of appearing on the Ocean, before the Engliſh were ready to come out; which caus'd them to ride braving upon the Coaſts, dating their Letters and Paſſports From aboard the Seven Provinces in the Mouth of the River of London. They conſiſted of eighty ſix Sail, and were divided into three Squadrons, the firſt commanded by De Ruyter, the ſecond by the other Evertz, and the third by Tromp; and as they rode upon the Engliſh Coaſts, they often made towards France, in a ſecond Expectation of meeting the French Fleet to join them, under the Command of the Duke of Beaufort. They had not been long at Sea, when they were very much ſurpriz'd to ſee their Enemy, whom they thought they had irrecoverably weaken'd for one Year, appear with no leſs than ninety Sail of Men of War, and twenty Fire-Ships, &c. They were likewiſe divided into three Squadrons; the Red under the Command of Prince Rupert and General Monk, the White under Sir Thomas Allen, and the Blue under Sir Jeremy Smith. Beſides whom there were theſe brave Commanders, Sir Joſeph Jordan, Sir Thomas Tiddiman, Captain Utbert, Sir Robert Holms, Sir Edward Spragge, and Captain Kempthorn, who had each of them the Honour to bear a Flag.

The Engliſh meet them.

The Third BATTEL.

In a very ſhort Time, on the 24th of July, the two formidable Fleets came in Sight of each other, reſolving to exert themſelves to the utmoſt Degree; and the next Morning began the Battel with all imaginable Fierceneſs and Fury. Never were greater Numbers of Guns diſcharg'd within the Space of four Hours; the dreadful roaring of which ſeem'd to outvie all the Thunderings of the Heavens; and the Smoak clouded the very Sun, and render'd the Air blacker than in the darkeſt Winter Days. After a hideous Confuſion, and terrible Strugglings and Conflicts, De Ruyter, finding his Ship miſerably ſhatter'd, and three hundred of his Men ſlain or diſabled, on the Afternoon made all the Sail he cou'd, and retired, being with the reſt of his Fleet forc'd to yield to the Engliſh the ſo much conteſted Empire of the Sea. The latter ſunk and burnt about twenty of their Men of War, kill'd Evertz Admiral of Zealand, Tirrick Hiddes Admiral of Friezland, the Vice-Admiral of Friezland, and Rear-Admiral Van-Saen, with above four thouſand common Sea-Men, and near three thouſand wounded; and likewiſe chas'd their Ships along the Coaſts of Zealand and Holland, till with the Advantage of the Flats and Banks, over which the Engliſh great Ships cou'd not follow them, they got into the Weilings. All this was effected with a very inconſiderable, or at leaſt diſproportionable Loſs on the Engliſh Side. In the

the Flight the Enemy met with a ridiculous kind of a Mortification: For, when the Engliſh were unable to purſue any further, the Fanfan, a ſort of a Pleaſure-Boat made for Prince Rupert, made up with her Oars to De Ruyter himſelf, and bringing her two little Guns on one Side, continu'd for near an Hour, plying Broad-Sides, to the great Laughter of the Engliſh, and Indignation of the Dutch, to ſee their Chief Admiral attack'd by a ſingle Sloop. 1666. Car. 18 Reſ. 7.

The Conſequences of this Victory were ſtill more conſiderable: For the Prince and the Duke, finding their Enemies in Effect block'd up in their Harbours, reſolv'd not to lye unemploy'd on the Dutch Coaſts; but underſtanding that there were many rich Merchant Ships at the Vly near the Mouth of the Texel, they order'd Sir Robert Holms, a Man of an enterprizing Spirit, to undertake the Deſtruction of thoſe Veſſels, and to make a Deſcent into the Iſlands. Sir Robert having form'd the Scheme and Manner of proceeding, and having left a Guard of Ships at the Entry of the Enemy's Harbour, he took with him five Fire-Ships, and one Frigate, beſides Pinnaces and Boats mann'd with ſelect Soldiers and Seamen, and very boldly entering in, he burnt, beſides two Men of War, a hundred and fifty large Merchant Ships, ſome of whom were Eaſt-India Veſſels, and richly laden. He likewiſe burnt the Town of Brandaris in the Iſle of Schelling, conſiſting of about a thouſand Houſes, and gave the remaining Plunder to the Soldiers. Holms having thus ſhared the Glory and Danger with his Men, came ſafely off, leaving behind him a terrible Bone-fire of Ships and Houſes, and a dreadful Conſternation on all the neighbouring Coaſts. In a good Manuſcript out of the Secretary's Office, I find that the Loſs of theſe Ships alone amounted at leaſt to ten hundred thouſand Pound Sterling. The Conſequence of the Victory.

5. To recover theſe Diſaſters, or rather to appeaſe the People, the Dutch us'd all Diligence, and put to Sea again about the End of Auguſt; and on the firſt of September paſs'd by Dover, and made for the Coaſt of France, ſtill purſuing the miſtaken Hopes of being join'd by the French Admiral, the Duke of Beaufort, who lay at Rochelle with forty Men of War. The Engliſh Fleet, now under the ſole Command of Prince Rupert, ſtood after them to the Bolloign-Road; where the Dutch, endeavouring to avoid another Battel, were forc'd to hawl their Veſſels cloſe to the Shore, and had probably been all burnt or ſtav'd, if a ſudden Storm had not oblig'd the other to abandon the Chace, and ſtand for St. Hellen's Bay, the Place of Rendezvous, and the moſt proper Station for their hindering the Conjunction of the Dutch and French Fleets. The Dutch by this Means recover'd their own Coaſts; and the French ſeveral Times made an Attempt to join them, and once got as far as Dieppe: Yet with all their Caution, three or four Men of War being ſeparated from the reſt, fell among an Engliſh Squadron, commanded by Sir Thomas Allen, who took the Ruby, a Ship of a thouſand Tunns, and five hundred Men, commanded by Monſieur la Roche; which Accident was a fair Pretence for the French Fleet to proceed no farther this Year. But in the ſame Year they found Means to do great Damages to the Engliſh in their Plantations upon the Leeward Iſlands; and almoſt totally expell'd them out of Saint Chriſtopher's, and much interrupted the Trade in thoſe Parts. In the mean Time De Ruyter, being compell'd by Sickneſs to return home, the States General recall'd their Fleet, and brought the People into very ſeditious Murmurs at the ill Succeſs of it. At the ſame Time De Ruyter and Tromp, who were of two different Parties, fell into a dangerous Quarrel, and threw the Miſcarriages upon each other. The States, through the Intereſt of De Wit, favour'd the former, and took The Dutch appear a third Time. But to no Effect. Troubles in Holland.

away Tromp's Commiſſion, and confin'd him to Amſterdam; and moreover examin'd many of the Captains for Cowardiſe or ill Conduct, of whom ſome were puniſh'd with Death, and others with great Fines. All the while the People, and the inferior Cities, were crying out for Peace, and bore very hard upon De Wit, and his Party.

How resented by the French King.

It is worthy of the Reader's Knowledge how theſe Matters were taken and reſented by the French King, and with what a lofty Air he expreſs'd himſelf to his Ambaſſador D' Eſtrades, in his Letter to him of the 17th of September; in which he proceeded thus: 'The Provinces who cry 'out for Peace, and ſo loudly declare they can no longer maintain the Charges of the War, act directly contrary to their Aim. That is not the 'Way to obtain it, but rather to ſhew the Enemy that they ought not to 'grant it; and it is to tell them plainly, They ought to be ſtiff, and re- 'quire that it ſhou'd be begg'd of them at their own Doors. This it is 'to enter into cloſe Alliance with Popular States, who very often do 'not underſtand their Intereſt, making little reckoning of their Honour, 'their Word, and their Treaties, and act ſtill leſs out of a Principle of 'Gratitude. Their State had been undone, if I had not ſupported them 'againſt the ſingle Attack of the Biſhop of Munſter, with whom ſeveral 'Princes of the Empire wou'd have join'd, had I not declared for them. 'The King of Denmark embrac'd their Party only on my Account: I 'kept the Swedes from joining with the Engliſh in the War againſt them, 'to which that Nation was very much inclin'd: I reduc'd the King of 'England ſo low in his Intereſt abroad, that he had no Friend nor Ally 'in this War, which he was oblig'd to carry on with the Forces of a 'Kingdom only, divided into different Sects, all diſaffected to his Go-'vernment. I my ſelf enter'd into a War with that King, my near Re-'lation, and my Friend, only for their Intereſt, and entirely againſt my 'own, tho' it was not very evident that he was the Aggreſſor. I might 'have ſtopp'd at a ſimple Rupture, and fulfill'd the Treaty of our Alli-'ance: But I have been at the Expence of arming my Fleet, to aſſiſt 'them more powerfully; and after ſeven Months embarking ſo heartily 'and affectionately, I hear five Provinces crying out for Peace! and de-'claring they can contribute no more to the Charges of the War. After ſome other Complaints of the States Miſmanagement in this Year's Expedition, and their not joining with his Fleet, he proceeded thus: 'I 'like very well what the Sieur De Wit propos'd, that is, for you to de-'clare Peace ſhall be labour'd after, provided the King of England will 'explain himſelf on the Propoſitions made in Behalf of the States at 'Paris.— In fine, I am willing to make a Peace, and have really more 'Intereſt in it than another, having none at all in the War, which can-'not produce any imaginable Advantage to me: But I wou'd have this 'Peace treated of by honourable Ways; and am reſolv'd, happen what 'will, not to ſuffer my ſelf to be impos'd upon, either by my Friends or 'my Enemies.

The Deſigns of the Republicans abroad.

IV. 1. While the King of England was contending and ſtruggling with the open and profeſs'd Enemies of his Kingdoms, he was, this Year as well as the laſt, not a little endanger'd by the ſecret Projects and Correſpondencies of the Republican Party, who, taking Advantage of the calamitous Times, more than ordinarily exerted themſelves. Ludlow himſelf freely acknowledges their new Deſigns this Year, and that a Treaty of the ſame Nature with that in Holland before mention'd, after the Rupture with France, was agreed to be carry'd on at Paris, where Colonel Algernoon Sidney, Ludlow, and others, were to be lodg'd in the Houſe of the Dutch Ambaſſador; to which End they had Letters of safe Conduct from Monsieur de Lionne the French King's Secretary, and Passes from Monsieur d'Estrades the Governor of Dunkirk. At the same Time Ludlow had a Letter from England informing him, 'That the Condition of their Friends there was not contemptible; That they thought 'no Hazards too great to venture for the Cause; exhorting therefore 'to lay aside Scruples, and improve that favourable Conjuncture to the 'Advantage of the Common-Wealth.' He had other Letters about the same Time from Colonel Sidney, Mr. Say, and Colonel Briscoe, pressing him to engage in the Undertaking; but the Lord Jermyn being then upon a Treaty at Paris, Ludlow was apprehensive of the Success of his Negotiation: Notwithstanding which he promis'd, 'That if the States of Holland wou'd by a publick Declaration acknowledge their Error in delivering up their three Friends, formerly mention'd, &c. he wou'd heartily engage in the Enterprize.' He afterwards receiv'd another Letter from Holland, subscrib'd by many Hands, importing, 'That they had 'there receiv'd such an Account of the Condition of their Friends in 'England, that the States were inclin'd to give them considerable Succours of all Things necessary for the Enterprize, and had a Second Time 'caus'd a great Body of Land Forces to be shipp'd on Board the Fleet, 'purely on their Account, solemnly protesting, That they had no other 'Design than to give the good People of England a seasonable and effectual Aid: So they, the Subscribers, renew'd their most affectionate Desires, That he wou'd hasten to them, and not let another Opportunity be 'lost.' He was afterwards desired to command four thousand Land Men, put on board the Dutch Fleet, which were then commanded by Colonel Doleman, and design'd to be landed at a certain Place in England, and their Friends were to have timely Notice of their Intentions: But after all, Ludlow having no Satisfaction in the Points he insisted on, and being apprehensive of a discouraging Peace, declin'd the Service. 1666. Car. 18 Ref. 7.

As a natural Concatenation with this last Project, we may here properly take Notice of a more Domestick Conspiracy, as it was publish'd by the Government at the Conclusion of the Month of April, as following: At the Sessions in the Old Bayly, John Rathbone an old Army Colonel, William Sanders, Henry Tucker, Thomas Flint, Thomas Evans, John Myles, William Wescot, and John Cole, formerly Officers or Soldiers in the late Rebellion, were indicted for conspiring the Death of his Majesty, and the Overthrow of the Government; having laid their Plot and Contrivance for the Surprizal of the Tower, the killing his Grace the Lord General Monk, Sir John Robinson Lieutenant of his Majesty's Tower of London, and Sir Richard Brown, and then to have declared for an equal Division of Lands, &c. The better to effect this hellish Design, the City was to have been fired, and the Portcullis's to have been let down, to keep out all Assistance; the Horse Guards to have been surpris'd in the Inns where they were quarter'd, several Ostlers having been gain'd for that Purpose: The Tower was accordingly view'd, and its Surprize order'd by Boats over the Mote, and from thence to scale the Wall. One Alexander, who is not yet taken, had likewise distributed Sums of Mony to these Conspirators; and for the carrying on of the Design more effectually, they were told of a Council of the Great Ones that sate frequently in London, from whom issu'd all Orders; which Council receiv'd their Directions from another in Holland, who sate with the States; and that the THIRD OF SEPTEMBER was pitch'd on for the Attempt, as being found by Lilly's Almanack and a Scheme erected for that Purpose, to be a LUCKY DAY; a Planet then ruling which prognosticated the Downfall of Monarchy. The Evidence against these Persons way very full and clear, and they accordingly were found guilty of High-Tre[illegible] suffer'd accordin[illegible] A Conspiracy at home.

The great FIRE of London.

2. The Third of September was a Day auſpicious and full of Expectation from one Party, but at this Time ominous and direful to the Nation: And tho' the Hand of Juſtice laid hold of theſe laſt Criminals, yet the City was burnt at the very Time thus projected and prognoſticated; which gave a ſtrong Suſpicion, tho' not a full Proof of the Authors and Promoters of it. This diſmal Fire broke out in a Baker's Shop in Pudding-lane, in the lower Part of the City near Thames-ſtreet, amongſt rotten wooden Houſes ready to take Fire, and full of combuſtible Goods; and the Darkneſs of the Night very much increas'd the Confuſion and Horror of the ſurprizing Calamity. The Citizens, affrighted and amaz'd, delay'd the Uſe of timely Remedies; and what added to the Misfortune was the Peoples neglecting their Houſes, and being ſo fatally ſet upon the haſty removing of their Goods, which were notwithſtanding devoured by the nimble Encreaſe of the Flames. A raging Eaſt Wind fomented it to an incredible Degree, which in a Moment rais'd the Fire from the Bottom to the Tops of the Houſes, and ſcatter'd prodigious Flakes in all Places, which were mounted ſo vaſtly high into the Air, as if Heaven and Earth were threatned with the ſame Conflagration. The Fury ſoon became inſuperable againſt all the Arts of Men, and Power of Engines; and beſides the dreadful Scenes of Flames, Ruins, and Deſolation, there appear'd the moſt killing Sight under the Sun, the diſtracted Looks of ſo many Citizens, the Wailings of miſerable Women, and the Cries of poor Children and decrepid old People, with all the Marks of Confuſion and Deſpair. No Man that had the Senſe of human Miſeries cou'd unconcernedly behold the diſmal Ravage and Deſtruction made in one of the nobleſt Cities in the World. The reſt ſhall be taken from the Inſcription on famous Monument, the moſt ſtately Pillar in Europe, erected in Memory of this Calamity: The dreadful Fire broke out in a Lane adjoyning, about Midnight, and being driven by a high Wind, conſum'd not only the adjacent Parts, but Places far remote; and with incredible Noiſe and Fury deſtroy'd eighty nine Churches, among which was the Cathedral of St. Paul, City Gates, Guild-Hall, many publick Structures, Hoſpitals, Schools, Libraries, a vaſt Number of ſtately Edifices, thirteen thouſand two hundred Dwelling-houſes, four hundred Streets; of ſix and twenty Wards, it utterly ruin'd fifteen, and left eight others ſhatter'd and half burnt. The Ruins of the City were four hundred thirty ſix Acres, extending from the Tower along the Thames Side to the Temple Church, and from the North-Eaſt Gate along the City Wall to Holborn-Bridge or Fleet-Ditch. It was mercileſs to the States and Fortunes of the Citizens, but favourable to their Lives, that it might in all things reſemble the laſt and great Conflagration. The Deſtruction was ſudden; for in a ſhort Time the ſame City, which was ſeen in a flouriſhing Condition, was reduc'd to Nothing; and, after three Days, when the fatal Fire had in Appearance overcome all Means of Reſiſtance, and human Counſels, by the Will of Heaven it ſtop'd, and was extinguiſh'd.

The Inſcription upon the Monument.

The tender Care of the King and Others.

During the whole Continuance of this unparallell'd Calamity, the King himſelf, rous'd from his Pleaſures, commiſerated the Care of the Diſtreſſed, and acted like a true Father of his People. In a Manuſcript from the Secretary's Office we find theſe Words: 'All own the immediate 'Hand of God, and bleſs the Goodneſs and tender Care of the King, 'who made the Round of the Fire uſually twice every Day, and for 'many Hours together, on Horſeback and on Foot, gave Orders for purſuing the Work by Commands, Threatnings, Deſires, Example, and 'good Store of Mony, which he himſelf diſtributed to the Workers out

'of

'of a hundred Pound Bag, which he carry'd with him for that Purpoſe.' 1666.
At the ſame Time the Duke of York alſo, and many of the Nobility, Car. 18 were as diligent as was poſſible; they commended and encourag'd the Ref. 7.
Forward, aſſiſted the miſerable Sufferers, and gave a moſt generous Example to all by the vigorous Oppoſition they made againſt the devouring Flames. And after that, when the Multitudes of poor People were forc'd to lodge in the Fields, or crowd themſelves into poor Huts and Booths built with Deal-boards, his Majeſty was frequent in conſulting all Ways to relieve theſe Wretches, as well by his Proclamations, as Orders to the Juſtices of the Peace, to ſend Proviſions into Moor-fields and other Places; and moreover he ſent them out of the Tower the warlike Proviſions of Victuals, which were there depoſited for the Seamen and Soldiers, to keep them from ſtarving in this Extremity. At the ſame Time he proclaimed a general Faſt throughout England and Wales; and order'd, That the diſtreſſed Condition of the Sufferers ſhou'd be recommended to the Charity of all well-diſpos'd Perſons, upon that Day, to be afterwards diſtributed by the Hands of the Lord-Mayor of London. Laſtly, to ſhew his ſpecial Care for the City's Reſtoration in Council, wherein he firſt prohibited the haſty Building any Houſes, till Care cou'd be taken for its Re-edification, ſo as might beſt ſecure it from the like fatal Accident; for the Encouragement of others, he promis'd to rebuild his own Cuſtom-houſe, and to enlarge it for the Benefit of Merchants and Trade; which he afterwards perform'd at his own particular Charge.

Conjectures and Reflections upon the Whole.

Great Calamities naturally produce various Conjectures and prodigious Imaginations; Men ſeldom conſidering that the moſt ſtupendous Effects often proceed from the moſt minute Cauſes, or moſt remote Accidents. At firſt the People naturally and generally look'd upon this as the Judgment of Heaven upon a wicked City and Nation, not ſufficiently humbled by the preceding Peſtilence. But Time ſoon produc'd abundance of Suſpicions, and Variety of Opinions: Some believ'd that it was carry'd on by a Conſpiracy of Papiſts and Jeſuits; which was afterwards offer'd to be made appear in the Popiſh Plot. Others ſuſpected it an inſidious Way of the Dutch and French making War upon the Engliſh; their two Fleets being at that very Time neareſt to a Conjunction: And what increas'd that Suſpicion was, that the above-nam'd Criminals that ſuffer'd were ſaid to be under the Direction of a Committee who ſate conſtantly in London, and receiv'd Orders from another Council in Holland: And not long before the Fire, the French had ſent the Governor of Chouſey in a ſmall Boat with a Letter to Major-General Lambert, then Priſoner in Guernſey, to offer him Terms to contrive the Delivery of that Iſland to them; but the Governor and Pilot were both taken and hang'd as Spies. Divers Strangers, both Dutch and French, were during the Fire apprehended upon Suſpicion, impriſon'd, and ſtrictly examin'd: And in the above-nam'd Manuſcript we find theſe Words: 'Tueſ-
'day, Sept. 11. My Lord Chief-Juſtice is upon the Examination of thoſe
'Dutch and French that have been ſeiz'd on Suſpicion of being Agents
'in the late burning of the City: This Morning comes in from my Lord
'Lovelace a plain Confeſſion of a Youth, one Taylor, Son to a Dutch-
'man reſiding in London, who moſt expreſly confeſſes, He, his Father,
'and his Uncle ſet Fire on the Man's Houſe in Pudding-lane, on Satur-
'day Night, by Fire-balls thrown in at a Glaſs-window which was open,
'with many other Circumſtances of their propagating that horrid De-
'ſign. The Boy's Age being but ten Years old renders the whole ſuſ-
'pected; but it is put into my Lord Chief-Juſtice's Hands.' As to the Papiſts contributing to this Fire, I have been told by an eminent Prelate

that

1666. Car. 18 Reſ. 7. that Dr. Graunt, one of that Religion, was ſtrongly ſuſpected, who, having a Share in the Water-houſe by Iſlington, contriv'd, as is believ'd, to ſtop up the Pipes the Night before the Fire broke out, ſo that it was many Hours before that any Water cou'd be got after the uſual Manner in the City. After all Examinations there was but one Man try'd for being the Incendiary, who confeſſing the Fact, was executed for it: This was Robert Hubert, a French Hugonot of Rohan in Normandy, a Perſon falſly ſaid to be a Papiſt, but really a ſort of a Lunatick, who by meer Accident was brought into England juſt before the breaking out of the Fire, but not landed till two Days after, as afterwards appear'd by the Evidence of Laurence Peterſon, the Maſter of the Ship who had him on board. As to the Reports concerning the King and the Duke, and Oates and Bedloe's Narratives as to this Matter, the Suppoſitions are ſo monſtrous, and the Evidence ſo wretchedly mean, that they deſerve no Hiſtorian's Conſideration. So that after weighing all Circumſtances, we can ſtill make no exact Determination; but to judge on the charitable, and perhaps probable Side, we may ſay, That the Beginning of this dreadful Fire was the Judgment, and the End of it the Mercy of Heaven; for neither of them ſeem to have been the Effects of human Means or Counſels.

The SEVENTH SESSION of the Second Parliament.

3. Not long after this Conflagration, on the 21ſt Day of September, the Parliament, after ſeveral Prorogations, and a long Receſs of ten Months and three Weeks, met at Weſtminſter; being now the Life and Expectation of the Nation, after the two great Calamities of Peſtilence and Fire. This was the Seventh Meeting or Seſſion of the Second and Long Parliament, which was open'd by a very acceptable Speech of the King's to both Houſes, which is as follows: The King's Speech to both Houſes.

'My Lords and Gentlemen, 'I am very glad to meet ſo many of you together again, and God be 'thanked for our Meeting together in this Place: Little Time hath paſs'd 'ſince we were almoſt in Deſpair of having this Place left to meet in. 'You ſee the diſmal Ruins the Fire hath made; and nothing but a Mi'racle of God's Mercy cou'd have preſerved what is left from the ſame 'Deſtruction.

'I need make no Excuſe for diſpencing with your Attendance in April; 'I am conſcious you all thank'd me for it: The Truth is, I deſire to put 'you to as little Trouble as I can; and I can tell you truly, I deſire to put 'you to as little Coſt as I can poſſibly. I wiſh with all my Heart that I 'cou'd bear the whole Charge of this War my ſelf, and that my Subjects 'ſhou'd reap the Benefit of it to themſelves. But you have two very 'great and powerful Enemies, who uſe all the Means they can, fair and 'foul, to make all the World concur with them; and the War is more 'chargeable by that Conjunction, than any Body thought it wou'd have 'been. I need not tell you the Succeſs of this Summer, in which God 'hath given us great Succeſs; and no Queſtion but the Enemy hath un'dergone great Loſſes; and if it had pleaſed God to have with-held his 'laſt Judgment by Fire, we had been in no ill Condition. You have 'given me very large Supplies for carrying on the War: And I muſt tell 'you, if I had not, by anticipating my Revenue, rais'd a very great Sum 'of Mony, I had not been able to have ſet out the Fleet this laſt Spring; 'and I have ſome Hope upon the ſame Credit to be able to pay off the 'great Ships as they come in. You will conſider what is to be done next, 'when you are well inform'd of the Expence; and I muſt leave it to 'your Wiſdoms to find out the beſt Expedients for the carrying on this 'War with as little Burthen to the People as is poſſible. I ſhall add no 'more, than to add, That our Enemies are very Inſolent; and if they 'were

'were able this laſt Year to perſwade this miſerable People, whom they 1666.

'be exalted with this laſt Impoveriſhment of this City, and contemn all 'reaſonable Conditions of Peace? And therefore I cannot doubt but 'you will provide accordingly.'

The Commons Reſolves.

Immediately upon this Speech the Commons unanimouſly reſolved, 'That the humble and hearty Thanks of this Houſe be returned to his 'Majeſty for his great Care in the Management of the preſent War, and 'that this Houſe will ſupply his Majeſty proportionably to his preſent Oc-'caſions; and that the Lords Concurrence be deſired to this Vote.' And ſoon after, to make good their Promiſe, they voted a Royal Aid of one Million and eight hundred Thouſand Pounds for carrying on the preſent War. And on the 25th of September, in the Afternoon, both Houſes of Parliament, being agreed, attended his Majeſty in a Body at the Banquetting-houſe in Whitehall, 'To manifeſt their hearty Concurrence in 'the Vote for ſupplying his Majeſty with whatſoever was neceſſary for the 'carrying on of the War;' which his Majeſty received with all the Satisfaction imaginable, and very graciouſly diſmiſs'd them. After this, on the 1ſt of October, the Commons were ſo ſenſible of the King's paternal Regard to his Subjects in the late Fire, that they particularly reſolved and voted, 'That the Thanks of this Houſe be given to his Majeſty for his 'great Care and Endeavour to prevent the burning of the City of 'London.'

Both Houſes addreſs againſt Popery.

Notwithſtanding the Unanimity and Concurrence of both Houſes in ſerving both the King and the Publick, yet they were not ſo forward in coming into the exact Meaſures of the Court. They were ſenſible that Popery there met with no ſmall Encouragement from ſeveral Springs; and tho' many of the Members of each Houſe were themſelves a Part of the Court, Camp, and Miniſtry, yet they wou'd not be ſilent when they thought themſelves in Danger from the reſtleſs Spirits, and encreaſing Power of the Papiſts. Therefore they agreed in a particular and zealous Addreſs to his Majeſty, 'For executing the Laws againſt Popiſh Prieſts 'and Jeſuits, who were labouring to pervert his Majeſty's Subjects; and 'for maintaining the true Religion eſtabliſh'd in the Church of England.' Upon this concurrent Senſe of the two Houſes, the King thought himſelf oblig'd to publiſh a Proclamation on the 10th of November, for the Baniſhment of all Popiſh Prieſts and Jeſuits, with ſome Exceptions, and putting the Laws in ſpeedy and due Execution againſt all other Popiſh Recuſants. His Majeſty therein declaring, 'That he had ſeriouſly conſi-'der'd of the late Addreſs and humble Deſire made to him by the Lords 'Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons in the preſent Parliament aſſem-'bled, for ſuppreſſing the Inſolencies of the Papiſts; and accepting with 'much Contentment their great Care for the Preſervation of the true 'Religion eſtabliſh'd in this Kingdom: And therefore he had thought fit 'to charge and require all Popiſh Prieſts and Jeſuits to depart the King-'dom before the 10th of December, upon Pain of having the Laws of 'this Realm inflicted upon them; the Magiſtrates and Officers in all 'Ports having Order, upon their declaring themſelves, to aſſiſt them in 'ſeeing them ſhip'd and ſent away; and charging the Judges and all Ma-'giſtrates to put the Laws in Execution againſt all Papiſt Recuſants, and 'ſuch as are ſo ſuſpected, in order to their Conviction; and that in their 'reſpective Courts, Aſſizes, &c. they publickly give the Laws in charge 'againſt them; and that the Judges, in their Returns, give an Account 'of their Proceedings therein to the Chancellor for the Time being.'

How far the King was really pleas'd or ſatisfy'd with his own Proceed-

A Rebellion in Scotland.

4. When the Parliament had ſate about two Months, the Nation was alarm'd with a ſudden Inſurrection and Rebellion in Scotland, fram'd and rais'd by the rigid Presbyterians in thoſe Parts, who were thought to have held too near a Correſpondence with thoſe in England. In the Month of November above fifteen hundred of them got into a Body, and by Degrees form'd themſelves into a regular Army, having their Foot commanded by one Wallace, and their Horſe by one Lairmont, formerly a Taylor: Moſt of the other Leaders of their Troops were caſhier'd Preachers, by whoſe Advice they all took the Covenant at Lanrick; and being then drawn up in Battalia on Pentland Hills, their Word was The Covenant! In the Heighth of their Power they were met by the King's Forces, whoſe Word was God and the King! and were entirely defeated and diſpers'd by them, who had on their Right Wing his Majeſty's two Troops of Guards, and the Major-General's Troop, making four Squadrons; and on the Left the Lieutenant-General Duke Hamilton, the Earls of Athol and Ayrly, and many other Noblemen. Of the Rebels, who made great Reſiſtance, about five hundred were kill'd, and an hundred taken Priſoners, of whom moſt were executed. Upon the firſt News of this Defeat, the King immediately communicated the Matter to the Houſe of Commons, which was on the 3d of December, when Sir Thomas Clifford, his Comptroller, reported, 'That his Majeſty had been graci-
'ouſly pleas'd to command the Lord of Bath to deliver him the Letter 'from the Lord Drummond in Scotland, concerning the routing and 'diſperſing the Rebels there, to be communicated to the Houſe.' Which Letter being read, the Houſe, with great Satisfaction, reſolv'd, 'That 'the humble and hearty Thanks of this Houſe be return'd unto his Ma-
'jeſty, for his great Favour in imparting to this Houſe the good News
'out of Scotland.'

It is defeated.

Soon after the Houſe began to be employ'd in Enquiring into ſome Miſcarriages and Miſdemeanors, and deſign'd particularly to Impeach the Lord Viſcount Mordant, Conſtable of the Caſtle of Windſor. Which Proceedings were thought too dilatory, and not ſo agreeable with the Exigencies of the Court. Therefore the King, on the 15th of December, ſent a particular Meſſage in Writing by Mr. Secretary Morrice to the Speaker, in theſe Words: 'His Majeſty is ſorry That the Difficulty his
'Houſe of Commons hath met with, hath detain'd them ſo long with'out Perfecting his Supply. His Majeſty cou'd wiſh, That the Poſture
'of his Affairs wou'd permit the giving of his two Houſes a ſhort Re-
'ceſs at Chriſtmaſs: But the Seaſon of the Year being conſider'd, and 'how much the neceſſary Preparations againſt the Spring depend upon
'the Diſpatch of the Supply, he aſſures himſelf is preparing for him, he 'cannot think it conſiſtent with his Service, and the Publick Safety, to 'permit any Adjournment, except for the Chief Feſtival Days, untill
'that, and the Other moſt Publick Bills, be diſpatcht, which he deſires
'may be haſtned; and which his Majeſty ſhou'd be glad, if poſſible,
'might be finiſh'd by Chriſtmaſs, as well for their Eaſe, as for his own
'Service.' Notwithſtanding this, the Commons, tho' highly reſpectful to his Majeſty, proceeded their own Way, and took their proper Time for finiſhing the Supply. 1666. Car. 18 Reſ. 7.

While the Commons proceeded in this Manner, there hapned ſome little Diſorders among the Lords, principally occaſion'd by the volatile and reſtleſs Duke of Buckingham. The Beginning was a Challenge between Him and the Earl of Oſſory, Son to the Duke of Ormond, and lately call'd by the King's Writ to the Houſe of Peers. Upon Examination before their Lordſhips both confeſs'd the ſending and receiving the Challenge; and tho' the Earl made it appear, that it was upon an old Quarrel, and not from any Words ſpoken in the Houſe, as the Duke pretended, the Earl was committed to the Tower, and the Duke to the Black-Rod. Being both brought before the Houſe and releas'd, not long after there hapned another Diſturbance between the ſame Duke and the Marqueſs of Dorcheſter, for Room at a free Conference between the Lords and Commons in the Painted-Chamber. Here the Duke preſſing very hard upon the Marqueſs, the latter told him He ought not to croud him ſo much, for he was as good a Man as He. The Duke made ſome very ſmart Reply, to which the Marqueſs return'd him the Lye; upon which the Duke either gave him a Blow, or pull'd him by the Perriwigg; which occaſion'd ſuch a Noiſe and Diſturbance, that the Houſe of Lords commanded them both to the Tower. Shortly after, the Duke having got his Liberty, without begging the King's Pardon, preſum'd to appear in his Majeſty's Preſence on Chriſtmaſs Day; for which he was immediately forbidden the Court. In his Abſence, his inſolent Behaviour ſoon increas'd to that Height, that, tho' he had been both Caterer and Sharer in his Majeſty's Pleaſures, the King thought it neceſſary to iſſue out a Proclamation againſt him, importing, 'That the ſaid Duke, who was of 'his Majeſty's Privy-Council, and otherwiſe employ'd in great Truſt, re- 'lating to his Majeſty's Perſon and the Publick, and not only bound by 'common Duty and Allegiance, but farther oblig'd by ſpecial and extra- 'ordinary Ties of Gratitude and Fidelity to the Crown, had, notwith- 'ſtanding held and maintain'd Secret Correſpondencies by Let- 'ters and other Tranſactions, tending to raiſe Mutinies in ſome of his 'Majeſty's Forces, and ſtir up Sedition amongſt his People, and other 'Traiterous Deſigns and Practices. And that when to bring the ſaid 'Duke to anſwer what might be objected againſt him, his Majeſty had 'given Orders to one of his Serjeants at Arms to uſe all Diligence to ap- 'prehend him, his Majeſty's Miniſter was ill treated, and contemptuouſly 'reſiſted, not without the Knowledge of the ſaid Duke Himſelf, who, as 'conſcious of his Demerits, had now ſecretly eſcaped and withdrawn himſelf: 'Therefore his Majeſty commands the ſaid Duke to ſurrender Himſelf, '&c.' Notwithſtanding this high Diſpleaſure, the King ſtill found ſomething ſo agreeable and Captivating in the Duke's Perſon and Acquaintance, and his peculiar Services, that in no long Time he was admitted to the Court, and receiv'd into as great Favour as ever.

V. 1. After a ſhort Receſs in Chriſtmaſs, the Parliament met again on the ſecond of January; and the Houſe of Commons proceeded to Buſineſs with Vigour; but ſtill reſolv'd upon the Impeachment of the Lord Mordant, and accordingly drew up Articles of High Crimes and Miſdemeanours with the uſual Formality, the Subſtance of which uncommon Accuſation was as follows: '1. That the ſaid Lord Mordant, be- 'ing Conſtable of the Caſtle of Windſor, and Commander of the Garri- 'ſon there, underſtanding That one William Taleur Eſq; a Loyal Per- 'ſon in Office in the ſaid Caſtle, and poſſeſs'd of certain Lodgings 'there appertaining to his Offices, did intend to ſtand for one of the 'Bur- 1666/7.

'Burgeſſes of Windſor to ſerve in this preſent Parliament that met in 'the 1661; ſome Weeks before the Election, to diſparage and prevent the 'ſaid William Taleur, and to ſtrike a Terror into thoſe of the Borough, 'by Colour of a Warrant from his Majeſty, on the 17th of March, did 'by Soldiers forcibly eject the ſaid William Taleur, together with his 'big-belly'd Wife, Family and Goods out of the ſaid Lodgings and Caſtle; 'the rude Carriage of which Soldiers frighted a young Child out of its Wits, 'whereof it dy'd ſoon after. 2. On the 23d of the ſaid Month, the ſaid 'Lord Mordant did command William Taleur to be forcibly ſeiz'd up-'on by his Soldiers in the Priſon of the Borough, out of the Precincts 'of the Caſtle, where he was a Priſoner for Debt, carry'd him out of the 'Priſon to the Caſtle, without any Warrant, and detain'd him Priſoner eleven 'Hours in a cold low Room, notwithſtanding the offer of two Thouſand 'Pound Bail. 3. That the ſaid Lord Mordant, during the Time of Mr. 'Taleur's Impriſonment, being told that he was the King's Servant, and 'had the great Seal for his Place as well as He, in high Contempt of 'the King's Authority, reply'd, He wou'd diſpoſe of his Places, and break 'the great Seal, and juſtify it when he had done. 4. That the ſaid Lord 'Mordant, in March 1664, by Letters and otherwiſe made ſundry un-'civil Addreſſes to a Daughter of Mr. Taleur's; which ſhe rejecting, and 'threatning to acquaint his Lady with them, he ſwore a moſt dreadful 'Oath and Imprecation, He wou'd proſecute Her and her Family to all 'Eternity. 5. That on the 23d of November 1665, Mr. Taleur was by 'the Lord Mordant's Command forcibly diſpoſſeſs'd of certain Rooms 'in the Timber Yard belonging to the Caſtle, without the Walls, belong-'ing to his Office of Paymaſter and Surveyor of the Caſtle. 6. That 'a Warrant ſurreptitiouſly obtain'd from his Majeſty, dated November '30th, 1665, but not produc'd till ſome Months after, for reſtraining 'Mr. Taleur from going out of the Caſtle, was directed to the ſaid Lord 'Mordant; who, without mentioning the King's Warrant, caus'd him 'again forcibly to be apprehended in the Borough of Windſor, and car-'ry'd to the Caſtle, where he was detain'd Priſoner twenty Weeks, five 'of which in cloſe Durance, contrary to the King's Warrant, which on-'ly reſtrain'd him to the Caſtle. 7. That during this Impriſonment the 'ſaid Lord refus'd to obey a Habeas Corpus brought by Mr. Taleur, and 'when he was ſerv'd with another, he gave the Meſſenger reproachful 'Language, calling him Rogue for delivering the ſaid Writ, and ſaying 'That was all the Anſwer he wou'd give to it. 8. That Mr. Taleur, 'when he was enlarg'd by an Order from the King's Bench, fearing he 'ſhou'd be again illegally impriſon'd, did thereupon make Application to 'his Lordſhip by Friends for a Reconciliation, who anſwer'd He wou'd 'never be reconcil'd to him, and threatned to impriſon him again; and if 'he brought another Habeas Corpus, he wou'd impriſon him again and again, 'and keep him Priſoner as long as he liv'd, and likewiſe turn him out of all 'his Offices. By reaſon of which Menaces Mr. Taleur was forc'd to deſert 'his Wife, Family and Employments at Windſor, and to abſent himſelf 'till this preſent Seſſion of Parliament. For all which high Crimes and 'Miſdemeanors, the Commons of England demanded Juſtice, condign 'Puniſhment, &c.

The Proſecution of theſe Articles, tho' of a private Nature, caus'd particular Delays among the Commons, and ſome Diviſions between them and the Lords. The Matter of taking the Publick Accounts of Money, and the Poll-Bill, which was granted to compleat the great Supply, took up much Time; beſides another Bill againſt importing of Cattle out of Ireland, which was by no Means agreeable to the Court, as appears from the Lord Arlington's Letters. As to the Firſt, the Taking the Publick Ac-

Accounts, having had a free Conference with the Lords upon that Occaſion, the following Report was made from the Conference: ‘ That ‘ the Lords had formerly agreed to a Committee of both Houſes, but ‘ found no Precedent for ſuch a Committee to be impower'd to take ‘ Oaths. But as to a Bill, which the Commons had prepared, they found ‘ that an extraordinary Way, and that there was no Neceſſity for it, but ‘ had thought on an Expedient which might conduce to the Buſineſs, ‘ and make it as effectual as a Bill, and had drawn a Petition, to which ‘ his Majeſty had ſent his Anſwer for a Commiſſion to iſſue, for Taking the ‘ Accounts on Oath.’ This Report, together with the Petition, and the King's Anſwer, being debated, the Houſe was rais'd into a Ferment, and reſolv'd, ‘ That this Proceeding of the Lords in going by Petition to ‘ the King for a Commiſſion for taking the Publick Accounts, while ‘ there was a Bill ſent up by this Houſe, and depending before them, for ‘ taking the Accounts another Way, is Unparliamentary, and of dangerous ‘ Conſequence.’ Within two or three Days they likewiſe declared, ‘ That ‘ according to the right and ſettled Courſe of Parliament upon Bills, nei- ‘ ther a Bill, nor any Part thereof, is to be communicated to his Maje- ‘ ſty by either Houſe, untill the whole be agreed unto by both Houſes.’ As to the Poll-Bill, the Lords in a free Conference inſiſted, among other Things, upon adding ſome Names to the Commiſſioners. To which the Commons diſagreed; but without the leaſt aſſerting their peculiar Rights as to Mony-Bills: They only gave this modeſt Reaſon for their Non-compliance, ‘ That it hath been obſerv'd, That in all Acts of Subſidies ‘ and of Poll-Mony, the greater the Number of Commiſſioners, the leſs ‘ Mony hath been rais'd; for many Commiſſioners incumber one ano- ‘ ther, and rather procure the Eaſe of themſelves, and their many Friends, ‘ than the Advance of the King's Service, and the Publick Benefit.

The Lords and the Commons diſagree.

2. During theſe Diviſions between the Houſes, the King underſtanding the Poll-Bill, and ſome others, to have got through both, on the 18th of January came to the Houſe of Peers, and paſs'd that and the reſt with the following gracious Speech: ‘ My Lords and Gentlemen, ‘ I have now paſs'd your Bills, and was in hopes to have had other Bills to ‘ paſs too: I cannot forget that within a few Days after your coming to- ‘ gether in September, both Houſes preſented me with their Vote and ‘ Declaration, That they wou'd give me a Supply proportionable to my Oc- ‘ caſions. And the Confidence of this made me anticipate that ſmall Part ‘ of my Revenue, which was unanticipated, for the Payment of the Sea- ‘ Men; and my Credit hath gone further than I had reaſon to think it ‘ wou'd, but it is now at an End. This is the firſt Day I have heard of ‘ any Supply, being the 18th of January; and what this will amount to, ‘ God knows; and what Time I have to make ſuch Preparations as are ‘ neceſſary to meet three ſuch Enemies as I have, you can well enough ‘ judge. And I muſt tell you what Diſcourſes are abroad; I am not in ‘ any Treaty; but by the Grace of God I will not give over my Self and ‘ You, but will do what is in my Power for the Defence of my ſelf and ‘ you. It is high Time for you to make good your Promiſe, and it is ‘ high Time for you to be in the Country, as well for raiſing of Mony, as ‘ that the Lord-Lieutenants and Deputy-Lieutenants may watch the Se- ‘ ditious Spirits which are at work to diſturb the Publick Peace: And ‘ therefore I am reſolv'd to put an End to this Seſſion on Monday next ‘ come Seven-night; before which Time I pray let all Things be made ‘ ready that I am to diſpatch. I am not willing to complain that you have ‘ dealt unkindly with me in a Bill I have now paſs'd, in which you have ‘ manifeſted a greater Diſtruſt of me than I have deſerv'd. I do not pre-

'tend to be without Infirmities, but I have never broken my Word with 'you; and, if I do not flatter my ſelf, the Nation had never leſs Cauſe 'to complain of Grievances, or the leaſt Injuſtice or Oppreſſion, than it 'hath had in theſe ſeven Years it hath pleas'd God to reſtore Me to You: 'I wou'd be glad to be uſed accordingly.

It ſeems the King was a little diſpleas'd with the Commons for putting ſome Things out of his Power, with relation to the Commiſſioners in the Poll-Bill; nor did he ſeem to be well ſatisfy'd with their Impeaching the Lord Mordant, his own Servant, which not only ſtruck at his Prerogative, but protracted other Buſineſs. Notwithſtanding the Commons ſpent a conſiderable Part of the ſhort Remainder of their Time in the Proſecution of their Impeachment, and ſearch'd ſeveral Precedents to determine the Manner and Method of proceeding; and likewiſe appointed Serjeant Maynard, Sir Robert Atkins, and Mr. William Prynne, &c. to manage the Evidence at the Hearing. On the 26th of January the Managers read the Articles before the Houſe of Lords; but with Diſſatisfaction obſerv'd, that during the Reading of them, the Lord Mordant was within the Bar of the Houſe. Of this the Commons complain'd, and mov'd 'That, according to former Precedents in ſuch Proceedings, 'his Lordſhip might ſtand without the Bar of the Houſe.' And when one appeared as Council for him, beginning to plead in this Matter, they thought fit to interrupt him, acquainting the Peers, 'That his Lordſhip 'ought not to have any Council aſſign'd him to plead for him in Matter 'of Fact upon the Impeachment.' This caus'd a Conference, and indeed a Difference between the two Houſes: The Lords inſiſted upon their Rights and Priviledges, and on the 4th of February confirm'd their Order for the Lord Mordant's ſitting within the Bar at his Tryal, produc'd two Precedents for it, and declar'd themſelves ready for the Tryal the next Morning. The Commons upon this were ſtill more diſſatisfy'd, and deſir'd a free Conference; in which Matters were carry'd ſo high, that the Lords declared, 'That they deſired this Conference to preſerve 'a right Underſtanding between both Houſes; but inſiſted upon it, that 'they might deny a free Conference with the Commons, citing a Pre'cedent, 12th Jacobi, where a Free Conference was deny'd the Com'mons in Point of one Impoſition; and that in Point of Judicature '(which the Lords inſiſted on to be only in the King and themſelves) 'they might deny the Commons a Free Conference.

Further Diſputes between the Lords and Commons.

3. But all theſe Diſputes were ended on the eighth of February by the Appearance of the King in the Houſe of Peers, who having his Robes and Crown on, ſent for the Houſe of Commons in order to a Prorogation. Their Speaker, Sir Edward Turner, having ſeveral Bills ready, preſented them, after his uſual graceful Manner, with this following Speech to his Majeſty, which is the laſt we find that he made upon the ſame Occaſion: 'May it pleaſe your moſt Excellent Majeſty, Nothing con'duceth more to the Happineſs of a Nation, than a right Underſtanding 'between the Prince and the People: And nothing more advanceth this 'Correſpondence, than frequent Meetings in Common Council. By the 'Wiſdom of our Fore-Fathers, the Security of our Lives, our Liber'ties, and our Properties, is lodg'd in our Engliſh Parliaments; and ſo 'gracious have your Majeſty's Predeceſſors been, That for the Satis'faction of their People, they have made ſeveral Laws, ſome for Tri'ennial, ſome for Annual Parliaments. Your Majeſty by their Example, 'upon the humble Suit of your Lords and Commons, hath in a former 'Seſſion of this Parliament paſs'd an Act For Triennial Meetings in Par'liament: But in this your Majeſty hath exceeded all your Predeceſſors,

'That

'That as your happy Reſtoration was in a Convention of Parliament, ſo of your own Accord, for the Publick Good, and as a Demonſtration of your extraordinary Love to Parliaments, you have vouchſaf'd ever ſince your Return to converſe with your People in Parliament; this being the ſixth Year, and ſixth Seſſion [ſeventh Meeting] of this preſent Parliament. The laſt Time your Majeſty was pleas'd to ſpeak to us, you commanded us to make ready all Things that you were to diſpatch this Seſſion: In Obedience thereunto, we have with all Induſtry imaginable endeavour'd, ſo to prepare thoſe Matters that were before us, That your Majeſty and the whole Nation may receive Satisfaction in our Diſpatches. Firſt it concern'd us to keep our Words with your Majeſty, in finiſhing that Supply which we promis'd you for the carrying on the War. In Order whereunto I do here preſent unto your Majeſty this Bill of Eleven Months Aſſeſſments upon our Lands, to take Place in a Poſt Charge after the Additional Royal Aid now current is expired. This Act, together with the Poll-Bill lately paſſed, we conceive will fully make good the Million eight hundred thouſand Pounds we promis'd to your Majeſty.

'We muſt for ever with Humility acknowledge the Juſtice of God in puniſhing this whole Nation by the late dreadful Conflagration of London: We know they were not the greateſt Sinners on whom the Tower of Siloam fell; and doubtleſs all our Sins did contribute to the filling up that Meaſure, which being full, drew down the Wrath of God upon that City: But it very much reviveth us to behold the miraculous Bleſſing of God upon your Majeſty's Endeavours for the Preſervation of that Part of the City which is left: Et fas eſt reſurgere Mœnia Trojæ! We hope God will direct your Royal Heart, and fortunate Iſland in a few Days to lay a Foundation Stone in the Re-building that Royal City; the Beauty and Praiſe whereof ſhall fill the whole Earth. For the Encouragement of this Noble Work we have prepared ſeveral Bills: One, for the Eſtabliſhing a Judicatory for the ſpeedy Determining all Actions and Cauſes of Action, that have or may ariſe between Landlords and Tenants upon this ſad Accident. Though I perſwade my ſelf no Engliſh-Man wou'd be exempted from making ſome Offering to carry on this pious Undertaking; yet the exemplary Charity of your Majeſty's Twelve Reverend Judges is fit with Honour to be mention'd before your Majeſty: They are willing to ſpend all their Sand that doth not run out in your Majeſty's immediate Service of diſpenſing Juſtice in their ſeveral Courts to your People, in Hearing and Determining thoſe Controverſies that may ariſe upon Old Agreements, and making New Rules between Owners and Tenants, for their mutual Encouragement in this Glorious Action. We have likewiſe prepared a Bill For the Regularity of the New Buildings, that they may be rais'd with more Conveniency, Beauty, and Security, than they had before: Some Streets we have order'd to be open'd and enlarg'd, and many Obſtructions to be remov'd; but all with your Majeſty's Approbation. This we conceive cannot be done with Juſtice, unleſs a Compenſation be given to thoſe that ſhall be Loſers; we have therefore laid an Impoſition of twelve Pence upon every Chaldron, and twelve Pence upon every Tun of Coals that ſhall be brought into the Port of London for ten Years, the better to enable the Lord Mayor and Aldermen to recompence thoſe Perſons whoſe Grounds ſhall be taken from them.

'Rome was not built in a Day: Nor can we in the Cloſe of this Seſſion finiſh the Rules for the dividing of Pariſhes, Re-building of the Churches, and the Ornamental Parts of the City that we intended; Theſe things muſt reſt till another Seſſion: But we know

'your

1667. Car. 19 Ref. 7.

'your Majeſty in the mean Time will take them into your Princely Conſideration, and make it your Care, That the Houſes of God, and your Royal Chamber, be decently and conveniently reſtored. And now, Great Sir, having thus happily finiſh'd the Buſineſs of this Seſſion, we beg your Majeſty's Leave that we may return to our own Houſes, there to put in Execution the good Laws which you have made, and to defend our ſeveral Countries againſt all Deſigns to diſturb the Peace of the Nation. And we beſeech Almighty God, who hath hitherto wonderfully preſerv'd your Majeſty's Perſon, and made you glorious in all your Atchievments, ſtill to proſper your Forces both at Sea and Land, till he hath made your Majeſty an Aſylum for all your Friends, and a Terror to your Enemies both at Home and Abroad.'

The King's Speech to the Houſes at the ſame Time.

Upon paſſing the Bills mention'd in this Speech, and ſome few others of leſs Moment, his Majeſty made the following Speech: 'My Lords and Gentlemen, I thank you for this other Bill of Supply which you have given me, and I aſſure you the Mony ſhall be laid out for the Ends it is given; I hope we ſhall live to have Bills of this Nature in the Old Stile, with fewer Proviſoes. I look'd to have had ſomewhat offer'd to me concerning the Accounts of the Mony that hath been already rais'd ſince the War: Which ſince you have not done, I will take Care (after ſo much Noiſe) that the ſame be not ſtifled, but will iſſue out my Commiſſion in the Manner I formerly promis'd the Houſe of Peers; and the Commiſſioners ſhall have very much to anſwer, if they do not diſcover all Matters of Fraud and Couſenage. The Seaſon of the Year is very far ſpent, in which our Enemies have got great Advantages over us; but by the Grace of God, I will make all the Preparations I can, and as faſt as I can: And yet I muſt tell you, That if any good Overtures be made for an honourable Peace, I will not reject them; and I believe all ſober Men will be glad to ſee it brought to paſs.'

'I ſhall now prorogue you till towards Winter, that you may, in your ſeveral Places, attend the Peace and Security of your ſeveral Countries, where there are unquiet Spirits enough working: And I do pray you, and I do expect it from you, That you will uſe your utmoſt Endeavours to remove all thoſe falſe Imaginations in the Hearts of the People (which the Malice of ill Men hath induſtriouſly infus'd into them) of I know not what Jealouſies and Grievances. For I muſt tell you again (and I am ſure I am in the Right) That the People had never ſo little Cauſe to complain of Oppreſſion and Grievances, as they have had ſince my Return to you. If the Taxes and Impoſitions are heavy upon them, you will put them in Mind, That a War with ſuch powerful Enemies cannot be maintain'd without Taxes: And I am ſure the Monies rais'd thereby come not into my Purſe. I ſhall add no more; but I promiſe my ſelf all good Effects from your Affections and Wiſdoms where-ever you are; and I hope we ſhall meet again of one Mind, for my Honour, and the Good of the Kingdom.' And now, my Lord Privy-Seal, do as I have directed you.' Accordingly the Lord Roberts declar'd the King's Pleaſure for proroguing the Parliament to the 10th Day of October; which put an End to the Seventh Seſſion, or rather Meeting, of the Second and Long Parliament, after a Continuance of four Months and about two Weeks. And it is obſervable, that the Parliament began now to act and proceed with ſomewhat leſs Unanimity, and more Uneaſineſs than before. For a chargeable War, and an old Miniſtry, will naturally create in a free Nation Suſpicions of new Grievances and Miſmanagements, with a numberleſs Train of troubleſome Suggeſtions and imaginary Oppreſſions; which gradually became more apparent in the next Seſſion of Parliament.

The End of the Seventh Seſſion of the Second Parliament.

4. For a Concluſion of this memorable Year, we ſhall take Notice of ſome Changes, Deaths, and other inferior Matters, which ſhou'd not altogether be forgotten by an Engliſh Hiſtorian. The Lord Hollis had return'd from his Embaſſy in France, and the Lord Bellaſis from his Government of Tangier in the Beginning of May. Henry Coventry Eſquire arriv'd at White-Hall from his Embaſſy to Sweden on the latter End of June: About which Time Sir Richard Fanſhaw, Ambaſſador in Spain, having near finiſh'd his Negotiation, dy'd at the City of Madrid. The Lord Willoughby, Governor of the Caribbie Iſlands, was unfortunately loſt in a Hurricane near Martinico at the latter End of July. The Earl of Oſſory, Son to the Duke of Ormond, was ſworn of his Majeſty's moſt honourable Privy-Council; and being ſoon after call'd by the King's Writ to the Houſe of Peers, he took his Place in the Beginning of this laſt Seſſion. On the Death of Sir Hugh Pollard, the Place of Comptroller of his Majeſty's Houſhold was in November conferr'd on Sir Thomas Clifford, who was alſo ſworn of the Privy-Council, with this publick Character, that it was 'For the ſingular Zeal wherein he had on all Occaſions merited in his Majeſty's Service, and more eminently in the honourable Dangers of this War againſt the Dutch and French, where he has been all along a conſtant Actor; having been obſerv'd to have made it his Choice to take his Share in the warmeſt Part of thoſe Services.' In December, Robert Earl of Lindſey was ſworn of his Majeſty's moſt honourable Privy-Council; as was the Earl of Bridgewater in February following. As to the King's more private ordering his Family, in the Beginning of October, his Majeſty, to promote Frugality and Decency in Habit, and to diſcourage the Extravagancy of French Faſhions, made a ſolemn and peremptory Declaration of the Faſhion of his Apparel which he reſolv'd to wear for the future. 'It was a ſtraight 'Spaniſh Breeches; inſtead of a Doublet, a long Veſt down to the Mid-'Leg; and above that a looſe Coat after the Muſcovite or Poliſh Way; 'the Sword girt over the Veſt; and inſtead of Shooes and Stockins, a 'Pair of Buskins or Brodekins.' Which Habit was found to be very decent and becoming to his Majeſty, and was for a conſiderable Time us'd and follow'd by the chief of his Courtiers.

The Rebuilding of London.

The Fire of London had exercis'd the Wits and Inventions of many Heads, and particularly put ſeveral ingenious Perſons on contriving and ſetting up an Office for the Enſuring of Houſes from Fire; ſo that for a ſmall Sum annually paid, any Man might enſure Houſes and Goods to a much greater Value. Dr. Barbon, one of the firſt and conſiderable Re-Builders of the City, was the principal Contriver of this Office; which was thought to be one of the greateſt Deſigns produc'd in this Age, and appear'd to be more univerſally advantagious than was at firſt believ'd; thoſe ſevere Strokes falling ſince more lightly on particular Perſons, than formerly, being by vertue of this Contrivance fully repaired by a publick Stock. All Perſons were indefatigably induſtrious in the great Work of Re-Building; and when all Proviſions were made for the City's Reſurrection, the famous Sir Jonas Moor, that general Projector, firſt of all produc'd the beautiful Fleet-ſtreet, according to the appointed Model; and from that Beginning the City grew ſo haſtily towards a general Perfection, that within the Compaſs of a few Years, it far tranſcended its former Splendor. In the mean Time the Royal Society having been driven out from Greſham-Colledge, Henry Howard, Brother to the Duke of Norfolk, invited that noble Body to hold their weekly Meetings at Arundel-Houſe, where he aſſign'd them very convenient Rooms; and on New-Year's Day, being a Member of that Society himſelf, he very generouſly preſented that Society, and their Succeſſors, with a fair Library of excellent Books.

The Deaths of Biſhop Warner,

And now, for a Concluſion of all, we ſhall take Notice of the Deaths of ſome conſiderable Perſons, and begin with two noted Divines of a very different Way and Character. The firſt was Dr. John Warner, Biſhop of Rocheſter, an aged and beneficent Prelate, educated in Magdalen Colledge in the Univerſity of Oxford, and afterwards rais'd through ſeveral ſmall Preferments to the Biſhoprick of Rocheſter in the Year 1637, in which he ſhew'd himſelf a celebrated School Divine, and well read in the Fathers. In the Beginning of the late Troubles he appear'd a ſtrenuous Aſſertor of Epiſcopacy in the Houſe of Lords, and to the laſt very valiantly defended the Antiquity and Juſtice of the Biſhops Votes in Parliament; for which he did not only ſuffer with his Brethren in his Spiritual Revenues, but likewiſe in his Temporal Eſtate, which was conſiderable. Being reſtored to his Biſhoprick, he dy'd in Peace in the 86th Year of his Age, leaving Benefactions to Clergymens Widows, Colledges, poor Vicarages, &c. to the Value of no leſs than fifteen thouſand Pounds.

Mr. Calamy,

The next was that famous leading Presbyterian Divine, Mr. Edmund Calamy, B. D. educated in Pembroke-Hall in Cambridge, took into the Family of Felton Biſhop of Ely, remov'd to St. Edmund's-Bury in Suffolk, from thence to Rochford in Eſſex under the Patronage of the Earl of Warwick, and laſtly to Aldermanbury in London, where he continu'd one of the Heads of the Party in all the Times of Confuſion. He was a Perſon of very great Induſtry and Activity, and of no ſmall Learning, Piety, and Devotion; but at the ſame Time he was ſo much an Incendiary, and Promoter of the grand Rebellion, that his Actions cannot be vindicated, but only palliated under the venerable Name of a Houſe of Commons, who either miſ-led him, or were miſ-led by him; he being a frequent Preacher before them. He was one of the Authors of the celebrated Smectymnuus: His Houſe was the general Receptacle for all Presbyterian Miniſters, and his Intereſt was ſo great in the City, that after the Reſtoration he had a Biſhoprick offer'd him, which he refus'd, becauſe he cou'd not have it upon the Terms of the King's Declaration; ſo ſuffering himſelf to be ejected by the Act of Uniformity, he dy'd almoſt broken hearted upon the late dreadful Fire; leaving a Son behind him as eminent for the Church of England, as he was againſt it.

Sir Richard Fanſhaw,

After theſe we ſhall mention four others, all of different Genius's and Employments; and firſt Sir Richard Fanſhaw, lately mention'd, the King's Ambaſſador in Spain, a Gentleman educated in the Univerſity of Cambridge, where he became ſuch a Proficient in Latin, French, Italian, Spaniſh, and Portugueſe, that he underſtood them as well as his Mother Tongue. He remov'd from the Univerſity to the Court, where he became equally acquainted with Buſineſs, as he had been with the Muſes, and acted in ſeveral Employments under the late King, as well as his preſent Majeſty, all which he diſcharg'd with great Wiſdom and Honeſty. Having juſt finiſh'd his great Work, he dy'd at Madrid in the 59th Year of his Age; leaving behind him the Character of an able Stateſman, a great Scholar, a ſincere, ſweet-natur'd, and pious Gentleman.

Mr. Howell,

The next was Mr. James Howell, Hiſtoriographer Royal, the firſt that had that Title and Place given by the Crown, a Welſh-man by Birth, an Oxonian by Education, of many Countries by his Travels, and of ſeveral Parties by his Practice: He was one who aroſe from nothing, and undertook every thing; became a various and voluminous Writer, having a ſingular Command of his Pen, whether in Verſe or Proſe; and after a remarkable Diverſity of Fortunes and Compliances, he dy'd at laſt in Priſon.

Mr. Hoole,

The third was Mr. Charles Hoole, a Yorkſhire Man, educated in in Oxford Univerſity, and encourag'd by his Kinſman Biſhop Sanderſon, who gave him a Prebend of Lincoln, and deſign'd him greater Preferments, as being an excellent Latiniſt, Grecian, and Hebrician, and admirably skill'd in Claſſical Learning. Tho' his Profeſſion was Divinity, yet he moſt of all excell'd in teaching Youth, and became the moſt celebrated Schoolmaſter in the Kingdom, and publiſh'd ſeveral uſeful Books upon that Occaſion. After teaching ſeveral private Schools, and ſuffering much Trouble for his Loyalty, he liv'd ſome Years in Peace, and dy'd Rector of Stock near Chelmsford in Eſſex. The fourth was Mr. James Shirley, the moſt celebrated Dramatick Poet in his Time, who by ſome hath been accounted equal to Fletcher himſelf, a Perſon of pregnant Parts, who had his Education in both Univerſities, and became Servant in the late Reign to Queen Henrietta Maria; but his chief Employment ſeems to have been writing of Plays, of which he furniſh'd the Stage and the World with near forty, highly valu'd at that Time, and in ſome of which he joyn'd with George Chapman, of whom Mention is made in the Year 1634. After all theſe four, we may add a fifth, too remarkable to be omitted, which was Sir John Glynne, Serjeant at Law, and noted in his Profeſſion, a Perſon more than once mention'd in the laſt Volume, having been a violent Promoter of the late Miſeries of the Kingdom, by which he was a very particular Gainer. Being a Member of the long Parliament, he prov'd a mortal Enemy to the Earl of Strafford and to Biſhops, a zealous Covenanter, one of the Aſſembly of Divines, and a profeſs'd Presbyterian; but being expell'd the Houſe by the Independent Party, he afterwards wheel'd about, and became a Favourite with Cromwell, who made him a Serjeant, a Judge, a Lord, and a Tool: Yet ſtill after the Reſtoration, the King, by the too bountiful Meaſures of the Times, as the Cavaliers judg'd, was pleas'd to Knight him, and make him his eldeſt Serjeant at Law, in which Station he dy'd in Peace, and was bury'd with unuſual Solemnity at Weſtminſter-Abby.

VI. 1. The two great contending Nations, the Engliſh and the Dutch, this Year began both to be ſo weary of the expenſive War, as to be willing to hearken to an Accommodation. The French, the chief Supporters of the Latter, were, for particular Reaſons, inclin'd to a Peace; and for that End the Mediation of Sweden was propos'd, and their Ambaſſadors came over to London in order to effect ſo deſirable a Work. Matters being brought to ſome Forwardneſs, the Swediſh Ambaſſadors labour'd hard about the Place and the Manner of Treating. The King thought it reaſonable that the States of Holland ſhou'd ſend to him, and propos'd London it ſelf for the Place of Treaty; which they confeſs'd was but fitting: But the Kings of France and Denmark being by Leagues involv'd in the War with them, without whom they cou'd not Treat, they therefore propounded that ſome neutral Place might be choſen, where the King's and their Confederates Plenipotentiaries might appear. The French King thought it bore too much upon his Honour to ſend to London, and propos'd the Queen Mother's Lodgings at Paris for the Place of Treaty, looking upon it as a neutral Place, and without Exception. He alſo excepted againſt all Places within the Spaniſh Netherlands, for which he had his private Reaſons that ſoon after appear'd; and when ſame Places in Germany were mention'd, he alledg'd That they were too remote for daily Intelligence: So that for ſome Time this firſt Step towards a Treaty was held in Suſpence; each Party endeavouring to gain ſome particular Advantage only by means of the Place.

The Swede mediates for a Peace.

1667. Car. 19 Ref. 7.

The King of England had at this Time in his Court the Baron l' Isola, a Minister of the Emperor, and much in the Spanish Interest, a Man of considerable Abilities and Subtlety, who was more than ordinary vigilant against the Power of France. By his good Address he insinuated himself into the English Court and Ministry, tho' he was no Friend to the Chancellor himself, and for a while he had a great Influence on Affairs there. It is believ'd that it was by this Person's Advice, and to countermine the Intrigues of France, that the King made a civil and condescending Proposal to the Dutch, That to remove all Scruples and Difficulties, he was willing that the Hague it self shou'd be the Place for treating of an Accommodation; well knowing that the Insolencies of the People in a Common-wealth, and the Cries of a ruin'd Multitude, wou'd prove the best Mediators in this Affair. This Proposal was very shocking and affrightning to the great De Wit and all his Party, who soon perceiv'd that if it succeeded, it wou'd much hazard the Diminution of their Authority, and elevate the contrary Party. The French King was no less sensible of this Design; accordingly his Secretary Lionne wrote thus to the Ambassador D' Estrades: 'His Majesty is assured the King of 'England was advis'd to propose the Hague by one of the very States in 'the Interest of the Prince of Orange; and he is sensible that all is levell'd 'at Monsieur De Wit's Credit and Authority, which his Majesty is re-'solv'd to maintain to the utmost.' Then proposing Breda, Boisleduc, &c. he added, 'If you can but perswade the States into the same Opinion, 'we shall not value l' Isola's Brags to Friquet that he has levell'd against 'France.' However, the better to divert this Matter, and to countermine the English, the French King made a new Proposal to have Dover in England to be the Place of Treaty. This was on the other Side declin'd, as a Place unfit to receive so many Persons of Quality and their Trains; and so, after several Places nam'd, Breda was the Place fix'd on for all Parties to meet and bring about this great Affair, where they resolv'd to open the Treaty in the Beginning of May.

Difficulties about the Place of Treating.

Breda agreed upon.

2. Things thus settled, the Lord Denzill Hollis and Mr. Henry Coventry of the King's Bed-chamber, were appointed Ambassadors and Plenipotentiaries for England. For the King of France were Monsieur d' Estrades and Courtin; for the King of Denmark, the Lord Paul Clingenberge, and Peter Canisius; for the States-General, Beverning, Hubert, and Jongstall, of Holland, Zeeland, and Freesland; and the Mediators from Sweden were the Lords George Flemming and Julius Cojet. These were all provided with the most commodious Houses in Breda, and for their publick Meetings was fitted up the great Hall in the Castle, being the usual Residence of the Prince of Orange. The English Ambassadors having their several Passports, arriv'd at Flushing on the 2d Day of May with three Frigates and four Baggage Ships, where they were solemnly receiv'd in the States Yatches, which brought them to Tir-Heyde, a Fort near Breda, where they tarry'd till their Houses were made fit for them. On the 14th of the same Month they made their publick Entry into Breda, which was very great and solemn: They were met a Mile from the Town by two hundred Horse, sent by the Governor; with whom went the Commander of the Town in the Governor's Coach. The Horse led the Van, then sixteen Pages on Horseback, and after them four Trumpets in the King of England's rich Liveries: After them the Gentleman of the Horse to the Ambassadors, follow'd by the Mareschal of the Embassy, who perceded the Ambassador's Coach which was very stately, drawn with six Horses, besides three others of their own, and that of the Governor. And the Gentlemen which waited on the Ambassadors baſſadors had put their Servants in the ſame Liveries, which made the Train very numerous and ſurprizing. They were met at the Gates by the Governor, who nobly treated them the firſt Day at their own Houſe; and they afterwards treated him in like manner, each keeping a moſt ſplendid Table: So that they were never without Spectators, who came from all Places to ſee the Grandeur, or partake of the Bounty of it. 1667. The Proceedings in the Negotiation.

As to the Negotiations, which were carry'd on with great Formality as well as Regularity, there was this Advantage, that the Preliminaries were in ſome Meaſure agreed on before the Meeting; the States-General having offer'd his Britannick Majeſty his Choice of Reſtoring to each other whatſoever had been taken before or during the War; or otherwiſe, That each ſhou'd keep what he had taken, without giving of any Satisfaction. Of which the King had declar'd for the latter, to prevent all future Diſputes; but ſtill inſiſted upon Satisfaction to be made for the two great Ships the Bonadventure and the Good Hope, the taking of which by the Dutch had been a prime Occaſion of the War; but to this the States wou'd by no Means comply, alledging 'It ſhew'd more Submiſſion and 'Dependence than was agreeable to a free Eſtate.' The Engliſh, during the War, had taken from the Dutch the Iſlands Euſtatius and Tabago in the Weſt Indies, which the French had taken from the Engliſh again; of which the States inſiſted upon Reſtitution, and which the French did not much diſpute. As to the Iſland of Poloron in the Eaſt Indies, it was prov'd by a Receipt, That the Eaſt India Company of Holland had deliver'd it to the Engliſh; and having afterwards, during the War, taken it from them again, it was agreed that each Party ſhou'd keep all the Lands, Forts, &c. whereof they were poſſeſs'd on the 20th of May in the Year 1667, without making any Reſtitution whatſoever. At the ſame Time the Daniſh Plenipotentiaries demanded Reſtitution of the Iſlands Schetland and the Orcades, anciently mortgag'd to a King of Scotland for five thouſand Pounds Sterling, alledging 'That his Britannick 'Majeſty had receiv'd more out of the Profits than the Principal and 'Intereſt of the Mony amounted to:' But all the Plenipotentiaries in general concluded that the Daniſh King's Pretenſion was ungrounded; eſpecially ſince he had not offer'd the Repayment of the Mony lent and receiv'd by his own Confeſſion.

After a few Weeks Negotiation, the Lord Cojet, one of the Swediſh Plenipotentiaries and Mediators, ſicken'd at Breda, where he dy'd of a Feaver. This caus'd ſome Delay in the Proceedings; but the Count de Doua, Ambaſſador to the States at the Hague, was in a ſhort Time ſent to ſupply his Place as Mediator. In the mean Time the States warmly inſiſted upon the Engliſh's recalling of all Proclamations, or Acts which were prejudicial to Commerce, and more particularly that call'd The Act of Navigation; which their Plenipotentiaries declar'd to be out of their Powers, it being an Act of Parliament, and conſequently not to be repeal'd without Conſent of Parliament. Tho' they were poſitive and tenacious in ſome Particulars, yet to comply with the States as much as cou'd be in this Matter, it was agreed by a ſecret Article, 'That it 'ſhou'd be lawful for all Dutch Ships to bring into England, or any of 'the King's Dominions, all Manufactures made of the Growth of the 'Netherlands and of Germany, which moſt uſually are convey'd down 'the great Rivers, or by Carts, and no otherways, unto the Sea-Ports, 'to be tranſported from thence beyond the Seas.' Thus they continu'd for a conſiderable Time without coming to a Concluſion; all Parties acting and proceeding with Caution and Reſerve, in a great Meaſure waiting for the Succeſs of their Fleets and Armies, of which it is Time to make mention.

The Dutch and Engliſh Preparations for this Year.

3. The Dutch, both before and after the Treaty began, had made their uſual Preparations for War, as the moſt likely Way to obtain a better Peace, and accordingly with great Expence fitted out a Fleet of ſeventy Men of War; in which they were ſtill more vigorous when they perceiv'd that the Engliſh had taken contrary Meaſures. It ſeems, in the Beginning of the War it had often been propos'd to the King by ſeveral knowing Perſons, and eſpecially by Sir John Lawſon, That ſince the Life of the Dutch conſiſted in Trade, a Pyratical War wou'd prove much cheaper, and wou'd ſooner bring them to Submiſſion; for if they cou'd traffick, they wou'd not much value the Expence, but perhaps grow rich upon it, as they did in their long Conteſt with Spain. His Majeſty, at that Time, cou'd by no Means be ſatisfy'd with the Advice, conceiving it a Diſhonour to him, who was juſtly accounted the moſt powerful Maſter of the Seas, not to make it good by open Courage and Bravery; eſpecially ſince the Continuance of the War was ſo uncertain. But at laſt, after his ſeveral Victories were apparent, and that the Enemy wou'd in a ſhort Time conclude a Peace, he was now adviſ'd only to fit out a light Fleet, which dividing it ſelf into every Quarter, muſt certainly make great Spoil among the Dutch Merchant-Ships, and more nearly affect the Traders than before. So, without putting himſelf to the great Charge of a Fleet, he order'd ſeveral Frigates to cruiſe in the Scottiſh Seas, and others in the Channel about Plymouth, thereby to ſhut up the Britiſh Seas on all Sides. Beſides which, Sheerneſs and Upnore-Caſtle were order'd to be fortify'd, and a Chain to be drawn croſs the River of Medway, to ſecure the Royal Fleet at Chatham: All which were better adviſ'd than executed.

The Dutch Expedition at CHATHAM.

The Dutch took the Advantage of the too great Security of the Engliſh, and appearing with their great Fleet, under De Ruyter and De Wit's Brother, they rod in Triumph upon the Engliſh Coaſts, and near the Mouth of the Thames. And finding no Oppoſition, being baſely pylotted by ſome Engliſh Fugitives, they made a bold Attempt, and ſail'd up the Medway on the 10th of June, and ſoon made themſelves Maſters of the Fort of Sheerneſs, tho' valiantly defended by Sir Edward Spragg. To put a ſtop to their farther Progreſs, ſeveral Veſſels were ſunk about Muſcle-Bank, the narroweſt Part of the River, and a ſtrong Chain was put croſs the Channel; and the Lord General, the Duke of Albemarle, was got down thither with a Land Force to oppoſe them. But having the Advantage of an Eaſterly Wind, and a ſtrong Tyde, they furiouſly preſs'd on and broke through the Chain, and fought and burnt the three Ships that lay to guard it, the Matthias, the Unity, and the Charles the Fifth, all three Dutch Ships taken in the preſent War, damaging many other Veſſels, and taking along with them the Hull of the Royal Charles, which was twice fired by the Engliſh, and as often extinguiſh'd by the Enemy. After which they advanc'd with ſix Men of War, and five Fire-ſhips, as far as Upnore-Caſtle, and burnt the Royal-Oak, and in Effect deſtroy'd the Loyal London and the Great James, which they left a great Part under Water. And after all this Inſult and Ravage, they fell down the River again with no great Damage to themſelves but the Loſs of their Fireſhips, and the running a-ground two of their Men of War, which they were forc'd to ſet on Fire. This ſudden and bold Attempt threw the Court and City of London into a vaſt Aſtoniſhment and Conſternation; and indeed Diſcontent and Confuſion appear'd in every Man's Looks, all dreading the infinite Danger of the Enemies coming up the Thames as far as London-Bridge. Whereupon all Hands were at Work, and beſides the Muſtering the Train'd-Bands, nine Ships were ſunk at Woolwich, and four four at Black-Wall; and Platforms furniſh'd with Artillery and Works to defend them, were rais'd in divers Places to hinder the Dutch from coming up to the City. All Perſons took the liberty to exclaim againſt the preſent Counſellors, who had caus'd the King to be ſo amus'd with the Hopes of Peace, as to treat without Sword in Hand, and after ſuch Victories obtain'd againſt the Dutch, which by Avarice and Overſight were now obſcur'd and tarniſh'd to that Degeee, as they cou'd not eaſily recover their former Luſtre. 1667. Car. 19 Reſ. 8.

This Attempt having been ſo ſurprizing and diſgraceful to the Engliſh Nation, it may be very proper to give a more particular Account of it in the Narrative that the Duke of Albemarle Himſelf gave in to the Houſe of Commons in the next Seſſion of Parliament; which will be the more deſirable, becauſe we do not find that ever it was publiſh'd before; and this we ſhall do in the Duke's own Words: A more particular Account given of it by the Duke of Albemarle.

'I went early on 'Tueſday the 11th of June to Chatham, where I found ſcarce Twelve 'of eight hundred Men, which were then in the King's Pay, in his Ma- 'jeſty's Yards; and thoſe ſo diſtracted with Fear, that I cou'd have lit- 'tle or no Service from them. I had heard of thirty Boats which were 'provided by his Royal Highneſs; but they were all, except five or ſix, 'taken away by thoſe of the Yards, who went themſelves with them, and 'ſent and took them away by the Example of Commiſſioner Pett, who 'had the chief Command there, and ſent away his own Goods in ſome 'of them. I found no Ammunition there, but what was in the Mon- 'mouth; ſo that I preſently ſent to Graveſend for the Train to be ſent 'to me, which got thither about two of the Clock next Day. After 'I had diſpatcht this Order, I went to viſit the Chain, which was the 'next Thing to be fortify'd for the Security of the River; where I found 'no Works for the Defence of it. I then immediately ſet Soldiers to 'Work for the raiſing of two Batteries, for there were no other Men 'to be got; and when I employ'd them in it, I found it very difficult to 'get Tools; for Commiſſioner Pett wou'd not furniſh us with above 'Thirty, till by Breaking open the Stores we found more. I then dire- 'cted Timber and thick Planks to be ſent to the Batteries and Guns alſo, 'that they might be ready to be planted as ſoon as the Batteries 'were made; and in the next Place I ſent Captain Wintour with his Com- 'pany to Upnore-Caſtle, which I took to be a Place very fit to hinder 'the Enemy from coming forwards, if they ſhou'd force the Chain: 'And upon further Conſideration, tho' I had Horſe near the Fort, leſt 'the Enemy ſhou'd land there, I commanded Sir Edward Scott with his 'Company for a further Strength of the Place; and gave him the Charge 'of it, with Orders to let me know what he wanted for the Security 'thereof.

'Having thus provided for Upnore, I conſider'd where to ſink Ships 'without the Chain, next to the Enemy, as a further Security to it. I 'found five Fireſhips, and the Unity, upon the Place; and adviſing with 'Commiſſioner Pett, and the Maſter of Attendance and the Pylot, how 'to do it; Pett told me It was their Opinion, That if three Ships were 'ſunk at the narrow Paſſage by the Muſcle-Bank, the Dutch Fleet cou'd 'not be able to come up: And I relying upon their Experience who beſt 'knew the River, gave Orders accordingly for the doing of it. But 'when this was done, they ſaid they wanted two Ships more, which I 'directed them to take and Sink. After this, I order'd Sir Edward 'Spragg to take a Boat and Sound whether the Sinking of thoſe wou'd 'ſufficiently ſecure the Paſſage; which he did, and found another Paſ- 'ſage (which the Pylot and Maſter of Attendance had not before ob- 'ſerv'd) that was deep enough for great Ships to come in: I thereup-

'on

'on resolv'd to sink some Ships within the Chain, and provide some 'against there shou'd be Occasion. I went then to look after the other 'Ships and Batteries, and to see the Men and all Things ready; but I 'found the Guns, which I had before order'd to be there, not yet come 'down; and instead of thick Oaken Planks (of which there was good 'Store in the Yards, as it afterwards appear'd) the Commissioner wou'd 'only send Planks of Deal, saying He had no Other; which prov'd very 'prejudicial in the Use of them: For they were so weak, That at eve-'ry Shot, the Wheels sunk through the Boards, which put us to a con-'tinual Trouble to get them out.

'About Noon, before the Batteries were quite rais'd, the Enemy came 'on to the Place where our first Ships were sunk: I went on Board the 'Monmouth with fifty Volunteers, and appointed Soldiers in other Ships 'to make the best Defence we cou'd, if they had proceeded; but they 'were so incumber'd, before they cou'd clear the Way through the sunk 'Ships, and find another Passage, that the Tide was spent, and there-'fore they made no further Advance that Day; whereby we had Time 'to consider what to do against the next Attempt. There were two 'Ships order'd to lye within the Chain, to be ready to sink, if Occasion 'shou'd be: And wanting One Ship more to sink in the Middle between 'these two Ships, I that Night order'd the Sancta Maria, a great Dutch 'Prize, to be sunk in the deepest Place between the two foresaid Ships; 'and I judg'd it so necessary to be done, that I charg'd Commissioner 'Pett, and the Master of Attendance, on peril of their Lives to do it by 'Morning; they having Time enough before the Tide serv'd to provide 'Things to carry her down. Commissioner Pett, who had receiv'd 'Orders from his Royal Highness on the 26th of March to remove the 'Royal Charles above the Dock, had for about nine or ten Weeks neg-'lected those Orders: And when I was getting all the Boats I cou'd (for 'I wanted many) for carrying Materials for the Batteries, and Am-'munition and Soldiers for the Defence of all our Places, he came and 'told me He wou'd carry her up that Tide, if he might have Boats, which 'I cou'd not then spare: For if they were gone, all our Batteries must 'have been neglected, and I cou'd not transport the Timber, Powder 'and Shot, and Men to them, to resist the Enemy the next Day. And 'besides, it was thought adviseable at that Instant, if the Dutch shou'd 'have landed in the Marsh by the Crane, she might have been useful, 'and have hinder'd them, having Guns on Board. Nevertheless, having 'notice shortly after, That there was neither Sponge, Ladle, Powder 'nor Shot in her, I sent Captain Millet, Commander of the Matthias, 'about ten in the Morning, with Orders to Commissioner Pett to car-'ry her up, as he cou'd, the next Tide; who pretended he cou'd not 'then do it, because there was but one Pylot that wou'd undertake it, and 'he was employ'd about sinking of Ships. And seeing she was not remov'd 'in the Morning, I my self spoke to Commissioner Pett in the Even-'ing, in the presence of Colonel Mac-Noughton and Captain Mansfield, 'to fetch her off that Tide; but notwithstanding these Orders, the Ship 'was not remov'd, but lay there till the Enemy took her. On the same 'Morning, by Break of Day, I went to see what was done about the 'Sancta Maria, and found Men towing her along to the Place intended, 'and they had Time enough to do their Business: But soon after I had 'dispers'd my Orders to the Ships, I look'd and saw the Sancta Maria, 'by the Carelessness of the Pylots and Masters of Attendance, was run on 'Ground, at which I was much troubled: For if that Ship had been 'sunk in the Place where I appointed, the Dutch Ships cou'd not have 'got beyond those of ours sunk within the Chain, and thereby none of

'the King's Ships within cou'd have been deſtroyed, in regard that our 1667.
'Guard-Ships within our Batteries wou'd have hinder'd them from re- Car. 19
'moving our ſunk Ships. Ref. 8.

'About ten a Clock on Wedneſday, the Enemy came on with Part of 'their Fleet, and two Men of War, five or ſix Fireſhips, and ſome other 'Men of War ſeconding them. They firſt attempted the Unity, which 'was plac'd on the Right-Hand cloſe without the Chain to defend it; 'and they took Her; and one of their Fireſhips ſtrook upon the Chain, 'but it ſtop'd it. Then came another great Fireſhip, and with the Weight 'of them two the Chain gave way; and then the Ships came on in that 'very Paſſage where the Sancta Maria ſhou'd have been ſunk. They 'burnt the two Guard-Ships, and took off the Royal Charles, 'wherein the Gunners and Boat-Swain did not do their Duty in firing 'her, tho' they ſay they attempted it twice, but the Fire did not take. 'This was all that I obſerv'd of the Enemies Action on Wedneſday. Our 'next Care was to provide againſt the Tide ſerv'd the next Day: I enquir'd 'what had been done by Sir Edward Scott at Upnore, and ſent him as 'many of thoſe Things he needed as I cou'd get Boats to carry them to 'him, and ſent likewiſe a Company more than was formerly order'd, to 'reinforce the Place in caſe of Landing; and then directed three Batte-'ries to be made in the King's Yard; but cou'd not get a Carpenter, but 'two that were running away. I alſo planted that Night about fifty Can-'non in ſeveral Places, beſides thoſe that came with the Train of Artil-'lery, which were alſo planted. I ſtaid all Night in the Place with the 'Men, and having no Money to pay them, all I cou'd do or ſay was lit-'tle enough for their Encouragement: For I had no Aſſiſtance from Com-'miſſioner Pett, nor no Gunners or Men to draw on the Guns, except 'the two Maſters of Attendance.

'On Thurſday Morning betimes, Upnore was in a pretty Condition, 'and our Batteries ready: I got ſome Captains of Ships and other Offi-'cers, Sea Volunteers, and others that came to me to ply the Guns; and 'other Land Volunteers did aſſiſt them to draw them on the Batteries. 'About Noon the Enemy came on again with two Men of War, and 'two Fireſhips, and ſome more Men of War following them: The firſt 'two anchor'd before Upnore, and play'd upon it whilſt the Fireſhips 'paſs'd by to the Great James, the Royal Oake, and the Loyal London. 'The two firſt Fireſhips burnt without any effect; but the reſt went up 'and burnt the three Ships mention'd: And if we had had but five or 'ſix Boats to cut off the Boats of the Fireſhips, we had prevented the 'Burning of thoſe Ships; but thoſe being burnt, as ſoon as the Tide 'turn'd, they went back, and made no further Attempt. I had in the 'Morning before this Action receiv'd his Majeſty's Command to return 'to London; but I thought it moſt for his Service to ſtay till the 'Attempt was over: And then having left upon the Place the Earl of 'Carliſle, and the Earl of Middleton to command there till further Or-'der, I came away about eight in the Evening, and by two in the Morn-'ing arriv'd at London.' Such was the Narrative of the Duke of Albe-marle; and tho' it was not given in till ſome Months after, yet the Neg-lects of Commiſſioner Pett appear'd ſo ſoon, to whom the Care of Cha-tham Yard and the Navy had been intruſted, that within a few Days af-ter he was committed cloſe Priſoner to the Tower, as well as afterwards impeach'd by the Houſe of Commons.

The Proceedings of the Dutch after it.

But to proceed: The Dutch having, after this unexpected Advantage, got out to Sea again, made many other Attempts of Bravery, or rather of Revenge; which they continu'd even after the Peace was concluded at Breda. They ſail'd to Portſmouth with a Deſign upon the Ships in that 1667. Car. 19 Ref. 8. Harbour, but finding them too well ſecured by the Diligence of the Earl of Macclesfield, and Captain Elliot, ſent thither by the King for that purpoſe, they appear'd before Plymouth in the Middle of July, and ſoon after made an Attempt upon Tor-Bay, but were beaten off. Then they ſtood Eaſtward, and again enter'd the River Thames, and got about twenty five Sail into Tilbury Hope, where the Engliſh had about eighteen Men of War and Fireſhips. Sir Edward Spragg, who commanded that Squadron, was unfortunately abſent when the Dutch came firſt up with them; and therefore the Dutch with their Fireſhips did ſome conſiderable Miſchief: But Sir Edward returning on Ship-board, and being joyn'd with a ſmall Squadron from Harwich under Sir Joſeph Jordan, he ſo ply'd the Dutch, that they were glad to fall down the River again with as much Damage to themſelves as to their Oppoſers. After this they bid Defiance to the Town of Harwich, and landed Three thouſand Men near Felſtone-Cliff, and made two ſeveral Attacks upon Landguard-Fort, and made a ſtand againſt the Train'd-Bands, under the Command of the Earl of Suffolk; and without any great Loſs or Execution, they re-imbark'd and ſtood again for the Thames; and coming up as far as Hull-Haven, they engag'd the Squadron of Sir Edward Spragg, compos'd of the Succeſs and eighteen other Men of War; where the Encounter was ſo ſharp, that the Engliſh ſtood off for Graveſend, and left the Dutch at Anchor in the Hope: but they ſoon fell down to the Buoy in the Nore; and, leaving Sir Edward Spragg the Honour of ſeeming to purſue them, they got to Sea, and again made to the Weſtern Coaſts, and attempted to land firſt at Wenbury in Devonſhire, and then near Cawland in Cornwall. And thus they hover'd about with continual Allarms of Offers of Deſcent; till not being able any longer to diſſemble their Knowledge of a Peace, de Ruyter obligingly invited ſome of the Corniſh Gentlemen on Board him, and gave them a liberal Entertainment; and civilly excuſing ſome of his latter Acts of Hoſtility, he handſomly diſmiſs'd them, and ſail'd to his own Country.

4. The firſt Approach of the Dutch Fleet, and their Succeſs at Chatham, had ſo allarm'd the Engliſh Court, that at the firſt Meeting of the Council, a Propoſition was made to aſſemble the Parliament with all poſſible Expedition, tho' they had been already prorogu'd to the 10th of October. On the other Side, the Chancellor Hyde, finding the popular Diſcontents to riſe high againſt him, us'd all Diligence to oppoſe that Motion; and conceiving an Army more uſeful to the Court at this Juncture of Affairs, took this Occaſion to propoſe the Raiſing of twelve Thouſand Men. And tho' the major part of the Council carry'd it for the Aſſembling of the Parliament, and that a Proclamation ſhould be immediately publiſh'd for their meeting on the 25th of July, yet the Deſign of raiſing an Army was not laid aſide. At the cloſe of the laſt Seſſion, the King had promis'd his two Houſes of Parliament, that he wou'd conſtitute Commiſſioners for Taking the Accounts of the ſeveral Sums of Monies which had been rais'd and aſſign'd to his Majeſty, during the great and important Wars, to the End that his Majeſty and his People might be ſatisfy'd in the faithful Application and Expence of them. In diſcharge of this Royal Word and Promiſe, before this unexpected Meeting of the Parliament, the King granted a Commiſſion under the great Seal of England 'to John 'Earl of Bridgewater, Oliver Earl of Bolingbroke, Robert Earl of Ailſ- 'bury, Edward Viſcount Conway, John Lord Lucas, and John Lord 'Crew, Peers of this Realm, together with Sir William Lowther, Sir Tho- 'mas Meers, Sir Humphry Winch, Sir Thomas Littleton, Sir William 'Thompſon, Sir Thomas Osborne, Sir Thomas Gower, Col. Samuel San- 'dys, Giles Strangeways, William Garway, Edward Boſcowen, and 'John

By which Manner of Proceeding it appears, that the Enquiry into Publick Accounts was hitherto reſerv'd to the King himſelf; but now by him graciouſly promis'd to the People, and purſu'd in a Method that ſeem'd to ſignify, That the Lords were as much concern'd in this Matter as the Commons. 1667. An intermediate SESSION.

In Obedience to the King's Proclamation, but contrary to uſual Cuſtom, the Parliament met on the 25th of July, making a ſort of an intermediate Seſſion, and of a very ſhort Continuance. The Commons immediately enter'd upon the Debate of the new-rais'd Army, which they reſolv'd to break as ſoon as might be, and ſpoke ſo clearly and freely in that Matter, that the Court reſolv'd to give them ſome little Interruption, either to mollify the warmeſt Oppoſers, or to make Way for new Meaſures. For this End a Meſſage was ſent from the Chancellor to the Speaker of the Commons 'To let them know, That his Maje-'ſty conceiving the Houſe might not be full at their firſt Meeting, he 'had deferr'd his coming to acquaint them with what he had to ſay, till 'Monday the 29th of this Month; and that the Houſe ſhou'd be adjourn'd 'till that Day.' But before the Meſſage came to them, they had paſs'd a Reſolution, 'That his Majeſty ſhou'd be humbly deſired, that as ſoon 'as the Peace was concluded, the new-rais'd Forces might be Disbanded.' Upon the appointed Day, his Majeſty came to the Houſe of Peers with the uſual Ceremonies, where he made a ſhort Speech to the two Houſes, 'Excuſing the Trouble of extraordinary Attendance, and telling them 'the Occaſions of their Meeting were now leſs urgent; and therefore 'he cou'd again diſmiſs them to the Day formerly prefix'd, and ſhou'd 'take an Opportunity, in the mean while, to do ſome Things, which he 'hop'd wou'd not be unwelcome to them:' And accordingly he prorogu'd them to the 10th Day of October.

A Prorogation.

5. And now to return and proceed to the Treaty of Breda; which for ſome Time had been carry'd on cautiouſly, and by ſlow Steps, but ſtill with ſome Advantage to the Engliſh Cauſe. But the unexpected Succeſſes of the Dutch ſoon made a great Change in the Negotiation for Peace; and the States Plenipotentiaries were not ſhy in declaring, 'That the Advantages their Arms had newly obtain'd, might probably 'make their Maſters alter their Minds; and tho' they had conſented to 'conclude a Peace upon ſome Conditions that had been preſented, yet 'they cou'd not anſwer for its Ratification: And that it was not to be 'imagin'd, the States and their Alleys ſhou'd ſtand to the Offers that 'had been made, if God continu'd to bleſs their Arms with new Con-'queſts.' The Dutch ſeem'd now reſolv'd to oblige the Engliſh, who ſhew'd a particular Unwillingneſs to come intirely into one or other of the Propoſitions that had been made them, viz. 'That each Party ſhou'd 'either reciprocally render back what they had taken, or elſe on both 'Sides keep what they had.' And the Engliſh Plenipotentiaries, being alſo further influenc'd by the Diſcontents at home, appear'd much more inclinable to Peace, and more yielding than before; and the Differences, as well with Holland, as with France and Denmark, were at laſt terminated on the 10th Day of July; excepting only, that Mr. Coventry, one of the Engliſh Plenipotentiaries, was oblig'd to return with all Speed to London to get ſome Points agreed to, which were not in their Power to decide. As to the Domeſtick Diſcontents that were ſo predominant, we may well take Notice of theſe Words in Sir William Temple's Letter, written to the Lord Arlington July the 19th. 'Every Packet I receive 'from England confirms me in the Belief, that a War abroad is not our 'preſent Buſineſs, till all at home be in better Order; no more than hard 'Exerciſe which ſtrengthens healthy Bodies, can be proper for thoſe that 'have a Feaver lurking in the Veins, or a Conſumption in the Fleſh, for 'which Reſt, and Order, and Diet are neceſſary, perhaps ſome Medi-'cine too, provided it comes from a careful and skilful Hand. This 'is all that I ſhall ſay upon that Subject, which I preſume has before this 'received ſome Reſolutions by my Lord Ambaſſador Coventry's Arrival; 'for I confeſs my Stomach is come down, and I ſhou'd be glad to hear 'the Peace ended, and our Coaſts clear, ſince it will not be better; but 'all this while, Multa gemens Ignominiam Plagaſque ſuperbi Hoſtis, and 'I am ſure, wou'd not deſire to live, unleſs with Hopes of ſeeing our 'ſelves one Day in another Poſture, which God Almighty has made us 'capable of, whenever we pleaſe our ſelves.

The French King invades Flanders.

But there was another thing that very much haſtned, and was like to have precipitated the Peace, and that was the ſudden Progreſs of the French King, who this Year began really to exert himſelf, and to appear formidable to all his Neighbours. This aſpiring Monarch had for a conſiderable Time projected the Seizure of a great Part of the Spaniſh Netherlands, and it was ſeveral Times ſecretly deſign'd to make a Diviſion of them between him and the Dutch; but upon the Death of the King of Spain, his Father-in-law, which happened in September 1665, he was furniſh'd with a new and plauſible Pretence, namely, that much of theſe Dominions in the Netherlands, together with the Franche County belong'd intirely and diſtinctly to his Queen by Right of Inheritance. And, tho' there had been ſolemn Renunciations made of thoſe Pretenſions at the Pyrenean Treaty, and upon the Concluſion of the Marriage, yet he and his Dependants had invented new Pretexts to evade and invalidate them; namely 'That they were only Conditional, and had not been 'confirm'd in the Parliament of Paris, that the Queen's Dowry had not 'been paid according to the ſaid Agreement, &c.' therefore his Chriſtian Majeſty declared and repreſented to Spain, Holland and others, 'That 'he deſign'd nothing but Peace and Amity; but only he found it neceſ-'ſary to go and take quiet Poſſeſſion, and receive the Allegiance of his 'Subjects in thoſe Provinces that were the hereditary and unalienable 'Right of his Queen.' Accordingly, in the Month of May, he advanc'd with a powerful Army to the Frontiers, and ſoon made ſuch an Impreſſion as rais'd a Terror to all about him. Yet ſtill, to ſhew the Moderateneſs of his Demands, he pretended to be content with an Exchange that ſhou'd be ſomewhat leſs in Value, and conſiderably leſs formidable to his Friends, than thoſe Places to which he made his Claim. In order to which he made a ſecret Offer to the Dutch, 'That in lieu of all Rights 'due to his Wife, he wou'd be content to accept the Franche County, 'the Dutcy of Luxemburg, Cambray, Cambreſis, Aire, St. Omer, Ber-'gues, Charleroy, Tournay and Doway, with the Countries thereunto be-'longing. But theſe Offers not being clos'd withal, he proceeded in ſuch a rapid Manner, that both the Dutch and the Engliſh became more pliable, and reſolv'd to conclude and compleat the Peace, the Ratifications of which were exchang'd on the 14th Day of Auguſt.

The PEACE of BREDA.

As to the Articles of this Treaty and Peace now concluded, they conſiſted of no leſs than thirty eight in Number, very much of which were Matters of uſual Form, tending to the better Eſtabliſhment of future Amity, good Neighbourhood, and a more civil Correſpondence, but not ſo neceſſary to be particulariz'd by a Hiſtorian: Only ſome Parts of them ought not to be omitted. In the third Article it was agreed, 'That 'each Party ſhou'd hold and poſſeſs for the Time to come, in full Right

'what other Manner ſoever, and that as they enjoy'd and poſſeſs'd them

'Goods and Moveables, which at any time had come into the Power of 'either Party, ſhou'd remain in the preſent Poſſeſſors thereof, without any 'Compenſation or Reſtitution for the ſame.' In like Manner it was agreed by other Articles, 'That all Actions, Demands and Pretenſions
'whatſoever for the ſame, ſhou'd remain void, obliterated, and diſannul'd:
'And that under the foreſaid Renunciation and Stipulation, all Letters
'of Reprizal, general or particular, ought to be comprehended and re-
'voked, notwithſtanding any Grant to the contrary: And likewiſe all
'Priſoners on both Sides, of what State or Quality ſoever, ſhou'd be ſet
'at Liberty, without any Exception.' Some Articles related to a De-nyal of protecting of Rebels and Traitors, and others to Freedom of Trade, as well as Cuſtoms and Impoſitions. Beſides which there were two that ought to be particularly remember'd; the one was, 'That all
'Ships and Veſſels of the United Provinces, as well Men of War, as Mer'chant Ships and others, which ſhou'd meet in the Britannick Seas any 'Ship of War belonging to the King of Great Britain, ſhou'd ſtrike the 'Flag, and lower the Sail, as it has formerly been practis'd.' The other was, 'That if the former Differences ſhou'd be renew'd, and turn'd in-
'to an open War, the Ships, Merchandize, and all moveable Effects of 'both Parties, which ſhou'd be found in the Sea-Ports, and in the Do-
'minions of the adverſe Party, ſhou'd be by no Means confiſcated or da-
'mag'd; but there ſhou'd be granted to the Subjects of both Parties the 'Term of ſix whole Months, during which Time they might tranſport
'the ſaid Effects where they pleas'd.' Beſides all theſe, in a ſeparate Article there are theſe Words; 'If any Perſon is found guilty of the abo-
'minable Murther committed upon the Perſon of the deceaſed King
'Charles the Firſt of happy Memory, and are lawfully convicted and con-
'demn'd, and they are found under the Dominion of the States General,
'ſo that the ſaid States, or any of their Officers, ſhall have Knowledge
'of it; they ſhall be apprehended, put in Priſon, and ſent bound to Eng- 'land, &c.' This Article was highly exclaim'd againſt by the Republican Party, and as much commended by the contrary Party, who look'd upon it as very inſtrumental in the ſettling of Peace and Quiet in Eng- land.

On the 24th of Auguſt the Peace was by the King's Command pro- It is proclaim'd in London.
claim'd by Heralds and other Officers in ſeveral Parts of London, with great Solemnity and Triumph; the Lord Mayor and Aldermen aſſiſting at the Ceremony, which was compleated with all the Marks of Joy and Satisfaction imaginable. And thus ended the Firſt Dutch War; in which the Engliſh, with all their Difficulties and Miſcarriages, gain'd much Honour and Reputation abroad; but quite otherwiſe from the Peace, by which they obtain'd little apparent Advantage, or publick Compenſation. This War, from the publiſhing of the Declaration of it, till the proclaiming the Peace, continu'd two Years, and a little above five Months:
during which Space England was compell'd, with little or no Aſſiſtance, to contend with two powerful Kings, beſides the Common Enemy, and to ſtruggle with two of the greateſt Calamities of Peſtilence and Fire, that ever befel that, or any other Northern Nation. And yet the War coſt the Dutch four Millions Sterling, whereas that in 1652, &c. coſt them not a Million and an half, as appear'd by the States Accounts.

I. 1. THE Peace, tho' inglorious upon ſome Accounts, was highly acceptable to the Engliſh Nation, which now again had a breathing Time after a formidable and expenſive War, attended with uncommon and direful Circumſtances. But tho' the War was at an End, yet like a violent Diſtemper ill cured, it left very bad Effects and Reliques behind it, moſt Perſons taking the Liberty to expoſe and condemn the real or ſeeming Miſcarriages of the late Proceedings and Tranſactions. Concerning which we may take Notice of a Letter from the Lord Arlington to the Earl of Sandwich in Spain, upon the Concluſion of the Peace, in which are theſe Words; 'The Spaniſh Ambaſſador here, and the Baron d'Iſola preſs his Majeſty 'very much to furniſh Flanders with a conſiderable Body of Foot; 'which his Majeſty only anſwers, That, till he ſees himſelf in an intire 'Poſſeſſion of his Peace from Breda, he cannot enter into new Engage-'ments; eſpecially ſeeing the Emperor and States of Holland ſo back-'ward, when they are more nearly concern'd. And the Truth is, my 'Lord, tho' the Peace be made with our Enemies abroad, there is ſuch 'a Fermentation of ill Humours at home, that no good Counſellor can 'adviſe his Majeſty to any new Hazards, or coſtly Deſigns, till he ſees 'his Affairs quieter at home.' The Murmurings of ſo many, upon the Pretence of the late Miſcarriages and Miſmanagements, made it in effect neceſſary to throw the Odium upon ſome prime Miniſter of State, who muſt be given up a Sacrifice upon this Occaſion. In purſuance of this common Policy, on the 31ſt of Auguſt, his Majeſty thought fit to take the Seal from his old and faithful Miniſter, the Earl of Clarendon, and by that Mark of Diſgrace to give him up to the Malice of his Enemies, who ſhortly after hunted him into Impeachment and Baniſhment. The Great Seal was given to Sir Orlando Bridgeman, with the Title of Lord Keeper; a Perſon of ſufficient Note and Eminency in his Profeſſion, who had been ſucceſſively Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer, and Lord Chief Juſtice of the Common-Pleas, before he arriv'd at this high Station; and yet had ſome Diſadvantage in ſucceeding a Perſon of ſo great and extenſive Abilities.

The Earl of Clarendon remov'd.

Sir O. Bridgeman ſucceeds him.

The Cauſes, and the Steps towards the Fall and Diſgrace of the great Clarendon have been partly taken Notice of before, and how boldly he had been ſtruck at by the Earl of Briſtol and others; but here ſomething more ought to be added. It has indeed been often admired, that ſuch a good-natur'd Prince as King Charles, ſhou'd not only conſent to diſcard, but ſoon after to baniſh a Friend, who had been as honeſt and faithful to him as the beſt, and perhaps more uſeful and ſerviceable than any that he had ever employ'd; which ſurely cou'd never have been brought to bear without numerous Envyers and Enemies. To ſhew how theſe were rais'd, we are to remember, as before, that during the Height of

of his Grandeur, which continu'd two Years without Rivalſhip, as well as the reſt of his Miniſtry, he manifeſted an inflexible Steadineſs to the Conſtitution of the Church of England, in equal Oppoſition to the Papiſts on one Side, and the reſt of the Diſſenters on the other, ſo that none of theſe cou'd ever be reconcil'd to him, or his Proceedings. Yet he ſeem'd forward in the Beginning to do ſo much towards the making a Coalition of all Parties, that the Cavaliers, and ſtrict Churchmen, thought themſelves too groſsly neglected; and many of them, upon that Account, tho' unjuſtly, entertain'd inſuperable Prejudices againſt him, and join'd with the greateſt of his Enemies. His Authority was once ſo great and prevailing, that even when it was much diminiſh'd, the unpopular Acts, Miſcarriages or Misfortunes were generally charg'd upon him. Moreover his Perſonal Behaviour was attended with a Sort of a Gravity and Haughtineſs, that ſtruck a very diſagreeable Awe into a Court fill'd with comical and licentious Perſons of both Sexes. He often took Liberty to give ſuch Reproofs to theſe Perſons of Wit and Gallantry, as were very unacceptable to them; and ſometimes thought it his Duty to adviſe the King himſelf in ſuch a Manner, as they took Advantage of him, and as he paſs'd in the Court, wou'd often ſay to his Majeſty, There goes your School-maſter! The Chief of theſe was the Duke of Buckingham, who had a ſurprizing Talent of Ridicule and Buffoonery; and that he might make way to his Ruin, he often did act and mimick this great Man in the Preſence of the King, walking ſtately with a Pair of Bellows before him for the Purſe, and Colonel Titus carrying a Fire-ſhovel on his Shoulder for the Mace; with which ſort of Banter and Farce the King was too much delighted and captivated. Theſe, with ſome more ſerious of the Popiſh Party, aſſiſted by the Solicitations of the Ladies of Pleaſure, made ſuch daily Impreſſions upon the Mind of the King, that he at laſt gave way, and became pleas'd and willing to part both from his Perſon and Services. 1667. Car. 19 Reſ. 8.

It is generally believ'd that the King had ſome particular and private Reſentments againſt him, as his checking of thoſe who were too forward in loading the Crown with Prerogative and Revenue, and ſuch like Proceedings. And more particularly we are told, That he had beſides countermin'd the King in a grand Deſign he had to be divorc'd from his Queen, under theſe Pretences, 'That ſhe had been preingag'd to another Perſon; or that ſhe had made a Vow of Chaſtity before her Marriage, and that ſhe was uncapable of having Children.' The Perſon deſign'd to ſupply her Place was Mrs. Stuart, a beautiful young Lady, who was related to the King, and had ſome Office under the Queen. The Chancellor, to prevent this, ſent for the Duke of Richmond, who was of the ſame Name, and ſeeming to be ſorry that a Perſon of his Worth and his Relation to his Majeſty ſhou'd receive no Marks of his Favour, adviſ'd him to marry the ſaid Lady, as the moſt likely way to advance himſelf. The young Nobleman, liking the Perſon, unwarily follow'd the Advice, made immediate Application to her Ladyſhip, who was ignorant of the King's Intentions, and in a few Days marry'd her. The King thus diſappointed, and ſoon after inform'd how the Match was brought about, baniſh'd the Duke with his new Dutcheſs from the Court, and reſerv'd his Reſentment againſt the Chancellor to a more convenient Opportunity. However it was, in a Letter to the Earl of Sandwich from the Lord Arlington, who never was a Friend to the Chancellor, we find theſe Words: 'His Majeſty hath taken the Seals from the Lord 'Chancellor, and given them to my Lord Bridgeman, with a great deal 'of Satisfaction to the World, and to Himſelf; and he hopes, that re- 'ctifying ſome other important things before the Parliament, he may ex'pect

1667. Car. 19 Ref. 8.

'pect they will deliver him out of the Streights he is ſo unhappily fallen 'into.' As to the private Reaſons of the King's abandoning the Chancellor, his Majeſty wrote an obliging Letter to the Duke of Ormond, then in Ireland, to give him Satisfaction in that Matter, as knowing him to be his intimate Friend. The Letter was never yet publiſh'd, nor wou'd a Copy of it be granted; but I have more than once been told the Subſtance of it by thoſe who have read it; and the principal Reaſon there given by the King was, The Chancellor's Inſupportable Temper.

One unpopular Act of his is not to be forgot, becauſe it had a great Influence in a ſhort Time; and this was the building a very ſtately large Houſe by the Park, call'd Clarendon-Houſe, which in a little Time obtain'd the Name of Dunkirk-Houſe, as tho' it had been built by the Mony taken for the Sale of that Place. This Houſe was built in the Chancellor's Abſence in the Plague Year, principally at the Charge of the Vintners Company, who deſigning to monopolize his Favour, made it abundantly more large and magnificent than ever he intended or deſired. And I have been aſſured by an unqueſtionable Hand, that when he came to ſee the Caſe of that Houſe, he rather ſubmitted than conſented, and with a Sigh ſaid, This Houſe will one Day be my Ruin! Whatever his Failings were, the King parted from this wiſe Counſellor when he had greateſt Need of him; for within three Months before, he had loſt his other chief Stateſman, the Lord Treaſurer Southampton. That great and excellent Man had always teſtify'd an inviolable Friendſhip to the Chancellor, and no Man was more ſenſible of his real Worth; and the laſt Time he appear'd at the Council-board, when Age and Infirmities wou'd hardly permit him to ſpeak, he bravely exerted himſelf in the Chancellor's Behalf, ſtood up, and ſpoke with all his Power to this Effect: This Man is a true Proteſtant, and an honeſt Engliſhman; and while he is in Place, we are ſecure of our Laws, Liberties, and Religion; but whenever he ſhall be remov'd, England will feel the ill Effects of it: All which came from a Perſon then preſent. Upon his Death, the King not knowing where to find a ſingle Man of equal Capacity for ſo great a Truſt, conſtituted Commiſſioners for executing the Office of Lord High Treaſurer of England, namely, his Grace the Duke of Albemarle, Lord General, the Right Honourable the Lord Aſhley Cooper, Chancellor of the Exchequer, Sir Thomas Clifford, Comptroller of the Houſhold, Sir William Coventry, and Sir John Duncomb, Knights and Privy-Counſellors.

The Earl of Southampton ſtands up for him.

The EIGHTH SESSION of the Second Parliament.

2. In this Poſture of Affairs, on the 10th Day of October, after a double Prorogation, the Parliament met at Weſtminſter, having in Effect had a Receſs of about nine Months, but from the laſt ſhort intermediate Meeting not above ten Weeks. This was properly the Eighth Seſſion of the Second and Long Parliament; at the Meeting of which there were great Expectations as to what ſhou'd be propos'd to them; and particularly it was not doubted but the King wou'd deſire Mony of them, after theſe extraordinary Charges and Expences: But his Majeſty very politickly declin'd that Motion at preſent, and only made this ſhort Speech to both Houſes: 'My Lords and Gentlemen, When we laſt met here, a-'bout eleven Weeks ago, I thought fit to prorogue the Parliament to 'this very Day, reſolving that there ſhou'd be a Seſſion now; and to give 'my ſelf Time to do ſome things I have ſince done, which I hope will 'not be unwelcome to you, but a Foundation for a greater Confidence be-'tween us for the future. The other Reaſons for that Prorogation, and 'ſome other Matters with which I wou'd acquaint you, I have com-'manded my Lord Keeper to declare unto you.'

The Lord Keeper Bridgeman's Speech.

Hereupon the new Lord Keeper Bridgeman made this handſom following Speech, which ſeems not too long to be verbally inſerted: ‘ My ‘ Lords, and you Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes of the Houſe of Com- ‘ mons,’ This Parliament (after many good and wholeſome Laws made ‘ with your Advice in ſeveral Seſſions, many great Supplies and Aids ‘ given to his Majeſty, and for the Maintenance of the Wars, and many ‘ other ſignal Teſtimonies of your Affection and Duty to him, for which ‘ his Majeſty again and again renews unto you his moſt hearty Thanks) ‘ was, as you very well know, Prorogu'd from February laſt, till this ‘ tenth of October; his Majeſty having then Reaſon to believe, that there ‘ cou'd be no Cauſe of your Re-aſſembling in the mean Time. But in ‘ this Interval, the Dutch (who ſince the War began, were ſtrengthen'd ‘ by the Union of France and Denmark, having a great Fleet) actually ‘ invaded the Land; and the French at the ſame time had a Royal Army ‘ in the Field, not far from the Sea-Coaſt; the Conjunction of which ‘ with the others, in ſome Deſign againſt England, or ſome other of his ‘ Majeſty's Dominions, we had then Cauſe to ſuſpect. In this Streight, ‘ his Majeſty (who in leſſer Difficulties had frequent Recourſe unto his ‘ Parliament, as his great and faithful Council, and therefore hath eve- ‘ ry Year once, often twice, Reaſſembled you) thought it neceſſary to ‘ anticipate the Time, and iſſu'd out Proclamations for your Meeting ‘ on the 25th Day of July laſt. This, tho' unuſual, was done by the ‘ Advice of his Privy-Council; publick Neceſſity and Exigencies allow- ‘ ing, or at leaſt diſpenſing with many Things, which, except in ſuch ‘ Caſes, were not to be allow'd or diſpens'd withal. Before the 25th Day ‘ of July, there was a Proſpect and daily Expectation, and within three ‘ Days following, an Aſſurance of a Peace concluded with, and ratify'd ‘ by our three potent Adverſaries. The Storm which threatned us be- ‘ ing thus blown over, and ſucceeded by ſo great a Serenity, it was rais'd ‘ as a Doubt by grave and wiſe Men, Whether or no, the Neceſſities and ‘ Difficulties which caus'd ſo early a Summons being remov'd, you cou'd ſit ‘ or Act as a Parliament before the 10*th of* October; being the fix'd ‘ Time to which you were formerly Prorogu'd. For this Cauſe, toge- ‘ ther with thoſe others mention'd by his Majeſty, he in his Princely ‘ Wiſdom held it neceſſary, in a Matter of ſo great Conſequence, again ‘ to fix upon this Day for your Meeting in Parliament, about which ‘ there can be no Diſpute; which being thus twice prefixt, and you ‘ Meeting here upon a double Call, his Majeſty hopes it is a happy Omen, ‘ That this Seſſion of Parliament (which in Law is but this one Day, all ‘ Acts of this Seſſion referring to it, unleſs otherwiſe ſpecially provided) ‘ will be happy and proſperous to his Majeſty, to You, and to the whole ‘ Kingdom.

‘ My Lords and Gentlemen, His Majeſty ſuppoſes, That no Man wou'd ‘ expect, that during your Receſs he ſhou'd have refuſed Overtures of ‘ Peace: The Vicinity as well as Potency of his united Enemies, the ‘ great Expences of the War, carry'd on with much Diſadvantage, by ‘ reaſon of the Plague and diſmal Fire in London, the Conſideration of ‘ the Poſture of Affairs abroad, beſides many other Motives obvious un- ‘ to you, induc'd him to embrace the Opportunity of concluding a Peace. ‘ But you well know, That tho' the War be at an End, all the Effects ‘ thereof are not yet ended. It will require Time and your good Ad- ‘ vice, to remove thoſe Obſtructions which hinder the Current of Trade ‘ both at home and abroad. And in this Particular, his Majeſty thinks ‘ fit to recommend it to your Wiſdom, to ſettle ſuch a Balance of Trade ‘ between his Subjects of this Kingdom and thoſe of Scotland, as that we ‘ may not be prejudic'd by the Import of their Commodities hither; nor

'yet they be ſo diſcourag'd, as to leave off Trading here, and find out 'other Vent abroad more dangerous to us. This he finds too hard for 'him without your Aſſiſtance, tho' upon your recommending it to him, 'he has us'd ſome Endeavours therein. His Majeſty formerly promis'd, 'That you ſhou'd have an Account of the Monies given towards the War, 'which his Majeſty has commanded his Officers to make ready: And 'ſince that way of Commiſſion, wherein he had put the Examination of 'them, hath been ineffectual, he is willing you ſhou'd follow your own 'Method, examine them in what way, and as ſtrictly as you pleaſe; he 'doth aſſure you, He will leave every one concern'd to ſtand or fall, ac-'cording to his own Innocence or Guilt. His Majeſty has Reaſon to be-'i eve, That ſome diſaffected Perſons, taking Advantage of the publick 'Neceſſities, have ſpread abroad Diſcourſes and Rumours reflecting up-'on the Government, intending thereby to beget a Diſaffection in his 'good Subjects: And it is an eaſy thing to take Exceptions, Cum neque 'Culpam humana infirmitas, neque Calumniam regnandi Difficultas evi-'tet. But his Majeſty promiſes himſelf from your good Affections, that 'every one of you in your ſeveral Places will endeavour to preſerve a 'good Underſtanding between Him and his People: And if any juſt 'Grievances ſhall have happen'd, his Majeſty will be as willing and ready 'to redreſs them for the future, as you to have them repreſented unto 'him. And his Majeſty doubts not but you will give healing and mode-'rate Counſels, and imprint that known Truth into the Hearts of his 'Subjects, That there is no diſtinct Intereſt between the King and his 'People; but the Good of One, is the Good of Both.'

Immediately after, the Houſe of Commons took into Conſideration what had been ſaid to them, and reſolv'd upon an Addreſs of Thanks to his Majeſty, in which they deſir'd and obtain'd the Concurrence of the Lords. Accordingly, on the 15th of October, the two Houſes in a Body, with their Speakers, attended the King in the Banquetting-houſe at Whitehall; where the Lord-Keeper, as Speaker of the Houſe of Peers, in the Name of both Houſes, repeated this following Addreſs to his Ma-jeſty: 'We your Majeſty's loyal and faithful Subjects, the Lords and 'Commons in Parliament aſſembled, having taken into our ſerious Con-'ſideration your Majeſty's gracious Speech, wherein you were pleas'd to 'let us know, That your Majeſty thought fit to prorogue this Parliament 'till the 10th of October, That you might give your ſelf Time to do ſome-'thing which wou'd not be unwelcome, but a Foundation for a greater 'Confidence between your Majeſty and your People; We find our ſelves 'bound in Duty to return your Majeſty our humble and hearty Thanks 'for the gracious Declaration of your Royal Intentions in that your Ma-'jeſty's gracious Speech, and in that deliver'd by your Majeſty's Com-'mand by the Lord Keeper. And particularly, "That your Majeſty has "been pleas'd to disband the late rais'd Forces; and to diſmiſs the Pa-"piſts from out your Guards, and other military Employments: For "your Majeſty's Care in quickning the Execution of the Act for reſtrain-"ing the Importation of foreign Cattle: For cauſing the Canary Patent "to be ſurrender'd and vacated: And more eſpecially, That your Maje-"ſty hath been pleas'd to diſplace the late Lord Chancellor, and remove "him from the Exerciſe of publick Truſt and Employment in Affairs of "State." turn; I thank you for your Thanks; I am glad the things I have done have given you ſo good Satisfaction: And for the Earl of Clarendon, I aſſure you I will never employ him again in any publick Affairs whatſoever.

3. The

1667. Car. 19 Ref. 8.

3. The King ſhewing himſelf ſo ready to give up the Earl of Clarendon, incourag'd the Houſe of Commons to be more forward and zealous in the Proſecution of that ſinking Stateſman. Every Man ſeem'd prepared to joyn in the general Cry againſt him; and beſides what has been related, the Count D'Eſtrades, in his Memoirs, tells us that Foreigners had a conſiderable Stroke in his Diſgrace, particularly the Spaniſh and Imperial Miniſters, the Count de Molina, and the Baron d'Iſola, who thought him not ſufficiently engag'd with the Spaniſh Party, which then, and for ſome Time after, prevail'd and govern'd in the Court of England. The Houſe of Commons being ſufficiently diſpos'd and prepar'd, on the 26th of October, Mr. Edward, ſince Sir Edward Seymour, was the firſt Man that charg'd the Earl viva voce with many great and heinous Crimes. Upon which there aroſe a Debate in the Houſe how they ſhou'd proceed upon it; ſome moving he ſhou'd be Impeach'd in the Name of the Commons, till Articles ſhou'd be form'd againſt him; others urg'd, That Witneſſes ſhou'd be firſt examin'd to ſee how the Charge might be made good, leſt in Caſe of Failure it might reflect on the Honour of the Houſe. After a long Debate a Committee was appointed to ſearch Records for Parliamentary Proceedings in the like Caſes; from which Sir Thomas Littleton making Report on the 30th, that they had found various Proceedings in ſeveral Parliaments, there aroſe another long Debate, which was maintain'd with great Warmth, and in which the Earl was loaded with many heavy Crimes and Miſdemeanors. The chief Speakers againſt his Lordſhip were Mr. Seymour, Sir Thomas Littleton, Serjeant Maynard, Sir John Holland, Sir Thomas Osbourn, Sir Robert Howard, Mr. Garraway, Lord Saint John, Sir Charles Wheeler, Mr. Hampden, Mr. Marvel, Mr. Prynne, Mr. Secretary Morrice, Mr. Waller, and Sir John Vaughan; which laſt having been formerly intimate with the Chancellor, upon the Reſtoration finding himſelf receiv'd with more Coolneſs than he expected, omitted no Opportunity of oppoſing him; and in theſe Debates none purſu'd him with greater Animoſity. The chief on the other Side, who ſtood up in Favour of the Earl, were Sir Heneage Finch, Sir Francis Goodrick, Mr. Coventry, Sir Edward Thurland, Sir John Brampſton, Sir John Talbot, Sir John Shaw, Sir Thomas Clifford, Sir Stephen Fox, and the Earl's own Son, Mr. Laurence Hyde; which laſt, being beſt ſatisfy'd of the Unreaſonableneſs of the Accuſation, and the Miſtakes in the Particulars, with no leſs Modeſty than filial Piety, declar'd, He was ſenſible the Houſe might think him partial; but that he ſhou'd endeavour to ſhew himſelf not ſo much the Son of the Earl of Clarendon, as a Member of that Houſe: That if he ſhou'd be found guilty, no Man ſhou'd be more againſt him than he; otherwiſe he hop'd every one wou'd be for him as much as himſelf: That every one in his own Conſcience was to conſider what of that Charge was true; ſince he was aſſur'd, That if one Article was prov'd againſt the Earl, he and all his Friends wou'd own him guilty of all the reſt.

The Commons Proceedings againſt the Earl of Clarendon.

His Son vindicates him.

This was a fair and noble Challenge; but however the Debate ended in a Vote, that the Committee ſhou'd reduce the Accuſation to Heads, and preſent them to the Houſe; all which was done on the 6th of November; when Sir Thomas Littleton reported and read the ſame as follows: 'I. That the Earl of Clarendon hath deſign'd a ſtanding Army to 'be rais'd, and to govern the Kingdom thereby; and advis'd the King to 'diſſolve this preſent Parliament, and to lay aſide all Thoughts of Par-'liaments for the future, to govern by a Military Power, and to main-'tain the ſame by Free-Quarter and Contribution. II. That he hath, 'in the hearing of the King's Subjects, falſly and ſeditiouſly ſaid, That

'the King was in his Heart a Papiſt, or Popiſhly affected; or Words 'to that Effect. III. That he hath receiv'd great Sums of Mony for the 'Procuring of the Canary Patent, and other illegal Patents; and grant-'ed illegal Injunctions to ſtop Proceedings at Law againſt them, and o-'ther illegal Patents formerly granted. IV. That he hath adviſed and 'procured divers of his Majeſty's Subjects to be impriſon'd againſt Law, 'in remote Iſlands, Garriſons, and other Places, thereby to prevent them 'from the Benefit of the Law, and to produce Precedents for the im-'priſoning any other of his Majeſty's Subjects in this Manner. V. That 'he procured his Majeſty's Cuſtoms to be Farmed at Under-Rates, know-'ing the ſame; and great pretended Debts to be paid by his Majeſty, 'to the Payment of which his Majeſty was not ſtrictly bound; and af-'terwards receiv'd great Sums of Mony for procuring the ſame. VI. 'That he receiv'd great Sums of Mony from the Company of Vintners, 'or ſome of them, or their Agents, for inhanſing the Prices of Wines, 'and for freeing them from the Payment of legal Penalties, which they 'had incurr'd. VII. That he hath in a ſhort Time gain'd to himſelf a 'greater Eſtate than can be imagin'd to be gain'd lawfully in ſo ſhort a 'Time; and, contrary to his Oath, he hath procured ſeveral Grants 'under the Seal, from his Majeſty to himſelf and Relations, of ſeveral 'of his Majeſty's Lands, Hereditaments and Leaſes, to the Diſprofit of 'his Majeſty. VIII. That he hath introduc'd an Arbitrary Government 'in his Majeſty's Foreign Plantations, and hath caus'd ſuch as complain'd 'thereof before his Majeſty and Council, to be impriſon'd for ſo doing. 'IX. That he did reject and fruſtrate a Propoſal and Undertaking, ap-'prov'd by his Majeſty, for the Preſervation of Nevis, and Saint Chri-'ſtopher's, and reducing the French Plantations to his Majeſty's Obedi-'ence, after the Commiſſions were drawn for that Purpoſe; which was 'the Occaſion of our great Loſſes and Damages in thoſe Parts. X. That 'he held Correſpondence with Cromwell and his Complices, when he 'was in Parts beyond the Seas, attending his Majeſty, and thereby ad-'hered to the King's Enemies. XI. That he advis'd and effected the 'Sale of Dunkirk to the French King, being Part of his Majeſty's Domi-'nions; together with the Ammunition, Artillery, and all Sorts of Stores 'there, and for no greater Value than the ſaid Ammunition, Artillery 'and Stores were worth. XII. That the ſaid Earl did unduely cauſe 'his Majeſty's Letters Patents, under the Great Seal of England, to one 'Dr. Crowther to be alter'd, and the Enrollment thereof to be unduely 'raſed. XIII. That he hath in an Arbitrary Way examin'd and drawn 'into Queſtion divers of his Majeſty's Subjects concerning their Lands, 'Tenements, Goods, Chattels and Properties, determin'd thereof at 'the Council Table, and ſtopp'd Proceedings at Law by Order of the 'Council Table, and threatned ſome that pleaded the Statute of the 17th 'Car. I. XIV. That he hath cauſed Quo Warranto's to be iſſu'd out 'againſt moſt of the Corporations of England, immediately after their 'Charters were confirm'd by an Act of Parliament, to the Intent he 'might require great Sums of Mony of them for renewing their Char-'ters; which when they comply'd withal, he caus'd the ſaid Quo War-'ranto's to be diſcharg'd, and Proſecution therein to ceaſe. XV. That 'he procur'd the Bills of Settlement of Ireland, and receiv'd great Sums 'of Mony for the ſame in a moſt corrupt and unlawful Manner. XVI. 'That he hath deluded and betrayed his Majeſty and the Nation in all 'Foreign Treaties, and Negotiations relating to the late War, and be-'tray'd and diſcover'd his Majeſty's ſecret Counſels to his Enemies. 'XVII. That he was the Principal Author of that Fatal Counſel of di-'viding the Fleet about June 1666.

Their Examination of the Particulars.

After Reading theſe Heads of Accuſation, it was reaſonably mov'd, That in regard the Articles were many, they might be referr'd to a Committee to ſee how far they were true, becauſe Fame was too ſlender a Ground to bring a Man upon the Stage. But this was carry'd in the Negative; and ſo they proceeded to the Reading the Articles ſingly and ſeparately, and to ſpeak to the Truth or Probability of them. The Firſt Article being read, to ſee what cou'd induce the Houſe to Impeach, Sir Robert Howard and Sir John Vaughan ſaid, They heard from Perſons of Quality, that it wou'd be prov'd. As to the ſecond Article, the Lord Saint John ſaid, Perſons of great Quality had aſſur'd him to make it good; and if they did not, he wou'd acquaint the Houſe who they were. Mr. Seymour, as to the third Article, alledg'd That ſufficient Perſons wou'd make it good, with this additional Saying, So long as the King is King, and I Lord Chancellor, the Patents will ſtand. The fourth and fifth Articles, Sir Richard Temple ſaid, Divers had undertaken to make good; if they did not, he wou'd name them: And for the Receiving Money of the Vintners, Sir Robert Car ſaid That he knew who wou'd prove it. About his getting a great Eſtate ſo ſuddenly, Mr. Seymour ſaid They need not prove that the Sun ſhone at Noon-Day; and Sir Thomas Littleton added That his Place as Chancellor cou'd not be worth above four or five Thouſand Pounds a Year. Then, about introducing an Arbitrary Government in the Plantations, Sir Thomas Littleton and Sir Thomas Osborn alledg'd That one Farmer and others came from Barbadoes to complain of it, and lodg'd their Petition in that Houſe, but were impriſon'd, that they might not be heard: And, for fruſtrating Propoſals for preſerving Nevis, &c. Sir Charles Wheeler ſaid My Lord Chancellor only oppos'd it. As to the Sale of Dunkirk, Sir Thomas Osborn ſaid, a great Lord told him, that he had made a Bargain for Dunkirk three quarters of a Year before it was known. Then, for the Article of ſealing Dr. Crowther's Patent, Mr. Streeter ſaid the King gave a Living to Crowther; that in the Grant there was a Miſtake of a County; Crowther finding the Miſtake, petition'd the King to mend it: that the King call'd for the Chancellor and Seal, and in the King's Preſence it was amended and Seal'd. Mr. Thompſon ſaid, He ſhou'd be able to make good the Article of drawing Mens Lands into Queſtion: And for Quo Warranto's to Corporations, Sir Thomas Littleton ſaid, it was ſo publick a Thing that it need not to be prov'd. Sir Robert Howard doubted not but the Buſineſs about the Settlement of Ireland wou'd be made out: And, for Foreign Treaties it wou'd, according to Sir Thomas Littleton, appear by the Treaties themſelves, putting them in Hopes of Peace, and ſo hindering the Fleets ſetting out. Laſtly, Mr. Thompſon ſaid, He did not want Perſons to make good the Article about the Miſcarriage of the War.

Thus every Perſon declar'd his Opinion and Belief upon Matters of which they had but a very imperfect Knowledge; the Accuſation being chiefly founded upon common Reports, and ſtrong Prejudices, attended with weak Proofs and dubious Circumſtances. But one of the Articles, the Tenth in Number, concerning the Earl's Correſpondence with Cromwell, upon a Debate was found to be within the general Act of Indemnity, and therefore was drop'd and expung'd. Having gone over the reſt of the Articles, and a Member moving that they ſhou'd know where and when ſuch and ſuch Words were ſpoken, it was anſwer'd That wou'd be a Way to ſuppreſs the Evidence; and at laſt the Queſtion being put Whether the Houſe had ſufficient Inducement to Impeach, it was carry'd in the Affirmative. So on the 9th of November the firſt Article being read, a long and learned Debate aroſe whether to accuſe him of Treaſon upon it; but it was carry'd by a great Majority in the Negative. The ſecond Article was debated, but not voted: The 1667. Car. 19 Reſ. 8. Third and Fourth were ſoon carry'd againſt the Earl: The Fifth had the ſame Fate with the Second: The Sixth, Seventh, Eighth and Ninth, were read and voted. But the Tenth, that of Denmark, admitted of a ſtrenuous Debate, and at laſt was paſſed by, without determining whether it was Treaſon or not. The Eleventh, Twelfth, Thirteenth and Fourteenth, were carry'd without Oppoſition. As to the Fifteenth, which was now the laſt but one, after a Debate it was carry'd to Impeach of Treaſon. Accordingly they reſolv'd that Impeachment of Treaſon, and other Crimes and Miſdemeanors, ſhou'd be carry'd up to the Lords againſt him by Mr. Edward Seymour; who on November the 12th went up to the Houſe of Lords; and the Lord-Keeper Bridgeman being come to the Bar to meet him, he deliver'd Himſelf to this purpoſe: My Lords, The Commons aſſembled in Parliament, having been informed of ſeveral Traiterous Practices, and other Crimes and Miſdemeanors committed by Edward Earl of Clarendon, a Member of this Honourable Houſe, have commanded Me to Impeach him: And I do accordingly Impeach him of High-Treaſon, and other Crimes and Miſdemeanors, in the Name of the ſaid Commons, and of all the Commons of England. And they have farther commanded me to deſire your Lordſhips to Sequeſter him from Parliament, and to Commit him to ſafe Cuſtody, and in convenient Time they will Exhibit Articles againſt him.

Third

They impeach him of High-Treaſon, &c.

Sir Stephen Fox for him.

It is to be remember'd, that in all the Proceedings of the Commons againſt this unfortunate Man, Sir Stephen Fox, who had a particular Place in the King's Houſehold, as well as in the Commons, always voted in Favour of the Earl. For which he was reprimanded by the King Himſelf, who ſeeing him one Day, ſaid, How now, Fox, how came you to vote againſt my Inclinations? Sir Stephen bravely anſwer'd to this Effect, Sir, I have known this Gentleman many Years, and have liv'd under the ſame Roof with him; and I am ſure he is an honeſt Man, and can never be guilty of the Crimes laid to his Charge. Upon which the King reply'd with a Puff, Ay, Fox, you will ſay any Thing; and ſo turn'd away without any more Words, or future ſhow of Reſentment.

The Lords diſagree with the Commons,

4. Thus the Commons proceeded with an irreſiſtible Career, till they met with a Check from the Lords, which caus'd a Diviſion between both Houſes. For the Lords being not ſatisfy'd with a general Way of Impeaching the Earl, on the 15th of November ſent down to deſire a Conference in the Painted-Chamber. At which, without any Debate, the Earl of Oxford deliver'd a Paper to this Effect: 'That the Lords had 'not committed the Earl of Clarendon, becauſe the Accuſation was on-'ly of Treaſon in General, without Charging him with any Thing in 'Particular.' Upon this there aroſe a warm Debate in the Houſe of Commons, in which Mr. Garraway ſaid, I had rather the Houſe ſhou'd loſe the Puniſhment of this Man, tho' a great Offender, than that this Houſe ſhou'd loſe its Priviledge: For if this Houſe may at no Time Impeach a Lord without giving in Particular Articles, it may fall out at a Time (as in the Duke of Buckingham's Caſe) where a great Man by his Intereſt with the King procures the Diſſolution of the Parliament, and then the Accuſation falls. The Debate ended in a Reſolution to appoint a Committee to draw up Reaſons to juſtify what they had done; and which were deliver'd in three Days after: Of which this ſeems to be the Principal; 'If before ſecuring the Perſons, the Special Matter of the 'Treaſon ſhou'd be alledg'd, it wou'd be a ready Courſe that Complices 'in the Treaſon might make their Eſcape, or quicken the Execution of 'the Treaſon intended, to ſecure themſelves the better thereby.' The

Who reſent it.

Reaſons

Reaſons, with divers Precedents to inforce them, were on the 28th communicated at a Free Conference: in which the Lords chiefly inſiſted upon the Petition of Right, where it was provided that none ſhou'd be committed without ſpecial Cauſe, whereby the Party might anſwer according to the Law; from whence they inferr'd 'That the Commons 'Proceedings were contrary to Law, becauſe a General Charge was 'againſt the Petition of Right. 1667. Car. 19 Reſ. 8.

On the 2d of December the Lords confirm'd their Proceedings, and ſent down a Meſſage to the Commons by two Judges, to this Effect, 'That upon the Report made to them of the laſt Free Conference, they 'were not ſatisfy'd to Commit or Sequeſter from Parliament the Earl of 'Clarendon, without the particular Treaſon were mention'd or aſſign'd.' This threw the Houſe of Commons into a great Ferment, and occaſion'd ſeveral warm Speeches, particularly from Mr. Waller and Sir John Vaughan. The Former ſtood up and ſaid, The Lords are a noble Eſtate, Warm Speeche in the Houſe but whatever the Matter is, they have of late ſome Advice given them, which makes them proceed as they never did yet; for ſcarce any Thing happens, but they encroach upon us. The Militia is now as burthenſom to the Fifty Pound Man in the Country, almoſt as all other Taxes, and the Lords have gotten this Advantage on us, that they touch not the Burthen of it with their Finger: So in the Time of the Plague, the Commons muſt be ſhut up, but not They; inſomuch that a good Act provided to that Purpoſe paſſed not. We Impeach'd the Lord Mordant, and cou'd not bring him to the Bar, tho' formerly I have known an Earl and a Lord brought thither; you deſired a Free Conference about it, but cou'd not obtain one to this Day. Rome was at firſt modeſt, and only meddled with Spirituals, but afterwards concern'd themſelves ſo much with other Matters, that every Thing almoſt was made to be in Ordine ad Spiritualia, and many Kingdoms thereupon broke from them. The Lords now inſiſt upon One Thing, becauſe they ſay it is in Order to their Judicature, perhaps hereafter they will tell us we muſt come to them on our Knees, becauſe it is in Order to their Judgment. Conſider therefore whether there be any hope of giving them Satisfaction. Sir John Vaughan was long about Precedents and Law, upon the latter of which the Lords had inſiſted; and he ſaid That in the free Conference there was much Diſcourſe about the Great Charter, and of the Statute of 28 Edw. III. but not apply'd: So that I thought Law in a Lord's Mouth was like a Sword in a Lady's Hand; the Sword might be there, but when it comes to cut, it wou'd be awkward and uſeleſs.— The Concluſion muſt be, that no Impeachment by the Commons muſt go on, unleſs it be by Preſentment; and ſo there is an End of all that for which the Parliament is principally call'd; unleſs we are Part of thoſe five Hundred contemptible Ones, who are only fit to give Money: That may be reſerv'd for us, but Nothing elſe.

On the other Side Mr. Colembine ſtood up, and thus modeſtly argu'd in Favour of the Lords: The Lords ſay, That Committing upon a general Impeachment was againſt Law, and he thought it wou'd appear ſo: He deny'd not, but a Mittimus without ſpecial Cauſe might be Legal, and grounded upon the Petition of Right; the Reaſon of which was to ſecure Men againſt Commitment by a ſpecial Warrant, and a Judge ought not to diſcharge where Treaſon was alledg'd: But in this Caſe it was different, the Judges could not diſcharge a Man committed after Examination, but the Lords ought not to Commit a Man, except there were particular Treaſon. That if he came before a Juſtice of Peace, and ſaid, I accuſe this Man of Treaſon, wou'd any wiſe Man commit him? He made his Warrant indeed, but he that accus'd muſt go farther, and make it more Particular, and

1667. Car. 19 Ref. 8. the Special Matter muſt appear before he Commits; and this was the preſent Caſe. The Common Law was, That no Man ought to be Committed without particular Cauſe; becauſe no Man cou'd commit in Capital Matters, without taking Examination before-hand, otherwiſe no Man cou'd juſtify a Commitment: Therefore he was not ſatisfy'd that the Lords had not Reaſon to deny it. That the Commons were in the Nature of a Grand Jury to preſent, but the Lords were the Judges: That Commitment was not the Judgment, but in order to it; and the Lords had a Diſcretionary Power in the Caſe: They ſaid not that they wou'd not Commit, but that they were not ſatisfy'd to do it without Special Matter; therefore the Commons ought to ſend it up. After all the Debate, the Houſe came to this poſitive Reſolution, 'That the Lords, not having com-'ply'd with the Deſire of the Commons in Committing the Earl of Cla-'rendon, and Sequeſtring him from Parliament upon the Impeachment 'from that Houſe, was an Obſtruction to the Publick Juſtice of the 'Kingdom, and a Precedent of evil and dangerous Conſequence:' And upon this they appointed a Committee to draw up a Declaration to vindicate their Proceedings.

The Earl of Clarendon withdraws, and leaves a remarkable APOLOGY.

II. 1. During theſe Diviſions and Struggles, the Earl of Clarendon, finding the Storm to bear very hard upon him from all Quarters, eſpecially from the Court, thought it moſt adviſable to withdraw himſelf, and only to leave behind him ſome written Vindication of his Innocence and Honour; which he did in a Paper thus entituled, To the Right Honourable, the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, in Parliament aſſembled: The Humble Petition and Addreſs of Edward Earl of Clarendon. Which Paper, tho' often before printed and publiſhed, is ſo informing and material, that it wou'd be a maiming this Hiſtory to omit any Part of it; therefore it is inſerted as follows: 'May it pleaſe your Lordſhips, I can-'not expreſs the inſupportable Trouble and Grief of Mind I ſuſtain un-'der the Apprehenſion of being miſrepreſented to your Lordſhips: And 'when I hear how much of your Lordſhips Time hath been ſpent upon 'the Mention of me, as it is attended with more Publick Conſequence, 'and of the Difference in Opinion, which hath already, or may proba-'bly ariſe, betwixt your Lordſhips and the Honourable Houſe of Com-'mons, whereby the great and weighty Affairs of the Kingdom may be 'obſtructed, in a Time of ſo general Diſſatisfaction, I am very unfortu-'nate to find my ſelf to ſuffer ſo much under two very diſadvantagious 'Reflections, which are in no Degree applicable to me. The Firſt, 'From the Greatneſs of my Eſtate and Fortune, collected and made in ſo 'few Years; which if it be proportionable to what is reported, may give 'reaſonable Cauſe for my Integrity to be ſuſpected. The Second, That 'I have been the ſole Manager and chief Miniſter of all the Tranſactions 'of State, ſince the King's Return into England to Auguſt laſt; and there-'fore that all Miſcarriages and Misfortunes ought to be imputed to me, 'and to my Counſels.

Rot. Parl. Clarendon's Life. Philips. Lloyd. Calamy. Wood. Langbain. &c.

I. 'Concerning my Eſtate, your Lordſhips will not believe, that after Ma-'lice and Envy have been ſo inquiſitive and ſharp-ſighted, I will offer any 'Thing to your Lordſhips, but what is exactly true: And I do aſſure 'your Lordſhips, in the firſt Place, that, excepting the King's Bounty, I 'have never receiv'd or taken one Penny, but what was generally under-'ſtood to be the juſt and lawful Perquiſites of my Office, by the con-'ſtant Practice of the beſt of Times; which I do, in my own Judgment, 'conceive to be that of my Lord Coventry, and my Lord Elleſmere, the 'Practice of which I conſtantly obſerv'd; altho' the Office in both theſe 'Times was lawfully worth double to what it was to me, and I do be'lieve

'lieve now is. That all the Courteſies and Favours which I have been 1667.
'able to obtain from the King, or other Perſons, in Church, State, or
'Weſtminſter-Hall, have been never worth to me five Pounds; ſo that Car. 19
'your Lordſhips may be confident I am as innocent from Corruption, as Reſ. 8.
'from any Diſloyal Thoughts; which after near thirty Years Service of 'the Crown, in ſome Difficulties and Diſtreſs, I did never expect
'wou'd be objected to me in my Age. And I do aſſure your Lordſhips,
'and will make it very manifeſt, That the ſeveral Sums of Mony, and
'ſome Parcels of Land, which his Majeſty hath bountifully beſtow'd
'upon me ſince his Return into England, are worth more than all I have
'amounts to; ſo far am I from advancing my Eſtate by indirect Means.
'And tho' this Bounty of his Majeſty hath very far exceeded my Merits,
'or my Expectations; yet ſome others have been as fortunate at leaſt
'in the ſame Bounty, who had as ſmall Pretences to it, and have no great
'Reaſon to envy my Condition.

'Concerning the other Imputation of the Credit and Power of being 2.
'Chief Miniſter, and ſo cauſing all to be done that I had a mind to; I have 'no more to ſay than that I had the good Fortune to ſerve a Maſter of 'very great Judgment and Underſtanding; and to be always join'd with 'Perſons of great Ability and Experience, without whoſe Advice and 'Concurrence, never any thing hath been done. Before his Majeſty's com'ing into England, he was conſtantly attended by the Marqueſs of Or-
'mond, the late Lord Colepeper, and Mr. Secretary Nicholas, who were 'equally truſted with my ſelf, and without whoſe joint Advice and Con-
'currence, when they were all preſent (as ſome of them always were)
'he never gave any Counſel. As ſoon as it pleaſed God to bring his
'Majeſty into England he eſtabliſh'd his Privy-Council, and ſhortly out 'of them a Number of honourable Perſons of great Reputation (who for 'the moſt Part are alive ſtill) as a Committee for Foreign Affairs, and Con-
'ſideration of ſuch Things, as the Nature of them require with Secrecy:
'And with theſe Perſons he vouchſaf'd to join me; and I am confident
'the Committee never tranſacted any Thing of Moment (his Majeſty be'ing always preſent) without preſenting the ſame to the Council-Board:
'And I muſt appeal to them concerning my Carriage, and whether we 'were not all of one Mind in all Matters of Importance. For more than 'two Years I never knew any Difference in the Council, or that there 'were any Complaints in the Kingdom; which I wholly impute to his
'Majeſty's great Wiſdom, and the entire Concurrence of his Coun'cil, without the Vanity of aſſuming any thing to my ſelf: And therefore
'I hope I ſhall not be ſingly charged with any thing that hath ſince fallen
'out amiſs. But from the Time that Mr. Secretary Nicholas was re-
'mov'd from his Place, there were great Alterations; and whoſoever
'knew any thing of the Court or Council, knew well how much my
'Credit ſince that Time hath been diminiſh'd, tho' his Majeſty graciouſ-
'ly vouchſaf'd ſtill to have my Advice in moſt of his Affairs: Nor hath
'there been, from that Time to this, above One or Two Perſons brought 'into the Council, or preferr'd to any conſiderable Office in the Court,
'who have been of my intimate Acquaintance, or ſuſpected to have any 'Kindneſs for me; and moſt of them notoriouſly known to have been 'very long my Enemies, and of different Judgment and Principles from 'me, both in Church and State; and have taken all Opportunities to
'leſſen my Credit with the King, and with all other Perſons, by miſre-
'preſenting and miſreporting all that I ſaid or did; and perſwading Men
'That I had done them ſome Prejudices with his Majeſty, or croſs'd them
'in ſome of their Pretences; tho' his Majeſty's Goodneſs and Juſtice was
'ſuch, that it made little Impreſſion upon him.

1667. Car. 19 Ref. 8. 3.

'In my humble Opinion, the great Misfortunes of the Kingdom have 'proceeded from the War, to which it was notoriously known that I 'was always most averse; and may without Vanity say, I did not only 'foresee, but I did declare the Mischiefs we shou'd run into, by entering 'into a War before any Alliance made with Neighbour Princes: And 'that it may not be imputed to his Majesty's Want of Care, or the Neg-'ligence of his Counsellors, that no such Alliances were enter'd into; I 'must take the Boldness to say, that his Majesty left nothing unattempted 'in order thereunto: And knowing very well that France resolv'd to 'begin a War upon Spain, as soon as his Catholick Majesty shou'd de-'part this World; which being much sooner expected by them, they 'had in the two Winters before been at great Charge in providing plen-'tiful Magazines of all Provisions upon the Frontiers, that they might be 'ready for the War; his Majesty us'd all possible Means to prepare and 'dispose the Spaniards with that Apprehension, offering his Friendship 'to that Degree, as might be for the Security and Benefit of both 'Crowns. But Spain flattering it self that France wou'd not break with 'them, at least that they wou'd not give them any Cause, by admini-'string Matter of Jealousie to them, never made any real Approach to-'wards Friendship with his Majesty; but both by their Ambassadors 'here, and to his Majesty's Ambassadors at Madrid, always insisted as 'Preliminaries, upon the giving up of Dunkirk, Tangier and Jamaica. 'Tho' France had an Ambassador here, to whom a Project for a Treaty 'was offer'd, and the Lord Hollis, his Majesty's Ambassador at Paris, 'us'd all Endeavours to promote and prosecute this Treaty; yet it was 'quickly discern'd, That the principal Design of France was to draw his 'Majesty into such a nearer Alliance, as might advance their Design, 'without which they had no Mind to enter into the Treaty propos'd. 'And this was the State of Affairs, when the War was enter'd into with 'the Dutch; from which Time neither Crown concern'd themselves 'with the making Alliance with England.

'As I did from my Soul abhor the Entering into this War, so I never 'presum'd to give any Advice or Counsel for the Way of managing it, 'but by opposing any Proposition which seem'd to the late Lord Trea-'surer and my self, to be unreasonable, as the Payment of the Seamen 'with Tickets, and many other Particulars which added to the Expence, 'my Enemies took all Occasions to inveigh against me; and making their 'Friendship with others out of the Council, of more licentious Principles, 'and who knew well enough how much I dislik'd and complain'd of the 'Liberty they took to themselves of reviling all Counsels and Counsellors, 'and turning all things serious and sacred into Ridicule; they took all 'Ways imaginable to render me ungrateful to all Sorts of Men (whom 'I shall be compell'd to name in my Defence) perswading those that mis-'carry'd in any of their Designs, That it was the Chancellor's Doing; 'whereof I never knew any thing. However they cou'd not withdraw 'the King's Favour from me, who was still pleas'd to use my Service, 'with others; nor was there ever any thing done but upon the joint Ad-'vice of at least the Major Part of those that were consulted with. And 'as his Majesty commanded my Service in the late Treaties, so I never 'gave the least Advice in private, nor wrote one Letter to any one 'Person in either of those Negotiations, but upon the Advice of the 'Council, or at least by the King himself, and some others. And if I 'prepared any Instructions or Memorials, it was by the King's Comm and, 'and the Request of the Secretaries, who desired my Assistance: Nor 'was it any Wish of mine own, That any Ambassador shou'd give me 'any Account of their Transactions, but to the Secretaries, with whom

'I was always ready to adviſe: Nor am I conſcious to my ſelf of ever 1667.
'having given Advice that hath proved miſchievous or inconvenient to 'his Majeſty: And I have been ſo far from being the ſole Manager of Car. 19
'Affairs, that I have not, in the whole laſt Year, been twice with his Reſ. 8.
'Majeſty in any Room alone, and very ſeldom in the two or three Years
'preceding. And ſince the Parliament at Oxford, it hath been very vi-
'ſible that my Credit hath been very little; and that very few things have 'been hearken'd unto, which have been propos'd by me, but contra'dicted, eo Nomine, becauſe propos'd by me.

'I moſt humbly beſeech your Lordſhips to remember the Office and Truſt 4.
'I had for ſeven Years; in which, in Diſcharge of my Duty, I was ob-
'lig'd to ſtop and obſtruct many Mens Pretences, and to refuſe to ſet the
'Seal to many Mens Pardons, and other Grants, which wou'd have been
'profitable to thoſe who procured them; and many whereof, upon my Re-
'preſentation to his Majeſty, were for ever ſtop'd; which naturally have
'rais'd many Enemies to me. And my frequent concurring with the late
'Lord Treaſurer, with whom I had the Honour to have a long and a
'faſt Friendſhip to his Death, in repreſenting ſeveral Exceſſes and Ex-
'orbitancies (the yearly Iſſue ſo far exceeding the Revenue) provok'd
'many Perſons concern'd, of great Power and Credit, to do me all the 'ill Offices they cou'd. And yet I may faithfully ſay, That I never med-
'dled with any Part of the Revenue, or the Adminiſtration of it, but 'when I was deſired by the late Lord Treaſurer to give him my Aſ-
'ſiſtance and Advice (having had the Honour to ſerve the Crown as 'Chancellor of the Exchequer) which was for the moſt part in his Maje-
'ſty's Preſence. Nor have I ever been in the leaſt Degree concern'd in 'Point of Profit in the letting any Part of his Majeſty's Revenue, nor 'have ever treated or debated it, but in his Majeſty's Preſence; in which,
'my Opinion concurr'd always with the major Part of the Counſellors
'who were preſent. All which, upon Examination, will be made mani-
'feſt to your Lordſhips, how much ſoever my Integrity is blaſted by the 'Malice of thoſe, who, I am confident, do not believe Themſelves. Nor 'have I in my Life, upon all the Treaties, or otherwiſe, receiv'd to
'the Value of one Shilling from all the Kings and Princes in the World
'(excepting the Books of the Louvre Print, ſent me by the Chancellor 'of France by that King's Direction) but from my own Maſter; to
'whoſe entire Service, and to the Good and Welfare of my Country,
'no Man's Heart was ever more devoted. This being my preſent Con'dition, I moſt humbly beſeech your Lordſhips to retain a favourable O'pinion of me, and to believe me to be innocent from thoſe foul Aſper-
'ſions, until the contrary ſhall be proved; which I am ſure can never be,
'by any Man worthy to be believ'd. And ſince the Diſtemper of the 'Times, and the Difference between the two Houſes in the preſent De'bate, with the Power and Malice of my Enemies, who give out, That 'I ſhall prevail with his Majeſty to Prorogue or Diſſolve this Parlia- 'ment in Diſpleaſure, and threaten to expoſe me to the Rage and Fury of 'the People, may make me be look'd upon as the Cauſe which obſtructs
'the King's Service, and the Unity and Peace of the Kingdom; I moſt
'humbly beſeech your Lordſhips, that I may not forfeit your Lordſhips 'Favour and Protection, by withdrawing my ſelf from ſo powerful a
'Perſecution; in hopes I may be able, by ſuch Withdrawing, hereafter
'to appear, and make my Defence; when his Majeſty's Juſtice, to which 'I ſhall always ſubmit, may not be obſtructed nor controuled by the 'Power and Malice of thoſe who have ſworn my Deſtruction.'

Thus was this great Man, who had ſo often triumph'd in his Eloquence almoſt from the Throne, reduc'd to employ his Parts to plead, in 1667. Car. 19 Ref. 8. effect, at the Bar of the ſame Houſe; and had the farther Misfortune to have his noble Apology turn'd againſt himſelf, and made a particular Aggravation of the Crimes laid to his Charge. The Lords, upon receiving this Addreſs, on the 3d of December ſent a Meſſage to the Commons by two Judges, 'That they had receiv'd a large Petition from the 'Earl of Clarendon, which intimated that he was withdrawn;' and ſoon after deſir'd a preſent Conference with them. At which Conference the Duke of Buckingham, who was plainly aim'd at in the Petition, deliver'd it to the Commons, and with his uſual way of Inſult and Ridicule ſaid, The Lords have commanded me to deliver to you this ſcandalous and ſeditious Paper ſent from the Earl of Clarendon: They bid me to preſent it to you, and deſire you in convenient Time to ſend it to them again; for it has a Stile which they are in love with, and therefore deſire to keep it.

The Earl leaves England, As to the Earl's Retreat and Departure, the Publick gave this following Advertiſement of it: 'Whitehall, December the 4th. Yeſterday Morn-'ing became publick the firſt Notice of the Earl of Clarendon's having 'withdrawn himſelf, but the Time when he retired is not certain. This 'Afternoon his Majeſty was pleas'd to declare his Pleaſure in Council, 'that the ſaid Earl be put out of the Council, and remain henceforth di-'veſted of the Place of a Counſellor.' The laſt Perſon of Note who took Leave of this unfortunate Gentleman in England, was his intimate Acquaintance Sir Stephen Fox, who had always been true and faithful to him: Being arriv'd at the melancholy Place, and embracing each other with all the Tenderneſs and the Meltings of parting Friends, the Earl ſpoke to this Effect; Dear Sir Stephen, give my humble Service, and my hearty Thanks to all my Friends you meet with; and let them know from me, That if they can but forgive the Folly of the great Houſe, they ſhall never have Reaſon to be aſham'd, or repent of whatever they have done for me.

And goes into France. So, taking his laſt Leave, he went over into France, where he continu'd an Exile to the Time of his Death, which happen'd juſt ſeven Years after.

2. When the Earl's Addreſs and Apology was read by the Commons, it occaſion'd a new Turn, and a new Warmth in the Debates of that Houſe. Lawyer Vaughan began with great Fury, and among other things

Warm Speeches among the Commons. ſaid, It is the firſt Time that ever I heard an innocent Man run away under the greateſt Charge, with Hopes to return again and vindicate himſelf. Mark one Expreſſion; he ſays, He is as far from Corruption, as he is from Diſloyalty: If he ſaid, he was guilty of Neither, he had ſaid ſomething, but by that Expreſſion he may be guilty of Both. So inſolent a Paper I never met with in this Kingdom, nor have I ever heard the like in any other: So inconſiderable a Part of the Nation as he is, to lay it upon the Nation, who, if innocent, might defend himſelf; if guilty, why does he charge the Nation with Perſecuting? Therefore, without troubling our ſelves with it, do as the Lords have done, who deliver'd it to us as a ſcandalous and ſeditious Paper; it has Malice in it, and is the greateſt Reproach upon the King and the whole Nation, that ever was given by Man. Therefore in Concluſion he put the Queſtion, Whether the Paper ſhou'd be voted Scandalous and Malicious, and a Reproach to the Juſtice of the Nation? Which was carry'd in the Affirmative. Sir Robert Howard mov'd that it ſhou'd be burnt by the Common Hangman; but that was oppos'd, becauſe the Lords deſir'd the Paper to be return'd; yet ſtill at laſt that was carry'd alſo in the Affirmative. In this Heat ſeveral other things were propos'd, but for a while kept in Suſpence; only they appeared reſolute in the Juſtification of their own Proceedings.

On

On the 13th of December they met with another Turn, which was a Bill ſent down from the Lords For the Baniſhment of the Earl of Clarendon. Upon the Reading of which, ſeveral Objections were made; and it being alledg'd That it was an Abuſe put upon the Commons by the Lords, and that a Bill of Attainder being propoſed, after ſome Debate the Houſe paſs'd this Vote; ‘ Reſolved, That this Houſe taking ‘ Notice of the Flight of the Earl of Clarendon, being under an Impeach- ‘ ment of High Treaſon by this Houſe, the King's Majeſty be humbly ‘ deſired to iſſue out his Proclamation for ſummoning the ſaid Earl to ‘ appear by a Day, and to apprehend him in order to his Tryal: And ‘ that the Lords be ſent to for their Concurrence in this Vote.’ But the Lords, who ſeem'd to have a more favourable Opinion of the Perſon accuſed, as well as a Concern for their own Rights, wou'd not concur; and on the following Day deliver'd their Reaſons, and particularly declared, ‘ That their Lordſhips, upon Conſideration of the whole ‘ State of Affairs, and of the Kingdom, have, upon Grounds of Pru- ‘ dence and Juſtice, thought fit, for Security of King and Kingdom, to ‘ proceed in a Legiſlative Way againſt the ſaid Earl; and have to that ‘ End paſs'd and ſent down a Bill of Baniſhment and Incapacity againſt ‘ him; with which their Vote was inconſiſtent.’ This brought on a Debate concerning the Bill of Baniſhment, which ſome thought too little for the Crimes alledg'd, and others too great for the Cauſe in Hand. Mr. Swinford ſpoke his Mind freely, and among other things ſaid, The Lords will neither ſecure nor ſummon him, but will condemn him unheard; and this they put you upon, which is againſt Honour and Juſtice, eſpecially to do it upon Reaſon of State. The Power of Parliaments is indeed Great; it hath no Bounds, but the Integrity and Juſtice of Parliaments. If Reaſon of State be a Motive of Parliament to baniſh one Man, ſo it may be for many. If you go in this Legiſlative Way, you bring upon your ſelves all the Diſhonour of the Buſineſs; but the Lords will have ſome Excuſe, which you cannot; for they look'd upon the Charge ſo ſlight, as not to impriſon him. The Party is gone, apprehending, he ſays, the Fear of the Multitude, not of his Tryal; ſo the Lords not giving Credit to your Charge againſt him, he ſays, He flies not from Juſtice. Now if upon this Bill you ſhou'd baniſh him, it wou'd be ſaid, You cou'd not make good your Charge, and therefore laid this Sentence upon him. The Precedent is alſo dangerous, if having gone ſo far in a Judicial Way, you ſhou'd now go in a Legiſlative. If, upon Reaſon of State, Lords might be baniſh'd, it may be by Dozens: As you proceed juſtly, ſo you will be juſtify'd. After ſeveral Speeches, on the 18th of December the Bill was read the Third time in a thin Houſe, and the Queſtion being put for paſſing it, ſixty five were for it, and forty two againſt it. It eaſily obtain'd the King's Aſſent, either becauſe he had entertain'd inſuperable Prejudices againſt the Earl, or, as in the Caſe of proſecuting the Papiſts, becauſe he cou'd deny nothing required by his two Houſes of Parliament: Yet this ſhort Method was thought the moſt politick Courſe to prevent a legal Anſwer, and to ſtop the Diſcovery of ſome Secrets that muſt have been otherwiſe expos'd.

Debates upon it.

The Bill paſs'd.

Such was the Fate and Fortune of this great and wiſe Stateſman, who by his ſignal Abilities and indefatigable Induſtry had rais'd himſelf from the Station of a common Gentleman to the greateſt Heights in the Kingdom, ſo as to be plac'd above the Level of Subjects, becoming accidentally the Grandfather of two glorious Queens: And now, in the 60th Year of his Age, burthen'd with Infirmities, he was ſent to paſs the reſt of his Life in perpetual Baniſhment, after he had ſpent the Vigour of it, and weather'd innumerable Storms, in the moſt difficult Services of two great great Kings. As has been before hinted, it muſt be acknowledg'd, That in his Station he carry'd himſelf with ſomewhat a greater Reſerve and Haughtineſs than became him, or was uſeful to him, which alone muſt neceſſarily create him Enemies; for tho' his other Virtues were above the reſt of his Kind, yet ſtill nothing is ſo diſagreeable to Human Nature as Neglect or Contempt. And of this a very prudent Check was once given to this great Man, according to the following Story we find in the anonymous Writer of his Life. Some Time after the Reſtoration, the Lord Chancellor Clarendon, then in the Heighth of his Grandeur, going down to his Seat of Cornbury in Oxfordſhire, all the Gentry round the Country flock'd thither to pay their Reſpects to his Lordſhip: Amongſt the reſt appear'd old William Lenthal, the Speaker of the Long Parliament, who coming pretty late into the Hall, and obſerving the Company ſcornfully ſmiling at him all along as he paſs'd up to the Chancellor; after he had made his Compliment, with a handſom Addreſs he took Notice to his Lordſhip, That he had obſerv'd the Gentlemen to ſmile and jeſt to ſee him come to attend his Lordſhip; then looking round, he added, My Lord, pray obſerve, theſe very Gentlemen here preſent, that now come to pay their Reſpects to your Lordſhip, have formerly done the very ſame to me. A juſt Reprimand to the Gentlemen, and a wiſe Caution to the Chancellor to be on his Guard, leſt it might come to his Turn to be as much deſpis'd, as he was then courted by them; which indeed his haſty Fate afterwards brought upon him.

Acts paſs'd, and the Parliament adjourn'd for ſeven Weeks.

On the 19th of December, the Day after the Commons had paſs'd the Bill againſt the Earl, the King by Commiſſion paſs'd that, and four other Bills, viz. 1. An Act for taking the Accounts of the ſeveral Sums of Money herein mention'd. 2. An Act for aſſigning Orders in the Exchequer without Revocation. 3. An Act to make Prize-Ships free for Trade. And, 4. An Act for ſettling Freedom and Intercourſe of Trade between England and Scotland. Immediately after, Mr. Secretary Morrice deliver'd this Meſſage from the King to the Houſe of Commons; 'His Ma'jeſty having by a former Meſſage acquainted you, That he intended an 'Adjournment to the Beginning of February; he doth now conceive, 'That Thurſday the 6th of February is a convenient Day to which ſuch 'an Adjournment may be made: And his Majeſty is willing to adjourn 'to that Time.' Accordingly the Parliament broke up, after it had ſate a little above two Months, and without any Prorogation, had now a Receſs of above ſeven Weeks.

Proclamation againſt Papiſts.

3. For a Concluſion of this Year, we ſhall take Notice of ſome few Matters of inferior Note, beſides the Deaths of ſome eminent Men. A little before the Meeting of the Parliament, his Majeſty having Notice of the vaſt Concourſe of many Perſons of the Romiſh Religion to the Chappels at St. James's and Somerſet-houſe, he gave Order in Council, and by Proclamation, 'That if any of his Subjects, not being of the Fa'milies of the Queen, or Queen-Mother, or of foreign Ambaſſa'dors, ſhou'd repair to hear Maſs, or perform any Exerciſes of the Ro'miſh Religion, that they ſhou'd be ſeverely proſecuted, and have ſuch 'Puniſhments inflicted upon them as were provided by Law.' This was a very popular Act at this Time; and indeed the King took Delight in theſe and other leſſer Ways of ingratiating himſelf to the People, eſpecially where he met with little Trouble or Expence. Accordingly, on the 23d of October, he rode into the City with great Splendor, and laid the firſt Stone of the Foundation of the Royal Exchange in London; and was after that entertain'd on the Place by the Lord-Mayor and Aldermen, and there conferr'd the Honour of Knighthood upon the

the two Sheriffs, Mr. Dennis Gauden and Mr. Thomas Davis. About ſeven Days after, the Duke of York, attended with ſeveral Noblemen, went into the City; and being honourably receiv'd by the Lord-Mayor and Aldermen, and treated in a Tent on Purpoſe, with the uſual Ceremonies, laid the firſt Stone for a ſecond Pillar; which gave ſo great Encouragement to the Workmen, that ſo large a Structure was never carry'd on with greater Expedition.

The Deaths of the Earl of Southampton,

As to the Deaths of eminent Men, we ſhall begin with Thomas Wriotheſley Earl of Southampton, before mention'd in this Year, the laſt, and not the leaſt worthy of the famous Quadrumvirate, that had offer'd their Lives to ſave that of their Royal Maſter, the other three being the Duke of Richmond, the Marqueſs of Hertford, afterwards Duke of Somerſet, and the Earl of Lindſey. His Character has been already given; therefore we ſhall only ſay that no Family cou'd produce a truer Patriot and Engliſhman, nor ſhew more Honour and Integrity, Judgment and Penetration, Humility and Charity, than what were to be found in this great Man; yet he cou'd not eſcape without ſuffering ſixty thouſand Pounds Loſs in the late Times of Diſtraction. After him we ſhall mention two great Prelates, Dr. Matthew Wren, Biſhop of Ely, and Dr. Jeremy Taylor, Biſhop of Down and Connor in Ireland. The Former was educated in the Univerſity of Cambridge, where he was Maſter of Pembroke-Hall; from whence he was remov'd through ſeveral Preferments, as the Deanery of Windſor, the Biſhopricks of Hereford and Norwich, to the See of Ely; in all which he ſhew'd himſelf a Perſon of great Learning, ſingular Gravity, and exemplary Piety, and of no little Severity, eſpecially againſt the Puritan Party, towards whom he us'd ſo high a Hand, that many of them, in his Dioceſe of Norwich, left the Nation, and ſettled in foreign Parts. For which, when the Times turn'd, he was grievouſly perſecuted and oppreſs'd by the Plunder of his Goods, Seizure of his Eſtate, and by a cloſe Impriſonment in the Tower of London, which he endur'd with great Magnanimity near eighteen Years: From whence he was reſtored to his Biſhoprick of Ely, in which, notwithſtanding his former Loſſes, he perform'd ſeveral Acts of Charity and Munificence, and particularly became a noble Benefactor to his own College of Pembroke-Hall, where he built and endow'd a very beautiful Chappel, which this Year was made his Burying-place, being eighty one Years of Age. The other Prelate, Biſhop Taylor, was born in Cambridge, and educated in Gonvil and Caius Colledge, from whence, by Archbiſhop Laud's Means, he remov'd to All-Souls in Oxford, where he ſoon diſplay'd his wonderful Parts and Abilities. Being in the Way to great Preferment, and the Civil Wars breaking out, he attended the King's Army in the Condition of a Chaplain, and after that was compell'd to a mean Retreat in Wales; in which Solitude he compos'd many excellent Treatiſes, highly valu'd for the Exactneſs of Wit, Profoundneſs of Judgment, Richneſs of Fancy, Copiouſneſs of Invention, and general Uſefulneſs to all the Purpoſes of a Chriſtian. From thence he remov'd firſt to London, and then into Ireland, where, upon the Reſtoration, he was made Biſhop of Down and Connor, and had the Adminiſtration of the See of Dromore granted to him by the King. Here he further diſplay'd his mighty Talents, and ſhew'd with an unbounded Imagination all the Eloquence of Orators, all the Flights of Poetry, together with all the Strictneſs and Regularity of the deepeſt Caſuiſts.

Biſhop Wren,

Biſhop Taylor,

Beſides theſe Three, we are to mention ſome others, all of different Characters, Profeſſions and Employments: And firſt Mr. Abraham Cowley, the Ornament of the Engliſh Nation, as well by the Candor of his Life as the Excellency of his Writings, a Perſon born in London and educated

Mr. Cowley,

1667. Car. 19 Ref. 8. cated in Trinity Colledge in Cambridge, and afterwards in Foreign Countreys under the Earl of St. Albans. His incomparable Parts, and admirable Faculties in Poetry caus'd him to be call'd the Pindar, the Maro, and the Flaccus of the Age: He had a moſt towering Genius, a moſt pregnant Invention, and a moſt luxuriant Fancy, and all accompany'd with ſuch ſingular Modeſty and Sweetneſs of Temper, that upon the News of his Death at Court, the King was pleas'd to ſay, That Mr. Cowley had not left a better Man behind him in England. He dy'd in the 49th Year of his Age; and tho' his Life was retired and ſomewhat obſcure, yet his Funeral was ſolemniz'd at Weſtminſter-Abby with great Pomp, at the Charge of his Patron the Duke of Buckingham, who placing him near Chaucer and Spenſer, erected a noble Monument to his Memory. The next was Dr. Stephen Skinner, a celebrated Phyſician, educated in Chriſt-Church in Oxford, from whence he travell'd into many Countries, viſited the Courts of divers Princes, frequented ſeveral Univerſities, and obtain'd the Society and Friendſhip of the moſt learned Men of them: At Heidelberg he was honour'd with the Degree of Doctor of Phyſick; being not only eminent in that Faculty, but well vers'd in moſt Parts of Learning, moſt skillful in the Oriental Languages, an excellent Grecian, and in ſhort a living Library. Returning into England, he ſettled at the City of Lincoln, where he ſucceſsfully follow'd his Employment, and dy'd in great Reputation with all the Gentry in thoſe Parts. The Third was Mr. George Hughs, one of the moſt noted Preſbyterian Miniſters of this Time, eſpecially in the Weſt of England, where he made a greater Figure, and had a greater Intereſt and Influence than moſt of his Brethren. He was many Years Miniſter of St. Andrews in Plymouth, where he ſhew'd himſelf a Perſon of great Induſtry, celebrated Learning, ſtrict Morality, and of a very obliging Diſpoſition, which, after his Ejectment by the Bartholomew Act, caus'd him to be much belov'd and eſteem'd by many of the Epiſcopal Clergy, with whom, in the Time of his Proſperity, he had cultivated a fair and generous Correſpondence. In the laſt Place we ought not to forget George Withers, the Poet, Prophet, &c. the Reverſe of Mr. Cowley; who under the Name of Verſe and Prediction undertook to revile all Governments and Governors, and publiſh'd to the World no leſs than a Hundred ſeveral Pieces, many of which were much read and admir'd by young Perſons, eſpecially thoſe puritanically educated; while others of more Senſe and Judgment look'd upon them as the Fancies of a conceited, and confident, if not Enthuſiaſtical Brain. His Verſe and Rimes were wild and rambling; and the Titles of his Books will give the Reader ſome Idea of the Man, of which two are here mention'd. Amygdala Britannica, Almonds for Parrots: A Diſh of Stone-Fruit, partly ſhell'd, and partly unſhell'd; which (if crack'd, pick'd, and digeſted) may be wholeſom againſt thoſe Epidemick Diſtempers of the Brain, now predominant, &c. printed 1647. The other was, The Dark Lanthorn, containing dim Diſcovery, in Riddles, Parables, and Semi-Riddles, intermix'd with Cautions, Remembrances, and Predictions, &c. printed 1650. Yet this Man was a dangerous Incendiary, and able to do a great deal of Miſchief.

Dr. Skinner,

Mr. Hughs,

And George Withers.

1667/8. III. 1. Some Time before the Removal and Diſgrace of the Earl of Clarendon, the Meaſures of the Engliſh Court gradually became more variable and uncertain, Popery as well as Pleaſures became more open and uncontroul'd, and more deſperate and Quack Remedies were us'd in the State than before; and after his Removal, Parties were ſecretly excited and let looſe againſt each other, to the Advancing of the private Projects of the Court, but to the general Sickening of the Community. Only we muſt except except the Beginnings of the new Miniſtry, which did ſome Things much to the Honour and Advantage of the Engliſh Nation. For now England, as well as Holland and the Empire, became ſenſible of the Diſproportion between the two Monarchies of France and Spain, of the Flowings of the One, and the Ebbings of the Other. The ſwift Progreſs of the French King was ſufficient to allarm all his Neighbours, tho' he pretended to Nothing but a peaceable Poſſeſſion of the Rights of his Queen: Upon which Account the Baron d'Iſola, formerly mention'd, wrote a very notable Treatiſe call'd The Buckler of State and Juſtice, in which he manifeſtly refuted the French Pretenſions, and prov'd the Validity of the Renunciations at the Pyrenean Treaty by ſuch ſtrong Arguments, that the Book being tranſlated into Engliſh, it made an extraordinary Impreſſion upon the Court and Country. The Lord Keeper Bridgeman, and the Earl of Arlington himſelf, was forward in guarding againſt the new Danger; and the King was ſo ſatisfy'd in the Matter, that on the firſt of January, he came to a full Reſolution to enter into a ſtrict League with Holland, and to endeavour to extend it to a Triple Alliance, by Engaging Sweden in the ſame Meaſures, for the mutual Defence of the three Allies, the Preſervation of Flanders, and the Repoſe and Safety of Chriſtendom.

The Engliſh Court apprehenſive of the growing Power of France.

For the Management of this great Work, Sir William Temple was appointed to repair with all Expedition into Holland, with the Character of Envoy Extraordinary, and Plenipotentiary. The Steps and Progreſs of this whole Treaty are ſo curious, and the Management ſo dextrous, that we ought to omit no Part of the Account of them, which we have from Sir William's own Writings, who beſt knew the Proceedings. The Particulars are the more to be obſerv'd, becauſe the French King had ſome Intimations or Suſpicion of ſome ſuch Treaty as was now ſet on foot, and yet was not ſo apprehenſive of the Effects of it, as to exert his utmoſt to prevent it; but ſeem'd rather to ſlight it, as we find in a Letter from his Secretary de Lionne to the Ambaſſador d'Eſtrades at the Hague, in November laſt, in which he ſays, 'The States muſt certainly 'think, that being engag'd by the Treaty of 1662, to be Guarantee of 'the King's Rights, and not only neglecting that, but Confederating to 'hinder his Majeſty from obliging his Enemies to do him Juſtice; that 'his Majeſty, after ſo direct a Contravention on their Part, has no great 'Reaſon to depend much on the Contents of that Treaty, from which 'yet the United Provinces have hitherto drawn many Advantages, and 'his Majeſty as many Prejudices by a War undertaken ſolely for their 'Intereſts, and againſt all thoſe of his Crown.—If, after the King has put 'into the Hands of the States the Certainty of Peace, provided they 'wou'd exert themſelves as they ought to the Spaniards, the ſaid States, 'inſtead of that, take up the Cards, and make Alliances contrary to the 'Intereſt of his Majeſty; we ſhall not be ſo much diſturb'd at it here as 'they think. I know what I ſay, and on what Foundation I ſay it: Thoſe 'who wou'd do us a Miſchief, wou'd do more to Themſelves, and 'perhaps better advance the Intereſt of his Majeſty; therefore live merrily, whatever you ſee happen.

To check which Sir William Temple is ſent into Holland.

The French King not fearful of the Deſign.

About a Month after D'Eſtrades, who had been very buſy in endeavouring to bring the States to joyn and force the Spaniards to a Compliance, wrot thus to Secretary de Lionne: 'We are now at the Criſis of 'Affairs; and what the Spaniſh Ambaſſador has ſaid and written againſt 'Monſieur de Wit, will not a little help me to puſh on my ſide the tak-'ing of a good Reſolution. Since this Extravagance of that Ambaſſa-'dor, I ſee many which were cool for Monſieur de Wit, grow warm, 'and take his part. I cannot yet ſend you any Thing poſitive, but hope 'that He will bring his Masters to a good Resolution. We must deal 'by Degrees with this People, and not think of bringing them all at once 'to a Rupture with Spain, but engage and bind them in a Treaty, so that 'at last they cannot help it.' Thus was this Minister very sanguine, and full of Hopes of a Compliance from the States, in the Month of December.

Sir William Temple first conferrs with the Pensionary de Wit.

2. But in the Beginning of January the Scale was soon turn'd by the Arrival and Management of Sir William Temple, who immediately and closely apply'd himself to Monsieur de Wit: At the first Conference with the Pensionary, he began with telling him; 'That he cou'd not but re-'member, that when he pass'd that Way the last Month into England, 'he told him, upon what Points the King his Master desir'd with all Se-'crecy to know his Opinion, and by that to guess at what might be the 'States, upon the present Conjuncture of Affairs in Flanders; that his 'Majesty might accordingly take his own Measures. That the King 'guess'd by the general Carriage and Discourses of the Dutch Ambassa-'dors at London, the States were not willing to see Flanders over-run 'by France, but cou'd not find they had any Thing positive to say to 'him upon that Subject: That his Master had therefore sent him pri-'vately and plainly to tell him his Mind, as to a Man of Honour, and 'who he believ'd wou'd make no ill use of it; and, if he thought fit, to know 'his Sentiments upon that Affair. That for his Majesty, he neither 'thought it fit for his own Interest nor Safety, nor for that of the States, 'or of Christendom in General, that Flanders shou'd be lost; and there-'fore was resolv'd to do his utmost to preserve it, provided the States 'were of the same Mind, and that it might be done in Conjunction be-'tween them; and to that End, desir'd to know whether the States 'wou'd enter into an Alliance with him, both Defensive between Them-'selves, and Offensive against France, for the Preservation of Flanders. 'That Monsieur de Wit might remember his Answer was, First, much 'Applause of his Majesty's Resolution; great Acknowledgment of his 'Confidence towards him by that Communication, and an Assurance that 'the States wou'd be of the same Mind, as to the Preservation of Flan-'ders; which was their neares Interest next their own: That he found 'both his Majesty and the States had the same Mind as well as Interest 'in this Matter, but that the Distrust remaining upon the late Quarrel 'between them, had kept either of them from beginning to enter frankly 'upon it. But since his Majesty had been pleas'd to break it to him, in 'a Manner so obliging, tho' he cou'd not pretend to tell Sir William his 'Masters Mind, yet he wou'd his own; which was, That the Defence of 'Flanders was absolutely Necessary; but that it ought to be try'd first 'rather by a joynt Mediation of a Peace between the two Crowns of 'France and Spain, than by a Declaration of War; but that if the First 'wou'd not serve, it ought to come to the Other. That Sir William 'knew, France had already offer'd a Peace to the Overtures made by the States 'upon the Alternative, at the Choice of the Spaniards: That he thought the 'Mediation of England and Holland ought to be offer'd to both Crowns 'upon that Foot, to induce France to make good their own Offer, and 'Spain to accept it: and that to this Purpose, he thought it very Neces-'sary to make a strict Alliance between his Britannick Majesty and the 'States. That for making an Offensive Alliance, it cou'd not be; for it 'was a Maxim observ'd by that State, never to make any, at least 'when they were in Peace: That for Defensive Leagues, they had them 'with many Princes, and he believ'd they wou'd be ready to enter into 'one with his Majesty; at least, he wou'd use all his Endeavours to bring 'the States to such Opinions and Resolutions.

1667/8. Car. 20 Reſ. 8.

When Sir William Temple had repeated all this, and obſerv'd by the Penſionary's Face and Action, that he aſſented to this Recital, he ask'd him, Whether this was all right, that he might know whether he had miſtaken Nothing in repreſenting his Majeſty's Meaning to him, nor his to his Majeſty: He fairly anſwer'd him, That it was all right, and that he very well remember'd it, and much commended a Method of Proceeding ſo exact and ſincere. Hereupon Sir William purſu'd his Diſcourſe, and let him know, 'That upon his faithful Repreſenting theſe Things 'to the King his Maſter, his Majeſty had taken ſo much Confidence in 'the Penſionary's Opinion and Judgment, as well as in his Credit with 'the States, that he had taken a firm and ſudden Reſolution upon it; 'Firſt, to joyn with the States in the Offer of a Mediation between the 'two Crowns, and upon ſuch Terms as They and He ſhou'd agree; 'but with a Deſire that they might be as advantagious as the States cou'd 'be induc'd to, for the Preſervation of Flanders, and Recovery of ſuch 'Places as ſhou'd be moſt neceſſary to it: In the next Place, to conclude 'a Treaty, the ſtrongeſt that cou'd be, between England and Holland, 'for obliging France to accept the Peace upon thoſe Terms, and in the 'mean Time for putting a ſtop to the Courſe of their Arms in Flanders. 'But that his Majeſty thought it neceſſary to begin all this, with a ſtrict 'League between Him and the States, for their own mutual Defence, 'and to this purpoſe had ſent Him over as his Envoy to the States with 'full Powers, and the Draught of a Defenſive League between them; 'but referr'd the reſt, concerning Flanders, to what the States and He 'ſhou'd agree.

Monſieur de Wit, who had ſome Years before far engag'd himſelf in the Intereſt of France; but who, like a wiſe and dextrous Politician, made ſenſible of a falſe Step before committed, rather endeavour'd to retrieve it by Degrees, than by a quick Turn expoſe his former Conduct; receiv'd Sir William's Diſcourſe with a Countenance pleas'd, but yet ſomewhat ſurpris'd, as if he expected not a Return from his Majeſty ſo ſudden and reſolute. He ſaid, The States wou'd be very much pleas'd with the Honour his Majeſty did them, and the Overtures he made them; that Sir William ſhou'd chuſe his Time, whenever he deſir'd it, for his Audience; and he wou'd paſs the Forms of demanding it from the Preſident of the Weeks: That he was ſtill confident, the States wou'd enter with his Majeſty into the Mediation, tho' France gave them hopes of ſucceeding by their Own: That the Provinces differ'd in Opinion, upon what Terms the Peace ſhou'd be made: That Utrecht was ſo bold as to think, Nothing but Juſtice ought to be conſider'd in the Caſe: That all that France had conquer'd ſhou'd be reſtor'd to Spain, and their Pretenſions referr'd to Judgment or Arbitrage. But Holland and moſt of the other Provinces were of another Mind; and conſidering their own preſent Condition, as well as that of France, thought it beſt to keep the French to their own Offer; but he believ'd wou'd come to Means of more Force, if France ſhou'd recede from what they themſelves had advanc'd to the States. That for the Defenſive League between the King and the States, he did not know whether the late Sore were yet fit for ſuch an Application, but wou'd try the Minds of the States. That he doubted, they wou'd think it like to prove too ſudden a Change of all their Intereſts, and that which wou'd abſolutely break them off from ſo Old and Conſtant a Friend as France, to rely wholly upon ſo New and ſo Uncertain a Friend, as England had prov'd.

De Wit's Anſwer.

To all which Sir William Temple anſwer'd, 'That the Doing what 'he ſaid, wou'd be the Effect of any Treaties of this Nature between the 'two Nations, let them be as tenderly handled and compos'd as they cou'd:

Sir William's Reply, &c.

1667. Car. 20 Reſ. 8.

'cou'd: That France wou'd take it as ill of the Engliſh and Dutch, to 'be ſtopp'd in the remaining Conqueſt of Flanders, as to be forc'd out 'of all they had already gain'd: That he knew very well, it had been 'long their Deſign, at any Price, to poſſeſs themſelves of the Spaniſh 'Netherlands; and he knew as well, that it was their Intereſt to do ſo, 'conſidering the Advantage it wou'd give them over the reſt of Chri- 'ſtendom; that it was as much the Intereſt of England and Holland to 'hinder it, and that nothing cou'd do it but a firm Conjunction between 'them. That the States Part wou'd be next after Flanders was gone, 'and therefore they had now as much Need of being protected by Eng- 'land againſt France, as they thought they had three or four Years ago 'of being protected by France againſt England; and that they had no 'other Choice, but to continue their Friendſhip with France, till they 'ſhou'd ſee both Flanders and themſelves ſwallow'd up by ſuch a Neigh- 'bour; or elſe change their whole Meaſures, and enter into the ſtricteſt 'Alliance with his Britannick Majeſty, for the Preſervation of both; 'and let France take it as they pleas'd.' Monſieur De Wit confeſs'd the Deſigns of France for the Conqueſt of Flanders, acknowledg'd the Treaties they had made with the States in Cardinal Richlieu's Time, and lately offer'd again for Partitioning the Provinces between them; and further ſaid, 'He well underſtood the Danger of ſuch a Counſel and 'Neighbourhood, elſe he ſhou'd have fallen into them; But the 'Ventures were great on the other Side too: That the States were 'much more expos'd than the King; That the Spaniards were weak, 'and ill to be truſted by the States, between whom there never 'had yet been better Meaſures, than barely that of the Munſter Peace, 'after ſo great Rancors and long Hoſtilities. That tho' he believ'd the 'German Princes wou'd be glad of what his Majeſty propos'd, yet he 'knew not how far Sweden might be engag'd in the Meaſures with France; 'who lay there at their Backs in the Dutchy of Bremen. And laſt of 'all, tho' this Reſolution ſeem'd now to be taken by his Britannick Ma- 'jeſty and his Miniſters, on the ſureſt and wiſeſt Foundations, which 'were thoſe of true Intereſt and Safety; yet no Man knew how long it 'might laſt. That if they ſhould break all other Meaſures with France, 'and throw themſelves wholly upon his Majeſty by ſuch a Conjunction, 'any Change of Counſels in England wou'd be their certain Ruin: That 'he knew not this preſent Miniſtry, and cou'd ſay nothing to them; but 'that he knew the Laſt too well.' Upon which he began to expatiate upon the uncertain Conduct of England, ſince the King's Return, and concluded, that the Unſteadineſs of Counſels in England, ſeem'd a fatal Thing to its Conſtitution: That he wou'd not judge from what Grounds, But from the Time of Queen Elizabeth, there had been a perpetual Fluctuation in the Conduct of England, with whom it was not poſſible to take Meaſures for two Years together.

After this ended, with ſome Melancholy which look'd a little irreſolute, Sir William argued, 'That as to their own Intereſts, the Penſio- 'nary knew them, and cou'd weigh them better than himſelf: That after 'his Audience, and firſt Conference with Commiſſioners, he ſhou'd 'quickly ſee how the States wou'd underſtand them; in which he knew 'very well how great a Part the Penſionary wou'd have. That as for the 'Danger, he confeſs'd the Dutch wou'd be firſt expos'd to France, and 'England the laſt; which made it reaſonable, they ſhou'd make the 'firſt Pace to their Safety. That for Sweden, he had no Orders to ne- 'gotiate with them; but being fully inſtructed in his Majeſty's general 'Intentions, he ſhou'd be glad to ſee them ſtrengthen'd all he cou'd: 'And to that Purpoſe, if he thought fit, he wou'd talk to the Count de

'Dona,

'Dona, the Swediſh Ambaſſador at the Hague, and ſee whether he had any Powers to engage that Crown in any common Meaſures for the Safety of Chriſtendom; that if by ſuch a Conjunction they cou'd extend it to a Triple Alliance, upon the ſame Foundation, he believ'd he muſt think it too ſtrong a Bar for France to venture on. That for the Unſteddineſs of the Engliſh Counſels, he wou'd rather bewail than defend it; but that he ſhou'd not have made this Journey, if he had not been confident That had been ended, and Things now bottom'd paſt any Change or Remove. That he cou'd not pretend to know any Body's Mind certainly, but his own; but upon this Matter, he was as confident of his Majeſty's, the Lord Keeper's, and the Lord Arlington's, as he was of his own.' Upon this Occaſion he inlarg'd, not only upon the Intereſts, but Reſentments that engag'd the Engliſh King and his Miniſters in this Counſel; and concluded, 'He was confident it wou'd never break; if ever it did, it ſhou'd never be by his Hand; and was as confident, that he might anſwer, thoſe two Lords wou'd fall or ſtand upon this Bottom.' Monſieur de Wit ſeem'd very much ſatisfy'd with what Sir William had alledg'd; and aſſur'd him; 'For his Part, he wou'd give his Hands towards a good Concluſion of this Affair: That he wou'd truſt his Britannick Majeſty's Honour and Intereſt upon ſo great a Conjuncture, as well as the Sincerity and Conſtancy of his Miniſters; which he cou'd judge of by no other Lights, but what Sir William gave him.' Then he made him Compliments upon the great Confidence he had taken in him and his Manner of dealing, by what he had heard and ſeen of him, ſince the firſt Viſit Sir William had made him in his Paſſage through the Hague, after the End of the War: And concluded, that Sir William ſhou'd ſee Count Dona, and try how far Sweden was to be engag'd in this great Affair. 1667. Car. 20 Reſ. 8.

They come to ſome Iſſue.

3. Matters being thus prepared, that very Evening Sir William Temple went to Count Dona, and paſs'd over the Ceremonies of their reſpective Characters, by going directly into his Chamber, taking a Chair, and ſitting down by him, before he cou'd riſe off his; and freely told him, He hop'd he wou'd excuſe this Liberty, upon an Errand wherein he thought both their Maſters were concern'd; that Ceremonies were intended to facilitate Buſineſs, and not to hinder it: That he knew nothing to make his ſeeing the other Ambaſſadors at the Hague neceſſary, and ſo was content with the Difficulties had been introduc'd between their Characters: But thinking it abſolutely neceſſary for his Maſter's Service, to enter into Confidence with his Excellency, he had reſolv'd to do it in this Manner; and if he gave him leave, to purſue it as if their Acquaintance and Commerce had been of never ſo long a Date. The Count embrac'd him, gave him great Thanks for the Honour he did him, and the frank and confident Manner he us'd with him; and ſaid, he was ready to return it upon any Thing he ſhou'd think fit to communicate to him. Compliments being paſs'd, Sir William enter'd into the Detail of his whole Progreſs to that Time, both in England and at the Hague; 'Of his Maſter's Reaſons, of the common Intereſts of Chriſtendom, of the Reception his Overtures found from Monſieur de Wit, and the Hopes he had of ſucceeding: Of their Diſcourſes about engaging Sweden in the ſame Meaſures, and a Deſire of extending their League into a Triple-Alliance, for their mutual Defence, the Safety of Flanders, and thereby of Chriſtendom. That he knew how the Crown of Sweden had been treated of late Years by France; how cloſe they had kept to the Friendſhip with his Maſter, and how beneficial as well as honourable, ſuch a Part as this might prove to them, by the particular Uſe they might make of it

‘ to the Crown of Spain; and that upon any good Occaſion they might ‘ be ſure of his Maſter's Offices and the States, who reſolv'd to enter ‘ into this Affair without any other Intereſt, than that of the Preſervati- ‘ on of Flanders, and thereby of their own Safety, and the Common ‘ Good.

His good Reception.

The Count Dona profeſs'd to applaud his Britannick Majeſty's Counſel, to be confident that Sweden wou'd be content to go his Pace in all the common Affairs of Chriſtendom, which he was aſſur'd of by his own Inſtructions in general; but that ſuch an Affair as this being not foreſeen, he cou'd have none upon it. He added, ‘ That if it ſucceeded, he wou'd ‘ make all the Paces he cou'd to engage his Maſter in it, as what he ‘ thought of Honour and Advantage to the common Safety: But that ‘ he wou'd return Sir William's Frankneſs with the ſame to him, in tel- ‘ ling him, That he doubted his bringing it to an Iſſue. That he firſt ‘ doubted Monſieur de Wit's Reſolution, to break upon any Terms with ‘ France, and cloſe with England; not only conſidering what had late- ‘ ly paſs'd between them, but the Intereſts of the Houſe of Orange, ‘ which he muſt ever believe, wou'd, at one Time or another, be ad- ‘ vanc'd by England; whereas he was ſure to be ſupported againſt them ‘ by France: Therefore he believ'd, that tho' the Penſionary wou'd not ‘ oppoſe it, becauſe the States and People might run into it; yet he ‘ wou'd find ſome Means to elude the Concluſion and Effect of it, ‘ without appearing himſelf in any ſuch Deſign. That in the next Place, ‘ ſince ſuch a Treaty cou'd not be made by the States-General, without ‘ firſt being ſent to all the Provinces and Towns for their Approbation, ‘ and Orders upon it to their Deputies; he did not ſee how it was poſ- ‘ ſible for the French Ambaſſador to fail of engaging ſome Towns or Pro- ‘ vinces againſt it, and the Oppoſition of any one of them wou'd loſe the ‘ Effect; ſince no new Treaty cou'd be made by the Conſtitution of that ‘ Republick, without the Univerſal Conſent. That however, he wou'd ‘ not diſcourage him, but wiſh'd him Succeſs with all his Heart, upon ‘ many Reaſons; and among others, his being ſo much a Servant to the ‘ Houſe of Orange, which cou'd not but profit by a Conjunction between ‘ England and Holland.' And ſo again promis'd, whenever Sir William brought it to a Period, to uſe all his Endeavours, and ſtretch his Powers as far as he cou'd, towards engaging his Maſter in the ſame Meaſures.

Sir William's ſecond Conference with de Wit.

In the ſecond Conference that Sir William Temple had with the Penſionary de Wit, he acquainted him with what had paſs'd with Count Dona, with which he ſeem'd much pleas'd, and ſaid, Tho' we cou'd not expect he cou'd have Powers ſo general as to conclude ſuch an Affair; yet an Inſtrument might be drawn up between us, whereby Room may be left for Sweden to enter as Principal into our Alliance; and the Count de Dona has ſo much Credit at his Court, to recommend it there ſo as to ſucceed, eſpecially upon the Hopes we muſt give him of obtaining Subſidies from Spain, which may countervail what they may loſe from France upon this Occaſion. In the next Place they diſcours'd of the Treaty it ſelf: And de Wit was of Opinion, ‘ That the Condition of forcing Spain to ‘ accept the Alternative offer'd by the French King, was neceſſary to ‘ the common End, and to clear the Means towards it from all Acci- ‘ dents that might ariſe.' And as for the Defenſive League, he contin- nu'd in his former Thoughts, ‘ That it ſhou'd be negotiated between ‘ England and Holland; tho' upon the Project offer'd his Majeſty at ‘ Scheveling; by which all Matters of Commerce might be ſo adjuſted, as ‘ to leave no Seeds of any Quarrels between the two Nations.' After this Sir William fell upon the Form of concluding the main Treaty, freely declar-declaring, ‘ He cou'd eaſily foretel the Fate of it, if it muſt paſs the ‘ common Forms of being ſent by the ſeveral Deputies to all their Prin- ‘ cipals for their Reſult upon it: That he knew, this wou'd take up a ‘ Month or ſix Weeks Time; and that nothing wou'd be ſo eaſie as for ‘ the French Ambaſſador to meet with it in running that Circle, and by ‘ engaging ſome one Member, perhaps by Mony thrown among the ‘ chief Perſons in ſome of the ſmall Towns, to prevent and ruin a Coun- ‘ ſel of the greateſt Importance to Chriſtendom, as well as England and ‘ Holland, that had been on foot in many Ages. In ſum, he told him, That unleſs the States-General wou'd conclude and ſign the Treaty immediately, and truſt to the Approbation of their ſeveral Provinces and Towns after it was done, he ſhou'd give it for gone, and think no more of it. 1667/8. Car. 20 Reſ. 8.

This was a little ſurprizing to the Penſionary, who ſeem'd to believe it impoſſible; and alledg'd, ‘ That no ſuch Thing had ever been done ‘ ſince the firſt Inſtitution of their Common-Wealth; and that tho' it was ‘ true, the States-General might ſign a Treaty, yet they cou'd not ratify it without Recourſe to their Principals; and that they ſhou'd venture their Heads in ſigning it, if their Principals, not approving it, ‘ ſhou'd queſtion them for doing it without Orders: That he hop'd the ‘ Forms might be expedited in three Weeks Time, and that all Care ‘ that cou'd be, ſhou'd be taken to prevent the Addreſſes of the French ‘ Ambaſſador among the Provinces.' But here Sir William cut the Matter ſhort, and peremptorily told him, ‘ That he continu'd of his firſt ‘ Opinion, to ſee it immediately agreed between Himſelf and the Commiſſioners, and then ſign'd by the States, which might be done in four ‘ or five Days; and that the Deputies might ſafely truſt to the Approbation of their Principals in a Point of ſo great and evident publick ‘ Intereſt. That for his Part, he knew not how this Delay, and thereby ‘ Hazard of the Affair, might be interpreted in England, nor what ‘ Changes in his Orders it might produce.' In Concluſion he ſaid, I have now Powers to conclude an Alliance of the laſt Conſequence to the Safety of Flanders and this Republick; that if it ſhou'd miſcarry by the too great Caution of the Deputies in Point of Form, for ought I know, they may venture their Heads that way, and more deſervedly, than by ſigning at preſent, what all of them believ'd wou'd not only be ratify'd, but applauded by their Principals: And with this free Caution Sir William Temple left him.

4. The next Day, which was the 18th of January, Sir William Temple had his Audience, which paſs'd with all the Reſpect that cou'd be given to his Character; and the following Morning began his Conference with the eight Commiſſioners of ſecret Affairs. Having ſhewn his Powers, and ſeen theirs, he offer'd them the Project of the Defenſive League, ‘ as that which was to be the Foundation of all further Negotiation; and ‘ without which, perhaps, neither of the Parties ſhou'd be forward to ‘ ſpeak their Minds with Confidence and Freedom, in what concern'd ‘ their Neighbours, being likely therein to ſhock ſo great Powers a- ‘ broad: Adding, That his Maſter having reſolv'd, as far as he cou'd in Honour, to comply with the Senſe of the States in the Offices of Media- ‘ tion between France and Spain, he expected from them the Knowledge ‘ of the States Reſolution, in caſe they were already agreed.' Sir William took this Courſe in his firſt Propoſals, becauſe upon his firſt Arrival he found, That the Provinces were divided in their Opinions, five of them only having come into that of Monſieur de Wit; Zealand being for agreeing with France in dividing Flanders, and Utrecht for ſuffering France

France only to retain the laſt Year's Conqueſt, by way of Compromiſe, 'till their Pretenſions were adjudg'd before competent Arbiters, or joynt Mediators. Upon theſe Propoſals Monſieur de Wit, who ſpoke for all the Commiſſioners, after a Preamble of the uſual Forms and Compliments on the King's happy Diſpoſitions to enter into a nearer Alliance with the States, declar'd the ſame Reſolution to their High Mightineſſes; and allowing a mutual Confidence by a Defenſive League for the Baſis of the reſt, ſaid, The States were willing to have Clauſes for their common Safety inſerted in the Articles of the Mediation; and was large upon that Argument, 'That the laſt being of preſſing Haſte, as well as 'Neceſſity; and they having already Order from their Provinces to pro-'ceed upon it, they cou'd not have the ſame Powers upon the Defenſive, 'being a new Matter, under ſix Weeks or two Months Time; But as 'ſoon as they receiv'd them, wou'd ſend their Ambaſſadors in England 'Inſtructions to go upon that Treaty; which muſt, for a Baſis, have at 'the ſame Time an Adjuſtment of Matters of Commerce.' To cut this Matter ſhort, Sir William told the Commiſſioners directly, 'He had no 'Orders to proceed upon any other Points but in Conſequence or Con-'junction of the Defenſive League; in which he thought his Maſter had 'all the Reaſon that cou'd be, both becauſe he wou'd not venture a War's 'ending in Flanders to begin upon England; and on the other Side 'knew, the States, whoſe Danger was nearer, wou'd never be capable 'of taking any vigorous Reſolutions in their Neighbours Affairs, till they 'were ſecure at home by his Britannick Majeſty's Defence. That his 'Maſter thought the moſt generous and friendly Advance that cou'd be, 'was made on his Side by his Propoſition, being Himſelf ſo much more 'out of Danger than They were, and ſo much courted to a Conjuncti-'on with France to their Prejudice, as well as that of Flanders: That 'they had not made a Difficulty of ſuch Alliances with Princes who had 'lately Quarrels with them as well as England; and that, God be thank-'ed, his Maſter was not in a Condition to have ſuch an Offer refus'd by 'any Prince or State in Chriſtendom.

After ſome other Diſcourſes, and the Commiſſioners withdrawing three Times, it was reſolv'd that two of them, Monſieur de Wit and Monſieur Isbrant, ſhou'd ſpend that Afternoon with Sir William Temple, at his Excellency's Lodgings, to endeavour the adjuſting of Circumſtances, ſince they ſeem'd to agree in Subſtance: Which accordingly they did, and advanc'd to this Point, That inſtead of former Projects, the States wou'd proceed upon that of a Defenſive League, in Caſe the proviſional Articles in the Breda Treaty might be inſerted and perpetuated in this; and that thereupon they wou'd expect the King's Anſwer to what Sir William ſhou'd write that Night. The next Day in the Afternoon he had another Conference with the two Commiſſioners, who acquainted him with the States Reſolution, conformable to De Wit's Opinion, That it was neceſſary the Articles Proviſional ſhou'd be inſerted in the Treaty; ſo as Sir William began to doubt a Stop of every thing, till the King's Anſwer, which ſubjected all to Uncertainties: He knew that Count d'Eſtrades, the French Ambaſſador, was grown into very ill Humour upon his Arrival, and had fallen into Complaints and Expoſtulations with ſeveral of the States; and the more becauſe he cou'd not ſee de Wit from Sir William's coming over till that Time, tho' he had often endeavour'd it. He knew likewiſe that vigilant Miniſter had diſpatch'd an Expreſs to Paris upon this Occaſion; and therefore he reſolv'd to fall upon all poſſible Inſtances and Expedients to draw up a ſudden Concluſion. Hereupon he told the Commiſſioners, 'He deſir'd it extreamly before 'he cou'd hear again from England, becauſe he left Monſieur Rovigny, 'the

'the French Ambaſſador in London, very buſy at his coming away, and 'not unbefriended: That he fear'd the ſame Artifices of France to di- 'ſturb their Meaſures at the Hague, and perhaps Monſieur d'Eſtrades 'might at his next Meeting infuſe ſome Jealouſies into the States, by the 'Relation of what had paſs'd between the Earl of Arlington and Monſi- 'eur Rovigny, three or four Days before the Date of his Inſtructions:' Upon which he told them frankly (as the King had given him Leave) what had paſs'd, in relation to a Scheme propos'd by France to the King of England for dividing the Spaniſh Netherlands. Monſieur de Wit, ſtartled by this Diſcovery, ask'd Sir William, Whether he cou'd ſhew him the Paper drawn up between thoſe two Miniſters? And Sir William anſwering, He had it not, the other earneſtly deſired he wou'd procure it him, aſſuring him, No Uſe ſhou'd be made of it but by joynt Conſent; adding, Nothing cou'd ſerve ſo far to juſtify the States, in Caſe of a Breach growing neceſſary between Them and France.

1667 Car. 20 Reſ. 8.

Sir William Temple promis'd to write to the Earl of Arlington about it; and the better to engage the Penſionary, inform'd him, 'What Con- 'fidence he had given his Maſter of his ſincere Proceedings; and how 'he had been ſupported by the Earl of Arlington in thoſe Suggeſtions, 'againſt the Opinion of ſome other great Men: What Advantage theſe 'wou'd take, if they ſaw the whole Negotiation was ſtopp'd upon a thing 'that look'd like Chicanery; ſince Articles Proviſional till new Agree- 'ments, were as ſtrong as Perpetual, which might even be chang'd by 'new Agreements: That this wou'd be eſteemed an Artifice of Mon- 'ſieur de Wit, eſpecially ſince he had declared, That it was his Opinion 'not to conclude without inſerting thoſe Articles, which yet he cou'd 'not deny to be of preſent Force.' Monſieur Isbrant was ſatisfy'd with Sir William's Reaſons, and ſaid, He wou'd undertake his Province ſhou'd be ſo too: But the Penſionary alledg'd That Holland and Zealand wou'd not. Hereupon Sir William told them, 'He was ſure the States wou'd 'not think fit to loſe the Effect of the League propos'd upon ſuch a 'Point, as the ſeeing the King's Reſolution in Anſwer to his Letter, be- 'fore they concluded, that this ſhou'd not hinder at laſt: That he fore- 'ſaw that many things might happen in ten Days Time to break all their 'good Intentions, and ſome more than he had told them, or cou'd at 'preſent: That if they knew him, and how far he was to be truſted, 'where he gave his Word, he wou'd propoſe an Expedient to them; but 'it being new among them, he thought it was to no Purpoſe.' Here he pauſed; and they deſiring he wou'd however propoſe the Expedient: He did ſo; which was, 'That they ſhou'd proceed to draw up the whole 'Project, and ſign as ſoon as was poſſible; and that in Caſe he afterwards 'receiv'd his Maſter's Leave to inſert thoſe Proviſional Articles, he 'wou'd freely declare it, and inſert them in a ſeparate Article, to be a 'Part of the Defenſive League.' They both look'd a while upon each other, and after a Pauſe, Monſieur de Wit gave Sir William his Hand, and complimenting him in the Confidence he had taken in his Face, and the reſt of his Dealing ſince their firſt Meeting, he told him, 'That if 'he wou'd promiſe him, upon the Word of an honeſt Man, what he 'ſaid, they wou'd ask no further Aſſurance of him: And provided the 'Treaty of Breda might be confirm'd in the Preamble of this, for his 'Part, tho' he cou'd promiſe nothing what the States wou'd reſolve, 'yet he wou'd promiſe that Himſelf and Monſieur Isbrant wou'd uſe their 'utmoſt Endeavours to induce them to proceed upon his Propoſition.'

Sir William Temple knowing that new Treaties uſe to begin by Confirmation of the old, made no Difficulty about it; and ſo they proceeded immediately to digeſt the Project of the whole Treaty in three ſeveral

The Substance of the Treaties.

Inſtruments. The Firſt contain'd a League Defenſive and Perpetual, between the King of Great Britain and the States-General, 'againſt all 'Perſons, without Exception, that ſhou'd invade either of them; with 'Agreement to furniſh each other, upon Occaſion, with forty Ships of 'War, of which fourteen betwixt ſixty and eighty Guns, and four hun-'dred Men one with another; fourteen more between forty and ſixty 'Guns, and three hundred Men each; and of the other twelve, none 'under thirty ſix Guns, and a hundred and ſixty Men: Beſides theſe, 'ſix thouſand Foot and four hundred Horſe, or Mony inſtead of them, 'at the Choice of the Invaded; and to be repaid within three Years af-'ter the End of the War; the Proportions of Mony to the ſeveral Parts 'of the ſaid Aid, being aſcertain'd in the ſaid Treaty.' The ſecond In-ſtrument contain'd The joynt Obligations of England and the United Provinces, 'to diſpoſe France to make Peace in Flanders upon one of 'the Alternatives already propos'd; and likewiſe to diſpoſe Spain to ac-'cept it before the End of May next; but in Caſe of Difficulty made 'by them, to diſpoſe France however to ſtop all further Progreſs of its 'own Arms there, and leave it wholly to the Allies to procure the Ends 'propos'd in the League.' The third Inſtrument contain'd four ſeparate Articles, of the ſame Force with the Treaty, in Subſtance as follows. '1. If in the procuring the Peace between France and Spain, any Difficulty 'ſhou'd ariſe about the Renunciation, the Form ſhou'd be contriv'd in 'ſuch Words, that no Prejudice ſhou'd be created to either of them in 'Point of Right: But if either of the two Kings ſhou'd not conſent to 'this Expedient, the King of Great Britain and the States-General 'ſhould proceed againſt the Refuſer, in the Manner agreed in the ſecond 'Inſtrument. 2. That the King of Great Britain and the States-General 'ſhou'd uſe their utmoſt Endeavours to eſtabliſh Peace between the 'Kings of Spain and Portugal; and tho' the French King might be al-'low'd to aſſiſt the Latter in ſome Caſes; yet with this Proviſo, that 'he ſhou'd alſo oblige himſelf not to make War in the Low-Countries. '3. In Caſe the French King ſhou'd reject the Cautions and Proviſions ex-'preſs'd in the ſecond Inſtrument, and make a further Progreſs in Flan-'ders, then England and the United Provinces ſhou'd joyn with the 'King of Spain, and make War againſt France, till they compel him to 'comply with the Terms of the Pyrenean Treaty. 4. That theſe ſepa-'rate Articles ſhould be confirm'd and ratify'd, and the mutual Inſtruments 'of Ratification exchang'd on both Sides, within four Weeks.' Hav-ing ſat up all Saturday Night, till Sunday Morning, they agreed upon the Project in French, and gave Order for the tranſlating it into Latin; which was done and perus'd by Sir William Temple and the Commiſſio-ners, and agreed to between twelve and one that Night, and laſtly en-groſs'd and got ready for ſigning by eleven next Monday Morning.

The happy Concluſion of them.

5. The Whole being got to this ſurprizing Forwardneſs, on Monday in the Afternoon, January the 23d, all the Dutch Commiſſioners met, and, together with Sir William Temple, ſign'd, ſeal'd, and deliver'd the three Inſtruments. Upon this they all embrac'd with much Kindneſs, and Applauſe of Sir William's particular Saying upon this Occaſion, At Bre-da like Friends, here like Brothers! And Monſieur de Wit made him a moſt obliging Compliment, of having the Honour which never any other Miniſter had before him, of drawing the States to a Reſolution and Concluſion in five Days, upon a Matter of the greateſt Importance, and an Aſſiſtance of the greateſt Expence they had ever been engag'd in; and all directly againſt the Nature of their Conſtitutions, which enjoyn'd them Recourſe to their Provinces: Adding, That now it was done, it look'd like a MIRACLE. It is hard to imagine the Joy and Wonder con-

ceiv'd in Holland upon the Concluſion of this Treaty, brought to an Iſſue in five Days; nor the Applauſe given to his Britannick Majeſty's Reſolutions, as the wiſeſt and happieſt that cou'd in this Conjuncture be taken by a Prince, both for his own and his Neighbours Affairs. Nor were the Counſels and Conduct, either of the preſent Miniſtry in England, or of Sir William Temple, leſs commended; the Treaty being almoſt finiſh'd at the Hague, as ſoon as his Journey was known in London, and before his Errand was ſuſpected by any publick Miniſter in England. To this Purpoſe Sir William Temple wrote with no leſs Wit than Modeſty to Monſieur Gourville, a Miniſter of France, then reſiding at Lunenburgh; They will needs have me paſs here for one of great Abilities, for having finiſh'd and ſign'd in five Days a Treaty of ſuch Importance to Chriſtendom: But I will tell you the Secret of it: To draw things out of their Center, requires Labour and Addreſs to put them into Motion; but to make them return thither, Nature helps ſo far, that there needs no more than juſt to ſet them a going. Now I think a ſtrict Alliance is the true Center of our two Nations.— In ſhort, the two Nations are cloſer united, than if there never had been a War. Our common Deſign is to give Peace to all Chriſtendom: So that if France pleaſes, they may have it this Spring; if not (as Monſieur d'Eſtrades ſays, at leaſt not after our Faſhion) they may have their Fill of the War. 1667/8. Car. 20 Reſ. 8.

The French Ambaſſador d' Eſtrades, who fondly imagin'd that the States wou'd never have ventur'd upon ſuch a large Step, was now much ſurpriz'd at the Concluſion of the Treaty. For upon Sir William's firſt Conference with the Dutch Commiſſioners he ſaid, All wou'd fly into Smoak, and the King his Maſter wou'd laugh at it. And the Day before their Signing, being told they advanc'd very faſt, he unconcernedly reply'd, Very well, ſix Weeks hence we'll talk on't; relying upon the Forms of the States, to run the Circle of their Towns. But when de Wit and Sir William ſhew'd him the whole Treaty, except the ſeparate Articles, he ſaid coldly, That he doubted they had not taken a right Way to their End: That the fourth Article of the ſecond Inſtrument, was not in Terms very proper to be digeſted by a King of twenty nine Years old, and at the Head of eighty thouſand Men: That if England and Holland had joyn'd both, to deſire his Maſter to prolong the Offer he had made, of a Ceſſation of Arms till the Time they propos'd; and withal, not to move his Arms further in Flanders, tho' Spain ſhou'd refuſe, they might have hop'd to ſucceed: But if they thought to preſcribe him Laws, and force him to a Compliance, by Leagues between themſelves, or with Spain, tho' Sweden and the German Princes ſhou'd joyn with them, he knew his Maſter wou'd not yield, and that it wou'd come to a War of forty Years. From this he fell a little warmly upon the Proceedings of the States, ſaying, They knew his Maſter's Reſolutions upon thoſe two Points, neither to prolong the Ceſſation propos'd beyond the End of March, nor to deſiſt the Purſuit of his Conqueſts with his own Arms, in Caſe Spain conſented not to his Demands within that Term. He added, His Britannick Majeſty not being an Ally, might treat and conclude what he pleas'd, without their Offence; but for the States, who were their neareſt Ally, to conclude ſo much to his Maſter's Diſreſpect at leaſt, and without communicating with him the Ambaſſador at all during the whole Treaty, he muſt leave it to his Maſter to interpret as he thought fit. Monſieur de Wit defended their Cauſe, and the common Intentions of both with great Phlegm, but great Steddineſs; and told Sir William, after the other was gone, That this was the leaſt they cou'd expect at firſt from a Frenchman; and that he ſhou'd do well however to give his Maſter an Account of it by the firſt; that they ſhou'd put their ſelves early in Poſture to make good what they had had ſaid: And that as to the Time and Degree of their Arming, he wou'd conſult with the States, and let him know their Thoughts, to be communicated to his Maſter.

The next Day Sir William Temple and Monſieur de Wit made the like Communication of their Treaty to the Spaniſh Ambaſſador, who receiv'd it with ſome Deſcants upon the Hardſhip of it, but, in Sir William's Opinion, with Satisfaction at Heart. On the 26th Count Dona, the Swediſh Ambaſſador, with whom Sir William had gone along in the whole Buſineſs with perfect Confidence and Concert, ſign'd a ſeparate Inſtrument, jointly with Sir William and the States Commiſſioners, obliging his Maſter to enter as a Principal into the ſame Alliance: ſo that the ſaid League might acquire the Subſtance, as well as the Form of a Triple Agreement; to which all the reſpective Parties ſhou'd make it their Buſineſs to invite their Friends and Alleys, if any of them ſhou'd deſire, to be admitted. For the finiſhing of which Count Dona ſet out the next Day for England, in Company of Mr. Henry Temple, Brother to Sir William, with the whole Account of the Buſineſs, and the Treaties ſign'd in order to their Ratification. Their Arrival was very acceptable to the Engliſh Court and City; and within ten Days the Ratifications from England were receiv'd at the Hague, with the ſame Joy that the Treaty was concluded; and not long after, all was compleated by the King of Sweden, to the general Satisfaction of all who dreaded the Power of France. And thus happily was compleated that famous Alliance, generally call'd the TRIPLE LEAGUE; in Relating of which we have been the more particular, not only becauſe it has been accounted the ſafeſt and wiſeſt Step King Charles made in the whole Courſe of his Reign, both in reſpect to his Neighbours and his own Subjects; but alſo becauſe it diſcover'd the true Sentiments and Opinions of both Nations, in Relation to the then growing Power of France. As Sir William Temple had ſo great a Share in this Affair, ſo he ought to loſe no Part of the Honour; therefore we ſhall juſt mention what is ſaid of him in two Letters, the firſt from Monſieur de Wit to the Earl of Arlington, and the other from the States-General to the King of Great Britain. The former ſays, as it was impoſſible to ſend a Miniſter of greater Capacity, or more proper for the Temper and Genius of this Nation, than Sir William Temple; ſo I believe, no other Perſon, either will or can more equitably judge of the Diſpoſition wherein he has found the States, to anſwer the good Intentions of the King of Great Britain. In the States Letter, they tell the King, As it is a Thing without Example, that in ſo few Days, three ſuch important Treaties have been concluded, ſo we can ſay, That the Addreſs, the Vigilance, and the Sincerity of Sir William Temple, are alſo without Example.— If your Majeſty continues to make uſe of ſuch Miniſters, the Knot will grow too faſt, ever to be unty'd.

They produce the TRIPLE LEAGUE.

The Praiſes of Sir William Temple.

Other Leagues.

About the Time of the Ratification of this, Sir William Temple concluded another League with the States-General, of a more private Nature, relating only to Navigation and Commerce, and ſo remov'd to Bruſſels with his former Character of Reſident. And near the ſame Time, by the Mediation of the Earl of Sandwich, the King's Ambaſſador at Spain, and Sir Robert Southwell his Envoy in Portugal, a Peace was concluded between thoſe two Crowns, and the King of Great Britain declared the Mediator and Guarantee of it. So that all Things ſeem'd to be put into a Condition of reducing the encreaſing Power of the French King, and eſtabliſhing the Ballance of Europe.

The Continuation of the EIGHTH SESSION of Parliament.

V. 1. During theſe Foreign Tranſactions, the Parliament of England, having had a Receſs of near eight Weeks, met at Weſtminſter on the the 10th Day of February; which was the ninth Meeting, but more properly call'd the Continuation of the eighth Seſſion of the ſecond Parliament. On the Firſt Day of this Meeting, the King came to the Houſe of Lords, and having on his Crown and Robes, with the uſual Solemnity took his Seat, where the Houſe of Commons with their Speaker appearing, his Majeſty was pleas'd to expreſs himſelf to both Houſes in this following Speech: ‘ My Lords and Gentlemen, I am glad to ſee you here again, to ‘ tell you what I have done in this Interval, which I am confident you ‘ will be pleas'd with, ſince it is ſo much for the Honour and Security ‘ of this Nation. I have made a League Defenſive with the States-General of the United Provinces, and likewiſe a League for an efficacious ‘ Mediation of Peace between the two Crowns of France and Spain; ‘ into which League, that of Sweden by its Ambaſſador hath offer'd to ‘ enter as a Principal. 1667/8. Car. 20 Reſ. 8.

The King's Speech to both Houſes.

‘ I did not at our laſt Meeting move you for any Aid, tho' I lye under ‘ great Debts contracted in the laſt War; but now the Poſture of our ‘ Neighbours abroad, and the Conſequence of the new Alliance, will oblige me, for our Security, to ſet out a conſiderable Fleet to Sea this ‘ Summer. And becauſe I muſt build more great Ships, and it is as neceſſary that I do ſomething in order to the fortifying ſome of ‘ our Ports; I have begun ſomething my ſelf in order to theſe Ends; but ‘ if I have not your ſpeedy Aſſiſtance, I ſhall not be able to go through ‘ with it. Wherefore I do earneſtly deſire you to take it into your ſpeedy Conſideration; for the Loſs of a little Time now may beget a Prejudice not to be repaired. And for the ſettling a firm Peace, as well ‘ at home as abroad, one thing more I hold my ſelf oblig'd to recommend to you at this preſent; which is, That you wou'd ſeriouſly think ‘ of ſome Courſe to beget a better Union and Compoſure in the Minds ‘ of my Proteſtant Subjects in Matters of Religion; whereby they may ‘ be induced not only to ſubmit quietly to the Government, but alſo ‘ chearfully give their Aſſiſtance for the Support of it.

The Houſe of Commons were highly pleas'd with the new Alliances, and were now better diſpos'd for good-humour'd Proceedings; but ſtill being a little ruffled with the Thoughts of the late Miſmanagements, they thought fit to defer the Conſideration of his Majeſty's Speech for a few Days, till after the Report made by the Committee, appointed to enquire into the Miſcarriages of the late War. In order to which Enquiry, Prince Rupert and the Duke of Albemarle had both given into the Houſe their particular Narratives and Accounts of their ſeveral Expeditions, and more particularly of the Miſcarriages at Chatham, which have been already remember'd; after which the Duke of York himſelf deliver'd to them an Account of the Fort of Sheerneſs. From all which, and from other Examinations, the Commons diſcover'd and voted ſeveral Miſcarriages in the late War, and ‘ particularly in the Expedition at ‘ Berghen; in the plundering the Eaſt-India Ships while the Dutch ‘ paſs'd by; in the not ſetting out a ſufficient Fleet laſt Year; in the Separation of thoſe that were out, ſo that they became uſeleſs; in the ‘ Want of Proviſion and Ammunition in the Fleet, and in the Forts; in ‘ Payment of the Sea-Men by Tickets; in the Want of Intelligence, and ‘ dividing the Fleets in the ſecond Year of the War; in the Buſineſs of ‘ Chatham, &c.' And they particularly reſolved, ‘ That notwithſtanding ‘ his Majeſty had eighteen thouſand Men in Pay, in diſperſed Ships in ‘ the Year 1667, there was not a ſufficient Number of Ships left to ſecure ‘ the Rivers Medway and Thames. They ſtrictly examin'd into one Miſcarriage as to the firſt Battel againſt the Dutch, in which it appear'd, ‘ That if the Orders of the Duke of York had been ſtrictly obſerv'd, as

The Commons enquire into Miſcarriages.

'they ought, in that Engagement, the whole Fleet of the Enemy had probably been deſtroy'd.' For this, Mr. Brunkard, a Member of the 'Houſe, was accus'd of giving falſe Orders to Sir John Harman to ſlacken Sail, while the Duke was repoſing himſelf, and when they were purſuing the Enemy with the utmoſt Advantage; for which Mr. Brunkard was both expell'd the Houſe, and order'd to be impeach'd.

They impeach Commiſſioner Pett,

The Miſcarriage at Chatham was ſo conſpicuous, that they thought they cou'd do no leſs than Impeach Commiſſioner Pett for ſo great a Delinquency in that Affair: Accordingly they drew up Articles againſt him to this Effect: 'I. That the ſaid Peter Pett, being a Commiſſioner 'eſpecially authoriz'd and entruſted with the Care of his Majeſty's Yards, 'Stores and Proviſions of the Royal Navy at Chatham; and having re-'ceiv'd Orders from the Duke of York about the 26th of March laſt, 'requiring him to bring up and mere his Majeſty's Ship, the Royal Charles, 'and other Ships, did wilfully neglect and refuſe ſo to do; whereby the 'ſaid Ships were loſt, and became a Prey to the Enemy. II. That his 'Majeſty having upon the 11th of June laſt appointed the Duke of Al-'bemarle to repair to Chatham, to ſecure all Things againſt the Invaſion 'of the Dutch; he the ſaid Duke found the Royal Charles not brought 'up, but lying below in a Place of Danger; and having given Orders to 'the ſaid Pett to cauſe the ſaid Ship to be brought up as high as cou'd 'be into a Place of Safety, the ſaid Pett neglected the doing thereof. 'III. That Captain Brooks, one of his Majeſty's Attendants at Chatham, 'knowing that the Duke had given expreſs Orders to cauſe the Royal 'Charles to be brought up, did prepare Anchors and other Tackling 'ready for the ſame; and deſir'd the ſaid Pett to give Orders for his ſo 'doing, which he refus'd to do. IV. That the Duke of York having 'given Orders to the ſaid Pett to provide thirty Boats for the Defence 'of the River and Navy, He did not only himſelf miſemploy ſome of 'the ſaid Boats for the removing ſome of his particular Goods, but ſuf-'fer'd the reſt to be likewiſe miſemploy'd, and did alſo ſeize a Boat be-'longing to Sir Edward Spragg; ſo for want of theſe Boats, many of 'his Majeſty's Ships were loſt, and the Security of the reſt hinder'd. 'V. That the Commiſſioners of his Majeſty's Navy, having ſignify'd to 'him on the 4th of June, That the Dutch were out, and given him ſpe-'cial Charge to command all Captains on Land to their Ships, and to be 'vigilant in the reſt of the Charge committed to him; He was ſo neg-'ligent, that of eight hundred Perſons, which were under his Care and 'Command, when the Duke of Albemarle repaired thither, there were 'not above ten ready upon the Invaſion of the Enemy. VI. That the 'ſaid Duke having appointed Soldiers to raiſe Batteries for the Defence 'of the Navy; He, to obſtruct the Service, refus'd to give them the 'Number of Tools required, notwithſtanding he had a ſufficient Quan-'tity in his Majeſty's Stores, as it appear'd when thoſe Stores were broke 'open. VII. That the ſaid Duke having ſent Orders to him to ſend out 'of his Majeſty's Yards ſome Oaken Planks for his Platforms and Batte-'ries, he ſent only Deal Boards, which were prejudicial to the Service; 'notwithſtanding that there were in his Majeſty's Yard ſeveral Oaken 'Planks fit for that Service.' For all which Crimes and Miſdemeanors they demanded Juſtice and condign Puniſhment, &c. at the Bar of the Houſe of Lords.

And likewiſe Sir William Penn.

Not ſatisfy'd with this Impeachment, by means of ſome Diſcoveries and Informations, the Commons found and ſingled out Sir William Penn, another of his Majeſty's Commiſſioners, and drew up Articles againſt him to this Purpoſe. 'I. Whereas in September 1665, the Golden Phœnix, 'and the Slothany, two Dutch Ships were taken at Sea as Prize, by his Majeſty's

'Majeſty's Fleet under the Earl of Sandwich, in which the ſaid Sir William Penn was then Vice-Admiral; He the ſaid Sir William, contrary to his Duty, &c. did conſpire with ſeveral Perſons to open the Holds of the ſaid Ships, before Judgment paſs'd in the Admiralty Court, and from thence imbezell'd great Quantities of rich Goods, whereby his Majeſty was defrauded of above an hundred and fifteen Thouſand Pounds. II. The ſaid Sir William, in purſuance of the Conſpiracy, did about the ſame Time repair on board the Prize-Ship the Lothany, with Sir William Berkley, Vice-Admiral under his Command, and did there give Orders to Captain Waerden, to whoſe Charge the ſaid Ship was committed, to follow the Directions of Sir William Berkley; who thereupon broke open the Hold of the ſaid Ship, and took out ſeveral rich Goods of great Value, after it was cloſed and ſeal'd up, and by the Aſſiſtance of Sir William Penn, who ſent ſeveral Men on board for that Purpoſe. III. He the ſaid Sir William got a conſiderable Part of the Goods into his Poſſeſſion, and ſhortly after did ſell divers Parcels of the ſaid Goods, and further warranted the Sale thereof. IV. The better to colour the ſaid Fraud and Imbezelment, Orders were obtain'd from the Earl of Sandwich for diſtributing ſome Part of the ſaid Goods among ſeveral Officers (whereof Sir William was Chief) ſubmitted, as was pretended, to his Majeſty's further Pleaſure, tho' Sir William well knew the Orders of the Earl of Sandwich were void in every reſpect. And afterwards a Warrant for diſtributing the Goods was duly procured from his Majeſty, whereas the ſaid Sir William had, before that, poſſeſs'd himſelf of divers of the Goods; and over and above, did diſpoſe of a further Quantity of Goods than was contain'd in the Orders of the Earl of Sandwich, or his Majeſty's Warrant, to the Value of above two Thouſand Pounds.' For all which Crimes and Miſdemeanors the Commons likewiſe demanded Judgment, &c. of the Lords. 1668. Car. 20 Reſ. 8.

2. Theſe Proceedings and Impeachments were never compleated ſo as to anſwer the Ends of them; they chiefly ſerving to retard other Buſineſs and the Supplies to be granted to the King: Upon which Account he ſent three ſeveral Meſſages to the Houſe of Commons; the Firſt in theſe Words, 'His Majeſty hath been unwilling hitherto to interrupt you in your Proceedings; But conſidering the Poſture in which his Neighbours now are; and that the Spring is already ſo far advanc'd, and that his Allies (as they have great Cauſe) preſs his Majeſty to haſten his Preparations, he holds it abſolutely neceſſary, in reſpect of the Safety as well as the Honour of the Nation, that a Fleet be ſet forth with all Speed, and that Courſe be taken for fortifying his Ports, and Building more Ships: And therefore he doth again earneſtly recommend it to you forthwith to provide for ſuch a Supply as theſe Occaſions ſhall require: And becauſe you have not yet had Satisfaction upon the Bill of Accounts of the former Supply, his Majeſty is very willing That this be collected and iſſu'd for thoſe Purpoſes by ſuch Perſons only as you ſhall think fit.' The ſecond and the third Meſſage were only to inforce this, only in the laſt he let them know that he deſign'd to put a Period to this Seſſion on the 4th of May. But finding this Deſign not ſo well reliſh'd, he ſent a fourth Meſſage to them on the 24th of April in theſe Words, 'His Majeſty by his former Meſſage thought fit to acquaint you That he intended the preſent Seſſion of Parliament ſhou'd determine on the 4th of May; But finding the Proceedings in many important Buſineſſes, now under Agitation, wou'd be loſt, if there ſhou'd be a Seſſion; and that many Things not yet foreſeen may happen to induce him to call The King's Meſſages to the Commons.

1668. Car 20 Ref. 8.

'call you together again before Winter, hath now thought fit to acquaint 'you, That he intends only an Adjournment for three Months; and de- 'ſires you therefore to perfect the Bills for Supplies, and ſuch others as 'may be made ready by the ſaid 4th of May, ſo that he may then give 'his Royal Aſſent to them before the Adjournment.

In the mean Time the Commons were employ'd in other Matters, as well as the Supplies; and took into conſideration 'the Informations they 'receiv'd from ſome Counties, particularly Staffordſhire, of the inſolent 'Carriage and Abuſes committed by Perſons in ſeveral Places, in inter- 'rupting and diſturbing of Miniſters in their Churches, and holding 'Meetings contrary to Law.' This Houſe that had ſo effectually over-thrown the Earl of Clarendon, had ſtill a Majority of the ſame Judgment with his Lordſhip, That Popery had its Growth under the Cover of indulging Proteſtant Diſſenters; and were ſenſible the King's Motion in his Speech concerning the Proteſtant Diſſenters, made them too preſuming in their Liberty, and the Papiſts too inſolent in their Expectations: Therefore, upon a ſolemn Debate and Reſolution, they made and preſented an humble Petition to his Majeſty, 'That he wou'd iſſue out his 'Proclamation for Enforcing the Laws againſt Conventicles; and that 'Care might be taken for the Preſervation of the Peace againſt all unlaw- 'ful Aſſemblies of Papiſts and Nonconformiſts.' The King thought himſelf oblig'd to comply with his Commons, and accordingly gave this Anſwer; I will iſſue forth my Proclamation according to your Deſire; adding withal, And I do not doubt but you will take the ſecond Part of my Speech into Conſideration, according to the Vote. Accordingly he iſſu'd out his Proclamation, while the Parliament was ſitting, declaring, 'That 'upon the Conſideration of the late humble Petition of his Loyal Sub- 'jects the Commons in Parliament aſſembled, and upon Informati- 'on That divers Perſons, in ſeveral Parts of this Realm, abuſing the 'Clemency which had been us'd towards Perſons not conforming to the 'Worſhip and Government eſtabliſh'd in the Church of England (even 'whilſt it was under Conſideration to find out a Way for the better Uni- 'on of his Proteſtant Subjects) have of late frequently and openly, in 'great Numbers, and to the great Diſturbance of the Peace, held unlawful 'Aſſemblies and Conventicles; Therefore his Majeſty had been pleas'd 'in Council to declare, That he will by no means permit ſuch notorious 'Contempts of Himſelf and his Laws to go unpuniſh'd; but does by this 'Proclamation require and charge all Magiſtrates, &c. that they be circumſpect and vigilant in their ſeveral Juriſdictions, and put in Executi- 'on all the Laws againſt unlawful Conventicles; and that they take care 'of the Peace of his Kingdom, againſt the unlawful Aſſemblies of Pa- 'piſts and Nonconformiſts.

The King's Proclamation againſt all Diſſenters.

There was a third Thing hapned which very much obſtructed Buſineſs, which was a Difference between the Lords and Commons, occaſion'd by Mr. Skinner a conſiderable Merchant of London, who having receiv'd great Damages from the Eaſt-India Company, had brought the Matter by Petition into the Houſe of Lords originally, by whom he was reliev'd in 5000 Pound Coſts. The Commons hearing of this, after a Debate came to theſe Votes and Reſolves on the 2d of May: '1. That the Lords tak- 'ing cognizance of the Matter ſet forth and contain'd in the Petition of 'Thomas Skinner Merchant, againſt the Governor and Company of Mer- 'chants trading to the Eaſt-Indies, concerning the taking away the Pe- 'titioner's Ship and Goods, and aſſaulting his Perſon, and their Lordſhips 'over-ruling the Plea of the ſaid Governor and Company, the ſaid Cauſe 'coming before their Houſe Originally, only upon the Complaint of the 'ſaid Skinner, being a Common Plea, is not agreeable to the Law of the 'Land;

A Difference between the two Houſes.

'Land; and tending to deprive the Subject of his Right, Eaſe and Be'nefit due to him by the ſaid Laws. 2. That the Lords taking Cogni-
'zance of the Right and Title of the Iſland in the Petition mention'd,
'and giving Damages thereupon againſt the ſaid Governor and Company,
'is not warranted by the Laws of this Kingdom. 3. That the ſaid Tho-
'mas Skinner, in commencing and proſecuting a Suit by Petition in the 'Houſe of Lords againſt the Company of Merchants trading to the Eaſt-
'Indies (wherein ſeveral Members of this Houſe are Parties concern'd
'with the ſaid Company in particular Intereſts and Eſtates) and in pro-
'curing Judgment therein, with Directions to be ſerv'd upon the Gover'nor, being a Member of this Houſe; or upon the Deputy Governor of 'the ſaid Company, is a Breach of the Priviledge of this Houſe.' In Concluſion they Order'd the ſaid Mr. Skinner, for ſo acting, to be taken into Cuſtody of the Serjeant at Arms.

The Eaſt-India Company having petition'd the Commons, as well as Mr. Skinner had the Lords, the Commons after their three Votes, further Reſolved, 'That the Petition of the Merchants trading to the Eaſt-In- 'dies, and the two firſt Votes of this Houſe now paſſed, relating to the 'Juriſdiction of the Lords, be deliver'd by a Meſſage to the Lords Barr,
'with Reaſons for Enforcing the ſaid Votes.' This occaſion'd two or three Conferences with the Peers; in which their Lordſhips were very ſtrict and tenacious as to their Rights of Judicature, and made ſome Reflections upon the Company's Petition to the Houſe of Commons, declaring it Scandalous, &c. This rais'd the Ferment, and caus'd the Commons to come to new Votes and Reſolves, as, '1. That the Petition of The Votes of the Commons upon it.
'the Eaſt-India Company to this Houſe, touching the Proceedings of 'the Houſe of Lords, in the Caſe of Thomas Skinner, is not Scandalous.
'2. That the Delivery of the ſaid Petition of the Eaſt-India Company
'to the Houſe, and the Entertainment thereof, and the Proceedings
'and Votes of this Houſe thereupon, was no Breach of the Priviledge,
'or Encroachment upon the Juriſdiction of the Houſe of Lords; but ve'ry proper and fit for this Houſe, without Breach of the fair Correſpon-
'dence, which ought to be between the two Houſes. 3. That a Meſſage
'be ſent to the Lords to acquaint them, That this Houſe doth take No'tice of the Deſire of the Lords at the laſt Conference, For a good Uni-
'on to be kept between both Houſes: And it is the Opinion of this Houſe,
'That the beſt Expedient to preſerve ſuch an Union, is, That all Pro'ceedings be forborn upon the Sentence and Judgment of the Lords, in
'the Caſe of Thomas Skinner againſt the Eaſt-India Company; and that
'Sir Andrew Riccard, Sir Samuel Barnadiſton, Mr. Rowland Guywn, and
'Mr. Chriſtopher Boone be ſet at Liberty; this Houſe being unſatisfy'd
'with their Lordſhips Reaſons offer'd at the laſt Conference.' Laſt of all, after a long Debate, they Reſolv'd, 'That whoſoever ſhall be aiding
'or aſſiſting in putting in Execution the Order or Sentence of the Houſe
'of Lords, in the Caſe of Thomas Skinner againſt the Eaſt-India Com'pany, ſhall be deem'd a Betrayer of the Rights and Liberties of the 'Commons of England, and an Infringer of the Priviledges of this 'Houſe.

They had no ſooner finiſh'd this Vote, which was on the 8th Day of May, but the King by the Uſher of the black Rod, ſent for them to the Houſe of Peers, where he paſs'd theſe following publick Bills, 1. An Acts paſs'd.
Act for raiſing three hundred and ten Thouſand Pounds by an Impoſition on Wines and other Liquors. 2. An additional Act againſt the Importation of Foreign Cattle. 3. An Act for Proceeding to Judgment on Writs of Error brought in the Exchequer. 4. An Act for giving Liberty to buy and Export Leather, and Skins tanned or dreſſed. 5. An Act for the better Payment of Monies received for the Uſe of the Crown. 6. An Act for the Encreaſe and Preſervation of Timber within the Foreſt of Dean. 7. An Act to regulate the Trade of Silk-Throwing. Having paſs'd theſe, and ſome private Bills, his Majeſty declar'd 'That it was his Pleaſure, 'that the two Houſes be adjourn'd till the 11th of Auguſt; That if he 'cou'd ſo order his Affairs, that they might forbear their aſſembling at 'that Time, when their being in the Country wou'd be ſo neceſſary for 'their private Occaſions, he wou'd give timely Notice, that they might 'ſpare Attendance.' Thus, without any other Speech from the King, and without any at all from the Speaker, the Parliament broke up, having ſate ſince the laſt Meeting in February, near three Months, and ſo concluded the Eighth Seſſion, or rather Ninth Meeting of the Second and Long Parliament; and tho' it was only adjourn'd at preſent, and again a ſecond Time, yet it was at laſt Prorogu'd till the 19th of October 1669. So that it had a Receſs and Intermiſſion of no leſs than a Year and above five Months. Of the breaking up of this Parliament, and of another Affair at the ſame Time, we ſhall mention the Words of the Earl of Arlington, who in a Letter to Sir William Temple abroad, dated May the 8th, ſays, 'His Majeſty had reſolv'd the Parliament ſhou'd adjourn 'on Monday laſt the 4th, but an unhappy Difference falling out betwixt 'the Lords and Commons upon a great Point of their Priviledges, their 'Sitting has been ſpun on to this Day, tho' not without Hopes of our 'finally riſing to Morrow. Our long talk'd of Miſcarriages have this 'Week been finiſh'd with a very unhappy one in the Queen; after twenty 'Weeks going, and raiſing the dejected Hopes of the whole Nation, which 'even this Misfortune hath ſomewhat reviv'd.

The End of the Eighth Seſſion of the Second Parliament.

The Queen's ſecond Miſcarriage.

The Progreſs of the French King.

3. During the ſitting of the Parliament, England as well as other Places, was not a little concern'd at the Deſigns and Progreſs of the French King. The Triple League concluded, and ready to be compleated between England, Sweden and Holland, had given a manifeſt Check to his Attempts in Flanders. Therefore he reſolv'd to turn his Arms another Way, and poſſeſs himſelf of the Franche County, which then belong'd to Spain. But to make the Thing more plauſible, he thought fit to communicate the Deſign in a Letter to the States-General, wherein he told them, 'That the two principal Motives that prompted him to 'this Expedition, were, Firſt, the giving their High Mightineſſes more 'effectual Means to diſpoſe the Spaniards to Peace. Secondly, his own 'Security, upon advice that the Spaniſh Ambaſſador at Vienna endeavour'd to engage the Emperor to ſend an Army into Burgundy: But 'declaring withal, that how proſperous ſoever this Expedition might be, 'he wou'd not, upon that Account, expect higher or more advantagious Conditions of Peace, than ſuch as he had offer'd with Relation to 'the Equivalent or Alternative, formerly mention'd.' Accordingly he proceeded with a rapid Courſe, and made an entire Conqueſt of the Franche-County in a Fortnight, and in the worſt Seaſon of the Year. After which, flush'd with theſe Succeſſes, his Miniſters began to alter their Language, and to expreſs their Reſentment of the Meaſures lately concerted between England and Holland; and talk'd as if the inſiſting upon their Maſter's former Promiſe was Preſcribing him Laws. In one of the Letters from the French Secretary Lionne to Ambaſſador D'Eſtrades, he ſays upon this Occaſion, I do not believe the King to be of a Temper to ſuffer himſelf to be ſhav'd againſt the Grain, by any Body. In another he pretends, That the King his Maſter was entirely diſengag'd of his Offer of a Truce, by the Refuſal of the Spaniſh Governor de Caſtel-Rodrigo. He adds, that he told the Dutch Ambaſſador Van Beuningen, in in his first Conference with him, That the Peace wou'd infallibly have been made upon either of the Alternatives, if the League of the Hague had not been concluded: But that League having given a Prospect to the World, which might induce People to think, that whatever the King wou'd have done of his own Motion, and to gain the Glory of MODERATION, which now was the only Thing he wanted, wou'd now be the Effect of COMPULSION for fear of the League; This appear'd to him of so hard Digestion for a Prince of the King's Temper, who preferr'd his Reputation before any other Consideration, that he knew not what to say to it. 1668. Car. 20 Ref. 9.

This last Expedition was an Allarm to the Imperialists and Switzers, as well as the Spaniards, which caus'd them a little to consider their own Safety. England and Holland were more nearly concern'd for the saving of the Spanish Netherlands; and, besides the forming of the Triple League, they us'd all Endeavours to bring France and Spain to an Accommodation. In order to effect so great a Work, Sir William Temple, who had been so fortunate in the last League, was again employ'd, who us'd all Instances with the Marquess de Castel-Rodrigo, the Spanish Governor at Brussels, to submit to one of the Alternatives propos'd by the French King, as the surest Means to preserve the rest of the Netherlands, and of giving Peace to Europe. In this Sir William met with several Difficulties; for the Governor and the Spaniards were at first very obstinate and out of Humour, and full of Exclamations against the unjust Invasions of the French, insisted upon the Equity of the Renunciations, and expected that, by Vertue of the Triple Alliance, England and Holland shou'd immediately force the French King to quit all his Conquests. Sir William soon satisfy'd them in several Points, and by his Penetration, discover'd the Matter in general to stand thus, as he wrote to the Earl of Arlington; 'It seems plain that France desired to pursue the War, but 'feared England engaging in it; and to hinder that, wou'd use all the 'Address that cou'd be, to lay the Obstruction of the Peace upon the 'Spaniards: That the latter, on the other Side, desir'd to continue the 'War, provided they might be sure of the Assistance of England and 'Holland; and that, to that End, if they play'd their Game well, they 'wou'd be sure to retort the Address of France upon them, and lay 'the Blame of the War at their Doors; without which they had no 'Hopes of Holland's falling into their Party: Who whether they were 'partial to the French or no in the Quarrel, were partial to the Peace, 'and wou'd not be drawn to share in the War, but upon the last Neces- 'sity.' However Sir William took incessant Pains to remove all Difficulties and Impediments with the Spanish Governor de Castel-Rodrigo, who was once so much out of Humour with the Dutch Proceedings, that he told Sir William freely, That if he were, at this Juncture, in the Council of Spain, he wou'd without delay give his Advice, for making Peace with France, by delivering up all Flanders to them, rather than suffer such a Treatment from all their Neighbours, who were more interested in the Loss of it, than the Spaniards. It seems there was some Design of quitting the Netherlands, and receiving an Equivalent on the other Side of France, which must have been fatal to Holland, and most shocking to England. At length the Governor was prevail'd upon to accept of one of the Alternatives offer'd by the French, which prov'd to be that which was least eligible to the English and Dutch, namely the yielding up all those Places the French had already conquer'd in Flanders, of which Mention will be presently made.

Sir William Temple employ'd to endeavour a Peace.

This main Point obtain'd, a Treaty was soon set on foot between the two contending Monarchs of France and Spain, and Aix-la-Chapelle was

The Treaty of Aix.

1668. Car. 20 Ref. 9. was the Place agreed on and appointed for the Meeting of the ſeveral Commiſſioners and Plenipotentiaries. Upon which Occaſion, Sir William Temple remov'd from Bruſſels, and arriv'd at that Place on the 27th of April, with the Character of Ambaſſador Extraordinary from his Britannick Majeſty, and with a very pompous and ſplendid Appearance. Not to enter into the Mazes of this Treaty, as in the laſt, by the Diligence of Sir William and others it was brought to a Head within leſs than a Fortnight. By this Treaty 'the French were to keep Poſſeſſion, 'in full Soveraignty, of the Towns, Places, and Forts they had taken 'during the laſt Campaign, namely, Charleroy, Binch, Aeth, Doway, 'Fort-de-Scarpe, Tournay, Oudenard, Lille, Armentiers, Courtray, 'Bergues, and Furnes, with their Dependencies; on Condition, that 'France ſhou'd reſtore to Spain the Franche-County, and all other Places 'which the Arms of France might have ſeiz'd on to the Day of the pro-'claiming of the Peace, after the exchanging of the Ratifications; which 'was to be done by the laſt Day of May: Provided alſo that the King 'of England and the States-General did withal oblige themſelves by a 'Treaty to warrant the King of Spain from all future Pretences, or In-'vaſion to be made by the King of France in any of his Territories, for 'ever hereafter:' Which they accordingly perform'd. And as to this Treaty, 'all Kings, Princes, and Potentates might give to their moſt 'Chriſtian and Catholick Majeſties their Promiſes and Aſſurances of Gua-'ranty.'

The Concluſion of it.

At the Concluſion of the Treaty, Sir William Temple takes Notice of ſome things to the Earl of Arlington which ought not to be forgotten; declaring his Opinion to him, 'That ſince no Supplies were arriv'd 'from Spain, nor hardly expected in any Time; ſince Holland was ſo 'deſperately bent upon the Peace, without any Reſpect to the Spaniſh 'Honour or Intereſt, further than joyn'd immediately with their own; 'ſince Spain had not been able to find Means to engage England or Swe-'den in their Quarrels, by Supplies neceſſary to both Crowns; ſince the 'King of England was not in any Condition of entering into the Buſi-'neſs ſingle, upon Conſiderations of Honour, Juſtice, or remote Dan-'ger; and conſequently, ſince upon the Projects made at Paris, it grew 'evident to Spain, that they muſt ſign the firſt Project of Peace, or do 'worſe: Upon all theſe Conſiderations it was his Opinion that the Spa-'niard's Buſineſs was to end frankly, and as ſoon as poſſible.' Afterwards he ſays to his Lordſhip in the ſame Letter, 'I have been the more 'earneſt in bringing this Matter to an Iſſue here, (which the Holland Am-'baſſador ſays had never been done without me) becauſe I conceiv'd that 'not only you deſir'd it in England, but that the Peace was neceſſary 'for the Conſtitution of his Majeſty's preſent Affairs: And ſince he has 'had the Glory of making two Peaces ſo important, we have now no-'thing to wiſh but to ſee him in a Condition to make War as well as 'Peace, whenever the Honour and Intereſt of his Crowns ſhall make it 'neceſſary: For that Neceſſity can, I ſuppoſe, be no ways long avoided, 'but by our being in a Poſture to welcome it whenever it comes, and 'to make Advantage of it. And I think the beſt Time to fall into 'Counſels tending to this great End, will be after the Concluſion of this 'general Peace, when no Engagement abroad forces his Majeſty to have 'ſo much Need of Mony from his People: For the Time to repair the 'Harms that Storms have done in a Houſe, is in fair Weather; and to 'mend a leaky Ship, ſhe muſt be brought aſhore. God grant we may take 'Warning by the poor Spaniard's Example, whoſe ill Conduct of late in 'the Government has ſo far ſubjected them to their Neighbours Diſeſteem, 'Inſolence, and Humour, as well as to their Conqueſts, Violence, and

4. Sir William Temple having brought the Negotiation at Aix to a happy Concluſion, remov'd from thence to Bruſſels, where he compleated the Ratifications, and purſu'd the Directions he had receiv'd from the Earl of Arlington, about the Subſidies promis'd by England and Holland, on the Part of Spain, to the Crown of Sweden, in order to engage the latter in the Triple Alliance. Upon the Confidence of theſe Promiſes, Count Dona, as was formerly hinted, went into England; where, upon the Exchange of the Treaty, the Engliſh Miniſter and Dutch Ambaſſador then in London gave him an Act, in which, in Concert with the Spaniſh Ambaſſador, they undertook to get thoſe Subſidies made good by the Marqueſs de Caſtel-Rodrigo, the Spaniſh Governor of Flanders. But when Sir William demanded of the Marqueſs the Performance of that Engagement, he declin'd the Matter, and privately told Sir William, That the Dutch had croſs'd him in an Alliance he was making laſt Year with Sweden, becauſe they wou'd make themſelves Maſters of the Affair; and now wou'd buy the Swedes Dependence at the Coſt of Spain. That he had all the Reaſon in the World to be ſatisfy'd with the King of England's Conduct of this Affair, but little in the Dutch: That he knew no Reaſon why they ſhou'd not pay what they had promis'd to Sweden after the Treaty of Breda; nor why all the Mony Spain cou'd ſpare ſhou'd not be given to his Britannick Majeſty, upon a nearer League, who was the only Prince that had proceeded affectionately and generouſly in the Spaniſh Affairs; and who was the beſt able to ſupport them, in caſe he were in a Condition to make War without his Peoples Purſes: And that at laſt, if it muſt be paid by Spain, it ſhou'd be all laid in the King of England's Hands to diſpoſe of as he pleas'd. Sir William return'd the Marqueſs Thanks for his obliging Expreſſions in what concern'd his Maſter; but deſired him to take it as a Ground in all the Superſtructures to be made upon the preſent Foundations, " That Spain muſt not diſoblige Holland, even to oblige " England;' but diſſemble any Reſentments they had given him, and ſacrifice them to the Advantage both England and Spain received by their Separation from France.

His Diſcourſe with the Governor of Flanders.

Sir William having ſatisfy'd the Governor in all Points, he not long after left Bruſſels, and return'd through Holland into England: Upon his Arrival at London, he was receiv'd with all the Demonſtrations of Favour and Reſpect, both by the King and Court; the People ſeeming generally pleas'd with the late Counſels and Negotiations, in which he had ſo great a Share. And if he had been as forward to puſh his Fortune, as he was to deſerve it, he wou'd not have loſt the Advantage of coming home with the common Opinion of great Merits. Upon this Occaſion he modeſtly wrote thus to his Father, 'I cannot imagine why I ſhou'd 'pretend to have deſerv'd more than my Pay of the King, for which I 'ſerv'd him in my late Employments; and if I got Honour by them, 'twas ſo much more than I had to reckon upon. 'ſorry to ask Mony of him, at a Time when, for ought I can judge by 'the Cry of the Court, He wants it more than I do.' In another Part of the ſame Letter, he lets his Father know, 'After the Concluſion of 'the Triple Alliance and the Peace of Aix-la-Chapelle, I was at an End 'of my Ambition; having ſeen Flanders ſaved, as if it had been by one 'of the Miracles the Houſe of Auſtria, they ſay, has been us'd to; and 'the general Intereſts of Chriſtendom ſecured againſt the Power and At-'tempts of France; and at the ſame Time the Conſideration and Ho-'nour of his Majeſty and his Crown abroad, rais'd to a Degree it has 'not been in for ſome Ages paſt, and we had no Reaſon to expect it ſhou'd be 'in ſome Ages to come, upon the Decline it felt after the Buſineſs of 'Chatham, and the Peace of Breda that ſucceeded it.' And here it may be ſaid, that from this Time England had the beſt Opportunity of holding the Ballance of Europe, which if it had immovably obſerv'd, and with reaſonable Vigour, it might have ſav'd the ſpending of thoſe Millions of Treaſure, and Oceans of Blood, that have ſince happen'd. And for a Concluſion of this Period, we may take Notice of another Thing; That whatever the Spaniards loſt by the late French Ravages, the Engliſh gain'd a very great private Benefit by it: For one Brewer, ſaid to be of Engliſh Parents, with about fifty Walloons, who wrought and dy'd fine Woollen Cloths, thereupon came into England; and the King, after the Example of King Edward III. and Queen Elizabeth, entertain'd them, and gave them the Benefit of natural-born Subjects: And by them the Engliſh were in a few Years Time inſtructed to make and dye fine Woollen Cloths cheaper by Forty per Cent. than they cou'd before; not only to the Advantage of the Engliſh at home, but in Foreign Vent abroad, which before had been enjoy'd by the Dutch.

Improvement of the Engliſh Wooll Trade.

5. All Wars, and Rumours of Wars being at an End, the King had now full Leiſure and Opportunity to cultivate the Arts of Peace, which he did by promoting and improving hopeful Projects, Inventions and Diſcoveries, as well as the Variety of Exerciſes, Pleaſures and Diverſions. The latter he now enjoy'd after a more uninterrupted Manner than before the Removal of the Earl of Clarendon, who was ſucceeded, tho' not in Place, yet in Favour, by a more eaſie Maſter the Duke of Buckingham; a Man ſo addicted and abandon'd, as well as active and fertile in the moſt criminal Pleaſures, that he, and his true Aſſociate the Earl of Rocheſter, ſeem'd capable of corrupting any Court in the World. The Nature of the Court, and the Politicks of theſe Times, are handſomly glanc'd at by Sir William Temple, who well knew both: For tho' he was ſenſible that the Meaſures taken as to Foreign Potentates were very right and honourable, yet he was not ignorant that the Spirit and Vigour of the great Men began much to be enervated, and the Court to be overrun with Luxury and Extravagancy. And as to the late Eſtabliſhments abroad, he had reaſon to ſuſpect the Duration of them; declaring that Sir Thomas Clifford confidently ſaid to a Friend of his, upon all the Joy that appear'd at the Concluſion of the Triple-Alliance; Well, for all this Noiſe, we muſt yet have another War with the Dutch before it be long. As to the Government, what he writes to the Lord Keeper Bridgeman, Oct 2. is worthy of Remembrance: 'If Men ſee the Way to riſe, is 'by Worth and virtuous Qualities, the Genius of a Nation will run 'that Way, and produce great Subjects: If they can hope to do it by vi-'cious Humours, by little Arts, by warm Purſuits every Man of his 'own Intereſt; the whole Spirit runs into thoſe Courſes, and perhaps 'the faſter, from the Propenſion of our Natures rather to Ill than to 'Good.' In another Place in the ſame Letter, he ſays; 'Without great 'Virtue

The King's Progreſſes.

This Summer the King, the Duke of York, Prince Rupert, &c. made ſeveral Progreſſes into the Country, to Newmarket, to Bagſhot, to Portſmouth, again to Newmarket and Audley-Inn, to Ipſwich, Harwich and other Places, partly for the Diverſion of Hunting, &c. and partly for Service in viewing of Ports and the Strengths of the Nation. The Navy was the King's particular Delight, and was ſingularly well known and underſtood by him; and tho' it was in the Time of a profound Peace, yet he thought it for the Honour of the Nation to ſet out a conſiderable Part of it this Summer, under the Command of Sir Thomas Allen. Having, with his Royal Highneſs, viſited and view'd the Fleet in the Downs, on the 23d of June he order'd Sir Thomas to ſail through the Channel to the Mediterranean Sea, where he arriv'd at the City and Port of Algiers. Here threatning the Place, they ſoon made an Offer of Releaſing all the Engliſh Captives, and renew'd their former Peace with England, upon good Additional Articles to this Effect,

A Fleet ſent into the Mediterranean.

'1. That all their Captains ſhou'd be commanded to let all Engliſh Veſſels
'paſs without Damage or Moleſtation, upon their ſhewing Engliſh Co-
'lours: If in any Veſſel the Engliſh were equal to the Strangers, they
'ſhou'd then be free; if the Strangers exceeded the Engliſh, then law'ful Prize; yet, if they cou'd ſhew an Engliſh Paſs, to be let go. 2. That 'none of their little Frigates with Oars ſhou'd ſtop any Veſſel laden with 'Proviſions or Ammunition for Tangier. 3. That they ſhall not deliver
'any of their little Frigates with Oars to any of the Sally Men to 'make uſe of. 4. That if any of the little Veſſels intended to go to
'Tangier, they ſhou'd take a Paſs from the Engliſh Conſul at Algiers.'
From thence Sir Thomas Allen ſail'd for Tripoli, at whoſe Appearance the King of the Place ſent out a Brigantine, and Favourite of his, to bid him welcome; aſſuring him of his Readineſs to keep and maintain the ancient Friendſhip, and obſerve and continue the Articles already agreed on.

Several Promotions, &c.

We have but little more to add in this Year but an Account of ſome Promotions, Removals, and Deaths of particular Perſons. After the general Peace of Europe, to maintain an amicable Correſpondence, the King ſent over Sir William Godolphin, lately Knighted by him, to reſide as his Ambaſſador in the Court of Spain; and ſent Sir Edward Spragg as Envoy to the Conſtable of Caſtile, upon his late Entry on the Government of the Spaniſh Netherlands. Sir Daniel Harvey was ſent Ambaſſador to Conſtantinople; the Earl of Carliſle Ambaſſador to the Crown of Sweden, with Sir Samuel Moreland as Envoy; and Mr. Ralph Mountague, Maſter of the Horſe to the Queen, was ſent firſt Envoy, and ſhortly after Ambaſſador to the King of France. After theſe, Sir William Temple was again ſent Ambaſſador Extraordinary to the States-General, where he was preſented by them with a Gold Chain and Medal of Six Hundred Pounds Value, and his Brother with another Chain and Medal worth two Hundred Pounds, in Conſideration of the good and acceptable Services done to the States in the late Conjuncture of Time. About the ſame Time the famous Monſieur Colbert, late Plenipotentiary at Aix-la-Chapelle, came over as Ambaſſador from the French King; and made made his publick Entry into London in Auguſt; as did, not long after, Signiour Pietro Morcenigo, Ambaſſador from the State of Venice. As to Promotions, on the 22d of May Sir John Vaughan, who was ſo zealous againſt the Earl of Clarendon, was made a Serjeant at Law, and the next Day Lord Chief Juſtice of the Common-Pleas. Upon the Death of the Lord Viſcount Fitz-Harding, Treaſurer of his Majeſty's Houſhold, his Office was in June conferr'd upon Sir Thomas Clifford, formerly Comptroller of the Houſhold, and the Office of Comptroller given to Francis Lord Newport, who was likewiſe ſworn of his Majeſty's Privy-Council. In September, the Duke of Monmouth in Hyde Park was plac'd by his Majeſty in the Command of Captain of his Life-Guard of Horſe, void by the Reſignation of the Lord Gerard of Brandon. Sir John Trevor, who had return'd from his Employment as Envoy Extraordinary to the French King, and had given his Majeſty a ſatisfactory Account of his Negotiation in that Court, was on the 29th of September ſworn one of his Majeſty's Principal Secretaries of State, upon the Reſignation of Sir William Morrice, who had ten Thouſand Pounds given him, and continu'd one of the King's Privy-Council.

The Deaths of the Earl of Northumberland,

As to the Deaths of conſiderable and eminent Men this Year, we ſhall take notice of Four; and Firſt Algernoon Percy, the noted Earl of Northumberland, formerly much honour'd, and highly in Favour with the late pious King, but afterwards ſo open a Deſerter, that his Memory has been branded with Ingratitude, as well as Diſloyalty. The Lord Clarendon ſays of him, If he had thought the King as much above Him, as he thought Himſelf above other conſiderable Men, he wou'd have been a good Subject. His high Temper caus'd him to be a great Inſtrument in the late Miſeries; notwithſtanding which he was receiv'd into Favour with the preſent King, and dy'd in Peace, being within two Years of the laſt of that famous and ancient Family of the Percys. The next was Sir William Waller, a Gentleman who had ſtill a deeper Hand in the late Civil Wars, who having been diſguſted at the Court, joyn'd with the Long Parliament, and perform'd ſuch martial Exploits for them, that for ſome Time be gain'd the Name of William the Conqueror. Yet he was afterwards both laid aſide, and impriſon'd by the Independent Party, ſo that at the King's Reſtoration he was look'd upon as a Sort of Royaliſt, and had laſt of all a ſolemn Funeral in Weſtminſter-Abby; but all his Atchievements that were hung over his Tomb, were ſhortly after taken down by the Colledge of Arms, and thrown aſide as falſe Things. The other Two were both eminent and celebrated Poets, Sir William Davenant, and Sir John Denham: The former was born in the City of Oxford, and educated in that Univerſity; and tho' he wanted much of Academical Learning, yet he made as high and noble Flights in the Poetical Faculty as Fancy cou'd advance without it: For which, upon the Death of Ben Johnſon, he was made Poet Laureat to the late King, to whom he was often ſerviceable both in a Military and a Civil Way, and receiv'd the Honour of Knigthood. After the preſent King's Return, he became the chief Reſtorer of the Stage both by his Dramatick Writings, and his active Contrivances; yet he was further diſtinguiſh'd by that famous Heroick Poem of his call'd Gondibert, which was particularly celebrated by thoſe admiral Poets, Cowley and Waller: He dy'd in the 63d Year of his Age, and was bury'd in Weſtminſter, and near that other Poet, now to be mention'd, Sir John Denham, a Gentleman of a good Family, who likewiſe had his Education in the Univerſity of Oxford, and afterwards became well known to the late and preſent King; by the laſt of whom he was made Surveyor-General of all his Majeſty's Buildings, in the Room of Mr. Inigo Jones, deceaſed, and afterwards Knight of the Bath at the Solemnity of the Coronation. He was a Man of excellent Parts, and a fine Genius, tho' he wrote not much; and was highly applauded and admired for one particular Poem call'd Coopers Hill; of which Mr. Dryden, who ſucceeded Sir William Davenant in the Laurel, ſays, That for the Majeſty of Stile, it is, and ever will be, the exact Standard of good Writing.

VI. 1. The following Year was a Time of Peace, Pleaſure and Enjoyment, a Year in which there cou'd be nothing more calm and quiet than the Surface of the Engliſh Affairs, had not the future Effects of its ſilent Motions made it appear, that tho' Action fail'd, Counſel ſufficiently prevail'd: Upon which Account Envoys and Ambaſſadors were frequently employ'd, a common Forerunner of active Deſigns. About the Beginning of the Year, the Earl of Carliſle, who was ſent Ambaſſador Extraordinary to Sweden, for a while repos'd himſelf at Copenhagen, in which Court he was well known: Here he receiv'd a Letter ſent after him by the King of England, in Return to a very obliging Letter from his Majeſty of Denmark; with the Receipt of which, the King of Denmark was ſo well pleas'd and ſatisfy'd, that at the ſeaſonable Inſtance of his Excellency, he caus'd his Orders to be ſent to all his Ports, particularly to his Cuſtom-Houſes and Havens in Norway, for Reſtoring the Engliſh Liberty of Trading in any Part of his Dominions, with the ſame Priviledges they formerly enjoy'd, according to the Treaty concluded in the Year 1660. Being arriv'd at Sweden, among other Tranſactions, he had a ſpecial Audience, in which he preſented the King of Sweden with the Engliſh George and Garter, worn by the Knights of that Order; which the King receiv'd with great Expreſſions of Joy; and was after that, by a particular Commiſſion to the Earl, ſolemnly and publickly preſented and inveſted by him with all the peculiar Habits and Ornaments belonging to the ſaid Order. 1669. Several Embaſſies.

Several other Ambaſſadors were employ'd in other Courts, as Mr. Montague in France, Sir William Godolphin in Spain, and Sir Peter Wyche in Muſcovy, &c. but none was more vigilant than Sir William Temple in Holland, who took daily Pains to ſtrengthen, or at leaſt ſecure the Triple Alliance, which began to be in ſome Danger this Year, as well from the Spaniards ſupine Neglect of paying their principal Subſidies to the Swedes, as from the uncertain Meaſures of the Court of England, which began to be much influenc'd by the French Ambaſſador Monſieur Colbert. Sir William, about the End of April, made ſome remarkable Diſcovery, which he thought fit to communicate to the Lord Keeper Bridgeman, and to him alone, and which may here properly be inſerted in his own Words: 'The preſent Subject is ſo delicate, that I can hardly 'tell how to touch it my ſelf, or to truſt it in any other Hands but your 'Lordſhip's.——Monſieur De Wit came to me, as he ſaid, upon a par-'ticular Viſit, as a Friend, not a Miniſter: But the Occaſion of it at 'preſent he wou'd confeſs, was, to acquaint me with a Converſation he 'had lately had with Monſieur Puffendorf, a Swediſh Agent, who paſs'd 'this Way from Paris to his own Country: That he had been ſome 'Time at the French Court ſince our Meaſures taken by the Triple Al-'liance, and the Negotiations ſet on foot with the Spaniards. That the 'Miniſters in France had taken much Pains to perſwade him, "That Swe-"den wou'd find their Account very ill in purſuing thoſe Meaſures: That "Spain wou'd fail them, in what was pretended from them; and that "Holland alone wou'd not be able to ſupport them, or the Meaſures "they had raſhly taken:" And to make this good, the Miniſters there 'had at length told him (but as a Secret only for the Service and Infor‘ mation of the Court of Sweden) “ That England wou’d certainly fail “ them; and was already chang’d in the Courſe of all thoſe Counſels “ they had taken with Holland and Sweden, tho’ they did not think fit “ to let any Thing of it appear; and the Secret was yet in very few “ Hands, either in the French or the Engliſh Court.” That when this ‘ Agent ſeem’d incredulous of all this Story, and to ſuſpect that it was ‘ Artificial, and only intended to give an Umbrage or falſe Light to the ‘ Court of Sweden, and thereby help them to make the firſt falſe Step; ‘ Monſieur Turenne at laſt ſhew’d him a Letter from Monſieur Colbert ‘ their Ambaſſador, wherein he gave an Account of “ the happy Succeſ- “ ſes he had met with in his Negotiations in the Engliſh Court, of the good “ Diſpoſitions there, and eſpecially thoſe of ſome of the chief Miniſters: “ with the Addition of theſe Words, And I have at laſt made them ſen- “ ſible of the whole Extent of his Majeſty’s Liberality.

After Sir William had made ſome Excuſes for the Engliſh Miniſtry, and clear’d himſelf from the leaſt Knowledge of the Matter, Monſieur de Wit proceeded and ſaid, ‘ That he had been very ſuſpicious when he ‘ firſt enter’d into the Miniſtry, but had been ſo often deceiv’d by it, he ‘ had cured himſelf of that Quality. That he knew very well it had been ‘ ſaid among ſome Foreign Miniſters here ſome Months ſince, That it ‘ muſt be confeſs’d, there has been for nine Months the greateſt Miniſtry in ‘ the World, in England; as if they believ’d ſome Change had befallen ‘ our Counſels before the laſt Year ended. That for his Part, who went ‘ to the Subſtantial as near as he cou’d, and the plaineſt Way; he had ‘ made but one Reflection, and kept that as much as he cou’d to himſelf: ‘ Which was, “ That after my Embaſſy hither had been reſolv’d in Eng- “ land, to ſupport and improve the Ends of our laſt Alliances, and to en- “ gage the Emperor and chief Princes of the Empire, as well as Spain “ in the Support of them; he cou’d not but wonder to find me engag’d “ of late by my Orders from Court, ſo warmly in a Chicane about ſuch “ a Trifle, as that of Surinam; and in ſo many eager Diſputes about the “ Pretenſions of our Eaſt-India Company, which were fitter for Mer- “ chants than for Miniſters: And look’d, as if we had them more at “ Heart, than the Purſuit of the Publick Intereſts, that were thought ſo “ neceſſary for Chriſtendom, at my firſt coming over. But after all, for “ his Part, he wou’d go on conſtantly upon the Foot of our laſt Alliance, “ as the beſt Ground of our common Safety; and believ’d that the States “ wou’d do ſo too, ’till his Majeſty or his Miniſters ſhou’d let them plainly “ ſee, he had chang’d his Meaſures.

The Arrival of the Prince of Tuſcany.

2. In England, while Pleaſures, Diverſions and Entertainments abounded, on the End of March there arriv’d the famous Coſmo de Medicis Prince of Tuſcany, whoſe Deſign was to viſit and view the moſt conſiderable Countreys and Places in Europe. Removing from Portugal and Spain, he landed at Plymouth, where he was honourably receiv’d by Sir John Skelton the Governor, and repairing to Exeter, he was ſolemnly complimented and attended by the Mayor and his Brethren. On the firſt of April he came to Salisbury, where he was waited on by the Earl of Pembroke, with the Mayor and Aldermen in their Habits, and the next Day was magnificently entertain’d by the Earl at his Houſe in Wilton: And proceeding on his Road, he was met and complimented in the King’s Name at Brentford, by the Lord Viſcount Mandeville in one of his Majeſty’s Coaches; and coming to London in private, he was at his Arrival attended by Sir William Killigrew with a Compliment from the Queen, by the Earl of Peterborough from the Duke of York, and from the Dutcheſs by her Maſter of the Horſe Sir William Powel. At the End of the Month,

Month, his Highneſs went along with the King, and the Duke and Prince Rupert to Newmarket; and having diverted himſelf with the Recreations of that pleaſant Place, he went to viſit the Univerſity of Cambridge, where he was receiv'd with all imaginable Reſpect, being attended at his Lodgings, and complimented in the Name of the Univerſity by the two Divinity Profeſſors, Dr. Gunning and Dr. Pearſon, accompany'd by all the young Noblemen Students, and likewiſe by the Mayor and Aldermen from the Town. The next Morning, the Vice-Chancellor, Dr. Duport, with the Heads and the Proctors, ſtood ready in their Formalities to receive his Highneſs in the Publick Schools, all the Scholars being rang'd on each Side of the Way. The Univerſity Orator, Dr. Widdrington, entertain'd him with a publick Speech at the Gate, from whence he was conducted into the Regent-Houſe, where was held a Congregation for creating Degrees in all Faculties on this Occaſion, by the particular Command of his Majeſty, where a ſecond Speech was made to him by the ſame Orator. In the Afternoon he was pleas'd to be preſent at a Philoſophy-Act appointed for that Purpoſe, which was perform'd to the ſingular Satisfaction of his Highneſs and the whole Auditory.

His Reception at Cambridge,

On the 3d of May his Highneſs arriv'd late at Night at Oxford, and refuſing the Lodgings offer'd him by the Vice-Chancellor, Dr. Fell, went to be more private in the Angel-Inn; where the next Morning he was attended by the Vice-Chancellor and Doctors in their Scarlet to compliment him, and to know his Pleaſure when he wou'd be at leiſure to be receiv'd in Convocation. In the mean Time they waited on him to ſhew him moſt of the Colledges, where he was receiv'd by the reſpective Societies, and complimented with Speeches. In the Afternoon the Vice-Chancellor and Doctors went again to his Lodgings, and conducted him thence to the Convocation, his Highneſs being pleas'd to walk all the Way on foot, through the Ranks of Scholars plac'd on each Side from his Lodgings to the Schools. The Maſters of Arts being ſet in the Convocation-Houſe attended there his Arrival, upon which the Convocation began, the Prince being firſt ſeated in a Chair of State provided for that Occaſion on the right Hand of the Vice-Chancellor: Then the publick Orator, Dr. South, made him an Oration, which ended, and ſeveral Academical Affairs diſpatcht, to ſatisfy his Highneſs of the Manner of acting in thoſe Aſſemblies; his Phyſician, a Doctor of Bononia, was incorporated and admitted to the ſame Degree. Thence the Prince was conducted to the new Theatre, almoſt finiſh'd, and ſo to the Publick Library, where he had a View of the choiceſt Manuſcripts, Coins and other Rarities of that Place; and hence to the ſeveral Schools, in moſt of which the Profeſſors and Lecturers were reading in their ſeveral Faculties, and Diſputations held in the others. His Highneſs was particularly pleas'd to take a Seat in that of Geometry, and to hear a learned Lecture read by Dr. Wallis; and having heard ſome Diſputations in the School of Tongues, and in that of Natural Philoſophy, he was entertain'd in the Muſick School with Vocal and Inſtrumental Muſick; and at ſeven in the Evening was re-conducted to his Lodgings by the Vice-Chancellor and Doctors, who attended him next Morning, and took their leave upon his departing that Day for Windſor, and ſo to London.

And at Oxford.

A few Days after, his Highneſs was carry'd by the King into Hyde-Park to take a View of the three Troops of his Majeſty's Horſe-Guards, and ſeven of the Regiment of Guards commanded by the Earl of Oxford, and fourteen Companies of the Foot-Guards of his Majeſty's Regiment of Guards, all drawn up in excellent Order and Equipage. On the laſt Day of May both the King and the Duke of York were pleas'd to do the Prince the Honour to ſup with him at St. Albans Houſe in St. James's

His Departure and Gratitude.

Fields, and were entertain'd by him with great Splendor and Magnificence. The next Day he took his Leave of the Court, and ſoon after took ſhipping for Holland, after he had continu'd in England ſomewhat above nine Weeks. It is obſervable, that this Prince ever after retain'd ſuch a grateful Remembrance of the generous Uſage he met withal in England, that when he came to be grand Duke of Tuſcany, as he ſhortly after did, and is ſtill, he always receiv'd the Engliſh in his Court after a more free and diſtinguiſhing Manner than any other Nation. And as an Earneſt of his Affection to that Nation, he purpoſely built, and preſented to the King of England two very large Galleys, for a Guard of the Coaſts about Tangier, which prov'd of great Importance to the Service of his Majeſty.

Prince George viſits the Court.

About a Month after the Departure of the Prince of Tuſcany, young Prince George of Denmark, after a ſhort Tour in France, came over to viſit the Court of England; and about the middle of July, was by the Lord Chamberlain of the Houſhold conducted to his Majeſty, and in the Afternoon, with equal Ceremony was introduc'd to the Queen; and after a very honourable Reception at the Court, he return'd again for Denmark.

The opening of the new Theatre at Oxford.

3. On the 9th of July, in this peaceful Year, was open'd the new Theatre of Oxford, the noble and munificent Benefaction of Dr. Sheldon, the preſent Archbiſhop of Canterbury; when the Univerſity in a full and glorious Body, went to take Poſſeſſion of the Place, where after the reading of his Grace's Grant by the Regiſter of the Univerſity, Dr. South the publick Orator made an excellent Speech upon this ſolemn Occaſion. In the Afternoon, being again aſſembled and plac'd in the Theatre, after the Muſick, were pronounc'd ſeveral Panegyricks, the firſt in Proſe, then one in Pindarick Verſe, after that an Oration, then a Dialogue in Poetry; which having continu'd a conſiderable Time, the Auditory was diverted with excellent Muſick, Vocal and Inſtrumental: Which ended, they were again entertain'd with another Oration, follow'd by two Speeches in Poetry, and afterwards by a Diſcourſe in favour of Learning, then a ſhort Speech from the Muſick Gallery, uſhering in two Odes, which were admirably ſung; after which follow'd another Speech, which concluded the Solemnity of that Day. Three Days after this Dedication, there was celebrated a moſt ſplendid Act, ſuch as had not been equal'd in any Perſon's Remembrance.

The D. of Ormond choſen Chancellor there.

Shortly after the good Archbiſhop reſign'd his Place of Chancellor of the Univerſity, in a Reſolution of retiring from publick Buſineſs, and an inward Satisfaction of having ſerv'd the Univerſity with as much Affection and greater Munificence than any of his Predeceſſors. He recommended his Grace the Duke of Ormond to ſucceed him in this honourable Charge, which was readily effected, having a great and juſt Opinion of the Duke's Integrity and Honour: And to ſhew the higher Eſteem of him, he did this at a Juncture, when the Duke was out of Favour at Court; having been lately call'd out of Ireland, and leaving his Son the Lord Oſſory to command in his Abſence, was ſoon ſucceeded by the Lord Roberts, a Perſon of a contrary Party. However his Grace left a Reputation and Intereſt in that Kingdom exceeding great; inſomuch that upon the firſt News of the Change, the Lord-Mayor and Aldermen of Dublin, the Provoſt of the Colledge, the Dean of Chriſt-Church, and moſt of the Clergy attended the Lord Oſſory, to make a ſolemn Acknowledgment ‘ of the numerous Benefits re-‘ ceiv'd by the City from the Government of his Father and himſelf, and the ‘ Protection and Favours which the Church had enjoy'd, as well by their

4. As to the State of Religion, and the Caſe of the Diſſenters, we are here to take Notice that the Removal of the Earl of Clarendon was a great Satisfaction to them, and they had much greater Hopes from his Succeſſor Sir Orlando Bridgeman, who not ſo well knowing the Deſigns of the Court, was more ready to comply with the moderate Proceedings there incourag'd and promoted. It ſeems he had a Deſire to try the Spirit and Principles of the Nonconformiſts, eſpecially the Presbyterians, and was willing to oblige them: In order to this, as Dr. Calamy informs us, Dr. Manton ſent a Letter to Mr. Baxter, intimating that Sir John Baber, who belong'd to the Lord Keeper Bridgeman, told him that his Lordſhip deſir'd to confer with them two about a Compreheuſion and Toleration. On January laſt, they waited upon the Keeper, who freely told them, 'That he had ſent for them to think of a Way of their Reſtora-'tion; and to that End he had ſome Propoſals to offer to them, which 'was for a Comprehenſion for the Presbyterians, and an Indulgence for 'the Independents, and the reſt.' After ſome Debate it was agreed to go firſt upon the Buſineſs of Comprehenſion; upon which Occaſion Dr. Wilkins, and the Keeper's Chaplain Dr. Burton, were conſulted. The Point they moſt differ'd about was Re-Ordination; but at laſt Chief Juſtice Hale ſuggeſted an Expedient to adjuſt the Difference; which was, That thoſe Nonconformiſts that had been Ordain'd before, ſhou'd be admitted into the Miniſtry of the Church of England with this Form of Words, Take thou Legal Authority to preach the Word of God, and adminiſter the Holy Sacraments in any Congregation of England, where thou ſhalt be Lawfully appointed thereunto. It was likewiſe agreed, That Ceremonies ſhou'd be left indifferent, and the Liturgy alter'd, and that thoſe who cou'd not be Comprehended ſhould be Indulg'd; and for Security to the Government, the Names of the Teachers, and all the Members of the Congregations, were to be regiſter'd. Accordingly a Bill was drawn up by the ſaid Chief Juſtice, againſt the enſuing Parliament. But all this met with no Succeſs in Parliament; and the Lord Keeper, who ſet it on Foot, is blam'd for his unexpected Indifferency, and going along the Stream. A warm Writer, who appear'd in 1706, aſſures us, that the Diſſenters at every Meeting making freſh Demands, the Lord Keeper and others grew weary, and deſpair'd of fixing them even to their own Conceſſions; for, adds he, this was the true State of the Caſe, as Sir John Baber inform'd him, who was chiefly concern'd in bringing on the Debate, in which he took much Pains, but finding nothing but Tergiverſation and Cavils, without any Proſpect of a reaſonable Complyance, he gave them over for a Company of Whiffling Fellows, as his Term was, and cou'd never ſince believe There was any thing of Conſcience in all their Pretences, which he really thought before. As for Dr. Burton, who was very fond of, and forward at firſt in the Affair, he at laſt gave a like Account with Sir John Baber, and as much deſpair'd of ever bringing them to Reaſon.

The Caſe of the Diſſenters.

The Keeper endeavours to relieve them.

But in vain.

However it was, the Nonconformiſts had now their open Meetings more full and frequent, and their Intereſt and Figure grew more conſiderable, by reaſon of the King's apparent Inclinations of Indulgence to them; and likewiſe by the particular Countenance and Protection of ſome of the chief Miniſters of State, who agreed in the Patronage of them, tho' on different Principles; ſome out of Humanity and Moderation, and others from a Motive of weakning the Communion of the Eſtabliſh'd Church, or of gaining the more Liberty to the Papiſts. Under theſe Advan-

Advantages, the Diſſenters gradually aſſum'd a Liberty that became very offenſive to thoſe who were by Conſcience in the Communion of the Church of England, and had a Reſpect for the Legal Conſtitution of the Kingdom. And to make themſelves a more formidable Body againſt the Church, the two chief Parties, the Presbyterians and Independents, formerly great Enemies to each other, were now projecting an Union and Coalition. Under this Diſpoſition and Confidence, the whole Body of the Diſſenters appear'd ſo open in trampling upon the Laws and Conſtitution, that it juſtly rais'd not only the Indignation of the Churchmen, but the Jealouſy of all who were honeſtly concern'd for the Government, and the legal Adminiſtration of it. And therefore the better to diſcover their Numbers and Places of publick Meeting, his Grace the Archbiſhop of Canterbury iſſu'd out his Circular Letter, dated June 8. requiring the Biſhop of London and his other Suffragans, to take a very particular Account of them within the reſpective Dioceſes. The Return of this Enquiry ſoon after, made ſuch a ſenſible Impreſſion upon the more diſcerning Part of the Miniſtry, that the King was prevail'd upon to Iſſue out his Proclamation on the 16th of July, declaring, 'Upon ſeveral Informations 'which had been given in to his Majeſty from ſeveral Parts of the King-'dom, that thoſe who ſeparate themſelves from the Eſtabliſh'd Worſhip, 'do meet in greater Numbers than formerly, to ſuch a Degree, as may 'endanger the Publick Peace; by which his Majeſty cou'd not but take 'Notice how far his once and ſtill avow'd Eaſineſs to Indulge Tender 'Conſciences was abuſed thereby; his Majeſty, by the Advice of his Privy-'Council, was pleas'd to order his Proclamation to be iſſu'd out, ſtrictly 'charging and commanding all his Juſtices of the Peace, within the Li-'mits of their ſeveral Juriſdictions, where they ſhall find ſuch Meetings 'to be held, that they put the Laws in Execution for the Suppreſſion 'thereof, and particularly proceed againſt the Preachers, according to 'the Statute made in the 17th of his Majeſty's Reign, intituled, An Act 'for Reſtraining Nonconformiſts from Inhabiting in Corporations.

A Proclamation againſt them.

And yet ſuch was the Unſteadineſs of the Court, or of the King himſelf, that in the Month of September, Sir John Baber was ſent to Dr. Manton to inform him, 'That the King was inclin'd to favour the Nonconfor-'miſts, and that an Addreſs now wou'd be accepted; and that it muſt be 'a thankful Acknowledgment of the Clemency of his Majeſty's Govern-'ment, and the Liberty enjoy'd under it. Whereupon ſuch an Addreſs was ſhortly agreed on, and preſented by Dr. Manton, Dr. Bates, Dr. Jacomb, and Mr. Ennis: And the King was pleas'd to meet them in the Earl of Arlington's Lodgings, receiv'd them very graciouſly, and promis'd them to do his utmoſt to get them Comprehended within the Publick Eſtabliſhment. Which undoubtedly gave them great Hopes and Encouragement, tho' they ſhortly after met with very different Uſage from the two Houſes of Parliament.

Yet privately incourag'd by the King.

VII. 1. The NINTH SESSION of the Second Parliament.

Such was the State of Affairs when, on the 19th Day of October, the Parliament met, after ſeveral Adjournments, and at laſt a Prorogation; having had a long Intermiſſion and Receſs of one Year, five Months, and ten Days; and this made the Ninth Seſſion of the Second and Long Parliament, which is thought to have been deferr'd the longer upon the Account of the laſt Differences between the two Houſes. His Majeſty having aſcended the Throne with the uſual Solemnity and Order in the Houſe of Lords, and being attended by the Houſe of Commons and their Speaker, deliver'd himſelf in this ſhort Speech: 'My Lords and 'Gentlemen, I am very glad to ſee you here at this time; and I hope this 'will be a happy Seſſion: For I have had great Experience of your Af-'fections

'fections and Loyalty to me, and am very confident of the continuance of 'it. It is now almoſt a Year and Half ſince your laſt Sitting; And tho' 'my Debts have preſs'd me much, yet I was unwilling to call for your 'Aſſiſtance till this time: What you gave laſt was wholly employ'd to the 'Navy, and that Extraordinary Fleet for which it was intended. I de-'ſire that you would now take my Debts effectually into your Conſidera-'tion. Something I have to propoſe to you of great Importance, con-'cerning the Uniting of England and Scotland, but it will require ſome 'Length; and I have left That, and ſome other Things, to the Lord 'Keeper to open them more fully to you.

Accordingly the Lord Keeper Bridgeman made the following Speech, which has no Reaſon to be abridg'd: The Lord Keeper's Speech.

'My Lords, and you the Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes of the Houſe of Commons, His Majeſty in his moſt 'gracious Speech hath expreſs'd his great Satisfaction in ſeeing you here 'at this time; and his Hopes of a happy Iſſue of this Meeting: To ob-'tain which, nothing can conduce more than a good Correſpondency and 'Union among your ſelves. He hath Reaſon to believe that you all come 'with the ſame common Affections for the general Good, and therefore 'perſuades himſelf, there will be no Difference between the two Houſes; 'but if there ſhou'd be any ſuch, he earneſtly recommends it to you, that 'by your Moderation and Wiſdom ſuch Expedients may be found out as 'may compoſe them, and that thereby no Delay or Obſtruction be to 'your other Proceedings. His Majeſty hath alſo deſired you to take his 'Debts effectually into Conſideration. I need not mention to you the 'Uneaſineſs of his Condition with that Burden, nor the Inconveniences 'or Miſchiefs which might fall out, if he ſhou'd continue under it. It 'is not unknown to you, that his Majeſty hath been a happy Inſtrument 'by the Treaty at Aix, and by the Triple-Alliance, to procure Peace 'between the two Neighbouring Crowns: The Securing of that Peace '(wherein our own Peace is concern'd, and his Majeſty's Reputation abroad) 'will alſo much depend upon your Kindneſs to him: And therefore he 'hopes you will conſider of how great an Importance it is at this Time, 'That his Majeſty be enabled to bear ſuch a Part in the Affairs of Europe, 'as may contribute moſt to his own Honour, and the Safety, Benefit and 'Glory of this Nation.

'My Lords and Gentlemen, you may remember that upon his Majeſty's 'Recommendation, an Act was lately made for ſettling Freedom and In-'tercourſe of Trade between England and Scotland, which was occaſion'd 'upon Complaints of new Duties impos'd in each Kingdom upon divers 'Commodities of the Growth, Production or Manufacture of the other. 'According to this Act, Commiſſioners were appointed by his Majeſty 'for both Kingdoms to Treat upon that Affair, and they had ſeveral Meet-'ings, which produc'd no Effect, unleſs it were a Conviction of the Diffi-'culty, if not Impoſſibility of ſettling it in any other way than by a nearer 'and more compleat Union of the two Kingdoms. His Majeſty is fully 'perſuaded that nothing can tend more to the Good and Security of both 'Nations, than ſuch an Union; and finds that his Royal Grandfather 'King James, of bleſſed Memory, went ſo far on towards this good Work, 'that by Act of Parliament in the Firſt Year of his Reign, Commiſſio-'ners were authoriz'd to Treat and Conſult with Commiſſioners from 'Scotland concerning it. And in Purſuance of their Treating, in the 'Fourth Year of his Reign, an Act was made for the Repeal of Hoſtile 'Laws, and the Abolition of the Memory of Hoſtility between the two Na-'tions; and after the End of that Seſſion, about the Seventh Year of 'his Reign, it was by the Judges of all the Courts at Weſtminſter-Hall 'ſolemnly adjudg'd in the Caſe of the Poſt Nati, That thoſe who, after ‘ the Deſcent of the Crown to King James, were born in Scotland, were ‘ no Aliens in England; and conſequently were capable not only of Lands, ‘ but all other Immunities, as if they had been born here. By theſe Steps ‘ ſo great an Advance hath been made towards this Union, that his Ma- ‘ jeſty well hopes that what is yet wanting to the perfecting of it, may be ‘ now accompliſh’d: The continuance under the ſame Obedience and ‘ Subjection for near Threeſcore and ſeven Years, having begotten the ‘ ſame common Friends, and common Enemies to both Nations, and taken ‘ off a great Part of thoſe Difficulties which at the firſt ſtood in the Way. ‘ And therefore his Majeſty doth moſt heartily recommend it unto you, ‘ That Commiſſioners may be nominated to Treat and Conſult with Com- ‘ miſſioners from Scotland, concerning this Union. His Majeſty hath gi- ‘ ven Directions to the Earl of Lauderdale, his Commiſſioner for Scot- ‘ land, to make the like Propoſal to the Parliament which is now ſitting ‘ there; and doubts not but upon the Meeting of ſuch Commiſſioners ‘ of both Kingdoms, thoſe Things will be offer’d to your Conſiderations, ‘ in Order to the Union, as ſhall tend to the Honour of his Majeſty, and ‘ the common Good of all his Subjects.

Inſtead of taking theſe Speeches into Conſideration, the Commons pro- ceeded upon other Matters, enquired into the Points of Privileges, with relation to the two Houſes, and were ſtrict in the Examination of the Ac- counts of the Monies expended by the Publick; in the Paſſing of which they found Sir George Carterett, who had the Keeping of ſome of the Books, ſo blameable, that they expell’d him the Houſe. But being much oblig’d with the King’s laſt Proclamation, they ſoon reſolv’d, ‘ That the ‘ humble and hearty Thanks of this Houſe be return’d to the King’s Ma- ‘ jeſty for iſſuing out his Proclamation for putting in Execution the Laws ‘ againſt Nonconformiſts, and for Suppreſſing Conventicles, with the hum- ‘ ble Deſire of this Houſe for his Majeſty’s continuance of the ſame Care ‘ for Suppreſſing of them for the Future. The Concurrence of the Lords being deſir’d, and readily obtained, on the 6th of November both Houſes, in purſuance of this Vote, attended his Majeſty in the Banquetting Houſe in White-Hall, where the Lord Chief Juſtice Vaughan, ſupplying the Room of the Lord-Keeper then indiſpos’d, in the Name of both Houſes return’d his Majeſty the foremention’d Thanks: For which he return’d them this particular Anſwer, ‘ My Lords and Gentlemen, I thank you for this Mark ‘ of your Affection to me: I doubt not of the Continuance and Concur- ‘ rence of it in other Things, as well as in this of my Proclamation: I ‘ recommend to you, That you wou’d well weigh all that I ſay and deſire ‘ in it towards the Welfare and Peace of the Nation; in Order to which, ‘ as I ſhall always be ready to contribute my utmoſt Endeavours, ſo I hope ‘ you will never be failing in yours to enable me to do it.’ After which the Commons appointed a Committee to enquire into the Behaviour of the Diſſenters, who reported, ‘ That there were divers Conventicles ‘ and other Seditious Meetings near the Parliament, where great Num- ‘ bers of Evil Affected Perſons frequently meet; which they conceiv’d, ‘ was not only an Affront to the preſent Government, but alſo of immi- ‘ nent Danger to both Houſes of Parliament, and the Peace of the King- ‘ dom.’ Upon which the whole Houſe made this Declaration and Reſo- lution, That they will adhere to his Majeſty in the Maintenance of the Government of the Church and State, as it is now Eſtabliſh’d, againſt all Enemies whatſoever. Shortly after, Information was given to the Houſe from General Monk, ‘ of the great Reſort of dangerous and diſaffected ‘ Perſons to this Town, and of the Meetings and Endeavours to diſturb ‘ the Publick Peace; and that he had, and wou’d take care what he cou’d ‘ to prevent their Attempts. Upon which the Commons immediately reſolv’d, ſo much a Matter of Religion, as of Safety to the Government.

2. As to Point of Privilege, the Commons not having Satisfaction in the laſt Seſſion, reviv'd the Debate of the Difference between the two Houſes, as it ſtood upon the Caſe of the Eaſt-India Company and Skinner the Merchant; and underſtanding that Sir Samuel Bernardiſton was a particular Sufferer by the Lords in this Caſe, they examin'd him in the Matter, who at the Barr of the Houſe gave them this ſhort Account: 'Mr. Speaker, Sir S. Bernardiſton's Narrative to the Houſe.
'As ſoon as the Commons, according to his Majeſty's Command, had 'Adjourn'd themſelves on the 8th of May, 1668, I was preſently call'd as 'a Delinquent upon my Knees to the Barr of the Lords Houſe, and de'manded What I had to ſay for my ſelf why the Judgment of that
'Houſe ſhou'd not paſs upon me, for having a Hand in, and being one of 'the Contrivers of a Scandalous Libel againſt that Houſe: To which my 'Reply was, That I knew not my ſelf to be concern'd in any Scandalous
'Libel; but true it was, I did deliver a Petition to the Houſe of Com-
'mons in Behalf of the Eaſt-India Company by their Order, being Deputy
'Governour; and I did it out of no other Deſign, than to preſerve the 'Company's Intereſt and Eſtate, according to my Oath, and Duty of my
'Place. Then was I commanded to withdraw, and others were call'd
'in: Soon after ſome of the Lords came to me in their Lobby, and told me
'the Houſe was highly incens'd againſt me; That I ſhould preſently be
'call'd in again; and if I did not then ſubmit my ſelf, and own my Fault,
'I muſt expect the Indignation of the Houſe of Peers to fall upon me.
'And being call'd in again the ſecond Time, it was demanded, What
'further I had to ſay for my ſelf, before Judgment ſhou'd paſs againſt
'me. When repeating my former Diſcourſe, adding, That I had no De-
'ſign to create any Difference between the two Houſes, but to preſerve
'the Company's Eſtate: Yet if I had offended their Lordſhips, I humbly
'begg'd their Pardon. Being then commanded to withdraw again, I 'was afterwards call'd in: And, being upon my Knees, Sentence was pro-
'nounc'd againſt me to pay three Hundred Pounds Fine to his Majeſty,
'and to lye in Cuſtody of the Black Rod till the Money was paid. And
'accordingly, Sir John Eyton, Uſher of the Black Rod, kept me in his Cu-
'ſtody till the 10th of Auguſt following, when at nine at Night, he came 'to me and ſaid, Sir Samuel, I am come to diſcharge you from your Im-
'priſonment, and you may go when, and where you pleaſe. I then de'manded how this unexpected Releaſement came to paſs, and to whom I
'was beholden for the ſame. He reply'd, You are diſcharg'd upon honou- 'rable Terms, but pray ask me no Queſtions, for I muſt make you no An-
'ſwer: Yet if I ſee you to Morrow, after the Houſe is Adjourn'd, I will 'tell you more; there is a Myſtery, but I have ſufficient Authority for
'what I do.

Upon hearing of this, the Houſe fell into a warm Debate about ſome Expedients for ſettling the Difference in Point of Priviledge and Juriſdiction of the two Houſes, which cou'd not be ended that Night; and after that they reſolved to bring in a Bill for that Purpoſe. This appear'd to be a Matter of too great Nicety and Difficulty to be effected in a ſhort Time. However, after Conferences with the Houſe of Lords, they came to theſe five grand Reſolutions. The Commons Reſolves upon it.
'I. That it is an inherent Right of every Commoner of England, to 'prepare and preſent Petitions to the Houſe of Commons in
'Caſe of Grievance, and the Houſe of Commons to receive the

1669. Car. 21 Ref. 10

‘ ſame: In Evidence whereof, it is one of the firſt Works that is done ‘ by the Commons, to appoint a grand Committee to receive Petitions ‘ and Informations of Grievances. II. That it is the undoubted Right ‘ and Priviledge of the Commons to judge and determine concerning ‘ the Nature and Matter of ſuch Petitions, how far they are fit or unfit ‘ to be receiv'd; and that in no Age they found any Perſon preſenting ‘ a Grievance by way of Petition to the Houſe of Commons, and re- ‘ ceiv'd by them, that was ever cenſur'd by the Lords, without Com- ‘ plaint by the Commons. III. That no Court whatſoever hath Power ‘ to judge or cenſure any Petition preſented to the Houſe of Commons, ‘ and receiv'd by them, unleſs tranſmitted from thence, or the Matter ‘ complain'd of by them: And that no Suitors for Juſtice in any inferior ‘ Court, in Law or Equity, are therefore puniſhable Criminally, tho' ‘ untrue, or ſuable by Way of Action in any other Court; but are only ‘ ſubject to a moderate Fine or Ammercement by that Court, unleſs in ‘ ſome Caſes ſpecially provided by Act of Parliament, as Appeals, or the ‘ like. In Caſe Men ſhou'd be puniſhable in other Courts for preſenting ‘ Petitions to the Houſe of Commons, it may deterr his Majeſty's Sub- ‘ jects from ſeeking Redreſs of their Grievances, and fruſtrate the prin- ‘ cipal End for which Parliaments were ordained. IV. Whereas a Pe- ‘ tition from the Eaſt-India Company was preſented to the Houſe by ‘ Sir Samuel Bernardiſton and others, complaining of Grievances therein, ‘ which the Lords have cenſured under the Notion of a Scandalous Pa- ‘ per or Libel: The ſaid Cenſure and Proceeding of the Lords againſt ‘ the ſaid Sir Samuel Bernardiſton, are contrary to, and a Subverſion of ‘ the Rights and Priviledges of the Houſe of Commons, and Liberties of ‘ the Commons of England; And further, no Petition or any Matter de- ‘ pending in the Houſe of Commons, can be taken Notice of by the ‘ Lords, without Breach of Priviledge, unleſs permitted by the Houſe ‘ of Commons. V. That the Continuance upon Record of the Judg- ‘ ment given by the Lords, and complain'd of by the Commons, in the ‘ laſt Seſſion of this Parliament, in the Caſe of Thomas Skinner and the ‘ Eaſt-India Company, is prejudicial to the Rights of the Commons of ‘ England.' In Concluſion they added this further Allegation, ‘ That the ‘ Houſe of Peers, as well as all other Courts, are in all their Judicial ‘ Proceedings to be guided and governed by Law: But if they ſhall give ‘ a wrongful Sentence contrary to Law, and the Party griev'd might not ‘ ſeek Redreſs thereof in full Parliament, and for that End repair to the ‘ Houſe of Commons (who are Part of the Legiſlative Power) That ‘ either they may interpoſe with their Lordſhips for the Reverſal of ſuch ‘ Sentence, or prepare a Bill for that Purpoſe, and for the preventing ‘ the like Grievances for the Time to come; the Conſequence thereof ‘ wou'd plainly be, That their Lordſhips Judicature is boundleſs and a- ‘ bove Law, and that the Party grieved ſhall be without Remedy.' There- fore, as a preſent Remedy, they reſolv'd upon theſe two following Pro- poſitions to be preſented to their Lordſhips: ‘ Firſt, That the Lords be ‘ deſired to vacate the Judgment againſt Sir Samuel Bernardiſton, given ‘ the laſt Seſſion of this preſent Parliament. Secondly, that the Lords be ‘ alſo deſired to vacate the Judgment againſt the Eaſt-India Company, gi- ‘ ven by them the laſt Seſſion of this Parliament.

Theſe Reſolutions ſeem'd to have made no great Impreſſion upon the Lords, who were ever jealous of their Rights in Point of Judicature: But while the Heats were increaſing, on the 11th Day of December, the King by Commiſſion ſuddenly put a Stop to all Proceedings, by Pro- roguing both Houſes to the 14th Day of February next. And thus end- ed the ninth Seſſion, or rather tenth Meeting of the Second and Long Parliament, after it had ſate but a little above ſeven Weeks, without paſ- ſing sing one Act; which was the first Session in this Reign that broke up in this Manner: Only we are to remember that the House of Commons proceeded so far as to vote a Supply of four hundred thousand Pounds, for his Majesty's special Occasions. 1669. Car. 21 Ref. 10

3. Upon the very same Day that the English Parliament met at Westminster, the Parliament of Scotland met at Edinburgh, under the Lord Commissioner, the Earl of Lauderdale, formerly a violent Covenanter, now a zealous Royalist, who was sent over in great Pomp and Splendor to bring about unusual Matters, and particularly the Union of the two Kingdoms. The King wrote a short Letter to them, with the reading of which the Parliament was open'd, and which partly for the Stile's Sake is here inserted: A Parliament in Scotland. The King's Letter.

'My Lords and Gentlemen, We do often reflect 'with Thankfulness and Joy, upon the Goodness of Almighty God, for 'restoring us to our Kingdoms, and them to their former Liberty and 'Peace: And we acknowledge it a farther Instance of God's Goodness, 'that as he hath fill'd our Heart with Kindness towards our Subjects of 'that our Ancient Kingdom, and with a constant Zeal to promote what 'we judge conducible to their Welfare; so he has bless'd us with Re'turns from them of Love, Loyalty, and ready Compliance with our 'Pleasure on all Occasions, most suitable thereunto; of which our late 'Parliament hath given signal Proofs, as well as our other good Subjects. 'And this gives us Confidence, That the earnest Desire we have to ren'der this Island more happy than ever it was in Times past, by settling 'amongst all our good Subjects within the same a mutual Affection that may 'endure to all Posterity, shall meet with a free Concurrence from you 'our Parliament, whom we have call'd together chiefly for this End. 'The Bringing of these two Kingdoms of Scotland and England to as 'close and strict an Union as is possible, is the Means that we propose 'for effectuating thereof: Which as it is the highest and noblest Design 'we can have, for witnessing our Royal Affection to them both; so 'the Accomplishment of it will raise our Satisfaction almost as high as 'our Wishes. For by the Union of the Hearts and Hands of our Peo'ple, not only our Throne shall be strengthen'd, and they have Peace 'and Love settled among them for ever; but we shall have the Glory of 'accomplishing what our Royal Grandfather King James, of ever bless'd 'Memory, attempted, as the greatest Thing he cou'd devise, and where'in he, who was a competent Judge, placed the Happiness of the Crown 'and Kingdoms, and wherein he meant to have gloried as the chiefest 'Action of his Life.

After reading this Letter, the Lord Commissioner Lauderdale made a long Speech to enforce it, in which, among other Things, he let them know, 'That in the first Place his Majesty was resolv'd to maintain the 'true Reformed Protestant Religion, for which he would constantly lay 'out his whole Power and Authority, and wou'd discourage and punish 'all Atheism and Profanities, and all that was contrary to true Religion 'and Godliness. In the next Place he was resolv'd to maintain the an'cient Government by Archbishops and Bishops, as a sure Fence for the 'true Reformed Protestant Religion: A Government most suitable to Mo'narchy; and well might he call it Ancient; for, whosoever wou'd look 'into Antiquity, shou'd find Episcopal Government had continu'd in the 'whole Catholick Church, both East and West, even from the most Pri'mitive and Apostolick Times. In the next Place his Majesty wou'd not 'endure these numerous and unlawful Conventicles, which tend to Sediti'on and Schism; which had been too frequent in some Shires of that King'dom. Then enlarging upon the Benefits of the Union, he concluded. The Parliament shew'd themselves very unanimous, and in a little Time return'd The Substance of the Commissioner's Speech.

a ſuitable Anſwer to the King's Letter, in which they offer'd to his Majeſty the very Nomination of the Commiſſioners to treat for their Kingdom, with his appointing their Number, Quorum, Time and Place of their Meeting: And towards the Concluſion they particularly us'd theſe Words, We do humbly return unto your Majeſty the Offer of our Lives and Fortunes, for the Advancement of your Majeſty's Honour and Greatneſs, and Maintenance of your Royal Authority and Government. Falling upon Buſineſs, they made an Act Aſſerting his Majeſty's Supremacy over all Perſons and in all Cauſes Eccleſiaſtical, to a higher and more effectual Degree than had ever been before Legally declar'd. And they made another Act for the Benefit of Trade by the Naturalization of Strangers within the Kingdom of Scotland; providing, 'That all Strangers of the Proteſtant Religion, who ſhou'd think fit to bring their Eſtates into the ſaid Kingdom, or ſhou'd come to ſet up new Manufactures therein, ſhou'd be received as Native Subjects to all Intents and Purpoſes.

The Parliament's Anſwer.

Lauderdale's Government there.

The enlarging of the King's Power and Grandeur in this Kingdom, was much owing to the Management of the preſent Commiſſioner Lauderdale, who had formerly been as much for depreſſing, as he was now for exalting the Prerogative. From the Time of his Commiſſion the Scots are ſaid to calculate the Date of all the enſuing Inconveniencies in this and the following Reign: For having there undertaken to make the King's Power abſolute and arbitrary, he ſtrain'd the Royal Prerogative to all Kinds of Exceſſes; and aſſum'd to Himſelf a ſort of a lawleſs Adminiſtration of Affairs, the Exerciſe of which was ſuppos'd to be granted to him upon the large Promiſes he had made: And more apprehending other Mens officious Interfering, than diſtruſting his own Abilities, he in Time took care to make himſelf his Majeſty's Sole Informer, as well as his Sole Secretary; and by that Means, not only upon Pretence of the King's Prerogative, the Affairs of Scotland were diſpos'd of in the Court of England, without any Notice taken of the King's Council in Scotland; but ſtrict Obſervation was alſo made of all Scotch Men that came to the Engliſh Court; and to attempt an Addreſs and Acceſs to his Majeſty, otherwiſe than by Lauderdale's Mediation, was to hazard his perpetual Reſentment. By theſe Ways he gradually made himſelf the almoſt only Significant Perſon of the whole Scottiſh Nation; and in Scotland it ſelf procur'd to himſelf that Soveraign Authority, as to name the Privy-Counſellors, to place and remove the Lords of the Seſſion and Exchequer, to grant Gifts and Penſions, to levy and disband Forces, to appoint General Officers, and to tranſact all Matters of Importance.

Royal Favours to the See of Salisbury.

4. But to return to England, and conclude the Year with ſome inferior Matters, we are to take notice, That in a Chapter of the moſt noble Order of the Garter, held at White-Hall on the 19th of November, the Sovereign then declared, 'That the Reaſon of calling this Chapter was to conſider of the Pretenſions of Dr. Seth Ward, Biſhop of Salisbury, exhibited in a Petition concerning the Title and Claim of Himſelf and his Succeſſors to the Office of Chancellor of the moſt noble Order of the Garter, when the ſame ſhou'd become void;' the Biſhop grounding the Equity of his Claim upon a Charter firſt granted by King Edward the Fourth, in the 15th Year of his Reign, unto Richard Beauchamp Biſhop of Salisbury and his Succeſſors for ever; which Charter had been ſince confirm'd under the Great Seal of England by other Kings and Queens, and particularly by the late King Charles the Firſt. Hereupon the Biſhop was order'd to be called in, and to produce his Proofs to make good his Pretenſion; his Lordſhip humbly offer'd an authentick Copy of the Original Charter of King Edward the Fourth, renew'd and confirm'd firm'd by King Charles the Firſt, in the fourth Year of his Reign; which being read, and duely conſider'd, together with the Objections to the contrary, particularly, 'That the Poſſeſſion and Execution of the ſaid 'Office of Chancellor, had been for above a Hundred Years commit-'ted unto Lay-Men;' notwithſtanding which, the Sovereign and Companions, being fully ſatisfy'd with the Juſtneſs of the Biſhop's Claim, grounded upon the foreſaid Charters, and likewiſe concluding, 'That the Re-'turning of the ſaid Office to the Firſt Inſtitution wou'd be for the Ho-'nour and Dignity of that moſt noble Order;' the Sovereign thereupon, with the unanimous Conſent of the Companions then preſent, did Declare and Ordain, 'That the Biſhop of Salisbury, and his Succeſſors 'for ever, ſhou'd have and execute the ſaid Office of Chancellor, and 'receive and enjoy all Rights, Priviledges and Advantages thereunto be-'longing, immediately upon the firſt Vacancy of the ſaid Office. 1669. Car. 21 Ref. 10

This Year was remarkable for the Deaths of ſeveral conſiderable Perſons very different in their Profeſſions, Employments and Characters; of whom we ſhall begin with two eminent Divines, and firſt Dr. Henry King, Biſhop of Chicheſter, educated in Chriſt-Church in Oxford, and from thence he paſs'd through ſeveral Preferments, till in the Year 1641 he was made a Biſhop by the late King at a Time when he endeavour'd to oblige the Parliament, by chuſing Perſons of his avow'd Temper and Moderation: In his younger Days he excell'd in the Studies of Muſick and Poetry, which, with his great Wit and Fancy, render'd his Converſation very acceptable; and afterwards apply'd himſelf to Oratory, Philoſophy and Theology, ſo that at length he well deſerv'd the Miter; and laſt of all left behind him in his Neighbourhood the Title of Epitome of all Honours, Virtues and noble Generoſity; and the Reputation of a Perſon never to be forgotten by his Tenants, and the Poor. The next was Dr. Henry Byam, educated in Exeter Colledge in Oxford, where he ſoon became one of the Ornaments of that Univerſity, and the moſt noted Perſon there for his excellent polite Learning, and his admirable Faculty of Preaching: Removing from thence he became Miniſter of the two Pariſhes of Luckham and Selworthy in Somerſetſhire; where he became a dreadful Sufferer in the Civil Wars, having had four Sons, all Captains, in the King's Service: After a poor obſcure Life, he was at the King's Return reſtor'd to his Livings, but met with no greater Addition, than to be made Canon of Wells and Prebendary of Exeter; tho' his Worth and Abilities were ſo conſpicuous, that, if it had not been for his exceeding Modeſty, he might certainly have been advanc'd to a good Biſhoprick. After theſe two, we may properly mention Mr. Samuel Clarke, an extraordinary Perſon, educated, and for the moſt Part living in the Univerſity of Oxford, where he held that Office call'd Architypographus of the Univerſity, and was made Senior Beadle of the Civil Law, both which Places having after him been united. He was particularly fam'd and diſtinguiſh'd for his indefatigable Induſtry, and his admirable Skill in the Oriental Learning; upon which Account he had a particular Hand in that great and noble Work the Polyglott Bible, for which his Name will be remember'd with Honour to future Ages. A fourth Perſon to be mention'd is Dr. George Bate, a moſt noted Phyſician of his Time, who leaving Oxford, became not only Fellow of the Colledge it ſelf, but likewiſe ſucceſſively chief Phyſician to King Charles the Firſt, and Oliver Cromwell, to the laſt of whom he is ſuppos'd to have given a ſure Doſe; and after that had the ſame Poſt under the preſent King. Beſides his great Skill in his Profeſſion, he is particularly diſtinguiſh'd by his Account of the late Troubles, call'd Elenchus Motuum nuperorum in Anglia, &c. which Latine Hiſtory, tho' written with Severity, and not without without Partiality, has ſeveral notable Paſſages, and ſome Maſterly Stroakes.

The Three next to be remember'd are the honourable Nathaniel Fiennes, Serjeant Wylde, and Mr. William Prynne, all active, tho' not equal Incendiaries towards the late Troubles and Confuſions, and all more than once mention'd in the Second Volume of this Hiſtory. Yet ſomething may be properly ſaid in this Place. The Firſt, Mr. Fiennes, was ſecond Son to the famous Lord Say, and a great Follower of his Steps, and a true Friend to the long Parliament, to whoſe Cauſe he adhered, tho' once condemn'd to Death by them, till the Independents prevail'd, when he took the Engagement, became a Favourite with Cromwell, one of his Privy-Council, one of his Commiſſioners of the Great Seal, one of his Lords, and his principal Tool in promoting his Kingſhip: After the Reſtoration, he retired into the Country, liv'd obſcurely, and dy'd neglected at Newton Tony near Salisbury. The next, Serjeant John Wylde, was as deeply ingag'd in the late Miſeries, as the laſt, but rather ſtill in a more infamous Manner, tho' he never acted much under Cromwell's Government; he being employ'd by the long Parliament to pervert and proſtitute the Law upon all Occaſions: Particularly in 1647, he condemn'd and executed Captain Burley at Wincheſter, for cauſing a Drum to beat for God and King Charles at Newport, declaring he was guilty of Levying War againſt the King; for which he was rewarded with a Thouſand Pounds: About the ſame Time he Acquitted Major Rolph, who had been accus'd, and prov'd guilty of Deſigning to Murder or Poyſon the ſaid King, which he wou'd not allow to be Treaſon; for which he is ſaid to have receiv'd another Thouſand Pounds. After the King's Return, he likewiſe led a cloſe retired Life in the Country, and dy'd at Hampſtead near London. The laſt, Mr. Prynne, was a noted but not excellent Lawyer, who by his Pen ſhew'd himſelf to be one of the moſt indefatigable, as well as voluminous Writers that this or any Age has produc'd, having publiſh'd near two Hundred Treatiſes, of all Sorts and Sizes, againſt all Perſons and Parties, and all Offices and Governments; and moſt of them wrot with all the Rage and Fury, and all the Smoak and Duſt that can well be imagin'd. Being weary with engaging with all his Enemies and Antagoniſts, who ſeldom cared to engage him, he became a conſiderable Inſtrument in the Reſtoration, and being receiv'd into Favour, and put upon vaſt Labours among the Records of the Tower, where he did the moſt Service, he at laſt dy'd at London, a Member of the preſent Parliament. Laſt of all, on the 3d of January, dy'd the famous George Monk, Duke of Albemarle, General of his Majeſty's Forces, &c. in the 62d Year of his Age; a Perſon who, by the Bleſſing of Heaven, had been a wonderful Inſtrument in Reſtoring Peace and Happineſs to three Kingdoms over-run with Miſery and Confuſion; of which his Majeſty retain'd a moſt grateful Remembrance, without any Deviation, or Degree of Jealouſy, which is apt to ariſe in Crown'd Heads upon the Account of extraordinary Obligations. We have already given his Character in the other Volume, therefore ſhall only obſerve, that after he was loaden with Honours, Favours and Acknowledgments, he never ſeem'd once to over-value his Services, but ever preſerv'd himſelf in the Eſteem of the Court, and the Affections of the People. On his Death-Bed, he was often viſited by the King, accompany'd with his Royal Brother; and after his Death had a glorious Funeral ſolemniz'd at his Majeſty's own Charge.

The Duke of Albemarle,

And the Queen Mother.

After all theſe, we muſt not omit the Queen Mother, Henrietta Maria, who having left England four Years to reſide in her Native Country, departed this Life, on the 10th of Auguſt, at her Houſe of Colombe four Leagues from Paris, in the 60th Year of her Age. Her Body was was Embalm'd, and expos'd ſome time in an Apartment within the Caſtle of Colombe with great Ceremonies; her Heart was in a Veſſel of Silver, inſcrib'd with her Name and Title, carry'd in a Mourning Coach to the Monaſtery of Chaliot, attended by the Lord Montague her Almoner and a noble Retinue: Her Body was convey'd to St. Denys, and receiv'd at the Door of the Church by the Religious with Tapers in their Hands, where the grand Almoner made an Oration upon the Subject, which was anſwer'd by the Prior; then the Body was plac'd in a Chappel behind the Quire, and afterwards interr'd with extraordinary Solemnity. This great Queen was thought to be fatal to the Quiet and Happineſs of the Engliſh Nation, and was no more Popular in the Reign of her Son, than ſhe had been in that of her Royal Husband; having had the common Imputation of bringing no leſs Misfortunes on the one Reign, than ſhe had Miſeries on the other. 1669. VIII. 1. The following Year, as well as the laſt, was altogether peaceful and free from Action, but full of ſecret Projects and clandeſtine Deſigns, as in a great Meaſure appear'd in no long Time. The King began to be a little uneaſie at the Temper and Proceedings of his Parliament, and almoſt inſenſibly fell into different Meaſures; yet he ſtood in great need of their Aſſiſtance as to Money, the Want of which threw him under great Difficulties, and made him fly to uncommon Remedies, ſuch as ſeem'd more proper for Acute than Chronical Diſtempers. Upon which Occaſion, Sir William Temple has ſomething very material in a Letter to the Lord Arlington, wrote from the Hague, ſhortly after the Breaking up of the Parliament; in which he ſays thus to his Lordſhip, 'I doubt 'whether we are of a Temper or Humour to reſolve or execute any bold 'or ſmart Propoſitions, how well ſoever conceiv'd, or conducing to our 'Health and good Fortunes: Tho' I queſtion not at all, but God Almighty has given us the Power of going as high as any of our Neighbours. But where-ever it lies, I doubt it will never come out, till his 'Majeſty can find the Means to make an end of all Fencing with the Bents 'of his Parliament, or Diſcontents of his People; and bring his Government into the Credit of having no other Aims or Intereſts but thoſe of 'his Subjects in General, not in Particular; nor conſequently any Eye 'upon their Money, but for thoſe Uſes they are willing to give it. This 'I confeſs is my Opinion upon the whole, and, That all does not conſiſt 'in a Parliament's being prevail'd with to give what is ask'd in Point 'of Money, as I find many People think. I am confident every Man that 'thinks at all, muſt think it were not amiſs if his Majeſty and his Miniſters wou'd once for all conſider and agree upon a general Draught of 'thoſe Ways and Counſels both at home and abroad, as they judge will 'beſt anſwer the great Ends of the King and Kingdom's Safety, Honour 'and Quiet. But if it ſhou'd prove, as I find ſome Men think, That we 'live only by the Day; and content our ſelves to patch up Things as they 'break out, and fly at the Game as it riſes; it is at beſt but like Birding or Hawking, which may furniſh a Diſh or two, but can never keep 'the Houſe.' In Sum, the King's Wants and his Diverſions daily and viſibly increas'd; but with a ſenſible Difference between him and his prevailing Neighbour the French King, of whom an ingenious Country-man of his, in comparing the two Kings, has this remarkable Saying; Our Monarch, though he abandons himſelf to his Pleaſures, yet he can abandon thoſe Pleaſures for his Glory; which the Other, the Engliſh King, cannot. 1669/70.

A French Man's Saying.

Thus Affairs ſtood, when the Parliament, according to Prorogation, met at Weſtminſter on the 14th Day of February, after a ſhort Receſs of not not above two Months, and three Days. This was the Tenth Seſſion of the Second and Long Parliament, of which Meeting there were great Expectations; and the King himſelf at this Time made a more than uſual Appearance, being attended in his Coach by all his Trumpets and Kettle-Drums, at the Head of his new Guards, and follow'd by a long Train of his Horſe-Guards. Being ſeated on his Throne with Crown and Robes on, he ſent for the Commons, and made this following Speech to both Houſes,

The King's Speech to both Houſes.

'My Lords and Gentlemen, I ſent forth my Proclamation that 'there might be a good Appearance at this Meeting, having moſt Confi-'dence in Full Houſes, where the Well-Being of the Church, and all 'other Intereſts of the Crown and Nation are beſt ſecured. When we 'laſt met, I ask'd you a Supply, and I ask it now again with greater In-'ſtance; the Uneaſineſs and Straitneſs of my Affairs cannot continue with-'out very ill Effects to the whole Kingdom: Conſider this ſeriouſly and 'ſpeedily; it is yours and the Kingdom's Intereſt as well as Mine; and 'the ill Conſequence of a Want of an effectual Supply muſt not lye at my 'Door. And that no Miſapprehenſions or Miſtakes touching the Ex-'pences of the laſt War may remain with you, I think fit to let you know, 'That I have fully inform'd my ſelf in that Matter, and do affirm to you, 'That no Part of thoſe Moneys that you gave to me, have been divert-'ed to other Uſes; but on the contrary, beſides all thoſe Supplies, a ve-'ry great Sum hath been rais'd out of my ſtanding Revenue and Credit, 'and a very great Debt contracted, and all for the War. One thing I 'muſt earneſtly recommend to the Prudence of both Houſes, That you 'will not ſuffer any Occaſion of Difference between your Selves to be re-'viv'd; ſince nothing but the Unity of your Minds and Counſels can 'make this Meeting happy either to me or to the Nation. I did recom-'mend to you at our laſt Meeting, the Union of the two Kingdoms; and 'I did the ſame to my Parliament in Scotland; they have made a great 'Step towards it; and I do again ſeriouſly recommend that Matter to 'you. I have directed my Lord Keeper to ſpeak more at large to you.

Accordingly the Lord Keeper Bridgeman made this following Speech, which was the laſt but one he ſpoke in this Place: 'My Lords, and you 'Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes of the Houſe of Commons, At your laſt 'Meeting, his Majeſty did acquaint you with the great Occaſions he had 'for a Supply, and that he had forborn to ask it ſooner, more in Conſi-'deration of giving ſome Time, for the Eaſe of the People after the Bur-'den of the War, than that the Condition of his Affairs cou'd ſo long 'have wanted it: And his Majeſty hath commanded me now, to ſpeak 'more fully and plainly upon this Subject. His Majeſty hath not only by 'his Miniſters, but in his own Royal Perſon examined the Accompts, 'touching the Expences of the laſt War, and hath thought himſelf con-'cern'd to let you know, That all the Supplies which you gave him for 'the War, have been by him apply'd to the War, and no Part of them 'to any other Uſes: Nay ſo far from it, that if the Preparations towards 'the War ſhall be taken to be for the Uſe of the War, as they muſt be; 'a great Part of his own Revenue, to many Hundred Thouſands of Pounds, 'hath been employ'd alſo, and ſwallow'd up in the Charge of the War, 'and what did neceſſarily relate to it. To which may be added the great 'Debts contracted by his Majeſty in the War, and the great Charges in 'the Repairs of the Hulls of his Ships, and putting his Navy into ſuch a 'Condition as it was before. Beſides, his Majeſty thinks it ought to be 'conſider'd, that when the Charges of the War were at the higheſt, the 'inevitable Effects of it, and thoſe other Calamities, which it pleas'd God 'at that time to bring upon us, did make ſo great a Diminution of his 'Revenues, that beſides all other Accidents and Diſadvantages, the Loſs

‘ that he ſuſtain'd in Three Branches of his Revenue, in his Cuſtoms, Exciſe, and Hearth-Money, by Reaſon of the War, the Plague, and the Fire, did amount to little leſs than Six Hundred Thouſand Pounds. Thus you ſee, that tho' your Supplies have been great, yet the Charges occaſion'd by the War, and the Calamities which accompany'd it, have been greater: And that the Debt which is left upon his Majeſty, and which he complains of, hath been contracted by the War, and not by the Diverſion of the Monies deſign'd for it.

‘ His Majeſty hath commanded me to ſay one Thing more to you upon this Subject, That he did not enter into the War upon any private Inclination or Appetite of his own. The firſt ſtep he made towards it, did ariſe from your Advice, and the Promiſes of your Aſſiſtance: But if the Charges and Accidents of the War have out-gone all your Supplies, and left him under the Burden of this Debt, he thinks that as well the Juſtice to your Promiſe, as the Duty and Loyalty you have always ſhew'd him, will oblige you to relieve him from it; and the rather, when you ſhall ſeriouſly conſider, how uneaſy this Burden muſt be to him, and what ill Conſequences the Continuance under it muſt draw upon all his Affairs; in which Particular, you, and every Perſon you repreſent in this Nation, will be concern'd, as well as Himſelf. His Majeſty doth therefore command me in his Name, to deſire you once more, and to conjure you, by that conſtant Duty and Loyalty which you have always expreſs'd to him, and by all the Concernment you have for the Support of the Honour and Safety of his Government, to provide ſuch a Supply for him at this Time, as may bear Proportion to the preſſing Occaſions that he hath, and to the State of his Affairs at home and abroad; and ſo ſpeedily and ſo effectually, as may anſwer the Ends for which he hath deſired it. His Majeſty hath farther commanded me to put you in mind of what was at your laſt Meeting propos'd to you, concerning an Union between the two Kingdoms, and to let you know, that the Parliament of Scotland hath ſince declared to his Majeſty, That ſuch Commiſſioners as his Majeſty ſhall name, ſhall be Authoriz'd on their Part, to treat with Commiſſioners for this Kingdom, upon the Grounds and Conditions of the Union. His Majeſty therefore thought fit now again to recommend it to you, to take that Matter effectually into your Conſideration.

During this ſhort Seſſion of Parliament, which laſted but a little above ſix Weeks, Four Things were chiefly in Debate and Agitation, all which had been mov'd, and brought to ſome Perfection in the laſt Seſſion, namely, the unhappy Difference between the two Houſes, the Proſecution of the Diſſenters, the Union of the two Kingdoms, and the Supplies for his Majeſty's Service. The Firſt being reviv'd to ſuch a Degree as might hazard the Succeſs of the Laſt, the King Himſelf thought fit to interpoſe, and to make a Propoſition of an Expedient; which, after eight Days ſitting, he did to both Houſes ſummon'd to White-Hall, in this following ſhort Speech: ‘ My Lords and Gentlemen, I did very earneſtly recommend to you the other Day, That you wou'd not ſuffer any Differences between your ſelves to be reviv'd; and I think it of ſo great Importance, that I have ſent for you again upon the ſame Subject. I remember very well, that the Caſe of Skinner was firſt ſent by me to the Lords. I have therefore thought my Self concern'd to offer to you what I judge the beſt and ſafeſt Way to put an End to the Differences: I will my Self give preſent Order to raze all Records and Entries of this Matter in the Council Books, and in the Exchequer, and do deſire you to do the like in both Houſes, that no Memory may remain of this Diſpute between you; and then I hope all future Apprehenſions will be 'secured.' This had such an Effect upon the House of Commons, who thought themselves the only Persons aggriev'd, that they immediately Resolv'd, 'That in Obedience to his Majesty's Command in his Speech, 'a Razure or Vacate be made in the Journal of the House of all the 'Matters therein contain'd, relating to the Business of the East-India 'Company and Skinner:' Which was not only done, but they further Resolv'd, 'That the humble Thanks of this House be return'd to his 'Majesty, in the Name of this House, and of all the Commons of Eng- 'land, for his Majesty's gracious Speech, and Favour therein express'd 'to this House, and the Commons of England.' The Lords likewise agreeing in this important Affair, it gave a general Satisfaction; and by Order of the Government the Conclusion was thus represented in the Gazette, on the 22d of February: 'This Day the two Houses of Parli- 'ament did, at his Majesty's gracious Recommendation, come to a happy 'Agreement in the Matter in Difference between them, to the great Joy 'and Content of all that wish well to the Prosperity of his Majesty's Go- 'vernment, and the publick Quiet of this his Kingdom.

It is accepted of.

This Point thus obtain'd, other Matters were more easily manag'd and effected, and particularly their Proceedings against Dissenters of all Kinds. Besides the several Informations that had been given in the last Sessions, concerning the Dangers of unlawful Meetings, the House of Commons were further rous'd by new Complaints against them; and particularly they now receiv'd Information of a dangerous Conventicle lately met in the West, and of treasonable Words there spoken; and that his Majesty had given Order for the Prosecution of the Offenders. Upon a Debate of this Matter, and believing the Dissenters to be a restless Party, they presently resolv'd, 'That the Thanks of this House be re- 'turn'd to his Majesty, for his Care in giving Order to bring the Offen- 'ders to Justice; And that his Majesty wou'd be pleas'd to consider the 'Danger of Conventicles in and near London and Westminster, from the 'Nature of those further Offenders, and to give Order for the speedy 'suppressing them: And likewise, that his Majesty wou'd give Order to 'put the Laws in Execution against Popish Recusants; and that Leave 'be given to bring in a Bill for the more easie and speedy Conviction of 'Popish Recusants.' In this Vote the Lords unanimously join'd; and accordingly, on the 11th of March, they attended the King in the Banqueting-House with the said Vote and Desire, who was pleas'd to declare, That effectual Course shou'd be taken in both Cases.

Resolutions against Dissenters.

After this they proceeded with great Expedition, and several Bills being got ready, on the 11th of April, his Majesty came to the House of Peers, and pass'd these following Bills. 1. An Act for granting his Majesty an Imposition upon all Wines and Vinegar imported between June 1670, and June 1678. 2. An Act for taking away the Benefit of the Clergy from such as steal Cloth from Racks, and such as shall steal or imbezel his Majesty's Ammunition and Stores. 3. An Act for Improvement of Tillage, and the Breed of Cattle. 4. An Act for ascertaining the Measures of Corn and Salt. 5. An Act for the Repairing the Haven and Peers of Great Yarmouth, 6. An additional Act for the better Repairing of High-Ways and Bridges. 7. An Act for the Advancing the Sale of his Majesty's Fee-Farm Rents, and other Rents. 8. An Act to suppress and prevent seditious Conventicles. 9. An Act for settling the Imposition upon Brandy. 10. An Act for authorizing several Commissioners of the Realm of England, to treat with Commissioners of Scotland, for the Weal of both Kingdoms. 11. An additional Act for Rebuilding of the City of London, Uniting of Parishes, and Rebuilding of the Cathedral and Parochial Churches within the said City. 12. An Act to enable his Majesty to make Leases,

Several Acts pass'd.

Leaſes, Grants, and Copies of Offices, Lands, Tenements and Hereditaments, Parcel of his Highneſs's Dutchy of Cornwall, or annex'd to the ſame. Upon paſſing theſe Acts, his Majeſty declar'd that it was his Pleaſure that the Parliament ſhou'd be only adjourn'd, and that to the 24th Day of October; and thus the Tenth Seſſion of this Parliament broke up, after it had ſate a little above ſeven Weeks. 1660. 7°. Car. 22 Reſ. 10

The Parliament breaks up.

Of theſe Acts, that for Supply, being an Impoſition upon Wines, &c. is computed at five hundred and ſixty thouſand Pounds; in which particular Proviſion was made to recompenſe his Royal Highneſs the Duke of York for what Damages he might ſuſtain in his Revenue of Wine-Licences. That Act for the advancing the Sale of the King's Fee-Farm Rents, is believ'd to have rais'd to his Majeſty more than double the Mony of the other. That Act for treating for an Union between the two Kingdoms, was by Concert follow'd in Scotland, with an Act of that Parliament for appointing their Commiſſioners to meet and act in purſuance of that great Affair: But after many Conferences and ſeeming Reſolutions of Agreement in the main Things, they broke off in mutual Jealouſies, and a general Diſſatisfaction. The Author of the Compleat Hiſtory of England ſays, he had heard one of the Scotch Commiſſioners themſelves confeſs it was their own Fault in being over-wiſe and nice in ſmaller Terms of Accommodation. But that Act which made moſt Noiſe, and caus'd greateſt Complaints, was for Suppreſſing and Preventing ſeditious Conventicles: The Subſtance of which Act was, 'If any Perſons 'upwards of ſixteen ſhou'd be preſent at any Aſſembly, Conventicle or 'Meeting, under Colour or Pretence of any Exerciſe of Religion, in 'any other Manner than according to the Liturgy and Practice of the 'Church of England, where there was five Perſons or more beſides thoſe 'of the ſaid Houſhold; in ſuch Caſes the Offenders were to pay five 'Shillings for the firſt Offence, and ten Shillings for the ſecond. And 'the Preachers and Teachers in any ſuch Meetings were to forfeit twen-'ty Pounds for the firſt, and forty for the ſecond Offence. And laſtly, 'thoſe who knowingly ſuffer'd any ſuch Conventicle in their Houſes, 'Barns, Yards, &c. were likewiſe to forfeit twenty Pounds.' This was the laſt penal Statute made directly againſt the Proteſtant Diſſenters, which for a while was warmly put in Execution, and then quite relax'd: And it is obſervable that all the Laws againſt them were made more upon Civil and Political, than upon Moral or Religious Accounts; and always upon ſome freſh Provocation in Reality or Appearance: And what is further remarkable, That all theſe were made and paſs'd contrary to the Deſires and Inclinations of the King, who had always been for Indulgence and Toleration; but knew not how to diſoblige ſuch Lords and Commons, as, in other Matters, were thought too ready to oblige him.

The Act againſt Conventicles.

2. And now the King and his Miniſtry began more and more to practice the Arts of Diſſimulation, of which they were all thought to be Maſters, to enter into dark and foreign Deſigns, and to purſue different Meaſures from thoſe of the preſent Parliament. The Miniſtry was now made up of a more different Species of Perſons than in the firſt and moſt happy Part of the Reign, conſiſting of a heterogeneous Body of Counſellors, a ſelect Cabinet of five noted Men, Clifford, Aſhly, Buckingham, Arlington and Lauderdale, the initial Letters of whoſe Titles caus'd them to obtain that well-known Name of CABAL; which was judg'd to have been ſo ominous to the Engliſh Affairs. The Projects and Proceedings of this remarkable Set of Men prov'd manifeſtly and highly prejudicial to the main Intereſt of the Nation; and conſidering the Secretneſs and Subtlety of their Progreſs, their Deſigns and Characters may be better worth know-knowing from a Foreign Writer, who had ſufficient Information of this and other Matters from the Mouth of King James himſelf. This was Father Orleans, a penetrating Author, from whom the two following Paragraphs are taken, for the Reader's peculiar Information and Curioſity. After diſcourſing of his Royal Highneſs's Concealment of his Religion, he mentions an extraordinary Project that gave him hopes of the Liberty to diſcover it, which was as follows.

An Account of it from a Foreign Writer.

In the Year 1670, the Court of England perceiving that the Republican Spirit was inſenſibly creeping into the Parliament again, ſeriouſly conſider'd how to remedy that Evil that foreboded many more. The Managers of that Enterprize were five Lords, who were call'd the Cabal, as well from the ſtrict Union amongſt them, as from the firſt Letters of their Names compoſing that Word. One of them was the King's Favourite, and the other four his Miniſters, all of them in high Poſts, and of great Intereſt in the Council. Each of theſe five Perſons ſingly was not without his Faults; but join'd all together, compos'd a Body, that was very little defective in compaſſing the greateſt Deſigns. The Duke of Buckingham, the King's Favourite, was very capable of being a Miniſter of State, had his Application anſwer'd his Talents; and had not his Mind, which was excellently endow'd, been diverted from Buſineſs by an extream Degree of Lewdneſs, and ſuch a Reſignation to his Pleaſures, as render'd him trivial, tho' born as fit as any for ſolid Affairs. The Duke of Lauderdale, a Scotch Man, and Secretary of State for that Kingdom, was a ſharp-ſighted Perſon, and a refin'd Politician. The Lord Clifford, afterwards Lord Treaſurer, wanted nothing but a Stage, on which ſound Reaſon and Virtue was more uſual than at this Time in his native Country, to appear ſuperior to the others. The Earl of Arlington, Secretary of State, had the leaſt Genius of the Five; but that was well ſupply'd by his Experience, which had gain'd him great Knowledge in Foreign Affairs. Anthony Aſhly-Cooper, afterwards Earl of Shaftsbury, a famous Actor in the late Troubles of England, was the fitteſt of them to manage any weighty Undertaking, and was the very Soul of this we are ſpeaking of: A vaſt Genius, clear-ſighted, bold, full of Intrigue, equally ſteddy, both on the right and the wrong Side, as long as his Adherents gave him no Occaſion to change; a conſtant Friend, but an implacable Enemy, and the more dangerous, ſince having no Regard to Religion or Conſcience, it was the eaſier for him to contrive Miſchief, as never being daunted by the Multitude or Heinouſneſs of any Crimes, if he thought them neceſſary, either to preſerve himſelf, or deſtroy the Provokers of his Hatred. Such an uncommon Mixture of Counſels muſt needs produce extraordinary Effects; of which the ſame Author gives this following Account.

Their Deſigns.

Theſe Lords, firmly bound to their Maſter by their high Places and Favours, cou'd not without Indignation obſerve what Advances the Republican Spirit, which began to revive again, had caus'd the Parliament to make againſt the Regal Authority. Among others the Triple Alliance, to which the Republican Cabal had forc'd the King againſt his Will, appear'd to them as an audacious Incroachment upon the Prerogative, of which the Conſequences were to be prevented. Fill'd with theſe juſt Reſentments, they perſwaded the King to be as abſolute as he was intituled by the Crown, and the Laws of the Realm; to confine the Parliament to the Bounds preſcrib'd them by immemorial Cuſtom; and to take Care, that a Mixture of Common-Wealth with Monarchy, introduc'd by Violence and Subjects Uſurpations, did not produce a monſtrous Anarchy, which might again expoſe England to that dreadful Confuſion, from which it was ſcarce recover'd. To effect all this, it was neceſſary to have have a War, which might furniſh the King with a Pretence to raiſe an Army; and this they had againſt the Dutch, and the more favourable, becauſe the Honour and the Intereſt of the Engliſh Nation were equally concern'd; for the old Controverſy about the Flag began to be renew'd, and the Eaſt-India Merchants daily complain'd that they were unfairly treated by the Dutch. This, I ſay, was the Pretence; but the real Motive for pitching upon this War rather than any other, was the cloſe Correſpondence between the Engliſh Republicans and thoſe of Holland; the latter inceſſantly inſtilling into the Minds of the former that Love of Liberty they ſo highly valu'd; to make them out of love with Monarchy, and to excite them to throw off the Yoke of Legal Dominion, being always ready to ſupport any Faction that ſhou'd attack it, &c. Thus far the French Jeſuit; whoſe ſhort Account of the Cabal ſeems more material than moſt of the Engliſh Pamphlets and Secret Hiſtories that have been wrote upon that Occaſion. 1670. 3. To carry on theſe or the like Deſigns, about the middle of May, the French King ſent over a prevailing Ambaſſadreſs, the Dutcheſs of Orleans, under the Pretence of making a Viſit to her two Royal Brothers, the King and the Duke of York; while he himſelf went to view the ſtupendous Works that were raiſing at his famous Port of Dunkirk. Upon hearing of her intended Viſit, his Majeſty not only ſent a Squadron of Men of War to attend her, but he himſelf, with his Brother the Duke of York, Prince Rupert, the Duke of Monmouth, and other Perſons of Quality, rode Poſt to meet her at Dover; being ſhortly after follow'd by the Queen her ſelf, the Dutcheſs of York, and other Ladies of the higheſt Quality. On the 15th of May, her Royal Highneſs, the Dutcheſs of Orleance, arriv'd at Dover, attended amongſt other of the French Nobility by the Marſhal de Pleſſis Praſlin, and his Brother the Biſhop of Tournay, Madam de Pleſſis the Marſhal's Son's Lady, and the Counteſs de Gramont. At her Highneſs's Approach, the King was pleas'd to meet her on the Road, and conduct her into the Town, and to treat and entertain her with all poſſible Demonſtrations of Joy and Affection. In this Place the Court continu'd for above a Fortnight in great Splendor, where Joy, Mirth and Pleaſure reign'd almoſt without Abatement or Intermiſſion; and Love and Gallantry was intermixt with all the Entertainments of Comedies, Masks, Muſick, Banquettings, and all kind of Diverſions. While the Court continu'd here, the Lord Buckhurſt was ſent from the King, and Mr. Thynne from his Royal Highneſs the Duke, to compliment his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty at his Arrival at Dunkirk. Shortly after, Madam the Dutcheſs and her Train, without removing to any other Town, embark'd for France, and never ſaw England any more.

The King meets her at Dover.

Innumerable Conjectures have been made concerning this extraordinary Meeting of the King and his Siſter; and many Things have been wrote upon it, ſome ſevere, ſome ſcandalous, and moſt of them uncertain, which have taken up much Room in Libels and Secret Hiſtories. The Negotiation was for a long Time a Secret, and the firſt Diſcoveries that were made of it, proceeded rather from Conſequences, than from real Proofs. After all the Searches, we find the Account that was moſt Authentick, and moſt to be credited, was publiſh'd in the Year 1682, by the Abbot Primi, a Perſon employ'd by Monſieur Colbert Himſelf, who allow'd him a Penſion for collecting his Memoirs. To prevent Miſunderſtanding, we ſhall give it in the Abbot's own Words: 'Colbert de Croiſſy, 'Ambaſſador from France to the Court of England, after having ſet forth 'to the King of England all the Reaſons he had to be diſſatisfy'd with the

'the Dutch; after reminding him of the Medals in which They had at'tributed to themſelves all the Honour of the Peace of Aix la Chapel-
'le, and treated the Mediation of England with ſo much Contempt; He
'at laſt gave him to know, That the Time was come of being reveng'd up-
'on a Nation that had ſo little Reſpect for Kings, and he cou'd never
'meet a more favourable Opportunity, ſince ſeveral German Princes had
'already enter'd into the Confederacy; and the King of France was ſtrong
'and powerful enough to be able to aſſure his Allies, that all due Satisfa- 'ction ſhou'd be made to their Glory and Intereſt in the Sequel of this 'War. Upon this Repreſentation the King of England ſign'd a private 'Treaty with France: And to give him further Aſſurances upon the Mat'ter, Henrietta of England, Dutcheſs of Orleans, a Princeſs whoſe Wit
'and Capacity was equal to her Beauty, Siſter to the King of England,
'and Siſter-in-law to the King of France, croſs'd over to England in '1670, and in the Name of the moſt Chriſtian King made a Propoſal to
'her Royal Brother, of Inſuring him an abſolute Authority over his Par'liament, and Re-eſtabliſhing the Catholick Religion in the three King'doms of England, Scotland and Ireland. But ſhe ſaid, That in Order
'to compaſs that End, there was a Neceſſity above all Things of lower-
'ing the Pride and Power of the Dutch, who plac'd their whole Study in
'Sowing and Fomenting Diviſion among their Neighbours, and of Re-
'ducing that State to the narrow Compaſs of the Province of Holland,
'of which the Prince of Orange ſhou'd be Soveraign, or at leaſt perpe-
'tual Stadtholder: That the Execution of this Project might be eaſily
'accompliſh'd by two powerful Princes ſtrictly ally'd; That by this
'Scheme the King of England ſhou'd have Zealand for a Retreat in Caſe
'of Neceſſity, and the reſt of the Netherlands ſhou'd remain in the Hands 'of the King of France, if he cou'd make himſelf Maſter of it. In Confirmation of what is written by the Abbot, we may add what Father Orleans, the other Writer before mention'd, ſays upon this Occaſion: 'The Eng-
'liſh Miniſters enter'd upon a Treaty with thoſe in France, in Order to 'conclude an Alliance between the two Crowns, that might help to 'promote their Deſigns. Monſieur Colbert de Croiſſy treated in England,
'and the Duke of Buckingham in France: Madam, the late Dutcheſs of 'Orleans concluded it, when ſhe made that Myſterious Voyage beyond
'the Sea.' However ſhe left behind her a beautiful Attendant, Madam Queroualle, commonly call'd Carewell, of a Family in Low Bretaign, who prov'd the great Object of the King's Affection and the Nation's Hatred, and ſoon after the inchanting and intriguing Dutcheſs of Portſ- mouth.

The French King appear'd highly pleas'd with his Siſter's Return and Management, but her Stay in England having been longer than Monſieur her Husband allow'd or expected, it rais'd ſome unaccountable Jealouſy, or at leaſt Diſcontent in him; and it ſeem'd plainly owing to his unkind Reception of her, that in her full Strength and Health, and but twenty ſix Years of Age, She was hurry'd out of the World within a few Days after her Return. Moſt Writers take Notice of the Manner of her Death, which has given great Suſpicions to the World: On the 29th of June, N. S. Madame having eaten very well at Dinner, and ſo continnu'd for ſome Hours, about four in the Afternoon ſhe call'd for a Glaſs of Succory Water, which ſhe us'd to take every Day about that Hour;
and having drunk it off, complain'd that it was very bitter, and preſently after began to find her ſelf ill, and fell into dreadful Fits of the Cholick; upon which ſhe ſaid, She was ſure ſhe ſhou'd dye, and immediately ſent for her Confeſſor, and paſs'd through all the Forms of the Romiſh Church.
The News of her ſudden Illneſs was immediately diſpatcht from St. Clou, where

where she lay, to Versailles, and occasion'd the King's hastning to her, who arriv'd about eight that Night, with his chief Physician, who began to comfort her with an Assurance That her Cholick cou'd not easily carry away a Person of her Age. But she persisted in declaring she shou'd die, and first spoke a good while softly to the King, and then afterwards aloud, That she had no Regret at her Death, but only by so hard a Separation she must lose his Majesty's Friendship and good Graces, which he had always express'd to her. She spoke to Monsieur her Husband in the same Terms about her Willingness to die, which, she said, was the more, because she had nothing to reproach her self of in her Conduct towards Him. The King left her about Ten, his Physician assuring him, She cou'd not die of a Cholick, or at least not so suddenly as she apprehended: But her Illness and Pain increasing, she expired about two in the Morning, leaving a general Sadness throughout the whole Court. Her Body being open'd in the Presence of several Persons, and among them the English Ambassador, they cou'd find no manner of Cause for so sudden a Death. This gave a strong Suspicion of Villany, especially to Sir Thomas Armstrong, who upon the News of her Death immediately went to St. Clou, and tho' he got thither by Six in the same Morning, the Corps smelt so strong, as he said, that he cou'd hardly bear the Room. 1670. The Concern of the King.

The News of this was so surprizing, that it caus'd a sort of a Consternation in the Court of England, and a more than ordinary Emotion in the King, who lov'd his Sister with all imaginable Tenderness. The first Account was brought to him by Sir Thomas Armstrong, who rod Post for England, and freely gave him his Opinion upon the whole. Whereupon the King fell into Tears, and express'd himself very passionately against Monsieur his Brother, and said He was a ——! But prithee, Tom, don't speak of it. Immediately after, the Marquess of Bellefonds came from France publickly to notify this Loss, which he did after the softest Manner that cou'd be. The King now having resolv'd that Nothing shou'd disturb the Measures lately taken between the two Courts, began to cool; and shortly after sent the Duke of Buckingham with the Character of his Ambassador to the Court of France, in Appearance to condole with them for the Death of the Dutchess, but chiefly to confirm the late Agreement made at Dover, and to concert the Methods of pursuing the Design. The Duke was receiv'd at Court with all possible Demonstrations of Esteem and Favour; his noble Presence and graceful Mien was very acceptable, and even captivating to many that beheld him, and the King himself took particular Notice of him, and said He was almost the only English Gentleman he had seen. All the Forces about Paris were drawn up and exercis'd in his Presence; Masks and Balls, Comedies and Operas were prepared, and likewise a Representation of a Sea Fight in the Canal at Versailles, all for his Diversion; and the King gave him divers rich Presents, and made a publick Feast on St. Lewis's Day, principally on his Account. Soon after his Arrival, Things were carry'd on with Vigour; a hundred Thousand Pistoles were said to be remitted to Monsieur Colbert in England for secret Service; the French Army was order'd to break up, and to march towards the new Conquests; and many began to suspect the League between France and England, and of their Intentions to employ their joynt Forces against the United Provinces.

The Duke of Buckingham's Reception in France.

The Dutch began to be allarm'd at these Preparations, and De Wit himself intimated to Sir William Temple his Apprehension of the Embassy of the Duke of Buckingham to Paris, which he cou'd not think was to see the Country, or learn the Language. The Holland Ambassador at Paris went in great Haste to Monsieur Lionne, and desir'd to be inform'd

Whether

Whether the French Army was to be employ'd againſt his Maſters. But the Secretary aſſur'd him there was no Ground for any ſuch Apprehenſions, and that if thoſe Troops were us'd in an Expedition, the Storm wou'd fall far enough from their Territories. And accordingly the Marſhal de Crequi, at the Head of twenty five Thouſand Men, enter'd the Dukedom of Lorrain, ſeiz'd Nancy, and all the Places that lay in his Way, and was within Half an Hour of Surprizing the Duke's Perſon at Eſpinal. For the Reaſon of this ſudden Invaſion the French King pretended, 'That the Duke of Lorrain had, contrary to a late Treaty, fortify'd 'ſome of his own Towns, and had endeavour'd in a Clandeſtine Manner 'to be admitted into the Triple Alliance; declaring That he intended 'not to retain the Dutchy in his Poſſeſſion, but deſign'd to put it into 'the Hands of ſome other Perſon of the Lorrain Family, who ſhou'd 'be more worthy of it.' In the mean Time the Mareſchal de Crequi having driven the Duke out of his Territories, publiſh'd an Order, forbidding his Subjects to yield him Obedience; commanding thoſe in Arms for him, to quit his Service, and put themſelves into that of the King, and requiring all Orders of Men there to do Homage and ſwear Allegiance to him, under Pain of Death and Confiſcation of Eſtate. The Duke of Lorrain being thus diſpoſſeſs'd of his Dominions, without any preceding Declaration of War, fill'd all Europe with his Complaints, and diſpatcht a Miniſter to the King of England to deſire his good Offices with the French King in this Conjuncture, which he cou'd not eaſily doubt of, on the Account of the Obligations he had formerly laid upon him, in offering to ſerve him with his Perſon and Troops during the Time of his Exile. But inſtead of the Favour expected, his Miniſter receiv'd no other Anſwer, than He was ſorry for what had happen'd, and that the preſent Violence, like the Miſchiefs of a ſudden Inundation, muſt be endured at this Time.

The Continuation of the TENTH SESSION of Parliament.

4. In this State of Affairs, ſoon after the Return of the Duke of Buckingham, the Parliament met on the 24th of October, according to Adjournment. But before this Meeting, we are to remember, that the King, as apprehenſive of the Diſcontents of his People, iſſu'd out a Proclamation, commanding all Officers and Soldiers ſerving in any of the Armies of the late Uſurped Powers, not having a conſtant Habitation, to depart out of the Cities of London and Weſtminſter, and not to return again, or come within twenty Miles, till after the 10th Day of December next, and in the mean time to carry no Sword, Piſtol, or any other Arms. This Meeting was the Continuation of the Tenth Seſſion of the Second and long Parliament; at the Opening of which the King made a very ſhort Speech, and referr'd all to the Lord Keeper Bridgeman. This Miniſter was not let into any of the Secrets of the Cabal, and knew no more of their Deſigns than what was neceſſary to his Office; and therefore was the fitter to deliver a Speech ſo little conſiſtent with the late private Intriegues. This Speech was thought fit to be ſuppreſs'd, and not ſuffer'd to be printed, nor is it in the Journals of the Houſe of Commons; therefore it is the more neceſſary to have it in full Length here, without any Abridgment: 'My Lords, and you the Knights, Citizens and Burgeſſes of the Houſe of Commons, When the two Houſes 'were laſt Adjourn'd, this Day, as you know, was prefix'd for our Meeting again, the Proclamation ſince iſſu'd requiring all your Attendance 'at the ſame Time, ſhewing not only his Majeſty's Belief that his Buſineſs will thrive beſt when the Houſes are fulleſt, but the Importance 'alſo of the Affairs, for which you are ſo called; and Important they are. 'You cannot be ignorant of the great Forces, both for Land and Sea Service,

‘ Service, which our Neighbours of France and the Low-Countries have ‘ new raiſed, and have now in actual Pay, nor of the great Preparations
‘ they continue to make in Levying of Men, Building of Ships, filling ‘ their Magazines and Stores with immenſe Quantities of all Sorts of ‘ Warlike Proviſions. Since the Beginning of the laſt Dutch War, the ‘ French have increas'd the Greatneſs and Number of their Ships ſo ‘ much, that their Strength by Sea is thrice as much as it was before.
‘ And ſince the End of it, the Dutch have been very diligent alſo in Aug‘ menting their Fleets. In this Conjuncture, when our Neighbours arm
‘ ſo potently, even common Prudence requires that his Majeſty ſhou'd ‘ make ſome ſuitable Preparations; that he may at leaſt keep pace with ‘ his Neighbours, if not out-go them in Number and Strength of Ship‘ ping. For this being an Iſland, both our Safety, our Trade, our Being,
‘ and our Well-being depend upon our Forces at Sea. His Majeſty there‘ fore, of his Princely Care for the Good of his People, hath given or‘ der for the Fitting out Fifty Sail of the greateſt Ships, againſt the Spring, ‘ beſides thoſe which are to be for Security of our Merchants in the ‘ Mediterranean; as foreſeeing, if he ſhou'd not have a conſiderable ‘ Fleet, while his Neighbours have ſuch Forces both at Land and Sea, ‘ Temptation might be given to thoſe who ſeem not now to intend it, to ‘ give us an Affront, at leaſt, if not to do us Miſchief. To which may ‘ be added; That his Majeſty, by the Leagues he hath made for the com‘ mon Peace of Chriſtendom, and the Good of his Kingdoms, is oblig'd ‘ to a certain Number of Forces in caſe of Infraction thereof; as alſo for ‘ the Aſſiſtance of ſome of his Neighbours, in caſe of Invaſion. And ‘ his Majeſty wou'd be in a very ill Condition to perform his Part of ‘ the Leagues, if (while the Clouds are gathering ſo thick about us) he ‘ ſhou'd, in hopes that the Wind wou'd diſperſe them, omit to provide ‘ againſt the Storm.

‘ My Lords and Gentlemen, Having nam'd the Leagues made by his ‘ Majeſty, I think it neceſſary to put you in Mind, That ſince the Cloſe
‘ of the late War, his Majeſty hath made ſeveral Leagues, to his own ‘ Honour, and infinite Advantage to the Nation: One, known by the 1.
‘ Name of the Triple Alliance, wherein his Majeſty, the Crown of Swe- ‘ den, and the States of the United Provinces, are engag'd to preſerve
‘ the Treaty of Aix-la-Chapelle, concerning a Peace between the two ‘ warring Princes; which Peace produc'd that Effect, That it quench'd
‘ the Fire which was ready to have ſet all Chriſtendom in a Flame; and be-‘ ſides other great Benefits by it, which ſhe ſtill enjoys, gave Opportuni‘ ty to tranſmit thoſe Forces againſt the Infidels, which wou'd otherwiſe ‘ have been imbrued in Chriſtian Blood. Another, between his Majeſty 2.
‘ and the ſaid States for a mutual Aſſiſtance with a certain Number of ‘ Men and Ships, in caſe of Invaſion by any others. Another, between 3.
‘ his Majeſty and the Duke of Savoy, Eſtabliſhing a Free Trade for his ‘ Majeſty's Subjects at Villa Franca, a Port of his own upon the Mediter- ‘ ranean, and through the Dominions of that Prince; and thereby open‘ ing a Paſſage to a rich Part of Italy, and Part of Germany, which will ‘ be of a very great Advantage for the Vending of Cloth, and other our ‘ home Commodities, bringing back Silk, and other Materials for Manu‘ factures here. Another, between his Majeſty and the King of Denmark, 4.
‘ whereby thoſe other Impoſitions that were lately laid upon our Trade there,
‘ are taken off, and as great Priviledges granted to our Merchants, as ever
‘ they had in former Times, or as the Subjects of any other Prince or State do ‘ now enjoy. Another, upon a Treaty of Commerce with Spain, whereby 5.
‘ there is not only a Ceſſation and giving up to his Majeſty of all their ‘ Pretenſions to Jamaica, and other Iſlands and Countries in the Weſt-

1670. Car. 22 Ref. 11

'Indies, in the Poſſeſſion of his Majeſty or his Subjects, but withal, 'free Liberty is given to his Majeſty's Subjects to enter their Ports for 'Victuals and Water, and Safety of Harbour, and Return, if Storm or 'other Accidents bring them thither; Priviledges which were never be-'fore granted by them to the Engliſh or any Others. Not to mention 'the Leagues formerly made with Sweden and Portugal, and the Ad-'vantages which we enjoy thereby; nor thoſe Treaties now depending 'between his Majeſty and France, or his Majeſty and the States of the 'United Provinces touching Commerce; wherein his Majeſty will have 'a ſingular Regard to the Honour of this Nation, and alſo to the Trade 'of it, which never was greater than now it is. In a Word, almoſt all 'the Princes of Europe do ſeek his Majeſty's Friendſhip, as acknow-'ledging they cannot Secure, much leſs Improve their preſent Condition 'without it.

'My Lords and Gentlemen, His Majeſty is confident that you will not 'be contented to ſee him depriv'd of all the Advantages which he might 'procure hereby to his own Kingdoms, nay, even to all Chriſtendom, in 'the Repoſe and Quiet of it. That you will not be content alone to ſee 'your Neighbours ſtrengthening Themſelves in Shipping, ſo much more 'than they were before, and at home to ſee the Government ſtrugling 'every Year with Difficulties; and not able to keep up our Navies equal 'with Theirs. He finds that by his Accounts from the Year 1660, to 'the late War, the ordinary Charge of the Fleet communibus Annis, came 'to about five hundred Thouſand Pounds a Year, and it cannot be ſup-'ported with leſs. If that Particular alone takes up ſo much, add to it 'the other conſtant Charges of the Government, and the Revenue '(although the Commiſſioners of the Treaſury have manag'd it with all 'imaginable Thrift) will in no degree ſuffice to take off the Debts 'due upon Intereſt, much leſs give him a Fund for the ſetting out of 'this Fleet, which by common Eſtimation thereof, cannot coſt leſs 'than eight hundred Thouſand Pounds. His Majeſty in his moſt graci-'ous Speech hath expreſs'd the great Senſe he hath of your Zeal and Af-'fection for him, and as he will ever retain a grateful Memory of your 'former Readineſs to ſupply him in all Exigencies, ſo he doth with par-'ticular Thanks acknowledge your Frank and Chearful Gift of the new 'Duty upon Wines, at your laſt Meeting: But the ſame is likely to fall 'very ſhort in Value of what it was conceiv'd to be worth; and ſhou'd 'it have anſwer'd Expectation, yet far too ſhort to eaſe and help him 'upon theſe Occaſions. And therefore ſuch a Supply as may enable him 'to take off his Debts upon Intereſt, and to ſet out this Fleet againſt the 'Spring, is that which he deſires from you, and recommends it to you, as 'that which concerns the Honour and Support of the Government, and 'the Welfare and Safety of your Selves, and the whole Kingdom. Now, 'my Lords and Gentlemen, you may perceive by what his Majeſty hath 'already ſaid, that he holds it requiſite that an End be put to this Meet-'ing before Chriſtmaſs. It is ſo, not only in reference to the Preparation 'for the Fleet, which muſt be in readineſs in the Spring, but alſo to the 'Seaſon of the Year. It is a Time when you wou'd be willing to be in 'your Countries, and your Neighbours wou'd be glad to ſee you there, 'and partake of your Hoſpitality and Charity, and you thereby indear 'your Selves to them, and keep up that Intereſt and Power among them, 'which is neceſſary for the Service of your King and Country; and a 'Receſs at that Time, leaving your Buſineſs unfiniſh'd till your Return, 'cannot either be convenient for You, or ſuitable to the Condition of 'his Majeſty's Affairs, which requires your Speedy as well as Affectionate 'Conſideration.

1670. Car. 22 Reſ. 11

This plauſible Speech, fill'd with ſo many Leagues and Treaties, Debts and Difficulties, had ſuch a ſenſible Effect upon the Houſe of Commons, who took all for granted, that they ſhew'd themſelves ready to give with both Hands, and, after a ſhort Adjournment, chearfully voted, 'That 'his Majeſty ſhou'd be ſupply'd proportionably to his preſent Occaſions.' Accordingly they went upon Ways and Means of all Sorts, and in a ſhort Time began to form three ſeveral Mony-Bills; the Firſt was for raiſing eight hundred thouſand Pounds by Way of Subſidies upon Real and Perſonal Eſtates: The Second was an Additional Exciſe upon Beer, Ale, &c. for ſix Years; and the laſt was for laying Impoſitions on Proceedings at Law, which was to continue nine Years. In managing of theſe, they proceeded with Unanimity and good Temper till near Chriſtmaſs, when they had a ſhort Receſs: Only they were a little interrupted and diſcompos'd by an Affair of a different Nature, relating to Sir Samuel Sterling, the laſt Lord Mayor of London, and Sir Joſeph Sheldon, and Sir Andrew King, with others of the Lieutenancy of the City, who had committed two Gentlemen to Priſon, Mr. Hayes and Mr. Jekell, for attempting to bribe the Magiſtrates in Caſe of the Act againſt Conventicles. The Matter being brought before the Houſe of Commons, and debated, it was thus Reſolv'd, 'That this Houſe doth give Approbation to what was 'done by the late Lord Mayor, Sir Samuel Sterling, and the Lieutenancy 'of London, in committing Mr. Hayes and Mr. Jekell; and that it was 'done in order to the Preſervation of the King, and Peace of the King-'dom.' Notwithſtanding this Vote, Mr. Jekell ſoon after ventur'd to ſue Sir Andrew King at Law; of which Information being given to the Commons, they fell into a Heat, and Reſolv'd, 'That Mr. Jekell be 'ſent for in the Cuſtody of the Serjeant at Arms, to anſwer his Contempt 'in proſecuting his Suit at Law againſt Sir Andrew King, after the Vote 'of this Houſe, whereby it was declared, That the Commitment of the 'ſaid Mr. Jekell was in order to the Preſervation of the King, and 'Peace of the Kingdom.' And further, they order'd Mr. Burton, Counſel for Mr. Jekell, and Mr. Ogden his Attorney, to be likewiſe ſent for in Cuſtody of the Serjeant at Arms, for their Contempt in moving and acting for Mr. Jekell, after the forementiond Vote. Being all brought to the Bar of the Houſe, and making a full Submiſſion, they were diſcharg'd; and ſo on the 20th of December, before they had finiſh'd any Bills, the Commons roſe up in their former good Humour, and had a Receſs for about a Month.

The Commons are very bountiful.

They have a ſhort Receſs.

5. Shortly after the Sitting of the Parliament, the Nation was entertain'd with the News of the Arrival of his Majeſty's Nephew the Prince of Orange from Holland: who, not long before at eighteen Years of Age, had been choſen firſt Nobleman of Zealand, and began now to ſhew himſelf very forward, and to deſerve the Character of a Prince of extraordinary Hopes. About the Beginning of June he had been there introduc'd into the Council of State, and that with all the pleaſing Circumſtances of being ineffectualy oppos'd, and of his prevailing by the Affections of the People. At this happy Juncture he reſolv'd upon a Journey into England; but before he ſet out, he was very earneſt with Sir William Temple, the Engliſh Ambaſſador, to have his Opinion, whether he was likely to procure any Satisfaction in his Pretenſions there; alledging, That all his beſt Friends in Holland were of Opinion, That in Caſe that ſhou'd wholly fail him, his Journey wou'd prove of great Prejudice to his Affairs at home, by letting his Friends ſee how little he was conſider'd by his Uncle, whoſe Countenance wou'd be a great Support to him in the Courſe of his Fortunes. Theſe Pretenſions of his were ſuppos'd to be ſome Mony owing from England upon the Account of his Mother's Fortune; for the Ambaſſador's Anſwer to him upon this Subject was, That he was wholly ignorant of all his Majeſty's Affairs, beſides what related to that Country, and particularly of the preſent State of the Revenue, or how much the late Supplies had contributed towards the Eaſe of it. Upon which the Prince ſeem'd very deſirous that Sir William ſhou'd touch on it to one of the chief Miniſters in England, ſo as to receive his Thoughts upon it before he began his Journey. This Motion was thought chiefly to have proceeded from the Princeſs Dowager, who ſome Weeks before poſitively declared her Opinion to Sir William upon that Matter to the ſame Effect, and for ſome Time perſiſted in it. This private Affair might be one Motive, and the more profeſs'd Reaſon of his going into England; but it was not to be doubted, but that even then, he had ſome more publick Thoughts and Cares upon him, relating to his own Honour and Hereditary Claims, the Intereſt of his Country, and the common Good of Europe, which now ſeem'd to be near a Criſis.

But whatever were the main Expectations and Deſigns of his Journey, it was diſcourag'd and protracted from Time to Time, and at laſt deferr'd to the Sitting of the Engliſh Parliament. At length with a Spirit not eaſily diverted from any Reſolution, he embark'd at the Bril in one of his Majeſty's Yatches, that waited there for him, and arriv'd in England on the 29th Day of October. He immediately took Poſt for Canterbury, and lay that Night at Rocheſter; and the next Morning arriving at Grave's-End, he was attended by Sir Charles Cotterel, Maſter of the Ceremonies, with his Majeſty's Barges, and ſo conducted to White-Hall; where landing, he was receiv'd at the Foot of the Stairs by the Lord Chamberlain, and conducted to the Preſence of the King and Queen, who receiv'd him with all poſſible Demonſtrations of Joy and Affection, as likewiſe did their Royal Highneſſes, the Duke and Dutcheſs, to whom he was in like Manner conducted, and thence to the Apartment prepared for him in the Cock-Pit. A few Days after his Arrival, the Lord Mayor, Sheriffs and Aldermen of London came and complimented his Highneſs upon this pleaſing Occaſion, as if preſaging his being the future Reſtorer and Preſerver of their Rights and Liberties. After he had been a few Weeks at the Court, the Lord Arlington, in one of his Letters to Sir William Godolphin Ambaſſador in Spain, has theſe Words: 'The Prince of Orange hath been now theſe three Weeks amongſt us, much to the Satisfaction of the King, and all that have ſeen him; being a young Man of the moſt extraordinary Underſtanding and Parts, beſides his Quality and Birth, that makes him ſhine the better. His Majeſty hath promis'd to pay his Debt, or aſſign it upon a good Fund before he goes, which he hopes will be an Encouragement to the Queen of Spain to do the like, &c.

His Arrival and Reception

At London,

About the End of November his Highneſs repaired to New-Market, from whence he viſited the Univerſity of Cambridge, where he was nobly receiv'd by that venerable Body, entertain'd in Congregation with ſeveral Speeches, and treated at a ſplendid Dinner by Dr. Fleetwood Provoſt of King's Colledge. Returning to London, on the 6th of December, he was treated in Drapers-Hall by the Lord Mayor and City of London with more than ordinary Magnificence. On the 18th he went to Windſor, and the next Day to Oxford, where he was receiv'd at the Eaſt Gate by the Mayor and Aldermen, and at St. Mary's was attended by the Vice-Chancellor and the whole Body of the Univerſity, and at the great Gate of Chriſt-Church was receiv'd and complimented by the Dean, Canons and whole Society, and by them conducted to his Apartment in that Colledge, where his Highneſs and his Train were nobly treated by the gene-generous Dean Dr. Fell. The next Morning his Highneſs went to view the ſeveral Colledges, and found the Heads with their reſpective Societies ſtanding at the Gates in a Readineſs to receive him. After Noon he viſited the Schools, the Library and Theatre, in which laſt Place a Convocation was held, where his Highneſs was complimented in a Speech by the Orator Dr. South, and, as well as others of his Train, did the Univerſity the Honour of accepting of a Degree, and an Invitation from the Vice-Chancellor to his Colledge of St. John's, where he was entertain'd with an excellent and liberal Dinner. After he had ſtaid in England above three Months, on the 15th of February, he took his Leave at White-Hall, in order to his Return for Holland, infinitely ſenſible of the great Tenderneſs and Affection expreſs'd to him by both their Majeſties, during the whole Time of his Stay, and no leſs ſatisfy'd with the univerſal Eſteem and Reſpects of the Court and People.

His Return.

6. Before the Prince's Arrival in England, Sir William Temple return'd from his Embaſſy in Holland, being more and more apprehenſive of the new and different Meaſures taken in the Engliſh Court. Arriving at London, he went immediately to the Lord Arlington, according to his Cuſtom: But whereas, upon his ſeveral Journeys over in the late Conjunctures, his Lordſhip had ever quitted all Company to receive him, and always did it with open Arms, and in the kindeſt Manner, he now made him ſtay an Hour and Half in an outward Room before he came to him, while he was in private with the Lord Aſhley, the Chief of the Cabal; and then receiv'd him with a Coldneſs, at which Sir William was ſurpriz'd: So that after a Quarter of an Hour's Talk about indifferent Matters, and not a Word of the Occaſion of his being recall'd from his Embaſſy, Sir William went away. However the next Morning he went to his Lordſhip again, deſiring to be introduc'd by him to kiſs the King's Hand, as he had us'd upon his former Journeys: He perform'd that Part of his Office without much Ceremony, bringing Sir William to his Majeſty as he was walking in St. James's Park; where the King ſtopp'd to give Sir William his Hand, ask'd him half a Dozen Queſtions about his Journey, and about the Prince of Orange, and ſo walk'd on. After this he went to ſee the Lord Keeper, and Mr. Secretary Trevor; and found the Firſt uneaſy and apprehenſive of the preſent Counſels; but the latter confident that no Endeavours cou'd break the Meaſures between England and Holland, as being ſo neceſſary abroad, and ſo rational at home. But Sir William, who had more Penetration, perceiv'd them both to be barely in the Skirts of Buſineſs, and only in Right of their Poſts; and found that the Secret of it lay wholly in the Cabal formerly mention'd.

Sir William Temple leaves Holland.

It is obſervable, that however different Sir William Temple and Sir Thomas Clifford had always been in their Schemes and Notions, ſo that there never was any great Commerce between them; yet now he receiv'd him with wonderful Graciouſneſs and Civility, and ſome Time after deſir'd a private Conference with him, about the Affairs of Holland. Being both met, Sir Thomas began with great Compliments on Sir William's Services to the King, in his Employments abroad; went on with the Neceſſity of preſerving their Meaſures with Holland, and concluded with wondering, 'Why the States ſhou'd have ſhew'd ſo much Difficulty 'upon thoſe two Affairs, of Surinam and the Eaſt-India Company, 'wherein our Demands ſeem'd ſo reaſonable; and how it came about that he 'had fail'd in Compaſſing his Majeſty's Satisfaction in thoſe two Matters, 'after having ſucceeded ſo well in all his other Negotiations.' Sir William, thinking he did not underſtand the Bottom of thoſe Affairs, laid it open to him, with the Dutch Reaſons, which ſeem'd to be but too well grounded.

His Diſcourſe with Sir Thomas Clifford.

grounded. Sir Thomas was unſatisfy'd with them all, and told Sir William, He muſt undertake the Matter again, and bring it to a Period; and ask'd him, Whether he did not think he cou'd bring the Dutch to Reaſon? Sir William anſwer'd plainly, He believ'd he never cou'd, to what they call'd ſo, and therefore was very unwilling to undertake it; That he had ſpent all his Shot in vain, and therefore thought it the beſt Way to employ ſome Perſon in it that had more Wit or Ability than himſelf. Upon which Sir Thomas, a little mov'd, reply'd, That for Wit and Ability they all knew he had enough; and all the Queſtion was, Whether he was willing to employ them upon this Occaſion, which ſo much concern'd the Service of the King, and the Honour of the Nation? Hereupon Sir William at large let him know how he had us'd his utmoſt Endeavours to no purpoſe; and being a little heated after ſo long and unpleaſant Diſcourſe, ask'd him, In the Name of God, what he thought a Man cou'd do more? To this, in a great Rage, Sir Thomas anſwer'd; Yes, I'll tell you what a Man might do more, and what you ought to do more; and that is, to let the King and all the World know, how baſely and unworthily the States have us'd Him; and to declare publickly, how their Miniſters are a Company of Rogues and Raſcals, and not fit for his Majeſty, or any other Prince to have any Thing to do with: And this is a Part that no Body can do ſo well as you. Sir William's Anſwer was very calm, That he was not a Man fit for Declarations; that whenever he did ſpeak upon any Occaſions, he ſhould ſpeak of all Men what he thought of them; and ſo he ſhou'd do of the States, and the Miniſters in Holland; which was all he cou'd ſay of the Buſineſs: And ſo their Converſation ended. Upon theſe, and ſome other Paſſages, Sir William fix'd his Judgment of the Affairs and Counſels then in Agitation; and foreſeeing, as he wrote to his Father, 'Weather coming that he ſhou'd have no Mind to go abroad in, 'he therefore reſolv'd to get a warm Houſe over his Head: and neither 'apprehend Uneaſineſs of Mind or Fortune in the private Life he pro-'pos'd to himſelf; unleſs ſome Revolutions ſhould draw both upon him, 'which cou'd not touch him alone, but muſt be born like a common Ca-'lamity.

7. Before the Adjournment of the Parliament, the City and Neighbourhood was ſtrangely allarm'd by a barbarous and inhumane Attempt made upon the Perſon and Life of his Grace the Duke of Ormond, in the open Streets; of which I find the moſt perfect Account in a Manuſcript written by Sir Gilbert Talbot. The chief Contriver and Manager of this audacious Enterprize was one Blood, the Son of a Black-Smith in Ireland, a notorious Villain, who always thought ſmall Crimes below him. He firſt ſignaliz'd Himſelf in Reſcuing one of his wicked Comrades in Yorkſhire out of the Hands of the Sheriff's Men, as they were leading him to the Gallows. After which he laid a Deſign in Ireland to ſurprize the Caſtle of Dublin, and the Magazine there, and to uſurp the Government: But being diſcover'd by the Duke of Ormond the Night before the intended Execution, ſome of his Accomplices were apprehended and executed as Traytors, whoſe Deaths Blood and the reſt of the ſurviving Rogues bound themſelves by ſolemn Oath to revenge upon the Perſon of the Duke. His Grace now living at Clarendon Houſe, was obſerv'd by Blood uſually to go late home, attended with two or three Footmen at the moſt; therefore with five or ſix more of his Aſſociates, all well Mounted and Arm'd, on the 6th of December, he ſtay'd at the Bull-Head Tavern, near Charing-Croſs, till the Duke came by. He was no ſooner paſs'd, but they all took Horſe and gallop'd after him; and coming up with his Coach, before he got to his own Gate, they knock'd down his Footmen,

A ſtrange Attempt upon the Duke of Ormond,

Footmen, took him out of the Coach, and forc'd him up behind one of the Horſemen, and were riding away with him as far as Berkley-Houſe. The Coach-man and Servants crying out, the Porter came forth with his long Cane; but the Duke ſuſpecting that they might act their intended Miſchief upon him, before any Reſcue cou'd come, forceably threw himſelf off the Horſe, with the Villain who had ty'd his Grace faſt to him. The reſt turn'd back, and fearing leſt their Prey might eſcape them, diſcharg'd two Piſtols at him, but taking their Aim in the Dark miſs'd his Body; and finding the Porter and Neighbourhood coming in, they all fled, leaving the Duke much bruis'd with his Fall. Their Deſign, it ſeems, was to have carry'd him to Tybourn, and hang'd him there with a Paper pinn'd on his Breaſt, to have ſhewn the Reaſon of their Diabolical Proceeding. The Authors of this prodigious Attempt were for a conſiderable Time unknown, and the King was pleas'd to offer a Thouſand Pounds Reward for the Diſcovery of any one of theſe Villains. 1670. Car. 22 Reſ. 11

And Sir John Coventry.

A few Days after another barbarous Attempt was made upon the Perſon of Sir John Coventry, Knight of the Bath, and a Member of the Houſe of Commons, and upon the Perſon of his Servant William Wylkes, by a conſiderable Number of Armed Men, both on Foot and Horſeback, by which the ſaid Sir John Coventry and his Servants then loſt ſeveral Goods, and Sir John Himſelf receiv'd divers Wounds, ſome of which were given in ſuch barbarous manner, that ſome of the Offenders held him while others wounded him. The Fact, by Bills of Indictment, was found to be committed by Sir Thomas Sandys, Knight, Charles Orbian, Eſq; Simon Parry and Miles Reeves, who all fled from Juſtice, not daring to abide a legal Tryal. The Cauſe of this Barbarity is not well known, but as to the Effects, it occaſion'd a new Act of Parliament, hereafter to be mention'd.

The Deaths of Biſhop Skinner;

For a Concluſion of the Year, we ſhall, as uſual, take Notice of the Death of ſeveral conſiderable Perſons; and firſt of two worthy Prelates, Dr. Robert Skinner Biſhop of Worceſter, and Dr. John Hackett, Biſhop of Litchfield and Coventry. The Firſt was educated in the Univerſity of Oxford, where he was Fellow of Trinity College, and Tutor to ſeveral eminent Men, as Mr. Chillingworth, Judge Newdigate, &c. After which he became a noted Preacher, and by King Charles the Firſt made ſucceſſively Biſhop of Briſtol and Oxford, the laſt in 1641, when thoſe a little Puritanically inclin'd were moſt acceptable to the Parliament. Yet he was a Sufferer in the Times of the Troubles, and was almoſt the only Biſhop that conferr'd Orders in thoſe Times, and after the Reſtoration, above a Hundred receiv'd Orders from him at once; ſo that at his Death, which was at his See of Worceſter, it was computed that he had ſent more Labourers into the Vineyard, than all his Brethren he had left behind him.

Biſhop Hackett;

The next, Biſhop Hackett of Litchfield and Coventry, was educated in Trinity College in Cambridge, where he made no ſmall Improvement of his Talents. Removing through ſeveral Stages, he became a ſtrenuous Aſſertor of the Hierarchy of the Church of England againſt the prevailing Powers in 1641, for which he was a common Sufferer. Being after the Reſtoration advanc'd to this Biſhoprick, he became a munificent Benefactor there, expending twenty Thouſand Pounds upon the Repairing, or rather Rebuilding his Cathedral. Beſides his Generoſity, he was very valuable for his penetrating and lively Parts, his ſolid Judgment, and his eaſy and entertaining Elocution, by which, with a very happy Memory, he became an extraordinary Philologer and Divine.

Dr. Tuckney;

The next Perſon to be mention'd is an eminent Divine of the Presbyterian Stamp, Dr. Anthony Tuckney, Maſter of St. John's College, and Regius Profeſſor of Divinity in the Univerſity of Cambridge, one of the Assembly of Divines, and afterwards one of the Commissioners for the Conference at the Savoy. In 1661 he retir'd from his Places in the University, having an Allowance of a hundred Pounds a Year from his Successor Dr. Gunning, and afterwards dy'd in London, leaving behind him the Name of a Person eminent for Learning and Piety, as well as Humility and good Temper.

Sir Jeffry Palmer,

There are three others to be mention'd, as different from each other as is possible: The first was Sir Jeffry Palmer Baronet, a Gentleman brought up to the Law, and made Doctor at the University of Oxford, who first of all joyn'd with the long Parliament in 1641, but out of Principle turn'd Loyalist, and became a great Sufferer: He was a Man of great Worth and Eminency in his Profession, and after the Restoration he was made the King's Attorney-General, and Chief Justice of Chester, in which Places he dy'd this Year at Hampsted. The second was Vavasor Powell, a Man famous among the Dissenters, who often preach'd with great Vehemency in the Woods, Mountains and Fields, as well as Markets and Fairs, especially in Wales his Native Country: Yet it is hard to tell of what Religion he was; some holding him for an Anabaptist, others for a Fifth-Monarchy Man and a Millenary; he was certainly neither Presbyterian nor Independent, but a bold, dangerous and pestilent Man, a pragmatical and indefatigable Enemy to Monarchy and Episcopacy, who did a World of Mischief, as some say, or a World of Good, as others say, in his own Country. This restless Man, having been an Opposer of all Higher Powers, met with Imprisonment from different Parties, to whom he shew'd an invincible Spirit, and last of all dy'd a Prisoner in the Fleet, and was bury'd in the Fields near Bunhill, in the Presence of innumerable Multitudes of Dissenters. The Last was old Henry Jenkins, a poor Fisher-man of Yorkshire, who is mention'd purely upon the Account of his almost incredible Age, being accounted the oldest Man born upon the Ruins of this Post-diluvian World. He was born in 1501, the 16th Year of the Reign of Henry the Seventh, and liv'd a hundred and sixty nine Years, in the Reigns of eight Kings and Queens of England, being seventeen Years older than the noted Thomas Parr, who is mention'd in the Year 1635.

The TENTH SESSION continu'd.

IX. 1. Towards the latter end of January the Parliament met according to Adjournment, but the House of Commons very much discompos'd and out of Temper upon the Account of the barbarous Attempt lately made upon Sir John Coventry; and the Dissatisfaction arose to that Height, that they profess'd an Unwillingness to proceed upon any other Affairs, till they had pass'd a Bill against those they conceiv'd to be the Authors of the Injury done against their Members. Accordingly they drew up a Bill, in which they made the Criminals incapable of any Pardon but by particular Act of Parliament, and made it Death for the future for any Man maliciously to disable or dismember another, to put out an Eye, to cut off a Nose or Lip, &c. and concluded all with one peculiar Clause, 'That his Majesty's Royal Assent to this Bill shou'd not 'determine this Session of Parliament.' This was afterwards commonly call'd by the Name of Coventry's Act; which being sent up to the Lords, the Commons naturally and easily return'd to their former good Temper: Soon after his Majesty, on the 14th of February sent a Message by Mr. Secretary Trevor to acquaint them, 'That his Majesty was inform'd, 'that there had some Bills pass'd both Houses, and that there were 'others depending near their Dispatch, which he desir'd them to hasten, 'especially those for his Supply: And lest they shou'd not be ready for 'his

'his Aſſent by the 22d of this Inſtant February, he had given Order for 'the Adjourning of the Seſſion until the 10th of March next. 1670. 71. Car. 23 Reſ. 11

Notwithſtanding this quickning Meſſage, they proceeded to other Matters as well as the Supplies, and more particularly to the Fears and Dangers ariſing from Popery, which gradually appear'd more threatning than formerly. Accordingly they drew up the following remarkable Addreſs, in which the Lords afterwards joyn'd: 'May it pleaſe your moſt Excel- 'lent Majeſty, We your Majeſty's moſt humble and Loyal Subjects, the 'Lords and Commons in this preſent Parliament, being ſenſible of your 'Majeſty's Conſtancy to the Proteſtant Religion, both at home and abroad, 'hold our ſelves bound in Conſcience and Duty to repreſent to your 'Majeſty the Cauſes of the dangerous Growth of Popery in your Maje-'ſty's Dominions, the ill Conſequence whereof we heartily deſire may 'be prevented. And therefore what we humbly conceive to be ſome 'preſent Remedies for the ſaid growing Miſchiefs, we have hereunto ad-'ded in our moſt humble Petitions.

The Addreſs of both Houſes againſt Popery.

Cauſes of the Growth of Popery.

'1. That there are great Numbers of Prieſts and Jeſuits frequenting 'the Cities of London and Weſtminſter, and moſt of the Counties of this 'Kingdom, more than formerly, ſeducing your Majeſty's good Subjects. '2. That there are ſeveral Chapels and Places us'd for Saying of Maſs in 'the great Towns, and many other Parts of the Kingdom, beſides thoſe 'in Ambaſſadors Houſes, whither great Numbers of your Majeſty's Sub-'jects conſtantly reſort and repair without Comptrol; And eſpecially in 'the Cities of London and Weſtminſter, contrary to the Laws Eſtabliſh-'ed. 3. That there are Fraternities or Convents of Engliſh Popiſh Prieſts 'and Jeſuits at St. James's, and at the Combe in Herefordſhire, and other Parts 'of the Kingdom; Beſides ſeveral Schools are kept in divers Parts of the 'Kingdom for the corrupt Educating of Youth in the Principles of Po-'pery. 4. The Common and Publick Selling of Popiſh Catechiſms, and 'other Seditious Books, even in the Time of Parliament. 5. The gene-'ral Remiſsneſs of the Magiſtrates and other Officers, Clerks of the Aſſize, 'and Clerks of the Peace, in not Convicting of Papiſts according to Law. '6. That ſuſpected Recuſants are free from all Offices chargeable and 'troubleſome, and do enjoy the Advantage of Offices and Places benefi-'cial; executed either by Themſelves, or Perſons entruſted for them. '7. That the Advowſance of Churches, and Preſentations to Livings are 'diſpos'd by Popiſh Recuſants, or by others entruſted by them as they di-'rect; whereby moſt of thoſe Livings and Benefices are fill'd with Scan-'dalous and Unfit Miniſters. 8. That many Perſons take the Liberty to 'ſend their Children beyond the Seas to be Educated in the Popiſh Re-'ligion; And that ſeveral young Perſons are ſent beyond the Seas, up-'on the Notion of their better Education, under Tutors and Guardians 'who are not put to take the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy, and 'uſually corrupt the Youth under their Tuition, into Popery. 9. That 'there have been few Exchequer Proceſſes iſſu'd forth ſince the Act of 'Parliament Againſt Popiſh Recuſants Convict, tho' many have been cer-'tify'd thither. 10. The great Inſolencies of Papiſts in Ireland (where 'do publickly appear Archbiſhops and Biſhops, reputed to be made ſo 'by the Pope, in Oppoſition to Thoſe made under his Majeſty's Autho-'rity, according to the Religion Eſtabliſh'd in England and Ireland) and 'the Open Exerciſe of Maſs in Dublin, and other Parts of that Kindom, 'is further a great Cauſe of the preſent Growth of Popery. That Pe-

'ter Talbot, the Reputed Archbiſhop of Dublin, was Publickly Conſe-
'crated ſo at Antwerp with great Solemnity; from whence he came to 'London, where he exercis'd his Function; and was all along in his 'Journey to Cheſter treated with the Character of His Grace by the Po-
'piſh Recuſants whom he viſited: And at his Landing at Dublin was re-
'ceiv'd with very great Solemnity by thoſe of the Popiſh Religion there,
'where alſo he exercis'd his Function Publickly, great Multitudes then
'flocking to him, and ſtill continue to do the ſame. His preſent Reſi-
'dence is within three Miles of Dublin, at his Brother's Colonel Richard
'Talbot, who is now here ſolliciting your Majeſty as Publick Agent on
'the Behalf of the Iriſh Papiſts of that Kingdom.

Remedies againſt theſe growing Miſchiefs.

'We the Lords and Commons aſſembled in this preſent Parliament,
'do in all Humility repreſent to your Sacred Majeſty in theſe our Peti'tions following; 1. That your Majeſty by your Proclamation wou'd be
'moſt graciouſly pleas'd to Command, that all Popiſh Prieſts and Jeſuits
'do depart this Realm, and all other your Majeſty's Dominions, on or be'fore a ſhort Day to be prefix'd, at their Perils; Except only ſuch Fo'reign Prieſts as attend her Majeſty's Perſon by the Contract of Marri'age, and Ambaſſadors, according to the Law of Nations: And that all
'Judges, &c. do cauſe the Laws now in Force againſt Popiſh Recuſants
'Convict, to be put in due Execution: And in the firſt place, for the 'ſpeedy convicting ſuch Popiſh Recuſants, That all Judges and Juſtices
'aforeſaid do ſtrictly give the ſaid Laws in Charge unto the Juries at all
'Aſſizes and Seſſions, under the Penalty of Incurring your Majeſty's
'higheſt Diſpleaſure. 2. That your Majeſty wou'd be pleas'd to reſtrain
'and hinder the great Concourſe of your Native Subjects from hearing
'of Maſs, and other Exerciſes of the Romiſh Religion, in the Houſes of 'Foreign Ambaſſadors or Agents, and in all other Chappels and Places
'of this Kingdom. 3. That your Majeſty wou'd be pleas'd to take care
'and cauſe, That no Office or Employment of Publick Authority, Truſt
'or Command in Civil or Military Affairs, be committed to, or continu'd
'in the Hands of any Perſon being a Popiſh Recuſant, or juſtly reputed
'ſo to be. 4. That your Majeſty wou'd be pleas'd to take notice of all
'Fraternities or Convents of Engliſh, and other Popiſh Prieſts, Jeſuits
'or Fryars, and Schools for the Educating of Youth in the Principles of 'Popery, erected within your Majeſty's Dominions, and to cauſe the
'ſame to be aboliſh'd, and the ſaid Prieſts, Jeſuits, Fryars and School-
'maſters to be duly puniſh'd for ſuch their Inſolencies. 5. That your
'Majeſty wou'd be pleas'd from Time to Time to require and cauſe,
'That all the Officers of, or relating to the Exchequer, iſſue forth Pro-
'ceſſes effectually againſt Popiſh Recuſants Convict certify'd thither. And 'that ſuch Officers as ſhall refuſe or neglect to do their Duty as afore-
'ſaid, be ſeverely puniſh'd for ſuch their Failures. 6. That your Majeſty
'wou'd be pleas'd to give Order for apprehending and bringing over in-
'to England one Pluncket, who goes under the Name of Primate of 'Ireland, and one Peter Talbot, who takes on him the Name of Arch-
'biſhop of Dublin, to anſwer ſuch Matters as ſhall be objected againſt 'them.

'To theſe our moſt humble Petitions, proceeding from our Duty and
'Zeal for the Glory of God, and the Good of your Sacred Majeſty,
'and from the Care incumbent on us for the Safety and Peace of theſe
'your Majeſty's Kingdoms, We do in all Humility beſeech your Majeſty

'to

1670/71. Car. 23 Ref. 11

'to vouchsafe a Gracious Answer: And We your Majesty's most loyal 'and obedient Subjects, the Lords and Commons in the present Parliament assembled, shall ever pray for your Majesty's long and happy Reign 'over us; and (as in Conscience we are oblig'd) shall constantly adhere 'to, and assist your Majesty in the Maintenance and Defence of your 'Majesty's Supremacy, and the true Protestant Religion now establish'd 'in your Majesty's Kingdoms, in Opposition to all Foreign Powers, and 'Popish Pretences whatsoever.

When this Address was sent up to the Lords, they took some Time to consider of it, as not being well satisfy'd with the Certainty of some Matters of Fact therein mention'd, as particularly the Chappels, Fraternities and Convents, and the Advancement of Peter Talbot; but having afterwards in a Conference receiv'd Satisfaction, they joyn'd with the Commons, and together with them presented the Address to the King at the Banquetting-House in White-Hall. His Majesty made this most gracious Answer to them; 'My Lords and Gentlemen, I will take care of 'all these Things; I will cause a Proclamation to be issu'd out against the 'Priests; I will cause the Judges, and all other Officers to put the Laws 'against Papists in Execution, and all other Things that may conduce to 'to the Prevention of the Growth of Popery. But I suppose no Man 'will wonder, if I make a Difference between Those that have newly 'chang'd their Religion, and those that were bred up in that Religion, 'and serv'd my Father and Me faithfully in the late Wars.' The Houses return'd their Thanks for this Answer, and the King accordingly issu'd out his Proclamation, which began after the Manner that most of his Proclamations did upon this Occasion. The Substance was, 'Whereas 'the Lords and Commons in Parliament assembled, have by their Petition presented to his Majesty their Fears and Apprehensions of the Growth 'of Popery, together with the Causes thereof, and also such Remedies 'as they conceive most proper to prevent such Mischiefs: Which Petition his Majesty having seriously consider'd, and with much Contentment approving the great Care of the said Lords and Commons, for 'the Preservation of the true Religion establish'd; to which his Majesty 'declares, as he hath always adhered against all Temptations whatsoever, 'so he will still employ his utmost Care and Zeal in the Maintenance and 'Defence of it. And therefore strictly commands all Jesuits and Romish 'Priests to depart out of England before the first of May, upon pain of 'having the Penalties of the Laws of this Realm inflicted upon them. 'And his Majesty commands all Judges, &c. forthwith to put the Laws 'in Execution against all Popish Recusants, and such as are suspected to 'be so, in Order to their speedy Conviction, and due Process upon such 'Convictions. And because there may be some Priests imprison'd in this 'Realm, unknown to his Majesty; all Sheriffs, &c. are within twenty 'Days to advertise some of the Lords of the Privy-Council of their 'Names, and for what Cause they were committed, to the End Orders 'may be given for their Transportation.

The King's Answer.

2. As soon as the Commons began to foresee the Success of their Address, they proceeded with all Vigour upon the King's Supplies, the Subsidy Bill, the Excise Bill, and the Law Bill; to which Three they afterwards added a Fourth Bill For Impositions upon Foreign Commodities. This liberal, and as some thought profuse Way of Giving, met with some Check from the House of Lords; and when the Subsidy Bill was read there a second Time, the old loyal Lord Lucas stood up and oppos'd it in a bold and remarkable Speech, which he made when the King was present at the Debate. The Speech shews so much of the Times, that it cannot be here omitted, but is inserted for the Readers neceſſary Information: 'My Lords! When by the Providence of Almighty God, the Nation recall'd his Majeſty to the Exerciſe of the Regal Power, it was the Hopes of all Good Men, That we ſhou'd not only be reſtored to his Majeſty's Royal Preſence, and Divine Laws, but we ſhou'd be free from thoſe heavy Burthens under which we had lain ſo long oppreſs'd: We did believe that from thenceforth every Man ſhou'd ſit under his own Vine, enjoying the Fruits of Peace and Plenty; and Aſtræa her Self, long ſince for the Sins of Men fled up to Heaven, ſhou'd have been invited by his Majeſty's moſt gracious and happy Reign, to return hither, and dwell and converſe amongſt Mortals again. But alas! we are all fallen very ſhort of our Expectations, and our Burthens are ſo far from being made lighter to us, that they are heavier than ever they were; and as our Burthens are increas'd, ſo our Strength alſo is diminiſh'd, and we are leſs able to ſupport them.——It is evident there is a Scarcity of Money in the Nation; and yet if amidſt this Scarcity, the vaſt Sums given were all imploy'd for the King and Kingdom, it wou'd not ſo much trouble us: But we cannot without infinite Regret of Heart, ſee ſo great a Part of it pounded up in the Purſes of other private Men, and ſee them flouriſh in Eſtates, who in the Time of his Majeſty's moſt happy Reſtoration, were worth very little or Nothing: and now the ſame Men purchaſe Lands, and keep their Coach and ſix Horſes, their Pages and their Lacqueys; while in the mean Time thoſe that have faithfully ſerv'd the King, are expos'd to Penury and Want, and ſcarce ſufficient left to buy them Bread. And is this, my Lords, the Reward of our Services? Have we for this born the Heat of the Day, been Impriſon'd, Sequeſter'd, ventur'd our Lives and our Families, our Eſtates and our Fortunes? And muſt we after all this ſacrifice ſo much of our poor Remainder to the Will of a few particular Men, and the Maintenance of their Vanities?

'But ſuppoſe all the Mony given were employ'd for the Uſe of his Majeſty, and his Majeſty were not cozen'd, as without doubt he is, is there no Bounds to, or Moderation in Giving? Will you ſay that if we ſhall not plentifully ſupply his Majeſty, he will not be able to defend us, or to maintain the Triple League: and we ſhall thereby run the Hazar'd of being conquer'd? 'Tis true, my Lords, that this may be a Reaſon for giving Something, but 'tis ſo far from being an Argument for giving ſo Much, that it may clearly be made out to your Lordſhips, That it is the direct and ready Way to be conquer'd by a Foreigner. And it may be the Policy of the French King, by thoſe often Allarms of Armies and Fleets, to induce us to conſume our Treaſure in vain Preparations againſt him: And after he has by this Means made us poor and weak enough, he may then come upon us and deſtroy us. It is not the giving of a great deal, but the well managing the Mony given, that muſt keep us Safe from our Enemies. Your Lordſhips may be pleas'd to call to mind the Story of Sampſon, who while he preſerv'd his Hair wherein his Strength lay, was ſtill Victor over his Enemies; but when by the Intiſement of his Dalilah, his Hair was cut off, the Philiſtins came upon him, and overcame him: And ſo, my Lords, if we ſhall preſerve and husband well our Treaſure, wherein our Strength and Sinews of War lie, and apply it to the right Uſes, we ſhall ſtill be ſuperior to our Enemies; but if we ſhall vainly and imprudently miſpend it, we ſhall become an eaſy Prey to them. Beſides, my Lords, what is this but Ne moriare mori, and for Fear of being conquer'd by a Foreigner, to put our ſelves in a Condition almoſt as bad? pardon me, my Lords, if I ſay in ſome reſpect a great deal worſe; for when we are under the Power of

'the Victor, we know we can fall no lower; and the Certainties of our 'Miſeries are ſome Sort of Diminution of them: But in this wild Way, 'we have no Certainty at all; for if you give thus much to Day, you may 'give as much more to Morrow, and never leave giving till we have gi-'ven all that ever we have away, and the Anxiety of Mind which ariſes 'from this doubtful Eſtate, is a high Addition to our Afflictions. All 'that I beg, my Lords, is that we may be able to make ſome Eſtimate 'of our Selves: Wou'd his Majeſty be pleas'd to have a Quarter of our 'Eſtates? for my Part he ſhall have it; wou'd his Majeſty be pleas'd to have 'Half? for my Part upon good Occaſions he ſhall have it: But I beſeech 'your Lordſhips then, that we may have ſome Aſſurances of the quiet 'Enjoyment of the Remainder, and know what we have to truſt to.

'My Lords, the Commons have here ſent up a Bill for the giving his 'Majeſty the Twentieth Part of our Eſtates at the full extended Value; 'and I hear there are other Bills for Money alſo preparing, which toge-'ther, according to the beſt computation, will amount to little leſs than 'Three Millions of Money; a prodigious Sum, and ſuch that if your 'Lordſhips will not afford Relief, we muſt of neceſſity ſink under the 'Weight of ſo heavy a Preſſure. My Lords, the Scripture tells, That 'God Almighty ſets Bounds to the Ocean, and ſays unto it, Hither ſhall 'thy proud Waves come, and no further. And ſo I hope your Lord-'ſhips, in Imitation of the Deity, will ſet ſome Bounds, ſome Limits to 'the over-liberal Humour of the Commons, and ſay to them, Hither 'ſhall your Profuſeneſs come, and no further. Either your Lordſhips 'can deny or moderate a Bill for Money coming from the Commons; or 'if you cannot, all your great Eſtates are wholly at their Diſpoſal, and 'your Lordſhips have nothing that you can properly call your own, and 'then let us paſs this Bill without further Examination; but if you can 'deny or moderate (as without Queſtion you can) your Lordſhips never 'had, nor poſſibly will have ſuch a fair Occaſion to ſhew it. My Lords, 'upon the whole Matter, I moſt humbly propoſe to your Lordſhips, that 'you will be pleas'd to reduce the Twelve Pence in the Pound to Eight 'Pence. And truly I have ſome Reaſon to hope, that if your Lordſhips 'will duly reflect upon it, ye will find it to do accordingly; for in the 'firſt Place it will be ſo far from being a Diſſervice to his Majeſty, that 'your Lordſhips will do his Majeſty in it the higheſt Service in the World; 'for tho' you ſhall thereby take from his Majeſty a Part of the Sum, you 'will give him a great deal more in the Love and Hearts of his Subjects; 'and there his Majeſty muſt reign, if he will be great and glorious. And 'next your Lordſhips will acquire to your Selves Eternal Honour; ye 'ſhall thereby indear your ſelves to the whole Nation, who for the future 'will look upon you as the Ancients did upon their Tutelar Gods; nor ſhall 'the Houſe of Commons, but the Houſe of Peers, be hereafter precious 'in their Sight. My Lords, give me leave to mind your Lordſhips, that 'Noble Acts are the Steps whereby the Great Men of the World aſcend 'the Throne of Glory, and can there be a nobler Act than to Releaſe a 'diſtreſſed Kingdom which lies languiſhing under ſo many hard Oppreſſi-'ons, and about to be ſo much more oppreſs'd?

This Speech was ſpoke upon the 22d of February, and being printed ſhortly after, it was ſo diſtaſteful to the preſent Miniſtry, that it was or-der'd to be burnt by the Hands of the Common Hangman. How it affected the Heart of this loyal Lord is not eaſily known; but in a very ſhort Time after he departed this Life with the Reputation of one who had ever been faithful to his King and Country. However, it ſeem'd to have affected the Houſe of Lords ſo far, that they immediately began to examine this Subſidy Bill with more than uſual Strictneſs; and conceiving that the Diſtreſſes allow'd and appointed in that Bill, ſuch as the breaking open of their Doors, were not agreeable to the ancient Priviledges of Peers, they made ſome Amendments by Way of Proviſoe to the Bill, in order to aſſert their particular Priviledge. The Commons refus'd their Amendments at this Time, not becauſe it was a Mony-Bill, but for theſe following Reaſons, which they deliver'd to their Lordſhips at a Conference: 'Firſt, the Priviledge demanded was againſt the King, and againſt 'the Execution for his Supply, which ought not to be clogg'd with any 'unneceſſary Circumſtances; it being it ſelf a Non omittas propter ali- 'quam Libertatem. Secondly, The Priviledge demanded is not due to 'their Lordſhips in Point of Right, nor can it be inſiſted upon in Point 'of Honour: 1. Becauſe there is as much Reverence paid to their Lord-'ſhips Priviledges in this Bill, as ever was paid in a Bill of Supply; there 'being a Proviſoe, That the Taxes to be collected for the Perſonal Eſtates 'and Offices of the Peers, ſhall be collected by a Collector of their own. '2. The Amendments agreed to: That Nothing therein contain'd ſhall be 'drawn into Example to the Priviledge of the Ancient Rights belonging 'to the Peers: So no Danger of any Ancient Right. 3. Their Lordſhips 'are the beſt Judges of their own Honour; but in the Bill for the Royal 'Aid, there is the ſame Clauſe as in this Bill, yet their Lordſhips did not 'then think fit to add ſuch a Qualification to that Clauſe. 4. It is true the 'Commiſſioners were nam'd in that Act: but that can make no Difference 'in the Caſe, unleſs their Lordſhips be affraid where the Nomination is 'truſted to the King. 5. It wou'd be a Diſhonour to your Lordſhips to 'have this Clauſe ſtand in the Bill: For it doth not concern the Tax up-'on Perſonal Eſtates or Offices, but ſuppoſes a Lord tax'd for his Land, 'and not a Hoof left upon the Land to diſtrain; and that after all this 'a Lord barricados up his Houſe to reſiſt a Diſtreſs; is it fit to ſuppoſe 'ſuch a caſe, or ſhou'd it be treated with Ceremony when it happens? '6. If the Lord be return'd into the Exchequer, the meaneſt Bayliff of the 'Sheriff may break open the Houſe of a Peer without more Ceremony; 'why ſhou'd a Commiſſioner be appointed in this Caſe, unleſs all Exche-'quer Proceſs be intended to be debarr'd by this Clauſe too? 7. No Di-'ſtreſs can be upon a Peer without a Warrant under the Hands of two 'Commiſſioners; which is Caution enough. 8. The Lords have no Privi-'ledge above the Commons as to Execution againſt their Eſtates; And 'therefore we hope this Occaſion ſhall not be taken to create Precedents 'for new Priviledges in Payment of Mony. 9. It wou'd diſcourage Perſons 'from being Commiſſioners, if they muſt be Officers to attend the Diſtreſs, 'and no Man will be willing to ſerve. 10. The Act of Printing leaveth the 'Lords and Commons, as to the Priviledges of Houſes; and no Bill of 'Mony did ever diſtinguiſh them. 11. The whole Duty may be avoid-'ed; for in truth there lies no Obligation upon any Commiſſioner to go 'with any Officer, and ſo the Matter may be wholly neglected. 12. If a 'Diſtreſs be wrongful, Why ſhou'd a Lord have a better Man to bring 'his Action againſt, than a Commoner; and who will ever go to ſubject 'Himſelf to the Action of a Peer, if he be diſpleaſed with the Diſtreſs?

However convincing theſe Reaſons were, their Lordſhips acquieſc'd; ſo that this and other Bills being ready, on the 6th of March, the King came to the Houſe of Peers, and paſs'd theſe following publick Bills:

Some Acts paſs'd.

1. An Act for granting a Subſidy to his Majeſty for Supply of his Extraordinary Occaſions. 2. An Act for an Additional Exciſe on Beer, Ale, and other Liquors. 3. An Act for Regulating the making of Kidderminſter Stuffs. 4. An Act to prevent the malicious Burning of Houſes, Stacks of Corn and Hay, and Killing and Maiming of Cattle. 5. An Act to prevent malicious Maiming and Wounding. 6. An Act for Reveſting the

Power

Power of granting Wine Licences in his Majeſty's Heirs and Succeſſors, and for ſetling a Revenue on his Royal Highneſs in lieu thereof; which amounted to twenty four Thouſand Pounds a Year. 7. An Act for Continuance of a former Act, entituled, An Act to prevent Delays in Extending Statutes, Judgment and Recognizances. 8. An Act for Continuance of a former Act, to prevent Arreſts of Judgments, and Superſeding Executions.

The great Controverſy between the Lords and Commons concerning Mony-Bills.

3. Two Mony-Bills being paſs'd, there ſtill remain'd two more to be compleated; one for Impoſitions on Proceedings at Law, and the other for an Additional Impoſition on ſeveral Foreign Commodities. The former eaſily got through both Houſes, but the latter met with ſuch unexpected Impediments in the Lord's Houſe, as not only caus'd the Bill to be loſt, but occaſion'd one of the moſt famous Controverſies that happen'd throughout the whole Parliament. After this Bill had been finiſh'd by the Commons, and ſent up to the Lords for their Conſent, the London Merchants preſented a Petition to the Lords againſt many Particulars in that Bill, 'ſhewing the Inequality and Diſproportion of 'the Rates impos'd upon certain Commodities to be ſuch, as if not al-'ter'd, and ſome which were too high, brought down to hold a true 'Proportion with others, which the Houſe of Commons had ſet low, 'wou'd utterly ruin the whole Trade of thoſe Commodities, and bring 'an irreparable Prejudice upon all the Engliſh Plantations, and conſe-'quently upon the whole Kingdom; that of thoſe Commodities being 'the principal Trade of the Plantations, and that of the Plantations a 'moſt conſiderable Part of the Trade of the Kingdom.' The Lords, convinc'd with the Arguments and Demonſtrations of the Merchants, judg'd it abſolutely neceſſary to make ſome Alterations in the Bill, and to lower ſome of thoſe Rates; and return'd the Bill ſo alter'd and amended to the Commons; withal giving their Reaſons for thoſe Amendments and Alterations, which was done at a Conference between both Houſes. This was reſented by the Houſe of Commons, who preſently paſs'd a Vote, 'Declaring it to be a Fundamental Right lodg'd in their 'Houſe alone, to impoſe Rates upon Merchandize, as to Matter, Mea-'ſure and Time, and to paſs Bills for that Purpoſe, and this in Excluſi-'on of the Houſe of Lords.' Which Reſolution of theirs was by them deliver'd back at another Conference, together with ſome particular Reaſons given to juſtify their Rates impos'd, in Oppoſition to the Alterations made by the Lords: But the main Argument, which they ſtill urg'd, and with which they clos'd almoſt every Period of their Diſcourſe was, That the Lords had nothing to do with the altering of any Rate impos'd upon Merchandize: And they further ſaid, That this was a Right ſo fundamentally ſettled in the Commons, that they cou'd not give Reaſons for it, without weakning their Rights and Priviledges.

The Lords Reaſons for altering Mony-Bills.

This brought all to a Criſis, and the Lords, nemine Contradicente, came to this poſitive Reſolution, 'That the Power exercis'd by the Houſe 'of Peers, in making the Amendments and Abatements in the Bill, en-'tituled An Act for an Additional Impoſition on ſeveral Foreign Commo-'dities, both as to the Matter, Meaſure and Time, and concerning the 'Rates on Impoſitions and Merchandize, is a Fundamental, Inherent 'and Undoubted Right of the Houſe of Peers, from which they cannot 'depart, for theſe following Reaſons: 1. The great Happineſs of the 'Government is, That nothing can be done in order to the Legiſlature, 'but what is conſider'd by both Houſes, before the King's Sanction be gi-'ven unto it; and the greateſt Security of all the Subjects of this King-'dom, is, That the Houſes by their Conſtitution, do not only give Aſſi-

'ſtance,

1671. Car. 23 Ref. 12

'ſtance, but are mutual Checks to each other. 2. In the Writs of Summons to Parliament, the Lords are excluded from none of the Great and Arduous Affairs of the Kingdom, and Church of England, but are call'd to treat, and give their Counſel upon them all, without Exception. 3. We find no Footſteps in Record or Hiſtory for this new Claim of the Houſe of Commons: We wou'd ſee that Charter or Contract produc'd, by which the Lords diveſted themſelves of this Right, and appropriated it to the Commons, with an Excluſion to themſelves: Till then, we cannot conſent to ſhake or remove Foundations, in the laying whereof it will not be deny'd, That the Lords and Grands of the Kingdom had the greateſt hand. 4. If this Right ſhou'd be deny'd, the Lords have not a Negative Voice allow'd them in Bills of this Nature; for if the Lords, who have the Power of Treating, Adviſing, Giving Counſel, and Applying Remedies, cannot Amend, Abate or Refuſe a Bill in Part, by what Conſequence, or Reaſon, can they enjoy a Liberty to reject the Whole? when the Commons ſhall think fit to queſtion it, they may pretend the ſame Grounds for it. 5. In Caſe of Judicature, which is undoubtedly and indiſputably the Peculiar Right and Priviledge of the Houſe of Lords; if their Lordſhips ſend down a Bill to the Commons for giving Judgment in a Legiſlative Way, they allow and acknowledge the ſame Right in the Commons to amend and alter ſuch Bills, as the Lords have exercis'd in this Bill of Impoſitions ſent up by the Commons. 6. By this new Maxim of the Houſe of Commons, a hard and ignoble Choice is left to the Lords, either to refuſe the Crown Supplies when they are moſt neceſſary, or conſent to Ways and Proportions of Aid which neither their own Judgment, nor Intereſt, nor the Good of the Government and People, can admit. 7. If poſitive Aſſertion can introduce a Right, what Security have the Lords, that the Houſe of Commons ſhall not in other Bills (pretended to be for the general Good of the Commons, whereof they will conceive themſelves to be the fitteſt Judges) claim the ſame peculiar Priviledge in Excluſion of any Deliberation or Alteration of the Lords, when they ſhall judge it neceſſary or expedient. 8. And whereas you ſay, This is the only poor Thing, whereupon you can value your ſelves to the King, their Lordſhips ſay, that they rather deſire to encreaſe, than any Ways to diminiſh the Value and Eſteem of the Houſe of Commons, not only with his Majeſty, but with the whole Kingdom: But they cannot give way that it ſhou'd be rais'd by the Undervaluing of the Houſe of Peers, and an Endeavour to render that Houſe unuſeful to the King and Kingdom, by the denying of it thoſe juſt Powers which the Conſtitution of this Government, and the Laws of the Land, have lodg'd in it for the Service and Benefit of both.

Their Precedents, Theſe Reaſons were deliver'd to the Commons in a Conference, together with many Precedents annex'd; the Deſign of which were to prove, '1. That the Lords and Commons have conſulted together, and conferr'd with one another upon the Subject of Supplies to the King, and of the Manner how the ſame might be levy'd. 2. That in Aids and Subſidies, the Lords have anciently been expreſly join'd with the Commons in the Gift. 3. That in Subſidies of this Nature, viz. Cuſtoms, the Lords have join'd with the Commons in the Grant of them; and that in the very Beginning of theſe Impoſitions. 4. And more particularly in Impoſitions of this very Species, Tonnage and Poundage, the Lords were even at the firſt Beginning join'd with the Commons in the Grant. 5. That the Lords may make Amendments and Alterations in the Bills which grant Tonnage and Poundage, which was the very Queſtion between them.' For all which Particulars they produc'd their ſeveral Precedents. After which they proceeded to a more expoſtulatory Way; in theſe Words: ‘ We have ſeriouſly conſulted our Judg- 1671.

‘ in Opinion, that the Want of it wou'd be deſtructive to the Govern‘ ment and Peace of the Kingdom, and the Right of the Crown in Bal- And general Arguments.
‘ lancing and Regulating of Trade, and the making and preſerving
‘ Leagues and Treaties with Foreign Princes and States; and the Exer-‘ ciſe of it cannot but be for the Security of all, and for the Eaſe and ‘ Benefit of the Subject. The Modeſty of your Anceſtors in thoſe Ar- ‘ duous Affairs gave great Deference to the Wiſdom of the Lords. Their ‘ Lordſhips are very far from deſiring to obſtruct this Gift, no not for a ‘ Moment of Time, much leſs for ever, as was hinted to them at the laſt ‘ Conference. And therefore they deſire the Houſe of Commons to lay
‘ it to heart, and conſider, if it ſhou'd happen that there ſhou'd be an ‘ Obſtruction upon Occaſion of this Difference, at whoſe Door it muſt ‘ lye, Theirs that aſſume to themſelves more than belongs to them, to ‘ the Prejudice or Diminution of the other's Right; or Theirs that exer-‘ ciſe that Juſt, Lawful and Neceſſary Power, which by the very Na- ‘ ture and conſtant Practice of Parliaments is, and for many Ages hath ‘ been veſted in both Houſes. Their Lordſhips had under their Conſi-‘ deration and Debate, the deſiring of a Free Conference with your ‘ Houſe, upon the Reaſons of the Amendments in Difference between ‘ the Houſes; but when they found that you had interwoven your Ge- ‘ neral Poſition with every Reaſon you had offer'd upon Particulars, it ‘ ſeem'd to them That your Judgments were prepoſſeſs'd: And they hold
‘ it in vain, and below the Wiſdom of Parliament, to reaſon or argue a-‘ gainſt Fix'd Reſolutions, and upon Terms of Impoſſibility to perſwade;
‘ and have therefore apply'd themſelves only to that Point which yet re‘ mains an Impediment in the Way of Free and Parliamentary Debates
‘ and Conferences, which muſt neceſſarily be firſt remov'd, That ſo we ‘ may come to a Free Conference upon the Bill it ſelf, and part with a ‘ fair Correſpondence between the two Houſes.

On the other Side the Houſe of Commons gave in a large Anſwer, The Anſwer of the Commons. in drawing up of which, they chiefly employ'd the ingenious Sir Heneage Finch, lately made Attorney General in the Room of Sir Jeffrey Palmer. In this Anſwer, ‘ The Commons confeſs, that the beſt Rule for decid‘ ing Queſtions of Right between the two Houſes, is the Law and Uſage
‘ of Parliament; and that the beſt Evidence of that Uſage and Cuſtom of ‘ Parliament, are the moſt frequent and authentick Precedents. There‘ fore the Commons will firſt examine the Precedents your Lordſhips
‘ ſeem to rely upon, then they will produce, thoſe by which their Right
‘ is aſſerted; and in the laſt Place they will conſider the Reaſons upon ‘ which your Lordſhips ground your ſelves. By the Nature of the Pre‘ cedents which your Lordſhips produce there is an evident Departure ‘ from the Queſtion as the former Conference left it: There the Doubt
‘ was narrowed to this ſingle Point, Whether your Lordſhips cou'd retrench
‘ or abate any Part of the Rates which the Commons had granted; Here
‘ the Precedents reach a joint Power of Impoſing and Beginning of Taxes,
‘ which we have not yet heard your Lordſhips pretend to, tho' this pre‘ ſent Difference prepares for it. Therefore either theſe Precedents ‘ prove too much, by proving a Power of Impoſing; or they prove no‘ thing at all, by not proving the Power of Leſſening. And yet they do ‘ not prove a Power of Impoſing neither: For theſe Words, the Lords
‘ and Commons grant, muſt either be underſtood reddendo ſingula ſingu-
‘ lis, that is, the Lords grant for themſelves, and the Commons grant
‘ for the Counties, Cities and Boroughs whom they repreſent; or elſe

1671. Car. 23 Ref. 12

'the Word Grant must be understood only of the Lords Assent to what 'the Commons grant, because that the Form of Law requires that both 'join in one Bill to give it the Force of a Law.' Then they proceeded to examine the Lords Precedents, and to produce several of their own, too long to be here specify'd, and after that to consider the Reasons themselves, which they thus introduced.

Their particular Reasons.

'Before the Commons answer to your Lordships Reasons in Particu-'lar, they desire first in General, That it is a very unsafe Thing in any 'settled Government to argue the Reasons of the Fundamental Consti-'tution, for they can tend to nothing that is profitable to the whole. 'And this will more sensibly appear to your Lordships, if the Grounds 'and Foundations of Judicature be examin'd. If Usage for so long a 'Time hath silenc'd all Disputes touching that; shall that Usage be of 'no Force to preserve the Priviledges of the Commons from all further 'Questions? But to come to Particulars: 1. Your Lordships first Reason 'is from the Happiness of the Constitution, that the two Houses are 'mutual Checks upon each other. So they are still, for your Lordships 'have a Negative to the whole. But on the other Side, it wou'd be a 'double Check to his Majesty's Affairs, if the King may not rely upon 'the Quantum, when once his People have given it. And therefore 'the Priviledge now contended for by your Lordships, is not of Use to the 'Crown, but much to the contrary. 2. Your Lordships Reasons drawn 'from the Writ of Summons, are as little concluding: For tho' the Writ 'do not exclude you from any Affairs, yet it is only de quibusdam arduis 'Negotiis, and must be understood of such as in Course of Parliament are 'proper; else the Commons, upon the like Ground, may intitle them-'selves to Judicature, for they are also called ad faciendum & consenti-'endum de quibusdam arduis, & super Negotiis antedictis. 3. Your 'Lordships demand where is that Record or Contract in Parliament to 'be found, where the Lords appropriate this Right to the Commons in 'Exclusion of themselves? To this Rhetorical Question the Commons 'pray they may answer by another Question; Where is that Record or Con-'tract by which the Commons submitted that Judicature should be appro-'priated to the Lords, in Exclusion of themselves? Wherever your Lord-'ships find the last Record, they will shew the first endorsed upon the 'Back of the same Roll. Truth is, Precedents there are where both Sides 'do exercise their several Rights, but none how either Side came by them. '4. If the Lords may deny the Whole, why not a Part? else the Commons 'may at last pretend to barr a Negative Voice: The Lords and Com-'mons must accept the whole in a General Pardon, or deny it; yet this 'takes not away their Negative: The Clergy have a Right to tax 'themselves, and it is Part of the Priviledge of their Estate; doth 'the Upper Convocation House alter what the Lower House grant; or 'do the Lords and Commons ever abate any Part of their Gift? yet 'they have Power to reject the whole. But if Abatement shou'd be made, 'it wou'd insensibly go to a Riseing, and deprive the Clergy of their an-'cient Rights to tax themselves. 5. Your Lordships say that you allow 'the Commons to amend and alter Bills of Judicature, therefore you ex-'pect the same in Mony-Bills. If Contracts were now to be made for 'Priviledges, the Offer might seem fair: But yet the Commons shou'd 'profit but little by it; for your Lordships do now industriously 'avoid all Bills of that Nature, and chuse to do any Thing by your own 'Power, which ought to be done by the Legislative; of which we for-'bear the Instances, because your Lordships we hope will Reform them. '6. As to your Lordships Complaint of an ignoble Choice, &c. We de-'sire to observe, that this Reason, first makes your Lordships Judgments

'to be the Welfare of the Commons of England: ſecondly, it gives you Power to raiſe and encreaſe Taxes, as well as to abate. It is an ignoble Choice put upon the King and his People, that either his Majeſty muſt demand, and his Commons give ſo ſmall an Aid that can never be diminiſh'd; or elſe run the Hazard of your Lordſhips Examination of the Rates, whoſe Proportions in all Taxes (in Compariſon to what the Commonwealth pay) are very inconſiderable. 7. Your Lordſhips ſay, if poſitive Aſſertions can introduce a Right, you have no Security, but the Commons may extend a Right as they judge neceſſary. We hope no Aſſertions or Denyals, tho' never ſo poſitive, ſhall give or take away Right; but we rely upon Uſage on our Side, and Non-Uſage on your Lordſhips Part as the beſt Evidences, by which your Lordſhips or we can claim any Priviledges. 8. Your Lordſhips profeſs a Deſire to raiſe our Eſteem with his Majeſty and the whole Kingdom, but not by the Undervaluation of the Houſe of Peers. We have ſo great Confidence in his Majeſty's Goodneſs, That we aſſure our ſelves nothing can leſſen his Majeſty's Eſteem of our Dutiful Affections to him; and we hope we have deſerv'd ſo well of our Country, that we ſhall not need your Lordſhips Recommendation to any who wiſh well to his Majeſty, or the preſent Government.——To conclude, the Commons have examin'd themſelves, and their Proceedings, and find no Cauſe why your Lordſhips ſhou'd put them in mind of that Modeſty by which their Anceſtors ſhew'd a great Deference to the Wiſdom of the Lords; and will obſerve the Modeſty of their Anceſtors, and doubt not but your Lordſhips will alſo follow the Wiſdom of yours.' 1671. Car. 23 Reſ. 12

To theſe the Lords proceeded to make ſome Replys, and particularly as to their having no Power to alter the Subſidies of the Clergy, nor an Act for a General Pardon: They ſaid 'theſe were Things eccentrick to Parliaments, and had their Motion in another Sphere: The Convocation gave one, and the King of his free Grace beſtow'd the other; and the Parliament only gave them the Force of Law, and might chuſe whether they wou'd do it or not; and conſequently this was no Ways to the Caſe in Diſpute. But to read the Commons Mony-Bill three Times in their Houſe, and to commit it, without any Power of debating upon it, was a ſolemn Piece of Pageantry, beneath the Dignity of a Parliament.' As to the Point of Judicature, they alledg'd, 'It belong'd to the Peers before the very Being of a Houſe of Commons, rather as the Grand Council of the Nation, than Part of the Parliament; and being veſted in the King, as well as themſelves, might poſſibly exiſt without the Sitting of a Parliament.' As to Precedents, they alledg'd, 'We have ſeveral for us; but it were enough for our Juſtification, if there be none againſt us; and there cou'd be one of theſe Kinds, either that we have of our ſelves diſclaim'd ſuch a Power, or that it hath been deny'd them when they have claim'd it, and whoſoever ſheweth one of either, Erit nobis magnus Apollo.' The Lords Replys.

But before they cou'd finiſh their Arguments, or put any Period to this great Controverſy, on the 22d of April, his Majeſty, who had been us'd to cut thoſe Knots that were not eaſily unty'd, came to the Houſe of Peers, in order to a Prorogation. But before that the two Houſes found ſo much Time as to preſent his Majeſty with an Addreſs, 'That his Majeſty wou'd be graciouſly pleas'd by his own Example to encourage the conſtant wearing of the Manufactures of his own Kingdom and Dominions, and diſcountenance the Wear of any Manufactures made in Foreign Countries.' His Majeſty very graciouſly accepted their humble Motion, and was pleas'd to declare, 'That he willingly comply'd with their Deſires therein; and did aſſure them, that as he had already put it in Practice in his own Perſon, ſo he wou'd for the future The Commons Addreſs. The King's Anſwer.

He passes several Acts.

'future take Care, that it shou'd be observ'd by himself, and those of his 'Family.' After which he gave his Royal Assent to the several Bills that were presented to him, fourteen private Acts and eighteen publick, of which last were, 1. An Act to prevent the Delivery up of Merchant Ships, and for the Encrease of good and serviceable Shipping. 2. An Act for exporting of Beer, Ale, and Mum. 3. An Act for laying Impositions on Proceedings at Law. 4. An Act for the better settling of Intestate Estates. 5. An Act for Determining of Differences touching Houses burnt within four Years since the late dreadful Fire of London. 6. An Additional Act for ascertaining the Measures of Corn and Salt. 7. An Act for the more certain Recovery of Fines and Forfeitures due to his Majesty. 8. An Act for the better Paving and Clearing the Streets and Shores in and about London. 9. An Act for the Relief and Release of poor Prisoners for Debt. 10. An Act for the Discovery of such as have defrauded the Poor of London of the Monies given them at the Times of the late Plague and Fire. 11. An Act for the better Regulating of Work-Houses, for setting the Poor on Work. 12. An Act for the better Settlement of the Maintenance of the Parsons, Vicars and Curates in the Parishes of London, burnt by the late dreadful Fire. 13. An Act for vesting certain Fee-Farm Rents, and other small Rents, in Trustees. 14. An Act to prevent Frauds in the buying and selling Cattle in Smithfield and elsewhere. 15. An Act for the better Preservation of the Game, and for the securing Warrens not enclosed, and the several Fishings of the Realm. 16. An Act for the taking Accounts of sixty thousand Pounds, and other Moneys, given to the loyal Indigent Officers. 17. An Act to prevent the planting Tobacco in England, and for regulating the Plantation Trade. 18. An Act to revive a former Act, Intituled, An Act to prevent the Disturbances of Sea-Men and others, and to preserve the Stores belonging to his Majesty's Royal Navy. Upon passing these Acts, his Majesty, without any Speech, prorogu'd the Parliament to the 16th of April next, and afterwards, from Time to Time, to the 4th of February 167$\frac{1}{2}$. And thus ended the tenth Session of the Second and Long Parliament, after it had sate this last Time about three Months; in which Session more Mony is believ'd to have been granted, tho' not all at once, than in any before. After which there was the longest Recess that had been in this Reign, namely a Year, and above nine Months.

The End of the Tenth Session of the Second Parliament.

X. 1. During this long Interval and Intermission, the Ministry having Opportunity to act without Inspection or Controul, more bold as well as false Steps were made, and more dark Designs carry'd on and effected, than had been known in all the Reign before. But before we come to any Particulars, we are to begin the Year 1671 in Mourning for the Death of Anne Dutchess of York, the eldest Daughter of Edward Earl of Clarendon, late Lord Chancellor of England: After a growing Corpulency that cast her into a long Indisposition of Health, she dy'd in the 34th Year of her Age at the Palace of St. James on Friday the 31st of March, while the Parliament was Sitting; and five Days after was interr'd in a large Vault in Westminster Abbey, on the South side of King Henry the Seventh's Chapel; her Body being accompany'd from the Painted Chamber in the old Palace by his Highness Prince Rupert, who appear'd as chief Mourner, and by most of the Nobility who follow'd in Order: The Kings and Officers of Arms gave their Attendance, and his Majesty's and Royal Highnesses Servants, and several Gentlemen and Persons of Quality preceded the Corps to the Place of Interrment, with all the Ceremonies usually practis'd on the like great Solemnities. This Lady, who had liv'd a firm and zealous Member of the Church of England, was in the Time of her long Weakness importun'd and overpower'd to declare her ſelf a Roman Catholick; and ſhe left a Paper written not long before her Death, in which ſhe attributed her Converſion chiefly to the Reading Dr. Heylin's Hiſtory of the Reformation. Yet her Change of Religion is moſtly imputed to the Zeal of the Duke her Husband, who prevail'd upon her, notwithſtanding all the Care of her Father, who fearing her Deſertion, wrote two pathetick and expoſtulatory Letters to prevent, or at leaſt to lament the Misfortune. She had in all, four Sons and four Daughters, namely, Charles, born October 22, 1660. Mary, born April 30, 1662. James, born July 12, 1663. Anne, born February 6, 1664. Charles, born July 4, 1666. Edgar, born September 14, 1667. Henrietta, born January 13, 1668. and Catharine, born February 9, 1670. Of theſe, Charles, James, Charles, and Henrietta dy'd before their Mother; and Edgar and Catharine dy'd ſhortly after. The two ſurviving Daughters, Mary and Anne, now nine and ſeven Years of Age, afterwards prov'd two great Queens, the Glory and Happineſs of the Engliſh Nation, and both the Bulwark and Ornament of the Reformation. 1671. The Duke Abjures the Proteſtant Religion.

Shortly after the Death of the Dutcheſs, his Royal Highneſs the Duke thought fit to abjure the Proteſtant Religion in Form, which he did before Father Simons an Engliſh Jeſuit. He had long been of the Romiſh Religion, even before the Reſtoration, and ever continu'd a true Member of that Church; but by the Advice of the King, a more imperfect Votary than Himſelf, and ſome few Friends, he was prevail'd upon to conceal his Religion, for ſome Years; tho' of late he began more and more to be ſuſpected. The Romiſh Prieſts and Jeſuits, whoſe Influence and Intereſt daily increas'd at Court, were not content with his bare Profeſſion, but expected a more open and ſolemn Declaration of his Faith; and to ſecure ſo illuſtrious a Convert, they at length engag'd him to the foremention'd Abjuration, which he had often promis'd, but had long deferr'd, as having no great Inclination to enter upon a ſolemn Form, when there was no Neceſſity for it. But now he met with a peculiar Inducement, which is proper to be remember'd in this Place, and is one of the great Secrets of the Reign. The King, it ſeems, had for ſome Years entertain'd a ſecret Deſign of being Divorc'd from his Queen, whoſe Perſon he had ever diſlik'd, upon the Account of her Bodily Infirmities, as well as her unfortunate Barrenneſs. Many Reaſons were invented, and Pretences made to give Colour and Plauſibility to the Divorce. One Pretence was, that the Queen had been preingag'd to another Perſon; another was, that ſhe had made a Vow of Chaſtity before her Marriage; and beſides, her Incapacity of bearing Children was thought a ſufficient Reaſon for Diſſolving the Marriage: And we are told by ſome, that even Treachery it ſelf was not forgotten, in order to effect the intended Divorce; and Snares were ſaid to be laid to betray her Majeſty into ſuch kind of Freedoms, as might be the Ground of a dangerous Accuſation. Whatever was ſaid and done, the Papiſts themſelves had the greateſt Hand in it, and brought it to the greateſt Forwardneſs; and what is more ſurprizing, the Court of Rome ſeems to have had the greateſt ſtroke of all in it. This I have been aſſured by a Noble Man of unqueſtion'd Fidelity, who being at Venice in the Year 1670, he was there told by the Pope's Nuncio, That the Divorce was then concluded on, and as good as compleated at Rome. At his Return into England, he found the whole Deſign at an End; and being acquainted with ſome Secrets in the Court, his Father being a Privy-Counſellor, he ſoon found the Cauſe of the Change. The Romiſh Eccleſiaſticks, not thinking themſelves abſolutely ſecure of their Convert, had often urg'd the Duke to an Abjuration, and at laſt ſolemnly ingag'd upon That, to undertake to put a total Period to the Divorce that had been ſo long in projecting. From which

Time the whole Deſign was for ever laid aſide, and a ſecond Marriage reſolv'd on, for the Encreaſe of the Duke's Family.

As the Duke's Religion began gradually to appear to the Eyes of the World, the great Love and Eſteem of the Nation, eſpecially of one Party, began ſenſibly to diminiſh, and the Height of his Glory to be in ſome Proportion abated: And as his Power and Intereſt decreas'd, ſo that of the Duke of Monmouth did manifeſtly increaſe with the ſame Party, and among the Populace; ſo that theſe two by Degrees became the Heads of thoſe two Parties that afterwards ſo unhappily divided and diſtracted the Nation. The Duke of Monmouth was now about twenty two Years of Age, and not long ſince admitted into the Privy-Council. To give ſome ſhort Account of him at once, he was the eldeſt and belov'd Natural Son of the King by Mrs. Lucy Barlow alias Walters, bearing the Name of James Crofts till his Majeſty's Reſtoration; educated chiefly at Paris under the Eye of the Queen Mother, and the Government of Mr. Roſs, afterwards Keeper of the King's Library, and Groom of the Privy Chamber. At Thirteen Years of Age, in the Bloom of his Youth and Beauty, he was brought over into England, and receiv'd by the King with wonderful Demonſtrations of Joy and Affection. He had an Apartment fitted up for him in the Privy Gallery at White-Hall; he had his Gentlemen and Pages to attend him, with a noble Equipage, Train, and Penſion ſuitable to his Birth and Royal Relation. The ſame Year, 1662, he was created Duke of Orkney in Scotland, and ſoon after Duke of Monmouth; and the next Year was inſtall'd Knight of the Garter with the uſual Solemnities, at Windſor. In 1665 he was enter'd a Member of Chriſt Church in Oxford, having been before Incorporated a Maſter of Arts in both Univerſities. In the ſame Year he was made Maſter of the Horſe; and ſhortly after, at the King's own Procuring, he marry'd Anne Daughter and Heir to Francis Earl of Buccleugh in Scotland, generally eſteem'd the greateſt Fortune and fineſt Lady in the three Kingdoms. His Majeſty after that loaded him with ſeveral other Places of Honour and Profit, as General of the Land Forces, Captain of his Life Guard of Horſe, Lord Lieutenant of the Eaſt Riding in Yorkſhire, Governor of the Town and Citadel of Kingſton upon Hull, Chief Juſtice in Eyre on the South ſide of the River Trent; and in right of his Lady, he made him Duke of Buccleugh, and Lord Great Chamberlain of Scotland: And, what was above all other Titles, he became every Day more and more a Favourite of the King, and of the People. His Face and Perſon was beautiful and majeſtick, his Mien and Behaviour graceful and engaging; ſo that he often captivated the Affections of both Sexes. He was of an intrepid Courage and Bravery, and his Heart was always divided between Love and Glory: He had, in ſhort, all the Accompliſhments of a fine Gentleman, but allay'd with too much Ambition; and not having a profound reach of Judgment, he became too ſuſceptible of the Inſinuations of Deſigning Men; ſo that he was a fit Inſtrument to promote other Mens Ambition, as well as his own, and as ſuch was us'd by Him who was the Soul of the Cabal, to which Council it is time to return.

The Duke of Monmouth's Riſe and Character.

The Proceedings of the Cabal.

2. All this while the Cabal proceeded in their Deſigns with Vigour, the chief of which they pretended to, was to make his Majeſty a Great King. This was to be effected by the new Alliance with France, by the Breach of the Triple Alliance, and by a War to humble the States of the United Provinces. The better to effect which, Mr. Henry Coventry, who had aſſiſted in the Treaty of Breda, was ſent Ambaſſador to the Court of Sweden, and Sir George Downing to the Hague, in the room of Sir William Temple; but all Things ſtill were carry'd on with the utmoſt Secrecy and Artifice.

tifice. The French King, as Primi assures us, sent his Britannick Majesty a sufficient Sum of Money for fitting out a considerable Fleet; and the better to conceal the Confederacy, advis'd him to signify to the Dutch, 'That he design'd to keep up a good Understanding with them, 'to appear firm to the Treaty of the Triple Alliance, and to give out that 'he wou'd not have fitted out a Fleet, if his Neighbours, and France in 'particular, had not made great Naval Preparations in all their Ports upon 'the Ocean.' All Things being dispos'd towards a Rupture with the Dutch, Occasion was sought for a plausible Beginning, and particularly the East-India Company were summon'd to know, whether they had any Thing to object against them. Some Insolencies were discover'd, and certain scandalous Pictures, reflecting upon the King and his Government, were complain'd of now, and afterwards insisted on as a Cause of the Breach. 1671. Car. 23 Ref. 12

In the Month of August a fair Occasion was offer'd towards an open Quarrel: Sir William Temple being totally recall'd from his Embassy, one of the King's Yatchts was sent to bring over his Lady; while the Dutch Fleet was floating in the narrow Seas, to shew, as it was suppos'd, that they were in a Condition to meet those Dangers they began to suspect from the Motions of France, and the late Conduct of England. The Captain of the Yatcht, that was appointed to bring over the English Ambassadress, had publick Orders given him at Court, if he came in sight of the Dutch Fleet, he shou'd sail through them, and shoot at those Ships that were next him; either till he made them strike Sail, or till they shot at him again, and then pursue his Course. He pass'd into Holland without seeing them; but as he return'd he met the Fleet, and sailing through them, made several Shots at those near him: Upon which they seeming, at least, not to know what he meant, and to believe that he might be in some Distress, the Admiral sent a Boat on Board him to inquire. The Captain told them, That he had been sent to bring back the English Ambassadress with her Family from Holland; and had Orders to make the Dutch Fleet strike, where-ever he met them in those Seas. Upon which unexpected Message, Vice-Admiral Van Ghent went himself on Board the Yatcht, as upon a Compliment to the Lady Temple; which being handsomly perform'd, he desired to speak with the Captain, of whom he inquired the Reason of his Shooting; and receiving the same Answer, he said It was a Point wherein they had receiv'd no Orders from their Masters, and did not know how that Affair was agreed between his Majesty and the States: But tho' it were settled, the Captain cou'd not pretend the Fleet and Admiral shou'd strike to a Yatcht; which was but a Pleasure Boat, and cou'd not pass for one of the King's Men of War. The Captain said He had his Orders, and was bound to follow them. After Van Ghent was gone, the Captain, in great Perplexity, came to the Lady Temple, and desired to know, What she pleas'd he shou'd do in the Case; which she saw he did not like very Well, and wou'd be glad to be extricated by her Help. Her Ladyship told him, he knew his Orders best, and what he was to do upon them; which she left him to follow as he thought fit, without any Regard to Her or her Children. However the Captain pursu'd his Course, and landed her safe in England.

The Beginning of the Breach with Holland.

Immediately after the Lady repair'd to Court, where she was well receiv'd, and much commended for her Part in what had pass'd; and the same Night Sir Lionel Jenkins, Judge of the Prerogative, was sent to take her Examination in Form, upon the whole Matter of Fact. When Sir William Temple went next to the King's Levee, his Majesty began to speak of his Lady's Carriage at Sea, and to extol it as much as he blam'd that of the Captain, declaring That the Lady had shew'd more Courage than than the Captain. Then falling upon the Inſolence of the Dutch, Sir William, with a pleaſant Air, ſaid, That however Matters went, it muſt be confeſs'd that there was ſome Merit in my Family, ſince I had made the ALLIANCES with Holland, and my Wife was like to have the Honour of making the WAR. The King ſmil'd, as well as Sir William, who rightly judg'd this to be the only Way to turn the Diſcourſe into good Humour. When he went into the King's Cloſet, he deſired to kiſs his Majeſty's Hand upon the Concluſion of his Embaſſy; which the King gave him very graciouſly, and told him, He had all the Reaſon that cou'd be, to be ſatisfy'd with his Services. And upon Sir William's Deſire, That his Majeſty wou'd give him ſome Help in the Diſpatch of his Payments due from the Exchequer, ſince he was reſolved to ask him nothing elſe; and without them had been at ſo great and long Expence to maintain his Family at the Hague; his Majeſty told him, He wou'd ſpeak to the Commiſſioners of the Treaſury to do him Juſtice, and in the mean Time wou'd give him the Plate belonging to his Embaſſy, which he had ſtill in his poſſeſſion. For which he return'd his humble Thanks to his Majeſty, who ſeem'd very much pleas'd to ſee he took it kindly, and was ſo eaſily contented. 'And thus, to uſe Sir William's own Words, an Adventure 'has ended, which had for almoſt three Years made ſo much Noiſe in 'the World, reſtor'd and preſerv'd ſo long the General Peace, and left 'his Majeſty the Arbitrage of all Affairs among our Neighbours, by the 'Emperor and Spain's Reſolutions, as well as Sweden and Holland's, to 'follow his Meaſures for the common Peace and Safety of Chriſten-'dom.

The King celebrates the Feaſt of St. George.

3. Tho' Preparations were daily making for War, yet ſtill all Things were carry'd on with Secrecy and Artifice, and the King ſeem'd wholly taken up with the Arts and Pleaſures of Peace, and particularly in making Progreſſes through ſeveral Parts of his Dominions, which ſerv'd both for Uſe and Delight. But before he undertook theſe, he thought fit to celebrate ſome great Solemnities relating to the Honour of the Garter, at his Palace of Windſor, where noble Preparations were made. Accordingly on Sunday the 28th of May, being now the Eve of the Feaſt of St. George, as it was this Year appointed to be obſerv'd, upon the Account of the Anniverſary of his Majeſty's Birth and Reſtoration, the King as Sovereign of the Order, accompany'd by his Royal Brother the Duke of York, Prince Rupert and other Companions of the ſame Order, all in their Habits proceeded in the Afternoon to the Chappel of St. George in Windſor with extraordinary Solemnity, were before the Divine Service began, the Earl of Carliſle, introduc'd between his Royal Highneſs and Prince Rupert, was Inſtall'd as Proxy of the King of Sweden; and the Earl of Winchelſea, between the Dukes of Ormond and Buckingham, as Proxy for the Elector of Saxony, both which Princes had been inveſted with the full Habit of the Order in the Year 1669; and after them the Duke of Albemarle, introduc'd between the Earls of Sandwich and Oxford, was likewiſe inveſted and plac'd in his Stall. The next Day the grand Feaſt was celebrated with unuſual Splendor and Magnificence; and the Day following, the Sovereign Proceeding to the Chappel, after he had taken his Stall, the Companions, before they aſcended to theirs, offer'd in Order the Atchievements of Arms, viz. the Banners, Swords and Creſts of ſeven deceaſed Knights, William Earl of Salisbury, Thomas Earl of Berks, Algernon Earl of Northumberland, Thomas Earl of Southampton, George Duke of Albemarle, Mountague Earl of Lindſey, and Edward Earl of Mancheſter.

Not

Not long after, the King began to make his ſeveral Progreſſes, beginning firſt at ſuch Places as he had formerly viſited, as Portſmouth and the Iſle of Wight; from whence his Majeſty went by Sea to Plymouth, and coming back by Exeter and Wilton, he return'd to Windſor and White-Hall within leſs than a Month. In the Month of September he undertook a new Progreſs to ſuch Places as he had never ſeen before, being attended by his Royal Brother, Prince Rupert, the Duke of Monmouth, the Duke of Buckingham, and other of the Nobility, and ſome Part of the Way with the Queen her ſelf. On the 26th the noble Train ſet out from Newmarket to the Lord Arlington's Houſe at Euſton-Hall, and from thence to the Town of Yarmouth, where his Majeſty was receiv'd with all poſſible Expreſſions of Joy, and with the Diſcharge of above twelve Hundred Pieces of Ordnance from the Ships and the Town. His Majeſty was infinitely pleas'd with the Town and the Port, and ſaid He did not think he had had ſuch a Place in his Dominions; and having receiv'd a noble Treat from the Magiſtrates, he went to viſit the City of Norwich, where at the Bounds of the City Liberties he was met by the Mayor, Sheriffs and Aldermen on Horſe-back, beſides the Biſhop, Dean and Chapter, attended by a numerous Train of the Country Clergy, and likewiſe the Lord Henry Howard with his Coaches: His Majeſty was complimented by the Recorder, and ſo conducted through the Militia of the City, rank'd on both Sides the Streets, to the Duke's Place, the Paſſages being throng'd with incredible Numbers of People. About two Hours after the Queen alſo arriv'd, attended by ſeveral Ladies of the chiefeſt Quality of her Court, from the Lord Arlington's Houſe at Euſton: And at Eight in the Evening, both their Majeſties, together with the whole Court, which was very numerous, were treated with a magnificent Supper, in a very large Room, beautifully illuminated with Wax Flambeaux. The next Day, having viſited the Cathedral and Biſhops Palace, and every where attended with the loud Acclamations of the People, their Majeſties were treated by the City with a glorious Banquet at the New Hall; and before the King parted from the City, he conferr'd the Honour of Knighthood upon the famous Phyſician, Dr. Thomas Brown. Then, viſiting Sir John Hubbert's at Blecking, and Sir Robert Paſton's at Oxney, the Court return'd to Newmarket.

He makes a Progreſs through ſeveral Parts of his Kingdom.

After a ſhort Stay there, his Majeſty thought fit to make a Viſit to the Univerſity of Cambridge, where his Favourite the Duke of Buckingham had been lately choſen Chancellor in the Room of the deceas'd Earl of Mancheſter. On the fourth of October he went thither, attended with a great Train of the Nobility; and was firſt met without the Town by the Mayor and Aldermen, and the Train'd-Bands. The whole Body of the Students according to their ſeveral Orders and Degrees in their Habits, attended in the Streets from his firſt Entrance to the Publick Schools; and as he paſs'd by the Market Place, the Conduit ran with Claret Wine. At the Schools he was receiv'd by the Duke of Buckingham, as Chancellor of the Univerſity, attended by the Vice-Chancellor and Doctors, who preſented him with a fair Bible, while Dr. Widdrington the Orator complimented him with a ſhort Speech. The King view'd the Publick Library, and took eſpecial Notice of the rare Eaſtern Manuſcript given by the late Duke of Buckingham, as alſo of the many fair Volumes bought by the annual Beneficence of Mr. Tobias Ruſtall, one of his Majeſty's preſent Servants. From thence he paſs'd to King's Colledge Chappel, where he heard an Anthem; and from the Top of the Leads had a fair Proſpect of the whole Town and Country. After this he walk'd through the Streets to St. John's and Trinity Colledges, where he view'd their Libraries, and heard Speeches from the Maſters of both, as he had before done at King's Colledge. Immediately after he was entertain'd in Trinity-Colledge-Hall with a Splendid Dinner, ſerv'd up by Maſters of Arts, being Regents, in their Habits, where plentiful Tables were alſo ſpread for the Nobility, and all belonging to the Court. After Dinner his Majeſty conferr'd the Honour of Knighthood upon Charles Cæſar Eſquire, Son of Sir Henry Cæſar, who brought up the firſt Diſh: And having ſeen a Comedy acted there, with which his Majeſty ſhew'd himſelf exceedingly pleas'd, as alſo with the good Order of the whole Univerſity, he return'd the ſame Night to Newmarket.

He is treated by the City of London.

The King being return'd to White-Hall, on the 30th of October, the City of London, being now recover'd out of the late deplorable Ruins to a greater Beauty and Splendor than before, made a ſolemn Invitation to both their Majeſties to honour their Feaſt on the Lord Mayor's Day, for which they made more than ordinary Preparations. The King and Queen were pleas'd to honour the City with their Royal Preſence, firſt at the Show in Cheapſide, under a rich Canopy of State, and afterwards at the Guild-Hall at Dinner. Their Majeſties were attended by his Royal Highneſs the Duke, Prince Rupert, the Lady Mary and the Lady Anne, Daughters to the Duke, the greateſt Part of the Nobility, both Lords and Ladies, the Judges and Serjeants at Law, beſides all Foreign Ambaſſadors, and publick Miniſters. The Entertainment was magnificent beyond Expreſſion; the whole Service was manag'd with admirable Order, and with as much Quiet and Decency, as the Place and Number of People cou'd poſſibly admit; and nothing was omitted by the City, that might expreſs their Joy and Exultation, as well as the Duty and Affection to their Majeſties, for this particular Favour. Before Dinner his Majeſty was pleas'd to conferr the Honour of Knighthood upon thoſe noted Gentlemen, Jonathan Dawes, and Robert Clayton Eſquires, the preſent Sheriffs; and in the Evening return'd to White-Hall, infinitely pleas'd at the extraordinary Reſpects with which the City receiv'd the Honour of his Preſence; which was accompany'd with the univerſal Joy and Acclamations of the People, who on this Occaſion had throng'd all the Streets where their Majeſties paſs'd, in moſt incredible Numbers.

4. Before we conclude this Year, we are to give an Account of a ſtrange and prodigious Attempt made by Blud, formerly mention'd, and his abominable Confederates. This ſuperlative Villain, after he had been diſappointed in his former Attempts, and laſt of all in that upon the Life of the Duke of Ormond, in a ſhort Time enter'd upon a more deſperate Deſign, that might fully recompence all former Miſcarriages with an immenſe Gain, and the Reputation of the moſt daring Wickedneſs; and this was to ſeize upon the Crown and Regalia of the Kingdom. The Particulars and Conſequences of this unparallel'd Contrivance are little known to the World; therefore a full Account of both is here given from a Manuſcript of Sir Gilbert Talbot's, Maſter of the Jewel-Houſe, who made a ſtrict Enquiry into the whole Affair; and may be entertaining, as well as uſeful to a curious Reader.

About three Weeks before this Blud, the chief Undertaker, made his Attempt upon the Crown, he came to the Tower in the Habit of a Clergy-Man, with a long Cloak, Caſſock, and Canonical Girdle; and brought a Woman with him whom he call'd his Wife, tho' his Wife was then ſick in Lancaſhire. This pretended Wife deſired to ſee the Crown; and having ſeen it, pretended to have a Qualm come upon her Stomach, and deſired the Keeper of the Crown, old Mr. Edwards, to ſend for ſome Spirits, who immediately caus'd his Wife to fetch ſome; of which when ſhe had drunk, Mrs. Edwards invited her to repoſe her ſelf upon a Bed, which ſhe accepted of, and ſoon recover'd: At their Departure they declar'd clar'd themſelves very thankful for this Civility. About three Days after, Blud came again to Mr. Edwards with a Preſent of four Pair of fine Gloves from his Wife; and having thus begun the Acquaintance, made frequent Viſits to improve it, profeſſing, That he ſhou'd never ſufficiently acknowledge her Kindneſs. Having made ſome ſmall Reſpit of his Compliments, he return'd again and told Mrs. Edwards, That his Wife cou'd diſcourſe of Nothing but of the Kindneſs of thoſe good People in the Tower: That ſhe had long ſtudy'd, and at length bethought her Self of a handſom Way of Requital. You have, ſaid he, a pretty Gentlewoman to your Daughter, and I have a young Nephew who has two or three Hundred Pounds a Year Land, and is at my Diſpoſal: If your Daughter be free, and you approve of it, I will bring him hither to ſee her, and we will endeavour to make it a Match. This was eaſily aſſented to by old Mr. Edwards, who invited the pretended Parſon to dine with him that Day, and he as readily accepted of the Invitation, who taking upon him to ſay Grace, perform'd it with ſingular Devotion, and lifting up of Eyes, and concluded his long-winded Bleſſing with a hearty Prayer for the King, Queen and Royal Family. After Dinner he went up to ſee the Rooms; and diſcovering a handſome Caſe of Piſtols there, he expreſs'd a great Deſire to buy them to preſent to a young Lord who was his Neighbour; probably to diſarm the Houſe againſt the Time he intended to put his Deſign in Execution. At his Departure, which was with a Canonical Benediction of the good Company, he appointed a Day and Hour to bring his young Nephew to his Miſtreſs, which was that very Day that he made his bold Attempt, the 9th of May, about ſeven in the Morning. 1671. Car. 23 Reſ. 12

The Progreſs of it.

At that Time the old Man was got up ready to receive his Gueſts, and the Daughter had put her Self into her beſt Dreſs, to receive her Gallant; when, according to Appointment, Parſon Blud with three more came to the Jewel-Houſe, all arm'd with Rapier Blades in their Canes, and every one a Dagger, and a Pair of Pocket Piſtols: Two of his Companions enter'd in with him, and the third ſtaid at the Door, for a careful Watch. The Daughter thought it not modeſt for her to come down, till ſhe was call'd; but ſent her Maid to take a view of the Company, and to bring her a Deſcription of the Perſon of her Gallant. The Maid imagin'd that he who ſtaid at the Door was the intended Bridegroom, becauſe he was the youngeſt of the Company, and return'd to her young Miſtreſs with the Character ſhe had form'd of his Perſon. In the interim, Blud told Mr. Edwards that they wou'd not go up Stairs till his Wife came; and deſired him to ſhew his Friends the Crown to paſs the Time till then. As ſoon as they were enter'd the Room where the Crown was kept, and the Door, as uſually, was ſhut behind them, they threw a Cloak over the old Man's Head, and clapt a Gag into his Mouth, which was a great Plug of Wood with a ſmall Hole to take breath at, that was ty'd on with a waxed Leather which went round his Neck. At the ſame Time they faſtned an Iron Hook to his Noſe, that no Sound might paſs from him that Way. Having thus ſecured him from crying out, they plainly told him, That they were reſolv'd to have the Crown, Globe and Scepter; and if he wou'd quietly ſubmit to it, they wou'd ſpare his Life, otherwiſe he was to expect no Mercy. He thereupon forc'd himſelf to make all the Noiſe he poſſibly cou'd, to be heard above: Upon which they knock'd him down with a wooden Mallet, and told him, That if he wou'd lye quietly, they wou'd ſpare his Life; but if not, upon the next Attempt to diſcover them, they wou'd kill him, and pointed three Daggers at his Breaſt. Still he ſtrain'd himſelf to make the greater Noiſe; at which they gave him nine or ten Stroaks more upon the Head with the Mallet, and ſtabb'd him into the Belly. The poor Man, almoſt fourſcore Years old, fell and lay ſome Time entranc'd; when one of them kneeling on the Ground to try if he breath'd, and not perceiving any Breath to come from him, ſaid, He is dead, I'll warrant him: Mr. Edwards recovering a little, heard his Words, and conceiving it beſt for Himſelf to be ſo thought, lay very quietly. Concluding him dead, they omitted to tye his Hands behind him; and Parret, one of the Companions put the Globe into his Breeches, Blud kept the Crown under his Cloak; the Third was deſign'd to file the Sceptre in two, becauſe too long to carry conveniently, and then to put it into a Bag brought for that purpoſe.

The Diſappointment.

But before this cou'd be done, young Mr. Edwards, Son of the old Gentleman, juſt come from Flanders, chanc'd to arrive at the very Inſtant that this was acting; and coming to the Door, the Perſon who ſtood Centinel for the reſt, ask'd him With whom he wou'd ſpeak? He made Anſwer He belong'd to the Houſe; but perceiving by his Queſtion, that he himſelf was a Stranger, told him, That if he had any Buſineſs with his Father, he wou'd go and acquaint him with it, and went up Stairs, where he was welcom'd by his Mother, Wife and Siſter. In the mean Time the Centinel gave notice of the Son's Arrival, and they immediately haſted away with the Crown and the Globe, but left the Sceptre, not having Time to file it. The old Man returning to himſelf, got ſuddenly up, pull'd off the Gag, and cry'd out Treaſon, Murder! The Daughter hearing him, ran down, and ſeeing her Father thus wounded, ruſh'd out upon the Tower Hill, and cry'd Treaſon, the Crown is ſtoln! This gave the firſt Allarm; and Blud and Parret making great Haſte, were obſerv'd to jogg each other with their Elbows as they went, which caus'd them to be ſuſpected and purſu'd. By this Time young Edwards and one Captain Beckman, upon the Cry of their Siſter, were come down, and left their Father likewiſe to run after the Villains: But they were advanc'd beyond the main Guard, and the Allarm being given to the Warder at the Draw-Bridge, he put himſelf in a Poſture to ſtop them. Blud came up firſt, and diſcharg'd a Piſtol at him; the Bullet miſs'd him, but the Powder or Fear made him fall to the Ground, whereby they got ſafe to the little Ward-Houſe Gate, where one Sill, one of Cromwell's Soldiers, ſtood Centinel, who, tho' he ſaw the other Warder ſhot, made no Reſiſtance, by which means the Villains got over that Draw-Bridge, and through the outward Gate upon the Wharf, and made all poſſible Haſte towards their Horſes, which attended at St. Catharine's Gate, call'd the Iron Gate; crying themſelves, as they ran, Stop the Rogues! and the grave Canonical Habit made them thought innocent.

Immediately after, Captain Beckman got up to them, at which Blud diſcharg'd his ſecond Piſtol at the Captain's Head, but he ſtooping down avoided the Shot, and ſeiz'd upon him, with the Crown under his Cloak: Yet Blud had the Impudence, tho' he ſaw himſelf a Priſoner, to ſtruggle a long while for the Crown, and when it was wreſted from him, he cry'd It was a gallant Attempt, however unſucceſsful, for it was for a Crown. A Servant belonging to Captain Shirburn ſeiz'd upon Parret, before Blud was taken: And there was ſo much Conſternation in all Men, and ſo much Confuſion in the Purſuit, that it was a Miracle that ſeveral innocent Perſons had not ſuffer'd; for young Edwards overtaking one that was bloody in the Scuffle, and ſuppoſing him to be one of his Father's Murtherers, was going to run him through, had not Captain Beckman hinder'd him. And as this Captain himſelf made vaſt Haſte in the Purſuit, the Guards were going to fire at him, thinking him to be one of the Rogues; but one of them, who fortunately knew him, cry'd out, He is a Friend! Blud and Parret being both ſeiz'd, Hunt, another of them, and Son-in-law to Blud, leap'd to Horſe with two more of the Conſpirators, and rid far away; but a Cart in the Street chanc'd to turn ſhort, Hunt run his Head againſt a Pole that ſtuck out, which made him fall aſtoniſh'd from his Horſe: But recovering his Legs, and putting his Foot in the Stirrup, a Cobler running in, cry'd This is Tom Hunt, who was in the bloody Buſineſs againſt the Duke of Ormond, let us ſecure him! A Conſtable being accidentally there, ſeiz'd him upon this Affirmation, and he was, with Blud and Parret, committed to ſafe Cuſtody in the Tower. Parret was a Silk Dyer in Southwark, and in the Rebellion had been Lieutenant to Major-General Harriſon. In the robuſtious Struggle for the Crown, the great Pearl, and fair Diamond fell off, and were loſt for a while, with ſome other ſmaller Stones; but the Pearl was found by a poor ſweeping Woman to one of the Warders, and the Diamond by a Barber's Prentice, and both faithfully reſtored. Other ſmall Stones were pick'd up by ſeveral Perſons, and brought in. The fair Ballas Ruby, belonging to the Sceptre, was found in Parret's Pocket; ſo that nothing conſiderable was wanting; the Crown only was bruis'd, and ſent to be repair'd.

5. All Perſons were allarm'd with the Noiſe of this unparallel'd Tranſaction, and the King had the Curioſity to hear the Examination Himſelf; for which Reaſon the Priſoners were carry'd to White-Hall. Nothing but this Appearance before his Majeſty, cou'd poſſibly have ſav'd Blud from Execution; but that which ought to have been his ſurer Condemnation, prov'd to be his Safety. For all Men concluding that none but thoſe who had the Courage to venture upon ſuch a daring Villany as that of the Crown, cou'd be guilty of the Practice upon ſuch an eminent Peer as the Duke of Ormond; therefore, amongſt other Queſtions, it was thought fit to interrogate him whether he had not a Part in that Aſſault; for the Authors of it were yet in the dark. Blud, as if he valu'd himſelf upon the Action, and poſſibly ſuſpecting that the King might have made ſome Diſcovery of it, without Heſitation, confeſs'd he had. Being then ask'd who were his Aſſociates, he anſwer'd, That he wou'd never betray a Friend's Life, nor deny a Guilt in Defence of his own. He was next ask'd, What Provocation he had to make ſo bold an Aſſault upon the Duke of Ormond? He ſaid, the Duke had taken away his Eſtate, and executed ſome of his Friends, and that he and many others had engag'd themſelves by ſolemn Oath to revenge it. It was now more apparent from his forward Confeſſion of his Conſpiracy againſt the Caſtle of Dublin, that he aim'd at great Eſteem by the Extravagancy and Audacity of his Atchievements. And leſt the Concealment of any of his Villanies ſhou'd leſſen the Romance of his Life, in his Examination about the Crown, he voluntarily, tho' perhaps falſly, confeſs'd to the King, That he had been engag'd in a Deſign to kill his Majeſty with a Carabine, from out the Reeds by the Thames Side, above Batterſey, where he often went to Swim: That the Cauſe of this Reſolution in Himſelf and Others, was his Majeſty's Severity over the Conſciences of the Godly, in Suppreſſing the Freedom of their Religious Aſſemblies. That when he had taken his Stand in the Reeds to that purpoſe, his Heart was check'd with an Awe of Majeſty; and he did not only relent himſelf, but diverted the reſt of his Aſſociates from the Deſign. He further told his Majeſty, That he had by theſe his Confeſſions ſufficiently laid himſelf open to the Law, and he might reaſonably expect the utmoſt Rigour of it; for which he was, without much Concern of his own, prepared. But withal he declar'd, That the Matter wou'd not be of that Indifferency to his Majeſty, in as much as there were Hundreds of his Friends, yet undiſcover'd, who were all bound together by the indiſpenſible Oaths of Conſpirators, to revenge the Death of any of the Fraternity, upon thoſe who ſhou'd bring them to Juſtice; which wou'd expoſe his Majeſty, and all his Miniſters, to the daily Fear and Expectation of a Maſſacre. But on the other ſide, if his Majeſty wou'd ſpare the Lives of a few, he might oblige the Hearts of many; who, as they had been ſeen to act daring Miſchiefs, wou'd be as bold, if receiv'd into Pardon and Favour, in performing eminent Service to the Crown. And Blud pretended ſuch an Intereſt and Sway amongſt the Diſſenters and diſaffected Party, to diſpoſe them to their Fidelity, as if he had been their choſen General, and had them all enter'd in his Muſter-Roll.

Since this Villain's Crimes were ſo numerous and notorious, and his Merits inviſible and inconceivable, every Man took the liberty to conjecture, what Conſideration cou'd poſſibly beget his Pardon. It required a great Meaſure of Mercy in a Prince to forgive ſuch flagrant Injuries to Himſelf; but it was thought above his Mercy to pardon the Offences committed againſt others, without any kind of Satisfaction: Yet the Lord Arlington came in the King's Name to the Duke of Ormond to tell him, That he wou'd not have Blud proſecuted, for Reaſons which he was commanded to give him. The Duke bravely reply'd, That his Majeſty's Commands was the Only Reaſon that cou'd be given, and therefore he might ſpare the reſt: And the King ſhou'd ſee, that he valu'd his Life as little as his Majeſty did his Crown. It was a gallant Anſwer of his Grace, and ſuch as became the Loyalty of his Family; but it is pity that the World ſhou'd want the Knowledge of his Lordſhip's Reaſons, which had weight enough to ſmother a Matter ſo much to the Diſhonour of Juſtice, and the Detriment of Peerage. How myſterious ſoever it was, Blud and his Aſſociates were not only pardon'd, and ſet at liberty, but the Arch-Villain Himſelf had five Hundred Pounds a Year in Land conferr'd upon him in Ireland; and that meritorious Perſon admitted into all the Privacy and Intimacy of the Court. No Man was more aſſiduous than he in both the Secretary's Offices; and if any one had a Buſineſs in Court that ſtuck, he made his Applications to Blud, as the moſt induſtrious and ſucceſsful Solicitor. On the other ſide, tho' many had been ſolicited for old Mr. Edwards, yet all that cou'd be obtain'd for his Fidelity and Sufferings, was a Grant of two Hundred Pounds out of the Exchequer, and a Hundred to his Son; the Payment of which was ſo long delay'd, and his Surgeons daily calling upon him for Satisfaction for their Drugs and Pains, he was forc'd to ſell his Order, and likewiſe his Son, for juſt Half the Money, and liv'd not long to enjoy the Remainder. Sir Gilbert Talbot makes ſeveral Reflections upon the whole, and particularly obſerves, 'That nothing cou'd more betray the Weakneſs of a Govern-'ment, than that it ſhou'd have recourſe to ſuch Inſtruments to ſupport 'it, nor cou'd any Thing render the Authority more deſpicable, than 'that it ſhou'd be terrify'd from the Execution of Juſtice upon the 'greateſt Malefactor recorded in Hiſtory, for Fear that Blud's Ghoſt 'ſhou'd riſe, or his ſurviving Confederates meditate Revenge.' Such was the Condition of the State under the Management of the famous Cabal; for the Cure of whoſe Diſtempers, bold and Quack Remedies daily became more in Uſe and Practice, than ſafe and wholeſome Phyſick.

He and his Aſſociates are pardon'd.

In this Year we are to take Notice of the Deaths of ſeveral Perſons of Note and Fame, among which we ſhall begin with two Noblemen, one having an Engliſh and the other a Scotch Title. The firſt was Edward Mountague, Earl of Manchester, before mention'd, a Perſon whoſe Character

The Deaths of the Earl of Manchester,

Character has been given in the laſt Volume, who prov'd a great and a publick Inſtrument in the Miſeries of the late Wars, and afterwards a very conſiderable one in the Reſtoration, when he ſhew'd himſelf the moſt real and unaffected Penitent of any of his Party, and declar'd ſome Things much to the Honour of the late King; for which he was made Lord Chamberlain by his preſent Majeſty, and choſen Chancellor of Cambridge, by which he had Opportunity of making Amends for the Damages he had done to that Univerſity. The other was Thomas Lord Fairfax, Baron of Camerone in Scotland, a Perſon who happen'd to have a greater Power and Intereſt than the laſt, and did more effectually caſt the Scale, both in the Civil Wars and the Reſtoration. But as to the King's Death, he was outwitted by Cromwell, and always declar'd his utter Abhorrence of that Parricide with Tears; and tho' his martial Fame had reſounded throughout all Europe, yet the retired Part of his Life gave him greater Satisfaction than all his former Victories, when he many Years liv'd at Eaſe at his Houſe at Nun-Appleton in Yorkſhire, where he dy'd in Peace, in the 60th Year of his Age. The two next were two Reverend Prelates of the Church, one of England, and the other of Scotland. The former was Dr. William Nicolſon, Biſhop of Gloceſter, a Perſon educated in the Univerſity of Oxford, who after ſeveral ſmall Preferments, aroſe to this Biſhoprick ſoon after the Reſtoration; where he continu'd the reſt of his Life, with the Reputation of a right learned Divine, well read in the Fathers and Schoolmen, a Man of great Prudence, Charity and Moderation; but yet more particularly diſtinguiſh'd for his excellent Skill in the critical Part of Grammar, in which Faculty none in his Time, or perhaps any before, ever exceeded him. The Scotch Prelate was Dr. Robert Wiſhart, Biſhop of Edinburgh, Son of the learned and famous Dr. George Wiſhart, a Perſon who had ſuffer'd a long and diſmal Impriſonment at Edinburgh, in the Regency of the Covenant, and afterwards accompany'd the victorious Marqueſs of Montroſs: Upon his Patron's Declenſion he became Chaplain to the famous Queen of Bohemia, and after the King's Return, Miniſter of Newcaſtle upon Tyne, where he was held in great Veneration for his Learning and Loyalty. From thence he was remov'd to the Biſhoprick of Edinburgh, where he diſplay'd both his Piety and Charity; and particularly, remembring the Miſeries of a Priſon, he took Care, at each Dinner that he made, to ſend his firſt Diſh from his Table to the Priſoners.

After theſe Prelates, we ſhall mention two other celebrated Divines, the firſt was Dr. Meric Caſaubon, Son of the moſt learned Iſaac Caſaubon, born in Geneva, but educated in Chriſt-Church in Oxford, and afterwards made Prebendary of Canterbury, and Rector of Ickham four Miles from thence. He was a noted and general Scholar, and wrote many Books, but moſt of all excell'd in Criticiſms, which was likewiſe his Father's great Talent: He was taken Notice of by ſeveral Foreigners, and was courted by Cromwell to write his Hiſtory, but he continu'd loyal and faithful to the laſt. The other was Dr. John Worthington, ſometime Maſter of Jeſus Colledge in Cambridge, Vice-Chancellor of that Univerſity, and Rector of Fen-Ditton in the ſame County; afterwards Rector of Ingoldsby in Lincolnſhire, and Prebendary in the Cathedral Church, but at laſt remov'd to Hackney near London. He was an admirable Man both for Piety and Learning, and highly eſteem'd by all that knew him: His Parts and Induſtry were both extraordinary, and he was eminently ſkill'd in the learned Languages, as well Oriental as Occidental. But he is particularly noted for thoſe uſeful Pains he took for ſeveral Years, in collecting, reviſing and publiſhing the elaborate Works of the famous Mr. Joſeph Mede, one of the great Glories of the Church and Nation. We ſhall

Dr. Caſaubon,

Dr. Worthington,

Judge Keeling,

shall next mention that eminent Lawyer Sir John Keeling Knight, Lord Chief Justice of his Majesty's Court of the King's-Bench, who after a long Weakness and Decay of Strength, dy'd at his House in London, much lamented for his great Integrity and Worth. His Majesty was pleas'd to confer that important Place upon the famous Lord Chief Baron Hales; who left his Seat in the Exchequer to be fill'd with Sir Edward Turner, Solicitor General, and Speaker of the House of Commons; who was succeeded in his Place of Solicitor General, by the Lord North's Son, Sir Francis North. In the last Place we shall mention Mr. Edward Bagshaw, a turbulent and ungovernable Dissenter, but of what Denomination is hard to know, any more than Vavasor Powel, mention'd in the last Year, between whom there seem'd much Resemblance. He was a Man of notable Parts and Abilities, and of no small Learning, but of a pragmatical and unmanagable Disposition, opposite to all Rule and Government; for which he had been a Sufferer from more than one Party, and was last of all sent to Newgate for refusing the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy, where he ended his Life. He was buryed, as Powel was before him, in the noted Place near Bunhill, being accompany'd by a thousand Protestant Dissenters, and had a memorable Epitaph made by one of the chief of them. These sort of Persons ought not to escape in History; and a few of such Men, under the Notion of painful and powerful Preaching, have been able to seduce Multitudes, and do incredible Mischief.

And Mr. Bagshaw.

The bold Steps made by the present Ministry.

XI. 1. All things being just ripe for Execution, and according to the Alliance with France, a War determin'd against Holland, this Year began with three such bold Stretches of the King's Prerogative and common Justice, as had not been known before in the Reign, all proceeding from the now reigning Ministry, the prolifick Cabal. As the King had enter'd upon the Design of a Second War, contrary to the Interest and Humour of the Nation, and without the Advice and Consent of his Parliament, which was prorogu'd to the next Year, so his Majesty was oblig'd to carry it on without their Assistance, and to depend upon the Purse of his Brother the King of France, and upon the Inventions of his secret and select Ministers. Therefore the first Project and Attempt was to procure Mony, which, notwithstanding the Liberalities of the Parliament, was still very much wanting. The French King is said to have remitted seven hundred thousand Pounds, which was paid in Mr. Chiffin's Name; but that was found not sufficient to answer the Expence of a new League, and a lavish Court. Therefore a new Thought was form'd with Relation to the Exchequer, wherein the Bankers, who had furnish'd the King upon all Occasions at very excessive Interest, had lodg'd mighty Sums of other Subjects Mony. As to the secret Steps and Progress towards this Attempt, we have the fullest Account from a Manuscript of Sir Joseph Tyley's, which in part has already seen the Light; and is the rather taken Notice of, because it agrees so well with some other Accounts we have receiv'd.

MSS. Arlington Primi. Tromp's Life. Calamy. Burnet.

His Majesty being under pressing Necessities, in a private Meeting with his Ministers, declared, If any one of them cou'd invent a Method how to raise about fifteen hundred thousand Pounds, without a Parliament, he should have the White-Staff, namely the Lord Treasurer's Place. Whereupon the next Day, the intriguing Lord Ashley told Sir Thomas Clifford in Confidence, That there was a WAY to supply the King immediately with such a Sum; but it was hazardous to put it in Practice, and might draw a Train of ill Consequences along with it, by inflaming both the Parliament and People. Sir Thomas was impatient to know the Secret, being ing bold and couragious, intirely in the French and Popiſh Intereſt, and pleas'd with any thing that might render the King uneaſie with Parliaments. Therefore to diſcover this Politician's Project, he ply'd his Lordſhip with Viſits; and having one Night drunk him up to a proper Height, he inſenſibly led the Converſation into the King's great Wants; and the Lord Aſhley being warm and unguarded, dropt the important Secret, which was The ſhutting up the Exchequer. Sir Thomas immediately took the Hint, left his Lordſhip as ſoon as he handſomly cou'd, went directly to White-Hall, and without going to Bed, attended till the King roſe, fell on his Knees, and demanded the White-Staff according to Promiſe. His Majeſty cry'd out, God's Fiſh! I'll be as good as my Word, if you can find the Mony. Then Sir Thomas told him, If he wou'd ſhut up the Exchequer, he might be ſure of fifteen hundred thouſand Pounds. The King, who was as quick as any of his Miniſters, eaſily fell in with the Project; and Sir Thomas Clifford, after it was found effectual, was made Lord High-Treaſurer and a Peer. The Lord Aſhley was ſenſibly touch'd to be thus circumvented by his Pupil; but the Thing was done, and the Honour of the Invention appropriated; therefore to put the beſt Colour he cou'd on it, he ſaid, That Clifford had plough'd with his Heifer; and having been Chancellor of the Exchequer, he had the more Reaſon to expect the White-Staff himſelf. However, his Majeſty, not to be forgetful of ſuch an eminent Piece of Service, firſt made him Earl of Shaftsbury, and ſoon after Lord Chancellor of England. 167½. Car. 24 Reſ. 12

All Matters prepared, the grand Propoſal was made in Council by Sir Thomas Clifford, who declar'd, That the King muſt have Mony to carry on the War againſt Holland, in which his Honour was ingag'd: That he knew of no other Means at preſent than ſhutting up the Exchequer; and he deſired none wou'd ſpeak againſt it without propoſing ſome Method more certain and expeditious. To this no Reply was made; and ſo the Year began with a total Stop put to all publick Payments in the Exchequer, to the great Surprize and Wonder of the whole Kingdom. But to ſoften and mitigate a Practice ſo ſhocking and unjuſtifiable in it ſelf, his Majeſty, being preſent in Council, on the 2d of January, was pleas'd to make this following Declaration: 'That ſeeing all the Princes and the 'States his Neighbours, were making great Preparations for War, both 'by Sea and Land; his Majeſty, for the Safety of his Government and 'People, look'd upon himſelf as oblig'd to make ſuch Preparations as 'might be proportionable for the Protection both of the one and the 'other; and to that End had already given Orders for the fitting and 'preparing a very conſiderable Fleet, to be ready againſt the Spring. 'That by this inevitable Neceſſity, his Majeſty conſidering the great 'Charges that muſt attend ſuch Preparations, and after his ſerious De'bates and beſt Conſiderations, not finding any Poſſibility to defray ſuch 'unuſual Expences, by the uſual Ways and Means of borrowing Monies, 'by reaſon his Revenues were ſo anticipated and engag'd, he was neceſ'ſitated (contrary to his own Inclinations) upon theſe Emergencies, and 'for the publick Safety at the preſent, to cauſe a Stop to be made of the 'Payment of any Monies, now being, or to be brought into his Exche'quer for the Space of one whole Year, ending the laſt Day of Decem'ber next.— His Majeſty, as far as in him lyes, to take away Apprehen'ſions or Terror, that might poſſeſs any of his Subjects Spirits, decla'reth, That no Perſon whatſoever ſhall be defrauded of any thing that 'is juſtly due to him, nor ſhall this Reſtraint, which his Majeſty hath 'been compell'd to lay upon ſuch Monies, continue longer than the 'foreſaid laſt Day of December; and that then no new Orders, &c. ſhall 'intervene to break the Courſe of ſuch Payments. That nothing cou'd

'have urg'd his Majesty to an Act of this Nature, but such a Conjuncture 'of Affairs, when all the Neighbouring Princes and States were mak- 'ing such threatning Preparations, that his Government cou'd not be safe, 'without appearing in the same Posture.

However tenderly the Matter was represented by the Publick, great Numbers were in a Consternation about it; and some did not fear to say, That the Crown had publish'd it self a Bankrupt; but by degrees, by the King's new Promises, Persons began to be appeas'd, tho' never reliev'd. Within seven Days after, the Lord Arlington, a Person too much concern'd in the Business, in a Letter to the Earl of Sunderland in Spain, gave this following Account of the Result of it: 'The Distempers have continu'd 'in the Town, and the angry Discourses about them; but his Majesty 'having Yesterday convened the Bankers before him at the Treasury, 'and after many kind and confident Assurances given them, that he wou'd 'punctually satisfy his Debt to them, either out of what the Parliament 'shou'd give him the next Session, or out of his own Revenue, he told them, 'He likewise required of them, that without Delay they shou'd take off 'the Stop they had made of paying the Merchants their current Cash, 'which lay deposited in their Hands, not to be lent to his Occasions, or 'for Interest, but for the Security of keeping it; because indeed, the 'Stop of this was the Occasion of the great Clamour; the Merchants 'not daring, or being able to accept or pay any Bills of Exchange, drive 'their Trade abroad, or clear their Ships at the Custom-House at Home. 'After many Things the King said to them, and very handsomly upon 'this Subject, they all went away better satisfy'd, promising his Majesty 'they wou'd this Day begin their Payments to the Merchants, which 'I hear they have accordingly done, and upon it, the Discontent is already visibly appeas'd; so that we do not doubt, but in a few Days it will 'quite wear out, and consequently his Majesty find himself in a Con-'dition of Arming out his Fleet with Ready Mony, and Supporting 'whatever shall happen to be his Game, with relation to the Affairs abroad 'this Summer.' But whatsoever the Expectations were at this Time, it appear'd afterwards that many Persons were utterly ruin'd, and all that had lent their Mony to the Exchequer were wholly without Remedy, to the great Dishonour of the Government, and the Disgrace of the present Ministry.

2d. The Attempt upon the Dutch Smyrna Fleet.

2. The second bold Step and Attempt made under the same Administration, was likewise for the gaining of Mony and Profit, to which the French King and Monsieur Colbert gave particular Incouragement. And this was to fall upon and seize the Dutch Smyrna Fleet, before any War was declared, which Fleet had already pass'd the Straits Mouth, and was daily expected home. This the French look'd upon as a favourable Opportunity to fix the English in an inevitable War. With which View they gave his Britannick Majesty to understand, 'That such a Prize as 'this wou'd furnish him with more in one Day, than his Revenues amount-'ed to in a whole Year; that it was possible this might serve his Occa-'sions during the whole War, without obliging him to have recourse to 'his Parliament: But an Attempt of this Nature wou'd admit of no De-'lay, especially since he well knew that let it succeed as it wou'd, his 'People elated with Prosperity, and sensible of Affronts, wou'd now 'spare nothing either to carry on the War, and raise the Nation by hum-'bling the Dutch, or to be reveng'd upon the Merchants that had taken 'such Advantages of them, and dar'd to dispute with them the Empire 'of the Sea.' Upon this Incouragement, the King of England resolv'd upon the Attempt, and immediately sent out thirty eight Men of War into into the Channel, in three ſeparate Squadrons, to wait for the Dutch Fleet that was oblig'd to paſs that Way. Theſe were no ſooner got into the Channel, but the Smyrna Fleet was ſeen off the Iſle of Wight, being ſeventy two Sail of Merchant-Men, the richeſt they ever had, under the Convoy of ſix Men of War, and ſeveral Privateers, all drawn up in Line of Battle and prepared to ingage. 1671. Car. 24 Reſ. 12

On the 13th of March, the Engliſh Squadron under Sir Robert Holms, to the Numberof nine Frigates and three Yatchts, ſail'd a Head to come in with them, without being ſtartled at their Appearing in Line of Battle, becauſe the Dutch were uſually upon their Guard, eſpecially when laden with Goods of Value. The Engliſh did not know that the Dutch Admirals had receiv'd Intelligence of their Deſign by de Clarges the States Agent at Calais, and that thereupon they had ſtrengthen'd their Fleet by the Junction of ſome Spaniſh Ships, and an Amſterdam Man of War, that they met in their Paſſage; reſolving, if Occaſion were, to defend themſelves to the laſt Extremity. As ſoon as Sir Robert Holms came in view of the Dutch Fleet, he gave the Signals for forming of a Line; and ſoon after he came up with a Ship of eighty Guns, and ſent to deſire the Dutch Admiral to come on board of him. At the ſame Time he order'd the next commanding Officer to make the ſame Advance with his Ship, and invite the Dutch Rear-Admiral on board of him; deſigning, it ſeems, to ſeize on the principal Officers by Stratagem, and under the Pretence of Civility, and ſo make themſelves Maſters of the whole Fleet with greater Facility, either by Force or in an amicable Way.

Haes the Dutch Admiral deſiring to ſave his Fleet without Ingagement, endeavour'd to pacify the Engliſh by his Submiſſion, and to ſcour off with all Expedition; and having ſent his Excuſe for not daring to leave his Ship, order'd his Pilot to wait upon the Engliſh Admiral, and pay him all Manner of Reſpects. But Boes the Rear-Admiral acted with leſs Caution, and roughly anſwer'd the Engliſh Commander, If he had any Thing to ſay to him, he might come on board him. The Engliſh provok'd at the Diſappointment, and having no other Captive but a poor Pilot, preſently began the Fight. The Dutch Fleet threw themſelves into the Form of a Creſcent, and for ſome Hours maintain'd the Fight ſo vigorouſly, that Sir Robert Holms thought fit to ſtand off towards Night: But the next Day, having receiv'd a Re-inforcement of four or five Men of War, he came up with them again, and charg'd them a ſecond Time, but with no better Fortune; and the whole Smyrna Fleet had eſcap'd, had not the Engliſh, upon renewing the Fight a third Time, took one of their Convoy Ships whoſe Captain was kill'd, which was the Cauſe of the Loſs of four Merchant Ships which were cut off from a Squadron put into great Diſorder. But the main Body of the Merchant-Men, under the Protection of a ſudden Fog, in a little Time got ſafely into the deſired Ports. Such was the End of this Fight, and this was all the Advantage which the Engliſh gain'd by an Action that can never be vindicated: Yet it was palliated by the Account of it given at that Time by the Publick, which intimated as if this Battle began purely becauſe the Dutch refus'd to ſtrike, and lower their Top-Sails.

3. It was but two Days after this Attempt, that the third large Step was made by the preſent Miniſtry, which was the Granting of Liberty of Conſcience and a Toleration for all ſorts of Diſſenters, contrary to ſeveral Acts of Parliament, which were not to be under the Name of an Abrogation, but only that of a Suſpenſion. This had been long thought of by the Government, and ſometimes attempted, but with no great Succeſs. However it was now reſolv'd on; and on what Grounds, it ſhall 3d. The Grant of Liberty of Conſcience.

be ſhewn from a foremention'd French Author, Father Orleans, who from King James ſeem'd to have had a clearer Information of this Affair than the common Engliſh Writers: 'The Diſſenters had put the King to 'ſome Trouble during the firſt Dutch War, being offended at the attack-'ing a People of their own Principles, and whom they look'd upon as 'their Support. For the removing any ſuch Obſtacle, and to pacify thoſe 'turbulent Spirits, Shaftsbury propos'd granting Liberty of Conſcience, 'agreed by the King's Declaration at Breda, and afterwards taken away 'by the Parliament.' For the clearing of this Point, he tells us, 'There 'were great Debates in the Beginning of this Parliament about Liberty 'of Conſcience, between the Proteſtants and the Catholicks, the Church 'of England and the Presbyterians. The Catholick Party was ſupported 'by the Earl of Briſtol, a Man in great Repute, and Head of a potent 'Faction; the Proteſtant Party by Chancellor Hyde, Chief of an oppoſite 'Faction, and a Perſon of no leſs Conſideration, who putting himſelf 'at the Head of the prevailing Church of England Party in the Parlia-'ment, declar'd not only againſt the Catholicks, but againſt the Presby-'terians, and all thoſe call'd Nonconformiſts. The King, who was no 'good Chriſtian in his Actions, but a Catholick in his Heart, did all that 'cou'd be expected from his eaſy Temper, to maintain the common Li-'berty, that ſo the Catholick Church might have ſhare in it; but the 'Church of England prevail'd, and Chancellor Hyde was ſo warm upon 'that Point, that his Majeſty was oblig'd to yield rather to his Importu-'nity, than his Reaſons. It was the Reſtoring this Liberty of Conſcience, 'that Shaftsbury thought requiſite for carrying on the great Deſign in 'Hand. He communicated it to his Colleagues of the Cabal, who were 'of the ſame Opinion, not only on account of the Reaſon he urg'd, 'which was the Gaining of the Diſſenters, whom they fear'd; but upon 'Another, which he eaſily approv'd of, and was the Favouring of the 'Catholicks, for whom moſt of them had an Affection, and all an Eſteem. 'Clifford and Arlington were ſo in private, and both dy'd in the Church; 'the Duke of Buckingham needed no Converſion as to Opinion, cou'd 'he have prevail'd with Himſelf as to Libertiniſm; Shaftsbury Himſelf 'was not very averſe to it, as long as Intereſt and Malice did not carry 'him over to another Party, from that to which he was inclined.—It is 'eaſy to believe the King readily comply'd with them, being Himſelf 'always of that Opinion till Death, bating that Policy prevail'd on him 'to act counter, and that the Duke of York us'd all his Intereſt to ſup-'port them. All the Debate was, concerning the Extent of that Liber-'ty, and the two Kings acting in Concert, that Affair was handled in 'their Treaty: Several Propoſals were made, ſome more, ſome leſs ad-'vantagious to the Catholicks; France was for the more moderate, as ſa-'feſt and moſt ſeaſonable, and it was agreed, that the King ſhou'd grant 'Liberty of Conſcience to all his Subjects in General.

Such were the Diſcoveries made by this curious Jeſuit, of which the Nation, or even the Parliament, had but an imperfect Knowledge at this Time. According to this Agreement, on the 15th of March, a well penn'd Declaration was publiſh'd by his Majeſty, which, conſidering the critical Juncture, ought to be inſerted without any Degree of Mutilation. It was intituled His Majeſty's Declaration to all his loving Subjects, begin-

'to make uſe of that Supream Power in Eccleſiaſtical Matters, which Reſ. 12
'is not only inherent in us, but hath been declared and recogniz'd to be
'ſo by ſeveral Statutes and Acts of Parliament: And therefore we do now
'accordingly iſſue out this our Royal Declaration, as well for the Quiet-
'ing the Minds of our good Subjects in theſe Points, for Inviting Stran'gers in this Conjuncture to come and live under us, and for the bet'ter Encouragement of all to a chearful Following of their Trade and 'Callings, from whence we hope, by the Bleſſing of God, to have many 'good and happy Advantages to our Government; as alſo for Prevent'ing for the future, the Danger that might otherwiſe ariſe from Private
'Meetings, and Seditious Conventicles.

'And in the Firſt Place, we Declare our expreſs Reſolution, Mean'ing and Intention to be, That the Church of England be preſerv'd, and
'remain entire in its Doctrine, Diſcipline and Government, as now it
'ſtands Eſtabliſh'd by Law: And that this be taken to be, as it is, the
'Baſis, Rule and Standard of the General and Publick Worſhip of God;
'and that the Orthodox conformable Clergy do receive and enjoy the 'Revenues belonging thereunto; and that no Perſon, tho' of different
'Opinion and Perſwaſion, ſhall be exempt from paying his Tythes, or

'ſhall be capable of holding any Benefice, Living, or Eccleſiaſtical Dig-

'is not exactly conformable. We do in the next place Declare our Will
'and Pleaſure to be, That the Execution of all and all Manner of Penal
'Laws in Matters Eccleſiaſtical, againſt whatſoever Sort of Non-confor-
'miſts or Recuſants, be immediately Suſpended, and they are hereby Suſ-
'pended. And all Judges of Aſſize and Goal-Delivery, Sheriffs, Juſti-
'ces of the Peace, Mayors, Bayliffs, and other Officers whatſoever, whe'ther Eccleſiaſtical or Civil, are to take Notice of it, and pay due Obe'dience thereunto. And that there may be no Pretence for any of our 'Subjects to continue their illegal Meetings and Conventicles; we do De'clare, That we ſhall from Time to Time allow a ſufficient Number of 'Places, as ſhall be deſired, in all Parts of this our Kingdom, for the
'Uſe of ſuch as do not conform to the Church of England, to meet and
'aſſemble in, in order to their publick Worſhip and Devotion; which Pla'ces ſhall be open and free to all Perſons. But to prevent ſuch Diſorders
'and Inconveniencies as may happen by this our Indulgence, if not due-
'ly regulated, and that they may be the better protected by the Civil
'Magiſtrate, our expreſs Will and Pleaſure is, That none of our Subjects
'do preſume to meet in any Place, until ſuch Place be allow'd, and the 'Teacher of that Congregation be approv'd by us.

'And leſt any ſhou'd apprehend, that this Reſtriction ſhou'd make
'our ſaid Allowance and Approbation difficult to be obtain'd, We do
'further Declare, That this our Indulgence, as to the Allowance of pub-
'lick Places of Worſhip, and Approbation of Teachers, ſhall extend to
'all Sorts of Non-Conformiſts and Recuſants, except the Recuſants of

'Liberty, and ſhall preach Seditiouſly, or to the Derogation of the Do'ctrine, Diſcipline, or Government of the Eſtabliſh'd Church, or ſhall

'meet in Places not allow'd by us; We do hereby give them warning, 'and Declare, we will proceed againſt them with all imaginable Severity: 'And we will let them ſee, We can be as ſevere to puniſh ſuch Offenders, 'when ſo juſtly provok'd, as we are Indulgent to truely Tender Conſci-'ences.

The Deſign of it. The Timing of this Indulgence ſeems to have been a particular Fetch of Policy: The Church Party in general were ſo loyal in their Affections to the King, that they were not forward in ſuſpecting the Intrigues of the Court, and therefore fell in with the Meaſures of aſſiſting the French and humbling the Dutch with an implicit Belief, that it was the Wiſdom of the Miniſtry ſo to do. But the Diſſenters, in the ſeveral Parties of them, had no ſuch Veneration for the Government, but were more jealous of the Adminiſtration of it; and therefore in this Juncture were naturally diſpos'd to murmur at the Politicks of the Court in eſpouſing the Cauſe of France, againſt their particular Friends in Holland, and ſhew'd their Apprehenſions very much upon this Occaſion. So that it was the more neceſſary to appeaſe the Clamours of theſe Men by an Indulgence, and divert them from the Proſpects of Popery and Arbitrary Power, which they conceiv'd they had in their View. And excepting this one Political Reaſon of giving Content and Quiet, there appears no other Cauſe of Indulging, but that of giving Liberty to Papiſts, and of gaining a new Precedent for a Diſpenſing Power, without which Popery cou'd never prevail in England. The wiſer Diſſenters were themſelves ſenſible, that this Favour was not granted purely for their ſakes; as they acknowledge in theſe Words: 'The Beginning of the Dutch War made 'the Court think it neceſſary to grant an Indulgence to the Diſſenters, 'that ſo there might be a Peace at home while there was War abroad: 'And upon this Occaſion they had Liberty given them, tho' much to the 'Diſſatisfaction of thoſe who had had a Hand in framing all the ſevere 'Laws againſt them.' However it was, tho' the Parliament was intirely againſt this Indulgence, yet there was little or nothing done againſt the Diſſenters, till upon new Provocations in the Year 1681: So that for about nine Years together they had their Meetings almoſt as publickly and regularly as the other had their Churches; and in all that Time, whatſoever private Hardſhips any of them might meet in ſome Corners of England, they had in moſt Parts the free Exerciſe of their Worſhip and Religion.

4. The three grand Things being conquer'd, the Miniſtry had nothing more to do than to make an open Declaration of War. They had waited a while for the Return of Sir George Downing out of Holland, who had made ſeveral Demands of the States, but not in a manner Satisfactory to the Engliſh Court: So that upon his Return home, after a private Examination by the Lords of the Council, and an Account given to his Majeſty, he was ſent Priſoner to the Tower, for not obeying Orders. Shortly after, on the 17th Day of March, the King in Council order'd the Publiſhing his Declaration of War againſt the States-General of the United Provinces, which begins in theſe Words: 'We have been 'always ſo zealous for the Quiet of Chriſtendom, and ſo careful not to 'invade any other Kingdom or State, that we hope the World will do us 'the Juſtice to believe, that it is nothing but inevitable Neceſſity forceth 'us to the Reſolution of taking up Arms.' The greateſt Part is Hiſtorical, and ſo artfully drawn up, that no Part of that ought to be omitted; and is as follows:

The King's Declaration of War againſt the Dutch.

'Immediately upon our Reſtoration to our Crowns, the firſt Work 'we undertook, was the Eſtabliſhing of Peace, and the Settling a good

'Correſpon-

'Correſpondence between Us and our Neighbours; and in particular, 1671.
'our Care was to conclude a ſtrict League with the States-General of 'the United Provinces, upon ſuch equal Terms, as wou'd certainly not Car. 24
'have been broken, if any Obligations cou'd have kept them within the Reſ. 12
'Bounds of Friendſhip or Juſtice. This League was maintain'd inviola-
'ble on our Part: But in the Year 1664, We were ſtirr'd up by the 'Complaints of our People, and the unanimous Vote of both Houſes of 'Parliament, finding it a vain Attempt to endeavour the Proſperity of 'our Kingdoms by peaceable Ways at home, while our Subjects were
'ſtill expos'd to the Injuries and Oppreſſions of the States abroad. That 'whole Summer was ſpent in Negotiations and Endeavours on our Side,
'to bring them to reaſonable Terms, which notwithſtanding all we cou'd
'do, prov'd at length ineffectual; for the more we purſu'd them with
'friendly Propoſitions, the more obſtinately they kept off from agreeing
'with us. Upon this enſu'd the War in the Year 1665, and continu'd
'to the Year 1667; in all which Time our Victories and their Loſſes
'were memorable enough to put them in mind of being more faithful to 'their Leagues for the future. But inſtead of that, the Peace was no
'ſooner made, but they return'd to their uſual Cuſtom of breaking Arti- 1.
'cles, and ſupplanting our Trade. For inſtance, the States were parti'cularly engag'd in an Article of the Treaty of Breda, to ſend Commiſſi-
'oners to us at London, about the Regulation of our Trade in the Eaſt-
'Indies; but they were ſo far from doing it upon that Obligation, that
'when we ſent over our Ambaſſador to put them in mind of it, he cou'd
'not in three Years Time get from them any Satisfaction in the material
'Points, nor a Forbearance of the Wrongs which our Subjects receiv'd
'in thoſe Parts.

'In the Weſt-Indies they went a little farther, for by an Article in the 2.
'ſame Treaty, we were to reſtore Surinam into their Hands, and by Ar'ticles upon the Place confirm'd by that Treaty, they were to give Li'berty to all our Subjects in that Colony, to tranſport themſelves and 'Eſtates into any other of our Plantations. In purſuance of this Agree'ment, we deliver'd up the Place, and yet they detain'd all our Men in
'it; only Major Baniſter they ſent away Priſoner, for but deſiring to 'remove according to the Articles. Our Ambaſſador complaining of 'this Behaviour, after two Years Solicitation, obtain'd an Order for the 'Performance of thoſe Articles: But when we ſent Commiſſioners, and 'two Ships to bring our Men away, the Hollanders (according to their 'former Practice in the Buſineſs of Poleroon for above forty Years toge'ther) ſent private Orders contrary to thoſe they own'd to us in publick;
'and ſo the only Effect of our Commiſſioners Journey thither, was to 'bring away ſome few of the pooreſt of our Subjects, and the Prayers
'and Cries of the moſt conſiderable and wealthieſt of them, for Relief
'out of that Captivity. After this, we made our Complaints by our Let'ter in Auguſt laſt to the States-General, wherein we deſired an Order
'to their Governors there, for the full Obſervance of thoſe Articles;
'yet to this time we cou'd never receive one Word of Anſwer or Satiſ-
'faction. But it is no wonder that they venture at theſe Outrages up- 3.
'on our Subjects in remote Parts, when they dare be ſo bold with our 'Royal Perſon, and the Honour of the Nation, ſo near us, as in their 'own Country, there being ſcarce a Town within their Territories that 'is not fill'd with abuſive Pictures, and falſe Hiſtorical Medals and Pil'lars; ſome of which have been expos'd to view by Command of the 'States themſelves, and in the very Time when we were joyn'd with them
'in united Counſels for the Support of the Triple-League, and the Peace
'of Chriſtendom. This alone were Cauſe ſufficient for our Diſpleaſure,

'and

1672. Car. 24 Ref. 12

'and the Reſentment of all our Subjects. But we are urg'd to it by 'Conſiderations yet nearer to us, than what only relates to our Self; 'the Safety of our Trade, upon which the Wealth and Proſperity of our 'People depends, the Preſervation of them abroad from Violence and 'Oppreſſion, and the Hollanders daring to affront us almoſt within our 'very Ports, are the Things which move our juſt Indignation againſt 'them.

4. 'The Right of the Flagg is ſo ancient, that it was one of the Firſt 'Prerogatives of our Royal Predeceſſors, and ought to be the laſt from 'which this Kingdom ſhou'd ever depart. It was never queſtion'd, and 'it was expreſly acknowledg'd in the Treaty of Breda; and yet this laſt 'Summer it was not only violated by their Commanders at Sea, and that 'Violation afterwards juſtify'd at the Hague, but it was alſo repreſented 'by them in moſt Courts of Chriſtendom, as Ridiculous for us to demand. 'An ungrateful Inſolence! That they ſhou'd contend with us about the 'Dominion of theſe Seas, who even in the Reign of our Royal Father '(in the Years 1635, 1636, and 1637) thought it an Obligation to be per-'mitted to Fiſh in them, by taking of Licenſes, and for a Tribute; and 'who owe their being now in a Condition of Making this Diſpute, to 'the Protection of our Anceſtors, and the Valour and Blood of their 'Subjects. Notwithſtanding all theſe Provocations, we patiently expect-'ed Satisfaction, not being willing to expoſe the Peace of Chriſtendom 'for our particular Reſentments, while they ceaſed not on their Parts 'to endeavour to provoke the moſt Chriſtian King againſt us: of which 'they thought themſelves ſo ſecure, that for above theſe Twelve Months 'their Miniſters here have threatned us with it. At length, hearing 'nothing from them, we ſent another Ambaſſador to them, who af-'ter ſeveral preſſing Memorials in our Name, cou'd receive no Anſwer, 'till after he had declared his Revocation. Then they offer'd a Paper to 'this Effect, That in this Conjuncture they wou'd condeſcend to Strike to us, 'if we wou'd aſſiſt them againſt the French; but upon Condition, that it 'ſhou'd never be taken for a Precedent hereafter to their Prejudice. Since 'the Return of our ſaid Ambaſſador, they have ſent an Extraordinary 'One to us, who in a moſt extraordinary Manner has given us to under-'ſtand, That he can offer us no Satisfaction, till he hath ſent back to his 'Maſters. Wherefore deſpairing now of any good Effect of a further 'Treaty, we are compell'd to take up Arms in Defence of the Ancient 'Prerogative of our Crowns, and the Glory and Safety of our Kingdoms: 'And we put our Truſt in God, that he will give us his Aſſiſtance in 'this our juſt Undertaking, ſince we had no Way left to defend our Peo-'ple from the Artifice of that Nation in Peace, but by the Valour of our 'Subjects in War.

The reſt of the Declaration was only Form, and therefore unneceſſary to be inſerted; only the Concluſion muſt not be omitted, which was more ſtrange and ſurprizing to ſome than all the reſt. It runs in theſe Words; 'And whereas we are engag'd by a Treaty to ſupport the Peace made at 'Aix-la-Chapelle, we do finally Declare, That notwithſtanding the Pro-'ſecution of this War, we will maintain the true Intent and Scope of the 'ſaid Treaty, and that in all the Alliances, which We have or ſhall make 'in the Progreſs of this War, we have and will take care, to preſerve the 'Ends thereof inviolable, unleſs provok'd to the contrary.

The War proclaim'd. This Declaration being publiſh'd, was immediately after publickly read and proclaim'd by the Heralds and Serjeants at the uſual Places both in London and Weſtminſter, and with all the common Solemnities. Thus England, after it had a breathing Time and a Reſt of above four Years and an Half, was a ſecond Time involv'd in a hazardous and expenſive War,

War, and in a War much more againſt Reaſon and Policy than the former, tho' at this Time better ſupported by Foreign Alliances; a War manifeſtly againſt the general Bent of the Nation, which did in ſome meaſure appear at the Proclaiming of it, when the People were really encourag'd to Shouts and Acclamations, and the Lord Mayor invited the Heralds and Guards to a plentiful Dinner, that the World might imagine it to be undertaken at the Deſire, and with the Satisfaction of the City. In ſum, the firſt War was undertaken at the Deſire and Inſtigation of Parliament, City and Country; and this laſt, in a great Meaſure, without the Knowledge, and contrary to the Inclination of all of them. 167½. I. 1. THE Breaking out of this Second Dutch War, which was viſible from the Attack of the Smyrna Fleet, prov'd a great Surprize not only to Holland, but to all neighbouring States. The Dutch cou'd never be poſſeſs'd with a Belief that the Engliſh were in earneſt, till the Blow was given; but thought his Britannick Majeſty's Unkindneſs and Expoſtulations of late, wou'd end at laſt in Demands of Money, or the Prince of Orange's Reſtoration to all the Dignities of his Predeceſſors. So that when Penſionary de Wit receiv'd a certain Account of the Rupture, in the Aſſembly of the States, in reading the Letter, he fell back upon his Chair almoſt in a Swoon; but in a Moment recovering his natural Vivacity, he incourag'd the States to make all neceſſary Preparations: The Princes concern'd in the Safety of Holland, cou'd not imagine, that after having ſav'd Flanders out of the Hands of the French, the King of England wou'd ſuffer Holland to fall into the ſame Danger. And the Lord Arlington told Sir William Temple, that the Court of France did not believe it themſelves, till the Blow was ſtruck in the Attack of the Smyrna Fleet. Upon which they immediately ſet out their Declaration, which was of a different Stile from that of England: It ſets forth, 'That the Diſpleaſure his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty 'had receiv'd from the Carriage of the States-General of the United 'Provinces for ſome Years paſt towards him, was come to ſuch a Height, 'that his Majeſty cou'd not, without Diminution of his own Glory, any 'longer diſſemble the Indignation rais'd in him, by a Treatment ſo unſuitable to the great Obligations, which his Majeſty and the Kings his 'Predeceſſors had ſo liberally heap'd upon them: Therefore his Majeſty 'was at laſt provok'd to make this Declaration of War againſt them, both 'by Sea and Land.' The War was proclaim'd againſt them, both at London and Paris in one Day; and the Preparations were ſo great on the French ſide; that the United Provinces were never in ſuch apparent Danger ſince their firſt Foundation and Eſtabliſhment.

The Dutch Answer to the Engliſh.

To divert or diſſipate this impending Storm, the States made uſe of all proper Methods and Expedients: And firſt they undertook to anſwer the Reaſons in the King of England's Declaration; and particularly declared, 'That as to Trade they had made no unjuſt Inroads upon any of 'the Engliſh Factories or Plantations: And as to the Engliſh Planters 'in Surinam, they themſelves were not willing to forſake their Effects and Subſiſtance, and therefore ſtaid there behind upon their 'own Choice. As to the Pictures and Medals, they ſay they knew 'of none, except one Medal, which might be liable to any ill Con'ſtruction; but as ſoon as they knew of it, they caus'd the Stamp 'to be broken. As to the Honour of the Flagg, they diſown'd the 'Refuſal of it, and offer'd however to make any reaſonable Satisfa'ction.' It muſt be own'd that they had of late aſſum'd too much to themſelves, particularly with Reſpect to the Treaty of Aix-la-Chapelle; and that de Wit and the Louveſtein Faction had been too inflexible in anſwering the Demands of the Engliſh, as to the Flagg, and other Points of Honour. But now, all being in extream Danger, the States, contrary to the Struggles of that Faction, had recourſe to the young Prince of Orange, and ſeem'd to depend upon him as born for their Defence and Protection; and tho' he was now but twenty two Years of Age, they preſented him with the Command of their Armies by Land, and with the Title of Admiral of the United Provinces. They were the more induc'd to this upon a Proſpect of ſoftning the Engliſh Court, and diſcours'd of ſending an Extraordinary Ambaſſador thither to purchaſe Good-Will; expecting, as they ſaid, That the Prince's Promotion, and Satisfaction given upon the Flagg, wou'd certainly appeaſe them; to which, it ſeems, they were then incourag'd by their own Ambaſſador ſtill at London.

They advance the Prince of Orange.

Whatever their Expectations were, the Court of England proceeded in the War with a Reſolution not to be diverted, and began firſt with a ſolemn Faſt throughout the Kingdom; which indeed prov'd a Day of Sorrow and Humiliation to many diſcerning Perſons. Under ſo great a Diſaffection of his Subjects, his Majeſty choſe to make himſelf more popular by taking into his Council theſe four Perſons of good Reputation among the People; Henry Marqueſs of Worceſter, Lord Preſident of the Council of Wales; Arthur Earl of Eſſex, whom his Majeſty declar'd he was ſending into Ireland as Lord-Lieutenant of that Kingdom; Thomas Viſcount Falconbridge, Captain of his Majeſty's Band of Penſioners, and George Viſcount Hallifax, whom he afterwards made an Earl and a Marqueſs; who being admitted on the 17th of April, took the uſual Oaths and their Places at the Board. But the Cabal or Cabinet Council were diſtinguiſh'd with more peculiar Favours; for on the 20th of the ſame Month, his Majeſty was pleas'd to create John Earl of Lauderdale, Principal Secretary of State of Scotland, Duke of Lauderdale in that Kingdom; Henry Lord Arlington, his Majeſty's Principal Secretary, Earl of Arlington, and Viſcount Thetford; Anthony Lord Aſhley Cooper, Earl of Shaftsbury, and Baron Cooper of Paulet; and Sir Thomas Clifford, Treaſurer of his Majeſty's Houſhold, Baron Clifford of Chudleigh. And about the ſame Time the Duke of Lauderdale was made Knight of the Garter; as likewiſe the Earl of Arlington in another Chapter held not long after. About which Time another able Miniſter was rais'd up, Sir Thomas Osborn Baronet, who was admitted into his Majeſty's moſt honourable Privy Council on the 3d of May. This Summer, four other Perſons were inſtall'd Knights of the Garter, Henry Marqueſs of Worceſter, the Earl of St. Albans, the Earl of Bedford, and the Earl of Oſſory, Son to the famous Duke of Ormond.

Preparations for the War.

As to the War, the Preparations were carry'd on with the utmoſt Diligence; and as the King enter'd upon it with a Diſpenſation of the Laws, relating to Religion, by vertue, as he claim'd, of his Supreme Power in Matters Eccleſiaſtical, ſo he now proceeded to diſpenſe with another Law in a Matter purely Civil. For on the 10th of May, ſoon after the Fleet was gone out, his Majeſty was pleas'd in Council to order and declare, 'That 'the Act of Parliament made in the 12th Year of his Majeſty's Reign, 'For the Encouraging and Encreaſing of Shipping and Navigation, be 'totally ſuſpended and diſpens'd with; as likewiſe another Act made 'in the thirteenth Year of his Majeſty's Reign, entituled, An Act for the 'Encouragement of Trade: His Majeſty declaring, That the Suſpenſion 'of thoſe Laws ſhall continue during his own Royal Will and Pleaſure; 'and that when his Majeſty ſhall think fit to determine this Diſpenſation, 'he will by Proclamation give ſix Months Notice thereof.' Tho' the diſpenſing in theſe particular Matters, under the Neceſſities of a War, was in all Probability for the Common Good, yet the doing of it by Royal Will and Pleaſure, without Advice and Conſent of Parliament, was thought a very ill Precedent, which might inſenſibly grow into more dangerous Acts of Power. This ſeems a further Strain of the Cabal, whoſe Buſineſs was to Advance the Prerogative, and, as before hinted, to make his Majeſty a great King; when in Concluſion they only made themſelves firſt Great, and afterwards Deſpiſed Subjects.

The War begins.

2. In the Month of May all the Fleets appear'd at Sea, and the War began with all Vigour. About the Beginning, the Duke of York, Admiral of the Engliſh Fleet, conſiſting of near a hundred Ships, twenty thouſand Men, and four thouſand Guns, having gain'd the Wind of the Dutch, who had endeavour'd to prevent their getting out of the Thames, join'd the Navy of France, commanded by the Count d' Eſtrees, which conſiſted of forty Men of War, thirteen thouſand Men, and two thouſand Guns: And the King of England being then at Portſmouth, had the Complaiſance to go on Board the Count d' Eſtrees' Ship, to ſhew the mutual Confidence of the two Nations. Being join'd they both compos'd one noble Fleet, which was divided into three Squadrons: The Duke of York, as Lord High Admiral of England, had the Command of the main Battel, or the Red Squadron; the Count d' Eſtrees Vice-Admiral of France, commanded the Right Wing, or the White Squadron; and Admiral Montague, Earl of Sandwich, had the Conduct of the Left Wing, or Blue Squadron. On the other Side appear'd the Dutch Fleet, conſiſting of above fourſcore large Men of War, and fifty ſmall Rates, twenty two thouſand Men, and four thouſand Guns; under the Command of the famous de Ruyter, to whom was join'd Cornelius de Wit, Brother to the Penſionary, who appear'd in a Magiſtrate's Robe, and all the outward Marks of Grandeur. And thus the greateſt Naval Powers in the Univerſe were prepared to contend for the Empire of the Seas. On Sunday the 19th of May, the Engliſh and French Fleet got their firſt Sight of the Dutch about eight Leagues off the Gun-Fleet, and put themſelves in Readineſs for Engagement the next Morning; but being again ſeparated and hinder'd by hazy Weather, the Engliſh ſtood into Sould-Bay in Suffolk, and lay there at Anchor for ſeven or eight Days, with too much Signs of Security. For the Day before the Engagement there was great Jollity and Feaſting; and many Country Gentlemen were on Shipboard, and many Sea-Officers were on Shore at Sould, Dunwich and Alborough. In this Poſture the Earl of Sandwich was obſerv'd to ſay, That as the Wind ſtood, the Fleet rode in danger of being ſurpriz'd by the Dutch, and therefore he thought it adviſable to weigh Anchor and get out to

1672. Car. 24 Ref. 13

Sea. The Duke of York, who was not in perfect Friendſhip with him, ſlighted the Advice, and retorted upon the Earl, as if he had ſpoke this out of Fear; which Reflection his Lordſhip is thought to have ſo far reſented, as the next Day out of Indignation to have ſacrific'd his Life, which he might have otherwiſe preſerv'd.

The Firſt BATTEL.

On Whitſun-Tueſday, May the 28th very ſoon in the Morning, the Dutch Fleet appear'd with the Advantage of the Weather-Gage; which put the Engliſh into ſome Confuſion, and forc'd many of them to cut their Cables. Having got into Order, in a little Time the two mighty Fleets fac'd each other, and was firſt the moſt glorious, and then the moſt terrible Sight in the World. The Dutch began the Fight ſoon after Break of Day; Admiral de Ruyter diſpos'd himſelf to attack the Red Squadron, Lieutenant Admiral Bankert the White, and Lieutenant Admiral de Ghent the Blue; and the two Vans, the Rears, and the Centres, even to the leaſt Ships, were ſo nicely matcht juſt oppoſite to one another, and that with ſo equal a Motion, as if it had been mutually concerted. Immediately their Blood began to riſe, the Squadrons fell in furiouſly upon each other, and the Air was fill'd with Fire and Smoak, with vaſt Cries, and with the prodigious Thunder of the Artillery, whoſe Sound was carry'd many Miles into the Country, to the great Terror of infinite Numbers of the Common People. The Duke of York and de Ruyter fell in cloſe with each other, and for above two Hours pour'd in great and ſmall Shot with uncommon Fury and Bravery; but the Dutch Admiral being aſſiſted by a Ship of the Maeſe Squadron, and having ſhot down the Duke's main Top Maſt at the Flag, his Royal Highneſs was oblig'd to leave his Ship, and remove his Flag to the London, which, as Primi ſays, he did with great Intrepidity. However de Ruyter declared afterwards, that he was never in ſo hot an Action in his Life. The Admiral of the Blue, the Earl of Sandwich, with his Squadron, made ſuch vigorous Attacks, that Admiral de Ghent was kill'd in the Beginning of the Fight, and was like to make a greater Impreſſion upon the Enemy; but being ſingled out, he was attack'd by four Fireſhips, and after he had ſunk three of them, he was grapled by the fourth; when Sir Joſeph Jordan, his Vice-Admiral, who might have diſengag'd the Earl, ſail'd up to the Red, to the Duke's Aſſiſtance: So that here the noble Earl, with his brave Ship the Royal James, that had a thouſand Men on board, of whom ſix hundred were ſlain upon the Deck, drew near their End; for the Ship at laſt being ſet on Fire, the Earl retired to his Cabbin, where he was follow'd by Sir Richard Haddock, then his Captain, who finding him with a Handkerchief before his Eyes, he told him of the Danger, and adviſ'd him to ſave himſelf in his Boat; but he anſwer'd He ſaw how things went, and was reſolv'd to periſh with the Ship. The Ship was blown up, and he and ſeveral brave Men were drown'd in the Sea. The French Squadron were at firſt warmly ingag'd with fifty Ships under Bankert; but fighting more at a Diſtance, and perhaps with Deſign, much leſs Damage was done there, than in the reſt of the Fleet. The Fight continu'd till nine at Night, when Sir Joſeph Jordan getting the Weather-Gage of the Dutch, they ſtood off, and the Duke ſailing after, got the Appearance of a Victory.

The next Morning after this ſevere Fight, the two Fleets ſeem'd like to engage again; the Duke hoiſting up his Bloody Flag, and bearing towards the Enemy, when on a ſudden there fell ſuch a Miſt, that none cou'd ſee a Ship's Length; and at the ſame Time the Wind riſing, made the Sea run high, then the Dutch making the beſt of their Way to their own Coaſt, the Engliſh ſtood after them, till the Duke, finding himſelf near the Oyſter-Banks, tack'd about and ſtood away four Leagues, then came to an Anchor, and ſo continu'd all Night; but about ten next Morning, having no Hopes of ſeeing the Enemy, he return'd with the Fleet into the Engliſh Harbours. Thus ended the firſt Battel, and in Effect the whole Summer's Expedition. Both Sides challeng'd the Victory, or rather the Advantage, but neither of them had reaſon to boaſt; but it is generally believ'd the Engliſh were conſiderable Sufferers by relying ſo much upon the French, who were certainly defective in their Service, tho' they loſt in the Battel their Rear Admiral De la Rabiniere. The Engliſh loſt, beſides the noble Earl of Sandwich, Mr. Digby, the Earl of Briſtol's Son, Captain of the Henry, Sir Fretchville Hollis Captain of the Cambridge, Sir John Cox Captain of the Prince, Captain Pearce of the George, Captain Waterworth of the Anne, Captain Hannam of the Triumph, Captain Tennes of the Allice and Frances Fireſhip; and of the Engliſh Voluntiers, the Lord Maidſtone, Mr. Mountague, Mr. Richard Nicholls, and Mr. Roger Vaughan, both of his Royal Highneſs's Bed-Chamber, Mr. Trevanian his Gentleman-Uſher, Sir Philip Cartwright, Sir Charles Harbord, Captain Bromeley, Captain Bennet, Mr. Cotterel, Mr. Burgh, Captain Barry, Mr. Napier, Brother to a Scotch Lord of that Name, Mr. Bowles, and very many wounded. The Body of the Earl of Sandwich, which was known by his George, was diſcover'd by one of his Majeſty's Ketches, and was taken up and brought into Harwich, where it was receiv'd and embalm'd by the Governor Sir Charles Littleton, who ſending Notice of it to White-Hall, his Majeſty generouſly declar'd, 'That out of his Princely Regard to the great Deſervings of the ſaid Earl, 'and his unexampled Performances in this laſt Act of his Life, he reſol-'ved to have his Body brought up to London, there at his Charge to 'receive the Rites of Funeral due to his great Quality and Merits:' All which were afterwards celebrated with great Splendor and Solemnity.

The Loſs of the Engliſh.

3. Tho' the French had done very little at Sea againſt the Dutch, yet their Progreſs and Conqueſts by Land were formidable and amazing. Their aſpiring Monarch having, in the beginning of May, drawn together a noble Army of a hundred and twenty thouſand effective Men, divided them into three Bodies: The firſt, conſiſting of ſeventy thouſand, he took under his own peculiar Command. At the Head of the ſecond, which was of forty thouſand, he plac'd the Prince of Conde; and gave about ten thouſand more to the Count de Chamilly, to ſerve as a flying Camp. All theſe Forces directing their March towards Maeſtricht, a Council of War was held, and a Debate ariſing about beſieging that Place, it was adjudg'd to be an Enterprize ſo full of Hazard and Difficulty, by reaſon of the numerous Garriſon and ſtrong Fortifications, that they reſolv'd to make their Advances towards the Rhine, where the Places were not in ſo good a Condition; yet it was thought convenient to leave Chamilly near Tongeren, to prevent the Excurſions of the Garriſon of Maeſtricht. This done, the two Armies commanded by the King and Prince of Conde march'd ſeveral Days without ſeeing an Enemy, except two hundred Men, who had intrench'd themſelves on the Side of the Rhine, and yielded themſelves Priſoners after a ſmall Reſiſtance. From thence the Prince of Conde was ſent to beſiege Weſel, while the King himſelf inveſted Orſoy, and the Mareſchal Turenne did the ſame by Burick. Theſe three Sieges being undertaken at the ſame Time, caus'd a general Allarm; but when they ſaw that Orſoy had hardly held out twenty four Hours, and that Burick and Weſel had been ſurrender'd in a little more than the ſame Time, the Conſternation vaſtly increas'd. The Governor of Weſel, which was accounted a ſtrong Place, was afterwards ſenſentenc'd to loſe his Head; but having ſome Friends, the Executioner was order'd only to paſs the Sword over him; and the Count D'Eſtrades, in Conſideration of his great Services in Holland, was made Governor of the Place. Rhineberg, Reez, Emerick, Vltz and Dotekom, ſoon follow'd the Example; and Culcar and Cleve ſet open their Gates to the Victor. At the ſame Time the Biſhop of Munſter, a Confederate with the French, took Loken, Borkelo and Grol: ſo that in the Beginning of June, all the Country beyond the Yſſel, the Rhine and the Wael, as far as the Maeſe, ſubmitted to the Will of the Conquerors.

The French King paſſes the Rhine,

The French King reſolving to puſh on his Victories, form'd a Deſign of paſſing the Yſſel, in order to attack the Places on the other Side of that River, and communicated it to the Prince of Conde, and the Mareſchal Turenne; but being diſſwaded from that Attempt, it was reſolv'd to try to paſs the Rhine, which they thought more practicable. In purſuance of this Reſolution, they procur'd the beſt Advice, and were inform'd by a Betrayer of his Country, that there was a Place where the Water was neither very deep nor rapid: Which being try'd and found true, the King expreſs'd a mighty Satisfaction, becauſe he cou'd as well enter the Country that Way as by the Yſſel. The Dutch ſuſpecting the Place, had already ſent an Officer to ſecure the Paſſage; but he finding himſelf too weak, abandon'd the Poſt with the Conſent of the States Deputies; and Lieutenant-General Wurtz was ſent by the Prince of Orange with a greater Force. By this Means much Time was loſt, and the French King had leiſure to erect Batteries, which gall'd Wurtz's Horſe in ſuch a Manner, that they found themſelves oblig'd to take ſhelter in the Woods. All Things being prepared, Part of a Regiment of French Horſe ſwam the River, and were receiv'd ſo warmly by Wurtz, that they were forc'd back into the Water; but being ſupported by greater Numbers, they ſoon made good their Ground, and repell'd the Dutch Horſe: However in this Paſſage the Duke of Longueville, Nephew to the Prince of Conde, was kill'd, and the Prince himſelf wounded by a Muſquet-Ball. Upon this the French took the Caſtle of Tolhuys juſt by, and laid a Bridge of Boats over the Rhine; which ſo terrify'd the Dutch, that they abandon'd all their Intrenchments; ſo that the King found his Work more eaſy than he expected. After which he reſolv'd to paſs the Yſſel, and was not a little ſurpriz'd to find the Paſſage ſo clear, and quite otherwiſe than had been repreſented to him. Having beſieg'd and taken Doesburg, Deputies arriv'd in his Camp from Utrecht, offering to deliver the Town and Dependencies. The Duke of Orleans took Zutphen, Turenne poſſeſs'd himſelf of Arnheim, Nimiguen, Fort Knotſemburg and Graven; Bonnel and Sckincken Scans fell alſo into the Hands of the French; the Biſhop of Munſter took Deventer, and the Marqueſs of Rochefort made himſelf Maſter of Naerden and ſome other Places. While the French King, in the Beginning of July, took poſſeſſion of Utrecht, where he kept his Court for a conſiderable Time, in the very Heart of all the United Provinces.

And ſettles at Utrecht.

The aſtoniſhing Succeſs that attended the French in every Attempt, drove the common People of Holland into Rage and Deſpair. The States themſelves were in Diſorder, and irreſolute what to do; their Troops were at firſt without a General, and, which was worſe, without a Heart; and tho' De Ruyter by his admirable Conduct kept the Infection of theſe Evils out of the Fleet, yet Faction, Diſtruſt, Sedition and Diſtraction, made ſuch Entrances upon the State and Army, when the French began their Expedition, that they knew not how to make any Stand. During this ſurprizing Progreſs of their Enemies by Land, they found ſome Colour to publiſh that they had obtain'd a Victory over the Royal Fleets by Sea;

Sea; which News being ſpread at the Hague immediately after the Battle, not a little contributed to raiſe and revive the expiring Courage of the People. And it may be ſaid, that if the Confederate Fleets had been as ſucceſsful as their Land Armies, the States had been loſt without Retrieve, and the United Provinces muſt have entirely ſubmitted to a Foreign Yoke: But by reaſon that the French Fleet fought ſo little, and that the Engliſh truſting to their Aſſiſtance did not employ their full naval Power, and that De Ruyter by his Vigilance had ſurpriz'd them at a Diſadvantage, when they little expected him, that bare Succeſs was to him and the Dutch, at this nice Juncture of Affairs, as advantagious as an actual and compleat Victory at any other Seaſon; by keeping up the Hearts of the diſpirited People, ſecuring their Navigation, and preſerving their Coaſts from the like direful Deſolation with which their Land-Frontiers were afflicted. This was indeed a Critical Time, in which the United Provinces were in imminent Danger, and the Remainder was forc'd to depend chiefly upon their Situation, and to open their Sluces and lay their Country under Water. And yet they own themſelves more protected by Providence, than by any Skill of their own. For near the Time that the French King took poſſeſſion of Utrecht, when the two Royal Confederate Fleets appear'd before the Dutch Coaſt with deſign to make a Deſcent near the Hague, Harlem, or the Texel, a conſiderable Dutch Writer tells us, 'That the Enterprize was diverted by a Kind of 'Miracle: For on the very Day fix'd for that Deſign, as the Engliſh and 'French were expecting the Coming in of the Tide, to ſend in their 'ſmall Veſſels and Boats to land their Soldiers, it hapned to alter its Courſe, 'and came twelve full Hours later than its natural Order, to the great 'Surprize and Aſtoniſhment of all that were vers'd in Sea Affairs. That 'Prodigy was look'd upon as one of the moſt ſenſible Marks of the Prote-'ction of God that began to declare it ſelf for the States: And this 'was likewiſe ſucceeded by a dreadful Tempeſt, which forc'd the 'Confederate Fleets with Terror to quit the Holland Coaſts, and retire 'homewards with great Loſs.

The narrow Eſcape of the Dutch.

In the mean Time the Mob began to riſe in great Multitudes, and accus'd thoſe who had the Management of the Government, and principally the two Brothers the de Wits, of being the Authors of all the preſent Diſaſters, and charg'd them with Treaſon, and holding dangerous Correſpondence with the Enemies of the State. Nay they further openly declar'd, 'That there was no poſſibility of governing the State any lon-'ger, unleſs the Louveſtein Faction were pull'd down, and the perpetual 'Edict made by them in 1667 to the Prejudice of the illuſtrious Houſe 'of Orange were annul'd, and the Dignity of Stadt-Holder reſtored to 'the preſent Prince, &c.' So that in Concluſion they ſo far prevail'd, that on the 3d of July, that Prince, who before had been made Captain General and Admiral of the States Forces, was reſtored to the Power of Stadt-Holder, with all Advantages, and even ſome more than thoſe which had been exercis'd by his Anceſtors. This being ſtrenuouſly oppos'd by the de Wits, at a Time when the Prince's Friends were ſo very numerous, it ſhortly after caus'd the Ruin of theſe two noted Brothers. Cornelius, the Elder Brother, having lately left the Fleet with conſiderable Reputation, was accus'd of a Deſign upon the Prince's Life, and of endeavouring to hire one of his Highneſs's Domeſticks in this Attempt. But no other Witneſs appearing, he was ſentenc'd only to be baniſh'd; at which the People ſhew'd great Diſſatisfaction, as believing him worthy of a greater Puniſhment. The Morning he was to leave his Priſon, his Brother the Penſionary, againſt the Opinion of his Friends, went himſelf to bring him out with more Honour, and carry him out of the Hague; and and to that end appear'd with his Coach and four Horſes. This being unuſual to this Miniſter, caus'd the People to take more notice, and gather together tumultuouſly firſt in the Streets where he paſs'd, and then about the Court where the Priſoner was kept. Some of the Train'd Bands of the Town that were upon the Guard, mingled among them, and began to exclaim againſt the Judgment of the Court, the Crime of one Brother, and the Inſolence of the Other, who pretended to carry him away in Triumph. In the midſt of the Fury, the two Brothers came out into the Street, where they were immediately knock'd down, kill'd, drag'd about the Town, and torn in Pieces, after a Manner unknown to an Engliſh Mob. The Penſionary was one of the greateſt Genius and Politicians of the Age; but cannot well be acquitted as to his ſecret Correſpondence with France, and his inflexible Behaviour towards England.

The two De Wits murder'd.

As ſoon as the Prince of Orange was ſettled in his high Poſts, the French turn'd their Applications to him, and made his Highneſs the moſt plauſible Offers of Honour and Advantage to his Perſon and Family, provided he wou'd be content to depend upon them. The Bait which they conceiv'd cou'd not fail of taking place, and about which moſt Artifice was us'd, was, the Propoſal of making him Sovereign of the Seven Provinces, under the Protection of England and France. And at a Time when ſo little of the Provinces was left, and what remain'd was under Water, and in ſo imminent Danger upon the firſt Froſts, this ſeem'd a Temptation to which a meaner Soul than that of the Prince might well ſubmit. But he was above it, and his Anſwers always ſteady, That he wou'd never betray a Truſt that was given him, nor ever ſell the Liberty of his Country, that his Anceſtors had ſo long defended. Yet the Game he play'd was then thought ſo deſperate, that one of his neareſt Servants told Sir William Temple, he had long expoſtulated it with his Maſter, and at laſt ask'd him, How he pretended to live after Holland was loſt? To which the Prince anſwer'd, He reſolv'd to live upon the Lands he had in Germany; and that he had rather paſs his Life in Hunting there, than ſell his Country, or his Liberty to France at any Price. However it was, all Things began now to be calm'd at home, and he made the firſt Appearance of defending what was left of his Country. The State grew united, the Army more in heart, and Foreign Princes began to take Confidence in the Honour and Conſtancy of the young Prince; which they had in a manner loſt, upon the Diviſions and Misfortunes of the State.

The French apply to the Prince of Orange in vain.

4. The repeated News of the rapid Victories of the French had a very particular Effect in England; and tho' they were Allies, and engag'd in the ſame Cauſe, yet the Engliſh People were ſo diſpos'd to Murmurs and Complaints upon their vaſt Progreſs, that his Majeſty was neceſſitated to iſſue out his Proclamation, for 'Suppreſſing that unlawful and 'undutiful kind of Diſcourſe, by a moſt ſtrict and exemplary Puniſhment 'of all Perſons, who ſhou'd be found Spreaders of falſe News, or Pro-'moters of any malicious Slanders or Calumnies in any Coffee-Houſe, 'or any publick or private Meeting.' But this Proclamation rather irritating, than qualifying the general ill Humour and Diſcontents of the People, his Majeſty thought fit to publiſh a Declaration in favour even of the Dutch, viz. 'That notwithſtanding the War, if any of the Low-'Country Subjects, either out of Affection to his Majeſty or his Govern-'ment, or by reaſon of the Oppreſſion they met with at home from their 'Governors, ſhou'd come into the King's Dominions, they ſhou'd be, 'by his Majeſty, protected in their Perſons and Eſtates; his Majeſty con-'tinuing in the ſame gracious Inclination towards all ſuch of the Subjects 'of the Low-Countries, as wou'd deſire to deliver themſelves from the 'Calamity Diſcontents in England.

'Calamity and Diſtreſs into which the ill Counſels of ſome prevailing 'Perſons in the Government of thoſe Countries had juſtly drawn 'them. 1672. Car. 24 Ref. 13

Under theſe dreadful Apprehenſions the States-General ſent over their Deputies to the King of England, to repreſent the common Dangers of Europe, in the inevitable Ruin of their own Country, and Neceſſity of putting a Stop to the overflowing Progreſs of the French Arms. Whereupon the King, on the 20th of June appointed the Duke of Buckingham, the Earls of Arlington and Shaftsbury, and the Lord Clifford, to meet the Dutch Deputies at Hampton-Court, to know what Propoſals they had to offer to his Majeſty. They reply'd, They had no Power or Inſtructions to make any Offer, but to hear what his Majeſty wou'd demand. Upon which the King preſently appointed the Duke of Buckingham, the Earl of Arlington, and the Lord Hallifax, to be his Ambaſſadors Extraordinary and Plenipotentiaries, to treat jointly with ſuch as ſhou'd be appointed by the moſt Chriſtian King, with any Deputies or Commiſſioners from the States-General. Theſe Ambaſſadors within a few Days ſet Sail for Holland, and were receiv'd with great Joy and Satisfaction by the People, out of hopes that they came to conclude a Peace, and were met near the Hague by a Multitude of Men, Women and Children, who, as they paſs'd, joyn'd in their Acclamations of God bleſs the King of England! God bleſs the Prince of Orange! and the Devil take the States! The Ambaſſadors purſu'd their Journey to Utrecht, where they found the French King in the Height of his Grandeur and Exaltation; but of what paſs'd between them, we have but an imperfect Account. The King ſends Plenipotentiaries to Utrecht.

It was commonly believ'd in England and Holland, that the true End or Subject of this Embaſſy, was the Jealouſy the Engliſh had, of the French Conqueſts going on ſo faſt, while their own went ſo lame; and great Hopes were rais'd in Holland, that it was to ſtop their Courſe or Extent: But theſe were ſoon daſh'd by the Return of the Ambaſſadors, after having renew'd and faſtned the Meaſures formerly taken between the two Crowns. However, the Ambaſſadors were deſirous, as they paſs'd through Holland, that the firſt ſhou'd be believ'd; which gave Occaſion for a very juſt Repartee of the Princeſs Dowager of Orange to the volatile Duke of Buckingham, who paid her a Viſit at the Hague; and talking much of their being good Hollanders, ſhe told him, That was more than they ask'd; which was only that they ſhou'd be good Engliſh Men: He aſſur'd her, they were not only ſo, but good Dutch-Men too; That indeed they did not uſe Holland like a Miſtreſs, but they lov'd her like a Wife. To which the Princeſs briskly reply'd, Truly, I think you love Us juſt as you do yours. It is likewiſe reported that the Duke had a long Conference with the Prince of Orange about the bad Poſture of the Affairs of his Country; and having us'd many Arguments to him for accepting the Sovereignty of it, under the Protection of England and France, his Grace told him at laſt, He wonder'd what his Highneſs cou'd propoſe to himſelf in ſuch a deſperate Caſe; ſince according to the Humour he perſiſted in, he muſt unavoidably ſee the final Ruin of it. To this the Prince reply'd, That what his Grace ſaid concerning their dangerous Condition, was indeed true; but yet he had one Way ſtill, not to ſee its Ruin compleated; which was to lye in the laſt Dyke: By which he meant the Fighting of it out to the laſt. When the French had loſt all Hopes of ſhocking the Conſtancy of this Prince, they bent all their Thoughts of ſubduing and ruining the Remainder of the Country; but his Highneſs with a Handful of Men, and the natural Advantages of the Country, put a ſtop to their Career, and in no long Time very much turn'd the Scale. But to no great Effect.

The Meeting of the Parliament put off.

5. In England there were, in the mean Time, great Expectations of the Meeting of the Parliament, which had been Prorogu'd from the 16th Day of April laſt to the 30th of October; but juſt before the Time, when Mens Minds began to be fill'd with Hopes or Fears, a Proclamation came out for a further Prorogation; of which the Earl of Arlington gives this following Account in a Letter to Sir Bernard Gaſcoyn, then Reſident at Vienna: 'The laſt Week his Majeſty reſolv'd in Council a further Proro-'gation of the Parliament to the 4th of February next, by which a great 'Meaſure of the Hollanders is broken, having fancied to themſelves that 'they ſhou'd prevail with many of the Members of it, to make them cla-'morous upon his Majeſty for a Separate Treaty upon eaſy Terms, and 'with Excluſion to France; ſo that they ſeeing this Thruſt broken, and 'finding no great Eaſe to their preſent Calamity from the Auxiliary Forces 'of Germany, we perſuade our ſelves we ſhall find them very reaſonable 'in a ſhort Time; and in February his Majeſty bringing into Parliament 'a determinate Reſolution either of Peace or War, will much more 'eaſily obtain all the Ends there.' In the mean Time his Majeſty was to raiſe Men, and provide Mony, by his own Intereſt and Authority. On the 4th of December he was pleas'd to declare in Council, 'That he 'found it neceſſary, during the preſent War, to raiſe more Soldiers, and 'to form them into Regiments, and diſpoſe of them in ſeveral Quarters, 'until there ſhou'd be Occaſion for their Service againſt the Enemy.' And therefore he order'd a particular Proclamation, 'To forbid any Rude-'neſs or Miſdemeanor in their reſpective Quarters.' And that the Fund of the Exchequer might not be deficient for this Occaſion, a few Days after, he order'd a Declaration to be publiſh'd for a further Stop to the Payment of any former Debts, 'Confeſſing that he had before Declared 'the Stop of Payments ſhou'd not continue beyond the laſt Day of this 'Inſtant December. But notwithſtanding his Majeſty hath not been want-'ing on his Part to comply with all honourable Ways and Means that 'might operate ſuch happy Effects; yet the Continuance of thoſe inevi-'table Neceſſities which firſt inforc'd his Majeſty, contrary to his own 'Inclinations, to cauſe a Stop to be made of Payment of Monies, com-'pels him at this preſent to continue the ſame Stop of Payments of any Mo-'nies now being to be brought into his Exchequer, until the Firſt Day of 'May next enſuing. Doubting not but that all his loving Subjects have 'ſuch Truſt and Confidence in his Juſtice, that it will take away all Appre-'henſions of their being in the leaſt defrauded of any Thing that is juſtly 'due to them.

The King puts a further Stop to the Exchequer.

His Majeſty by a particular Agreement with the French King, was to ſend Six Thouſand Men into his Service by Land. Theſe Forces, conſiſting of Engliſh and Scots, were commanded by the riſing Duke of Monmouth, who was this Year ſent abroad to diſtinguiſh himſelf by Arms, and to diſplay his Martial Qualifications. Theſe Forces arriv'd at the French Camp near Charleroy at the Beginning of the Campaign, and the Duke was graciouſly receiv'd by the French King and the Duke of Orleans. His Grace was preſent at the taking of Orſoy, Rhineberg, Weſel, Emmerick, Doesburg, and Zutphen, and was in the French King's Camp near Utrecht, when that City ſent her Keys to the Conqueror. Immediately after, the Duke, with the Engliſh Noblemen and Gentlemen Voluntiers, went to view the Town, and were honourably entertain'd by the Magiſtrates. In July, the Army broke up, and march'd back to Flanders; and the Campaign being over, the French King return'd to St. Germains, and the Duke to England. On his Arrival at London, he was receiv'd with univerſal Joy; for tho' the People were diſſatisfy'd with the War,

The Duke of Monmouth aſſiſts the French.

War, yet they were well pleas'd to hear how much his Grace was a Heroe in it. In November the Duke went again to France, on News that the Prince of Orange was ſet down before Charleroy; but the Prince leaving that Siege upon greater Deſigns, Flanders was quiet the reſt of the Winter. The Duke landed at Calais, and went thence to Dourlens, where his Regiment quarter'd. In his Way thither the Duke de Elbeuf, Governor of Montrevil, receiv'd him in an extraordinary Manner. At Beville the Militia were drawn up, and the Mayor complimented him at the Gates; and near Dourlens the Governor met him with his Coaches, attended with forty Horſe, waited upon him into the Town, entertain'd him ſplendidly for five Days, and receiv'd the Word from him every Night. Here the Duke made a Review of his Soldiers, which he found in good Order, and well diſciplin'd, from thence he went to Paris, and ſo to St. Germains, where he was receiv'd by his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty with particular Honours. He made no long Stay at the French Court; but finding there was no Probability of any ſudden Action, he return'd to England, and remain'd there till the Opening of the Campaign. It is obſervable, that in whatever Place his Grace appear'd, he was very much reſpected, and no leſs admired. 1672. Car. 24 Reſ. 13

His Reception abroad.

We have little more to add this Year, beſides Promotions and Deaths of eminent Perſons. In the middle of the Summer, dy'd Sir John Trevor, one of his Majeſty's principal Secretaries of State; in whoſe Place Henry Coventry Eſquire, late Ambaſſador at the Court of Sweden, was ſworn; and was at the ſame Time, together with Sir Robert Long Knight and Baronet, admitted into the Privy-Council. The Earl of Eſſex having been appointed Lord Lieutenant of Ireland in the room of the Lord Berkley, began his Journey towards that Kingdom on the latter End of July, with a very noble Equipage; and arriving at Dublin ſhortly after, had the Sword of State deliver'd to him by the Lord Berkley, who the next Day embark'd for England. In November, by the Reſignation of Sir Orlando Bridgeman, his Majeſty was pleas'd to give the Great Seal to the Earl of Shaftsbury, with the Title of Lord Chancellor of England; who was ſucceeded by Sir John Duncomb in the Place of Chancellor and Under-Treaſurer of the Exchequer. A few Days after the Lord Clifford was made Lord High Treaſurer of England, which Place had been held in Commiſſion for about five Years, ever ſince the Death of the Earl of Southampton. His Place of Treaſurer of the Houſhold was conferr'd upon the Lord Newport, and that of Comptroller, formerly poſſeſs'd by his Lordſhip, given to the Lord Maynard. The Lord Clifford having receiv'd the White Staff, went with a mighty Solemnity and Attendance to be ſworn at Weſtminſter-Hall; where the new Lord Chancellor in a Speech to him diſplay'd his Eloquence in ſuch a Manner, as ought not to be wholly forgotten; after telling him the Nature of his Office, he proceeded thus: 'I may juſtly ſay you are in a Place of the very firſt Rank, 'as to Dignity, Power, Truſt and Influence of Affairs: A Place that re- 'quires ſuch a Man as our great Maſter's Wiſdom hath found for it; 'from whoſe natural Temper we may expect Courage, Quickneſs, and 'Reſolution; from whoſe Education, Wiſdom and Experience; and from 'whoſe Extraction, that noble and illuſtrious Houſe of the Cliffords, an 'heroick Mind, a large Soul, and an unſhaken Fidelity to the Crown. 'My Lord, 'Tis a great Honour, much beyond even the Place it ſelf, 'that you are choſen to it by this King, who, without Flattery I may ſay, 'is as great a Maſter in the Knowledge of Men and Things, as this, or 'any other Age hath produc'd: And let me ſay farther, it is not only 'your Honour, that you are choſen by Him, but it is your Safety too, 'that you have Him to ſerve; with whom no ſubtle Inſinuations of any

Promotions in England.

'near Him, nor the aſpiring Intereſt of a Favourite, ſhall ever prevail 'againſt Thoſe that ſerve him well. Nor can his Servants fear to be ſa-'crific'd to the Malice, Fury or Miſtake of a more ſwelling Popular 'Greatneſs: A Prince under whom the Unfortunate fall gently! a Prince, 'in a Word, that beſt of all Mankind deſerves the Title of Deliciæ Hu-'mani Generis. Let me end with this Wiſh, or rather Prophecy, That 'you may exceed all your Predeceſſors in this Place; the Abilities, and 'Fidelity of the renowned Lord Burleigh; the Sagacity, Quickneſs and 'great Diſpatch of his Son the Lord Salisbury; and the Uprightneſs, In-'tegrity and Wiſdom of that great Man that went laſt before you, the 'Earl of Southampton.

As to the Deaths of eminent Men, we ſhall firſt take notice of two Reverend Prelates, Dr. John Coſen Biſhop of Durham, and Dr. John Wilkins Biſhop of Cheſter. The firſt, Biſhop Coſen, had his Education in Caius College in Cambridge, and was afterwards Maſter of Peter-Houſe College in the ſame Univerſity, and ſoon after Dean of Peterborough. Being a very ſtrict Church-Man, and eminently loyal to the late King, he was charg'd with Popery, and ſuffer'd all the Extremities of Plunder and Sequeſtration; and during the Time of Uſurpation, he retired into France, where he declin'd joyning in Communion with the French Proteſtants; but yet by his exemplary Life, conſtant Preaching and learned Diſputes, he gain'd over ſeveral Papiſts to the Church of England. At the Reſtoration, in Conſideration of his Sufferings, and his Worth and Learning, he was advanc'd to the rich See of Durham, the Riches of which he the more deſerv'd, becauſe of his munificent Benefactions, and his leaving a great Part of his Eſtate to pious and publick Uſes. The Other, Biſhop Wilkins, was a Perſon of a different Temper, and a more extenſive Genius, who was no Looſer, but a conſiderable Gainer in the late troubleſome Times: He was educated in the Univerſity of Oxford, where he was Warden of Wadham College, and from thence remov'd to the Maſterſhip of Trinity Colledge in Cambridge by Cromwell, whoſe Siſter he had marry'd. Tho' he was depriv'd of this at the Reſtoration, yet afterwards, for his admirable Abilities, he was made Biſhop of Cheſter; and ſurely the Court cou'd never have found a Man of greater Ingenuity and Capacity, or of more univerſal Knowledge and Underſtanding; being diſtinguiſh'd, not only for his Theology, and his excellent Preaching, but for his Skill in Mathematicks, in Philoſophy, and in all ſorts of polite and valuable Learning, than whom none had a truer Taſte, or a more ſolid Judgment. The two next to be mention'd were Divines of the Diſſenting Party, both Independents, and both Incendiaries in the late Times, but not equally ſo, Mr. Joſeph Caryl, and Mr. Philip Nye. The Former, who had the more moderate Spirit, having been educated in Oxford, became Preacher to the honourable Society of Lincolns-Inn, where he continu'd ſeveral Years with Good-liking and Applauſe: After which he became a frequent Preacher before the Long Parliament, a Licencer of their Books for the Cauſe, and one of the Aſſembly of Divines, and afterwards one of the Triers for the Approbation of Miniſters, in all which he ſhew'd himſelf a Man of conſiderable Parts and Learning, but a very great Bigot with reſpect to the Royal Martyr's Cauſe and Behaviour. After the Reſtoration he was ſilenc'd by the Act of Uniformity, and liv'd privately in London, where he diſtinguiſh'd himſelf, beſides other Books, by his valuable Expoſition, &c. on the Book of Job. The other Independent Preacher, Mr. Nye, was likewiſe educated in Oxford, one of the Aſſembly of Divines, and a louder Trumpeter to the Long Parliament, and not without ſome infamous Marks of Villany and Deſign. So that at the Meeting of the firſt Parliament, it was debated for ſeveral Hours whether

He and John Goodwin as well as Hugh Peters, ſhou'd be excepted for Life; and the Reſult was 'That if Philip Nye ſhou'd hereafter accept 'or exerciſe any Office Eccleſiaſtical, Civil or Military, he ſhou'd to all 'Intents and Purpoſes in Law ſtand as if he had been totally excepted 'from Life.' After this he liv'd privately in London, and dy'd with the Name of a Man of uncommon Depth, who was ſeldom, if ever, out-reach'd: He was alſo noted for his great Labours in the Pulpit; but a painful Preacher, with an Antichriſtian Spirit, makes but a wretched Character. 1672 Car. 24 Reſ. 13

And Mr. Francis Willoughby.

After all theſe, we ſhall mention Francis Willoughby Eſquire, a Gentleman of Middleton in Warwickſhire, and one highly celebrated among the greateſt Virtuoſi in Europe. He was deſcended from two Branches of that ancient and famous Family of the Willoughbys, and prov'd a mighty Ornament to both. His rare natural Abilities, join'd with an indefatigable Induſtry, brought him to a very great Skill in all Parts of Learning, and particularly into thoſe Sciences which are moſt abſtruſe and uncommon to vulgar Capacities, the moſt ſubtle Parts of Mathematicks, and natural Philoſophy, and more particularly the Hiſtory of Animals, Birds, Beaſts, Fiſhes and Inſects, in which he diſtinguiſh'd himſelf, almoſt beyond Example, and became the Glory of the Age. In order to which, he travell'd into many Countries, and left no Experiments untry'd; and laſt of all he was ſnatch'd away in the 37th Year of his Age, to the great Concern of all curious and inquiſitive Scholars, eſpecially thoſe of the Royal Society, and the great Loſs of all good Men who were acquainted with his Virtues, and of all learned Men who cou'd judge of his Labours.

II. 1. Never were greater Expectations of the meeting of any Parliament than at this Time: The long Receſs and Intermiſſion of a Year and above nine Months, and the many bold Things tranſacted during the Interval, fill'd all Men's Minds with Curioſity, and a Deſire to ſee the Event of this Meeting. On the fourth Day of February both Houſes met according to Prorogation, and this made the Eleventh Seſſion of the Second and Long Parliament. Sir Edward Turner, the laſt Speaker of the Houſe of Commons, having been made Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer, the firſt Thing they did was the Choice of a new Speaker; to this End Sir Job Charleton Serjeant at Law was recommended to them, and unanimouſly elected. This able Man being preſented to the King, deſired to be excus'd from ſo difficult and weighty a Concern; but the Lord Chancellor Shaftsbury in another Speech to him, let him know that no Excuſes wou'd be admitted, and particularly ſaid in the Preſence of the King and both Houſes, 'The Conjuncture of Time, and the King's 'and Kingdom's Affairs require ſuch a Houſe of Commons, ſuch a Speaker; 'for with Reverence to the Holy Scripture, the King may upon this 'Occaſion ſay, He that is not with me is againſt me: For he that doth 'not now put his Hand and Heart to ſupport the King in the common 'Cauſe of this Kingdom, can hardly ever hope for ſuch another Opportunity, or find a Time to make Satisfaction for the Omiſſion of this. 1672/3 Car. 25 Reſ. 13

The ELEVENTH SESSION of the Second Parliament.

Sir Job Charleton the new Speaker.

Immediately after, his Majeſty from the Throne made this following Speech to both Houſes of Parliament: 'My Lords and Gentlemen, I am 'glad to ſee you here this Day; I wou'd have call'd you together ſooner, 'but that I was willing to eaſe you and the Country, till there was an 'abſolute Neceſſity. Since you were laſt here, I have been forc'd to a 'moſt important, neceſſary and expenſive War; and I make no Doubt 'but you will give me ſuitable and effectual Aſſiſtance to go through 'with it. I refer you to my Declaration for the Cauſes, and indeed the 'Neceſſity of this War; and ſhall now only tell you, that I might have 'dige-

'digeſted the Indignities to my own Perſon, rather than have brought 'it to this Extremity, if the Intereſt, as well as the Honour of the whole 'Kingdom had not been at Stake: And if I had omitted this Conjuncture, 'perhaps I had not again ever met with the like Advantage. You will 'find the laſt Supply you gave me, did not anſwer the Expectation for 'the End you gave it; the Payment of my Debts. Therefore I muſt 'in the next Place recommend them again to your eſpecial Care.

'Some few Days before I declared the War, I put forth my Declara- 'tion for Indulgence to Diſſenters, and have hitherto found a good Ef- 'fect of it, by ſecuring Peace at home, when I had War abroad. There 'is one Part in it that hath been ſubject to Miſconſtruction, which is 'that concerning the Papiſts; as if more Liberty were granted to them, 'than to the other Recuſants; when it is plain there is leſs: For the o- 'thers have publick Places allow'd them, and I never intended that they 'ſhou'd have any, but only have the Freedom of their Religion in their 'own Houſes, without any Concourſe of others. And I cou'd not grant 'them leſs than this, when I had extended ſo much more Grace to others, 'moſt of them having been Loyal, and in the Service of me, and of the 'King my Father; and in the whole Courſe of this Indulgence, I do not 'intend that it ſhall any way prejudice the Church, but I will ſupport its 'Rights, and in its full Power. Having ſaid this, I ſhall take it very ill 'to receive Contradiction in what I have done. And I will deal plainly 'with you, I am reſolv'd to ſtick to my Declaration. There is one Jea- 'louſie more that is maliciouſly ſpread abroad, and yet ſo weak and fri- 'volous, that I once thought it not of Moment enough to mention; but 'it may have gotten ſome Ground with ſome well-minded People, and 'that is, That the Forces I have rais'd in this War were deſign'd to con- 'troll Law and Property: I wiſh I had had more Forces laſt Summer, 'the want of them then convinces me I muſt raiſe more againſt the next 'Spring; and I do not doubt but you will conſider the Charge of them 'in your Supplies. I will conclude with this Aſſurance to you, That I 'will preſerve the true Reformed Proteſtant Religion, and the Church 'as it is now Eſtabliſh'd in this Kingdom; and that no Man's Property 'or Liberty ſhall ever be invaded. I leave the reſt to the Lord Chan- 'cellor.

The Lord Chancellor Shaftſbury's Speech.

Whereupon his Lordſhip deliver'd a Speech ſo remarkable and memo- rable, that not a Word of it ought to be omitted, and is as follows: 'My 'Lords, and you Knights, Citizens and Burgeſſes of the Houſe of Commons, 'The King hath ſpoken ſo fully, ſo excellently well, and ſo like himſelf, that 'you are not to expect much from me. There is not a Word in his Speech 'that hath not its full Weight: And, I dare with Aſſurance ſay, will 'have its Effect with you. His Majeſty had called you ſooner, and his 'Affairs required it, but that he was reſolv'd to give you all the Eaſe, and 'Vacancy to your own private Concerns; and the People as much Re- 'ſpit from Payments and Taxes, as the Neceſſity of his Buſineſs, or 'their Preſervation wou'd permit. And yet (which I cannot but here 'mention to you) by the crafty Inſinuations of ſome ill affected Perſons, 'there have been ſpread ſtrange and deſperate Rumours, which your 'Meeting together this Day hath ſufficiently prov'd both malicious, and 'falſe. His Majeſty hath told you, that he is now engag'd in an impor- 'tant, very expenſive, and indeed a War abſolutely neceſſary, and una- 'voidable. He hath referr'd you to his Declaration, where you will 'find the Perſonal Indignities by Pictures, and Medals, and other Pub- 'lick Affronts, his Majeſty hath receiv'd from the States, their Breach 'of Treaties both in the Surinam, and the Eaſt-India Buſineſs: And at

'laſt

'last they came to that Height of Insolence, as to deny the Honour 'and Right of the Flag, tho' an undoubted Jewel of this Crown, 'never to be parted with, and by them particularly own'd in the 'late Treaty of Breda, and never contested in any Age. And whilst 'the King long expected, and then solemnly demanded Satisfaction, they 'disputed his Title to it in all the Courts of Christendom, and made great 'Offers to the French King, if he wou'd stand by them against us. But 'the most Christian King too well remember'd what they did at Mun- 'ster, contrary to so many Treaties, and solemn Ingagements; and how 'dangerous a Neighbour they were to all Crowned Heads. The King 'and his Ministers had here a hard Time, and lay every Day under new 'Obloquies. Sometimes they were represented as selling all to France 'for Mony, to make this War: Portsmouth, Plymouth and Hull, were 'to be given into the French Hands for Caution. The next Day's News 'came, that France and Holland were agreed. Then the Obloquy was 'turn'd from Treachery to Folly: The Ministers were now Fools, that 'some Days before were Villains. And indeed the Coffee-Houses were 'not to be blam'd for their last Apprehensions; since if that Conjunction 'had taken effect, then England had been in a far worse Case than 'now it is, and the War had been turn'd upon us. But both Kings 'knowing their Interest, resolv'd to join against them, who were the 'Common Enemies to all Monarchies, and I may say especially to ours, 'their only Competitor for Trade and Power at Sea; and who only stand 'in their Way to an Universal Empire, as great as Rome. This the 'States understood so well, and had swallow'd so deep, that under all 'their present Distress and Danger, they are so intoxicated with that 'vast Ambition, that they slight a Treaty, and refuse a Cessation. All 'this you and the whole Nation saw before the last War; but it cou'd 'not then be so well Timed, or our Alliances so well made. But you 'judg'd aright, That at any Rate, DELENDA EST CARTHAGO, 'that Government was to be brought down. And therefore the King 'may well say to you It is your War! He took his Measures from you, 'and they were just and right ones: And he expects a suitable Assistance 'to so necessary, and expensive an Action; which he has hitherto main- 'tain'd at his own Charge, and was unwilling either to trouble you, or 'burden the Country, until it came to an inevitable Necessity. And his 'Majesty commands me to tell you, that unless it be a certain Sum, and 'speedily rais'd, it can never answer the Occasion.

1672. Car. 25 Ref. 13

'My Lords and Gentlemen, REPUTATION is the great Sup- 'port of War or Peace. This War had never begun, nor had the States 'ever slighted the King, or ever refus'd him Satisfaction, neither had 'this War continu'd to this Day, or subsisted now, but that the States 'were deceiv'd in their Measures, and apprehended his Majesty in that 'great Want of Mony, that he must sit down under many Affronts, and 'was not able to begin, or carry on a War. Nay, at this Day the States 'support themselves amongst their People by this only Falshood, that 'they are assured of the Temper of England, and of the Parliament, and 'that you will not supply the King in this War; and that if they can 'hold out till your Meeting, they will have new Life, and take new 'Measures. There are lately taken two of their principal Agents, with 'their Credentials and Instructions to this Purpose, who are now in the 'Tower, and shall be proceeded against according to the Law of Nati- 'ons. But the King is sufficiently assured of his People; knows you bet- 'ter; and can never doubt his Parliament. This had not been men- 'tion'd, but to shew you of what Importance the Frankness, and Season-

167⅔. Car. 25 Ref. 13

'ableneſs of this Supply is, as well as the Fulneſs of it. Let me ſay, 'the King has brought the States to that Condition, that your hearty 'Conjunction, at this Time, in ſupplying his Majeſty, will make them 'never more formidable to Kings, or dangerous to England. And if 'after this you ſuffer them to get up, let this be remember'd, The States 'of Holland are England's Eternal Enemy, both by INTEREST, and 'INCLINATION. In the next place to the Supply for carrying on 'the War, his Majeſty recommends to you the taking Care of his Debts. 'What you gave the laſt Seſſion did not near anſwer your own Expecta-'tion. Beſides, another conſiderable Aid you deſign'd his Majeſty, was 'unfortunately loſt in the Birth; ſo that the King was forc'd for the car-'rying on his Affairs, much againſt his Will, to put a Stop to the Pay-'ments out of the Exchequer. He ſaw the Preſſures upon Himſelf, and 'growing Inconveniencies to his People by great Intereſt; and the 'Difference through all his Buſineſs between Ready Mony, and Orders. 'This gave the King the Neceſſity of that Proceeding; to make uſe of 'his own Revenue, which hath been of ſo great Effect in this War. But 'tho' he hath put a Stop to the Trade and Gain of the Bankers, yet he 'wou'd be unwilling to ruin them, and oppreſs ſo many Families as are 'concern'd in thoſe Debts: Beſides, it were too diſproportionable a 'Burden upon many of his good Subjects. But neither the Bankers, nor 'They, have Reaſon to complain, if you now take them into your Care, 'and they have paid them what was due to them, when the Stop was 'made, with Six per Cent. Intereſt from that Time. The King is very 'much concern'd both in Honour and Intereſt, to ſee this done. And 'yet he deſires you not to miſ-time it; but that it may have only the 'Second Place, and that you will firſt ſettle, what you intend about the 'Supply.

'His Majeſty has ſo fully vindicated his Declaration from that Calum-'ny concerning the Papiſts, that no reaſonable Scruple can be made by 'any good Man. He has ſufficiently juſtifiy'd it by the Time it was pub-'liſh'd in, and the Effects he hath had from it; and might have done it 'more from the Agreeableneſs of it, to his own Natural Diſpoſition, 'which no good Engliſh Man can wiſh other than it is. He loves not 'Blood, or rigorous Severities; but where mild or gentle Ways may be 'us'd by a wiſe Prince, he is certain to chuſe them. The Church of 'England, and all good Proteſtants have Reaſon to rejoyce in ſuch a 'Head, and ſuch a Defender. His Majeſty doth declare his Care, and 'Concerns for the Church, and will maintain them in all their Rights 'and Priviledges, equal, if not beyond any of his Predeceſſors. He 'was born, and bred up in it: It was that his Father dy'd for: We all 'know how great Temptations and Offers he reſiſted abroad, when 'he was in his loweſt Condition; and he thinks it the Honour of his Reign, 'That he hath been the Reſtorer of the Church: 'Tis That he will ever 'Maintain, and hopes to leave to Poſterity, in greater Luſtre, and upon 'ſurer Grounds, than our Anceſtors ever ſaw it. But his Majeſty is not 'convinc'd that Violent Ways are the Intereſt of Religion, or the Church. 'There is one Thing more, that I am commanded to ſpeak to you of, 'which is the Jealouſy that hath been fooliſhly ſpread abroad, of the For-'ces the King hath rais'd in this War. Wherein the King hath open'd 'himſelf freely to you, and confeſs'd the Fault of the other Hand. For 'if this laſt Summer had not prov'd a Miracle of Storms and Tempeſts, 'ſuch as ſecured the Eaſt-India Fleet, and protected their Sea-Coaſt from 'a Deſcent, nothing but the true Reaſon, Want of Mony, cou'd have 'juſtify'd the Defect in the Number of our Forces. 'Tis that his Majeſty 'is providing for againſt the next Spring, having given out Orders for

'mand of Perſons of the greateſt Fortunes and Quality. And I am earn- Car. 25
'eſtly to recommend to you, That in your Supplies, you will take into Reſ. 13
'your Conſideration this Neceſſary Addition of Charges.

The reſt of the Speech, tho' chiefly Rhetorick and Compliment, yet conſidering the Art and Character of the Inventer, is as much to be remember'd as the preceding Part. By Way of Addition to the Text and Subſtance he proceeds thus: 'And after his Majeſty's Concluſion of his The Concluſion of it.
'Speech, let me Conclude, nay let us all Conclude with Bleſſing God,
'and the King! Let us bleſs God, That he hath given us ſuch a King to 'be the Repairer of our Breaches both in Church and State; and the 'Reſtorer of our Paths to dwell in: That in the midſt of War and Mi-
'ſery, which rages in our Neighbour Countries, our Garners are full,
'and there is no Complaining in our Streets; and a Man can hardly know
'that there is a War. Let us bleſs God, that he hath given this King
'ſignally the Hearts of his People, and moſt particularly of his Parlia- 'ment, who in their Affection and Loyalty to their Prince, have exceed'ed all their Predeceſſors. A Parliament with whom the King hath ma'ny Years liv'd with all the Careſſes of a Happy Marriage. Has the King
'had a Concern? You have wedded it. Has his Majeſty wanted Supplies?
'You have readily, chearfully, and fully provided for them. You have
'rely'd upon the Wiſdom and Conduct of his Majeſty in all his Affairs;
'ſo that you have never attempted to exceed your Bounds, or to im-
'poſe upon Him: Whilſt the King on the other Hand, hath made your
'Counſels the Foundations of all his Proceedings; and hath been ſo tender
'of You, that he hath upon his own Revenue and Credit endeavoured to ſup-
'port even Foreign Wars, that he might be leaſt uneaſy to You, or burthenſom
'to his People. And let me ſay, That tho' this Marriage be according to
'Moſes's Law, where the Husband can give a Bill of Divorce, put her away,
'and take another; yet I can aſſure you, It is as impoſſible for the King
'to part with This Parliament, as it is for you to depart from that Loy- 'alty, Affection, and Dutiful Behaviour, you have hitherto ſhewn to'wards Him. Let us bleſs the King for taking away all our Fears, and 'leaving no Room for Jealouſies; for thoſe Aſſurances, and Promiſes he 'hath made us. Let us bleſs God and the King, That our Religion is
'ſafe; That the Church of England is the Care of our Prince; That 'Parliaments are ſafe; that our Properties and Liberties are ſafe. What 'more hath a good Engliſh Man to ask, but that this King may long reign,
'and that this Triple Alliance of King, Parliament and People, may ne- 'ver be diſſolv'd?

Notwithſtanding this famous Speech, the Commons wou'd not immediately or intirely fall in with the Meaſures of the Court; and indeed they had already entertain'd ſome ill Opinion of the Speaker of it, whom they look'd upon as a forward Projector, who had particularly diſoblig'd them in iſſuing out Writs under the Broad Seal for Electing and Returning of Perſons to ſit in their Houſe, in the Places of ſuch as were dead or remov'd. This they loudly complain'd of as Undue and Irregular, even before their own Speaker was approv'd of by the King; which occaſion'd his Majeſty immediately after the two Speeches to declare to them, 'That he 'had given Order to the Lord Chancellor to ſend out Writs for the bet'ter Supply of their Houſe, having ſeen Precedents for it: But if any
'Scruple or Queſtion did ariſe about it, he left it to the Houſe to debate
'as ſoon as they cou'd.' Accordingly, the very next Day the Commons fell into warm and angry Debates concerning thoſe Writs and Returns, which ended in the Voting them Irregular, and turning out thoſe Members ſo elected, who were ſaid to be all Creatures of the Lord Chancellor. For this, and other large Steps, the Country Party began to mark him out for an Impeachment; which is thought to be the chief Reason of the ſudden Turn of his Lordſhip, which appear'd within a ſhort Time after. However the Commons ſoon fell into a Conſideration of the King's Wants and Neceſſities; and tho' they did not approve of the preſent War, yet to Supply his Majeſty's Extraordinary Occaſions, they freely reſolv'd 'That a Supply be given of Eighteen Months Aſſeſsment, 'according to the Proportion of the laſt Royal Aid, not exceeding ſe-'venty Thouſand Pounds per Menſem;' which in all amounted to Twelve Hundred and Sixty Thouſand Pounds.

They vote a Supply.

2. The Commons did no ways act like Penſioners, but freely took Notice of the late Tranſactions of the Court, and without Reſerve expreſs'd their Fears of Popery and an overgrowing Power; reſolving that the Redreſs of Grievances ſhou'd keep an even Pace with the Mony-Bill. They ſaw an Army encamp'd at Black-Heath under many Popiſh Officers, rais'd without Advice of Parliament, to ſend againſt a Proteſtant Country already too far ſwallow'd up by the French; and the Diſpenſing Power exercis'd in a Declaration of Indulgence, for the Sake of Popiſh Recuſants, as well as Proteſtant Diſſenters. Theſe Things having allarm'd them, they firſt agreed to this following Addreſs to his Majeſty: 'Moſt 'gracious Sovereign, We your Majeſty's moſt faithful and loyal Subjects, 'the Commons aſſembled in Parliament, do in the firſt Place, as in all 'Duty bound, return your Majeſty our moſt humble and hearty Thanks 'for the many gracious Promiſes and Aſſurances, which your Majeſty 'hath ſeveral Times (during this preſent Parliament) given unto us, That 'your Majeſty wou'd Secure and Maintain unto us the true Reformed Pro-'teſtant Religion, our Liberties and Properties; Which moſt gracious 'Aſſurances, your Majeſty hath, out of your great Goodneſs, been pleas'd 'to renew unto us more particularly at the Opening of this preſent Seſ-'ſion of Parliament. And further we crave Leave humbly to repreſent, 'That we have with all Duty and Expedition taken into our Conſide-'ration ſeveral Parts of your Majeſty's laſt Speech to us, and withal the 'Declaration therein mention'd for Indulgence to Diſſenters, dated the '15th Day of March laſt: and we find our ſelves bound in Duty to inform 'your Majeſty, That Penal Statutes in Matters Eccleſiaſtical cannot 'be ſuſpended but by Act of Parliament. We therefore, the Knights, 'Citizens and Burgeſſes of your Majeſty's Houſe of Commons, do moſt 'humbly beſeech your Majeſty, That the Laws may have their Free 'Courſe, until it ſhall be otherwiſe provided for by Act of Parliament: 'And that your Majeſty wou'd be graciouſly pleas'd to give ſuch Directi-'ons herein, That no Apprehenſions or Jealouſies may remain in the Hearts 'of your Majeſty's good and faithful Subjects.

They addreſs againſt the Declaration for Indulgence.

This Addreſs was deliver'd to the King on the 19th of February; to which his Majeſty anſwer'd, That it was of Importance, and therefore he wou'd return his Anſwer in Writing. Accordingly, four Days after, he ſent this Anſwer to the Houſe. 'Charles Rex. His Majeſty hath re-'ceiv'd an Addreſs from you, and hath ſeriouſly conſider'd of it, and 'returneth you this Anſwer: That he is very much troubled That 'that Declaration, which he put out for Ends ſo neceſſary to the Qui-'et of this Kingdom, eſpecially in that Conjuncture, ſhou'd prove the 'Cauſe of Diſquiet, and give Occaſion to the Queſtioning of his Pow-'er in Eccleſiaſtiques, which he finds not done in the Reigns of any of 'his Anceſtors. He is ſure he never had Thoughts of uſing it otherwiſe, 'than as it hath been entruſted in him to the Peace and Eſtabliſhment of 'the Church of England, and the Eaſe of all his Subjects in General: 'Neither doth he pretend to Suſpend any Laws, wherein the Properties, 'Rights

'any Thing in the Eſtabliſh'd Doctrine or Diſcipline of the Church of 'England: But his only Deſign in this, was to take off the Penalties the Car 25
'Statutes inflict upon the Diſſenters, and which he believ'd, when well Ref. 13
'conſider'd of, you your ſelves wou'd not wiſh executed according to
'the Rigour and Letter of the Law: Neither hath he done this with any 'Thought of Avoiding or Precluding the Advice of his Parliament; and 'if any Bill ſhall be offer'd him, which ſhall appear more proper to at'tain the aforeſaid Ends, and ſecure the Peace of the Church and King'dom; when tender'd in due Manner to Him, he will ſhew how readi-
'ly he will concur in all Ways that ſhall appear good for the Good of 'the Kingdom.

The Commons immediately came to this ſhort Reſolution, 'That the 'Thanks of this Houſe be return'd to his Majeſty, for his gracious Aſſu-
'rances, and Promiſes in his Anſwer to the Addreſs.' But being ſtill un-ſatisfy'd, they three Days after agreed upon this following Anſwer, or

'ble and loyal Subjects, the Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes in Parlia'ment aſſembled, do render to your Sacred Majeſty our moſt dutiful
'Thanks, for that, to our unſpeakable Comfort, your Majeſty hath been
'pleas'd to reiterate to us thoſe gracious Promiſes and Aſſurances of 'Maintaining the Religion now eſtabliſh'd, and the Liberties and Proper- 'ties of your People; And we do not in the leaſt Meaſure doubt but that 'your Majeſty had the ſame gracious Intentions in giving Satisfaction to 'your Subjects, by your Anſwer to our laſt Petition and Addreſs. Yet,
'upon a ſerious Conſideration thereof, we find, That the ſaid Anſwer is 'not Sufficient to clear the Apprehenſions, that may juſtly remain in the 'Minds of your People, by your Majeſty's having claim'd a Power to ſuſpend
'Penal Statutes in Matters Eccleſiaſtical; and which your Majeſty does
'ſtill ſeem to aſſert in the ſaid Anſwer, to be entituled in the Crown, and
'never queſtion'd in any of the Reigns of your Anceſtors: Wherein we hum-
'bly conceive, That your Majeſty hath been much miſ-inform'd; Since no
'ſuch Power was ever claim'd, or exercis'd by any of your Majeſty's
'Predeceſſors. And if it ſhou'd be admitted, might tend to the Inter-
'rupting the Free Courſe of the Laws, and Altering the Legiſlative
'Power, which hath always been acknowledg'd to Reſide in your Maje-
'ſty, and your two Houſes of Parliament. We do therefore, with an 'unanimous Conſent, become again moſt humble Suitors to your Sacred
'Majeſty, That you wou'd be pleaſed to give us a full and Satisfactory
'Anſwer to our ſaid Petition and Addreſs; and that your Majeſty wou'd
'take ſuch effectual Order, That the Proceedings in this Matter, may
'not, for the future, be drawn into Conſequence, or Example.

The King's Anſwer to this Addreſs was, It is of Conſequence, and I will take it into Conſideration. But before this, there happen'd a particu- Sir Job Charleand ſo unacceptable to the Court, that they are thought to have made the Speaker weary of his Chair, before he was well ſettled in it. However the Publick gave this ſoft Account of the unuſual Alteration, viz. Satur- day, Feb. 15th, Sir Job Charleton Speaker, of the Houſe of Commons, having been taken ill the Night before, ſo as not to be able to proceed in the Service of the Houſe that Day; the Houſe, notwithſtanding the great and preſſing Affairs now depending before them, thought fit to Adjourn till Tueſday; at which Time Mr. Speaker finding his Indiſpoſition ſtill to continue upon him, did by Letter make his humble Suit to his Majeſty that he might be eas'd of the Burden he was not able longer to ſuſtain. The ſame Morning he ſent a Letter to the Houſe, deſiring

Mr. E. Seymour choſen Speaker.

Leave to retire into the Country. Whereupon his Majeſty ſignify'd to the Commons, by Mr. Secretary Coventry, his Permiſſion to them to chuſe a new Speaker; and immediately the Houſe did unanimouſly make choice of Edward Seymour, Eſquire, much to his Majeſty's Satisfaction, for his known Loyalty and great Abilities to diſcharge that Place, as it is there expreſs'd. He was undoubtedly very acceptable to the Court at this Time; and the Earl of Arlington, in a Letter to Sir Bernard Gaſcoyn, ſays, 'Mr. Edward Seymour by his Majeſty's Recommendation was 'choſen Speaker, who ſupplies the Place very well, and with much more 'Sufficiency than his Predeceſſor did.

Some of the Diſſenters againſt the laſt Indulgence.

3. In the midſt of the warm Debates concerning the King's Declaration for Indulgence, it is obſervable that no Man was more zealous in oppoſing it than Alderman Love, a City Member, and a noted Diſſenter, who declared, He had much rather ſtill go without their deſired Liberty, than have it in a Way that wou'd prove ſo detrimental to the Nation. Theſe Debates gradually introduc'd a new Act, ſince call'd The Teſt Act, then levell'd at the Papiſts; upon which, we are told, that the Lord Clifford got ſome in the Houſe to move in favour of the Diſſenters, hoping that wou'd have provok'd one Side or the other; and that either the Church Party might be offended with the Motion, or the Diſſenters with refuſing it: But it was ſtop'd by the fore-mention'd Alderman, who deſir'd, tho' his Perſuaſion was well known, That nothing with Relation to them might intervene, to ſtop the Security that the Nation, and the Proteſtant Religion, might have by that new Act; in which he was ſeconded by moſt of his Party. Their Behaviour in theſe matters, it ſeems, wrought ſo much upon the Houſe, that had been ſo zealous againſt them, that they order'd a Bill to be brought in For the Eaſe of his Majeſty's Subjects, Diſſenters in Matters of Religion from the Church of England, which was firſt read on the 27th of February, and not long after compleated in the Houſe of Commons. It did not get through the Houſe of Lords, but was not ſtop'd there, as is generally repreſented, but only accidentally protracted upon the Account of ſome Amendments, till the King caus'd the Parliament to break up before the Amendments cou'd be agreed to by the Commons, as appears by the Journals. However the Subſtance of the Bill is proper to be remember'd, eſpecially ſince we do not find it in Print.

An Act deſign'd for the Eaſe of them.

'1. That Eaſe ſhall be given to his Majeſty's Proteſtant Subjects, Diſ-'ſenters in matters of Religion, who ſhall ſubſcribe the Articles of the 'Doctrine of the Church of England, and ſhall take the Oaths of Alle-'giance and Supremacy. 2. That the ſaid Proteſtant Subjects be eas'd 'from all Pains and Penalties for not coming to Church. 3. That the 'Clauſe in the late Act of Uniformity for Declaring the Aſſent and Con-'ſent, be taken away by this Bill. 4. That the ſaid Proteſtant Subjects 'be eas'd from all Pains and Penalties for Meeting together for Perfor-'mance of any Religious Exerciſe. 5. That every Teacher ſhall firſt give 'Notice of the Place where he intends ſuch his Meeting, to the reſpective 'Quarter Seſſions; where in open Court he ſhall firſt make ſuch Sub-'ſcription, and take ſuch Oaths as aforeſaid, and receive from thence a 'Certificate thereof, where all ſuch Proceedings ſhall remain upon Re-'cord. 6. That any ſuch Teacher may exerciſe as aforeſaid until the next 'reſpective Quarter Seſſions, and no longer, in Caſe he ſhall not firſt take 'the Oaths, and make ſuch Subſcription before two of the neighbouring 'Juſtices of the Peace; and ſhall firſt give them notice of the Place of his 'intended Meeting, and take Certificate thereof under the ſaid Juſtices 'Hand; a Duplicate whereof they are to return into the next Quarter 'Seſſions.

'Seſſions. 7. That the Doors and Paſſages of all Houſes and Places 'where the ſaid Diſſenters do meet, ſhall be always open and free, during 'the Time of ſuch Exerciſe. 8. That if any Diſſenter refuſe to take 'Church-Wardens Oaths, that then he ſhall find them another fit Perſon, 'who is no Diſſenter, to execute that Office, and ſhall pay him for his 'Pains.' At the ſame Time that they were deſigning Eaſe for the Diſſenters, they were conſidering the Duties of the Church, and fell into a Debate touching the moſt uſeful, and too much neglected Duty of Educating and Inſtructing the Youth of the Kingdom in the Catechiſm enjoyn'd by the Liturgy of the Church of England; whereupon it was Order'd, 'That a Bill be prepared and brought in to enjoyn all Perſons that 'are in Eccleſiaſtical Preferments, to Catechiſe and Inſtruct the Youth 'within their ſeveral Pariſhes and Places of Incumbency, every Sunday 'in the Afternoon, in the Church Catechiſm, and to explain the ſame; 'and to expound thereupon to the Congregation.' This Bill was order'd to be brought in by the Attorney General, but Want of Time render'd it abortive, as well as other Matters.

Another for Catechiſing of Youth.

Shortly after the Bill was brought in for the Eaſe of Proteſtant Diſſenters, both Houſes being apprehenſive of the late Incouragement of Popiſh Perſons and Principles, unanimouſly joyn'd in the following remarkable Addreſs to his Majeſty; 'We, your Majeſty's moſt dutiful and loyal 'Subjects, the Lords Spiritual and Temporal and Commons in this pre-'ſent Parliament aſſembled, being very ſenſible of the great Dangers and 'Miſchiefs that may ariſe within this your Majeſty's Realm, by the En-'creaſe of Popiſh Recuſants amongſt us; and conſidering the great Re-'ſort of Prieſts and Jeſuits in this Kingdom, who daily endeavour to ſe-'duce your Majeſty's good Subjects from their Religion and Allegiance, 'and how much your Loyal Subjects are diſheartned to ſee ſuch Popiſh 'Recuſants admitted into Employments of great Truſt and Profit, and 'eſpecially into Military Commands over the Forces now in your Maje-'ſty's Service; and having a tender Regard to the Preſervation of your 'Majeſty's Perſon, and the Peace and Tranquillity of this Kingdom, in 'all Humility deſire, 1. That your Majeſty wou'd be pleas'd to iſſue out 'your Royal Proclamation to command all Prieſts and Jeſuits (other than 'ſuch, as not being natural born Subjects, are oblig'd to attend upon 'your Royal Conſort the Queen) to depart within thirty Days out of this 'your Majeſty's Kingdom: And that if any Prieſt or Jeſuit ſhall happen 'to be taken in England, after the Expiration of the ſaid Time, that the 'Laws be put in Execution againſt them; and that your Majeſty wou'd 'pleaſe in the ſaid Proclamation to command all Judges, and other Offi-'cers, to put the ſaid Laws in Execution. 2. That your Majeſty wou'd 'likewiſe be pleas'd, That the Lord Chancellor of England ſhall, on or 'before the 25th of March inſtant, iſſue out Commiſſions of Dedimus 'Poteſtatem to the Judge Advocate and Commiſſaries of the Muſters, 'and ſuch other Perſons as he ſhall think fit, to tender the Oaths of Al-'legiance and Supremacy to all Officers and Soldiers, now in your Maje-'ſty's Service and Pay; and that ſuch as refuſe the ſaid Oaths may imme-'diately be disbanded, and not allow'd to continue in any Pay or Penſi-'on; and that the Chancellor ſhall require due Returns to be made 'thereof, within ſome convenient Time after iſſuing out of the ſaid Com-'miſſions. 3. That the Commiſſaries of the Muſters be commanded and 'enjoyn'd by your Majeſty's Warrant, upon the Penalty of loſing their 'Places, not to permit any Officer to be muſter'd in the Service and Pay 'of his Majeſty, until he hath taken the Oaths of Allegiance and Supre-'macy, and receiv'd the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, according to 'the Uſage of the Church of England; and that every Soldier ſhall take

'the ſaid Oaths before his firſt Muſter, and receive the Sacrament in like 'manner before his ſecond Muſter. And this we preſent in all Dutiful-'neſs to your Majeſty's Princely Wiſdom and Conſideration, as the beſt 'Means for Satisfying and Compoſing the Minds of your Loyal Subjects; 'humbly deſiring your Majeſty graciouſly to accept of this our Petition, 'as proceeding from Hearts and Affections entirely devoted to your Ma-'jeſty's Service, and to give it your Royal Approbation.

Upon this Addreſs his Majeſty ſoon after iſſu'd out his Proclamation againſt the Papiſts; which was the Seventh of that kind which he had put forth, at the joynt Petition of both Houſes of Parliament. It began as the reſt uſually did, viz. 'Whereas the Lords Spiritual and Tempo-'ral, and Commons in this preſent Parliament aſſembled, have by their 'humble Petition repreſented to his Majeſty, their Fears and Apprehen-'ſions of the Growth and Increaſe of the Popiſh Religion, &c. His Ma-'jeſty had ſeriouſly conſider'd of the ſaid Petition, and with much Con-'tentment and Satisfaction did accept and approve of the great Care of 'the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons in Parliament aſſem-'bled, for the Preſervation of the true Religion eſtabliſh'd in this King-'dom; to which his Majeſty declares, as he hath always adhered againſt 'all Temptations whatſoever, ſo he will ſtill employ his utmoſt Care and 'Zeal in the Maintenance and Defence of it. And therefore ſtrictly 'charges and commands all Jeſuits and Romiſh Prieſts to depart the King-'dom, and the Laws to be put in due Execution againſt all Popiſh Re-'cuſants, or juſtly ſuſpected to be ſo, &c.' This did not give full Con-tent and Satisfaction, becauſe it did not extend to all the Particulars of the Parliament's Petition, as to the Removal of Papiſts that were in Offi-ces and Places of Truſt; therefore a new Act and other Meaſures were ſet on foot to obtain that End. And indeed the Houſe of Commons ſeem'd reſolute, that they wou'd not finiſh the Money-Bill till they had ſecured that and ſome other Matters, eſpecially the King's Revocation or Diſowning his Declaration for Indulgence.

The King's Proclamation thereupon.

The King under Difficulties.

4. In the mean Time the King was under greater Difficulties, and never ſo perplex'd ſince his Reſtoration. His greateſt Concern was about Liberty of Conſcience; and he had declar'd in his Speech That he wou'd ſtick to his Declaration; ſo that both Honour and Inclination prompted him not to give it up, but he really wanted Money. What further trou-bled him was, That his Friends and all the Court were divided; ſome adviſing him to yield to the preſſing Neceſſity of getting a Supply, and to uſe ſome Complaiſance with thoſe that cou'd give it him; and others diſſuading him from yielding up a Point ſo neceſſary for raiſing his Au-thority to ſuch a Degree as wou'd enable him to act as a King. Among the firſt were, not only the Duke of Ormond, and ſeveral other Prote-ſtants, zealous for their Religion, but even the Earl of Arlington, a Man timerous, and naturally yielding, who thought the ſafeſt Method was for a while to give way to the Heat of the Commons, in order to bring them more ſecurely back to their Obedience, when the Dutch were ſubdued. The Duke of York and the reſt of the Cabal were of another Opinion, not only, as Father Orleans ſays, with Reſpect to the Catholick Religion conſider'd in it ſelf, and with Regard to the Monarchy; but becauſe they thought it of Conſequence that the King ſhou'd be ſteady in his Reſoluti-ons, againſt the Attempts of an Aſſembly that was too apt to oppoſe them. They inſiſted and alledg'd, 'how the Parliament in 1641 had dealt with 'the late King, as ſoon as he condeſcended to their firſt Propoſals; and 'ſaid, they ſaw no leſs Cauſe to fear in the preſent Circumſtances; for 'no ſooner wou'd the King recall his Declaration, but they wou'd ſet up

'ſome

'ſome other Demands, which wou'd never end, till they were carry'd 'ſo high, that the King being unable to grant them without undoing him-'ſelf, Things wou'd be left in the ſame Condition they were in that Year, 'and after a thouſand prejudicial Condeſcenſions, he wou'd be at laſt 'compell'd to break with his Parliament, and all the Fruit he ſhou'd 'reap from his Complyance, wou'd be the making that Aſſembly the 'bolder in contradicting of him.' They further added, ſays the ſame Author, 'That his holding his Reſolution a few Days, wou'd bring the 'Parliament to Reaſon, his Majeſty having a Party among them that be-'gan to make the Leaders waver; and that there were Forces ſufficient 'on foot to ſupport the one Side, and intimidate the other;' and Shaftſbury himſelf undertook to anſwer for the Succeſs. Theſe Reaſons ſtrenuouſly urg'd on both Sides, held the King in Suſpence. It has been believ'd that the Ladies ingag'd in this Affair, and prevail'd with his Majeſty to follow their Advice who were for recalling the Declaration; however it was effected, he did recall it, and with his own Hands broke the Great Seal annex'd to it. 1672. Car. 25 Reſ. 13

He revokes his Declaration of Indulgence.

Having proceeded thus far, on the 8th Day of March, his Majeſty went to the Houſe of Lords, and ſending for the Commons, he made this following Speech to both Houſes. 'My Lords and Gentlemen, 'Yeſterday you preſented me with an Addreſs, as the beſt Means for 'the Satisfying and Compoſing the Minds of my Subjects; to which I 'freely and readily agree, and ſhall take Care to ſee it perform'd accor-'dingly. I hope on the other Side, you Gentlemen of the Houſe of Com-'mons, will do your Part; for I muſt put you in Mind, it is near five 'Weeks ſince I demanded a Supply, and what you voted unanimouſly 'upon it, did both give Life to my Affairs at home, and diſheartned my 'Enemies abroad: But the ſeeming Delay it hath met with ſince, hath 'made them take new Courage, and they are now preparing for this 'next Summer a greater Fleet, as they ſay, than ever they had yet; ſo 'that if the Supply be not ſpeedily diſpatcht, it will be altogether ineff-'fectual, and the Safety, Honour and Intereſt of England muſt of neceſ-'ſity be expos'd. Pray lay this to heart, and let not the Fears and Jea-'louſies of ſome draw inevitable Ruin upon us all. My Lords and Gen-'tlemen, If there be any Scruple yet remaining with you concerning 'Suſpenſion of Penal Laws, I here faithfully promiſe you, that what 'hath been done in that Particular ſhall not for the future be drawn into 'Example and Conſequence. And as I daily expect from you a Bill for 'my Supply, ſo I aſſure you, I ſhall as willingly receive and paſs any o-'ther you ſhall offer me, that may tend to the giving you Satisfaction in all 'your juſt Grievances.' This Speech was ſo pleaſing and obliging to the Parliament in general, that both Houſes join'd in the following Vote, 'Reſolved nemine contradicente, That the humble and hearty Thanks 'of theſe Houſes be return'd to his Majeſty, for his Gracious, Full and 'Satisfactory Anſwer this Day given to their humble Petitions and Ad-'dreſſes.' This was declar'd to the King in the Banquetting-Houſe, by the Mouth of the Lord Chancellor, at the Head of both Houſes; to which his Majeſty made this Anſwer, My Lords and Gentlemen, I hope there never will be any Difference amongſt us; I aſſure you there ſhall never be any Occaſion on my Part.

His Speech to both Houſes.

Their Thanks for it.

Immediately upon this there appear'd a ſudden and ſurprizing Change in the Lord Chancellor Shaftsbury, who had been the Soul of the Cabal, and the Maſter Builder in making his Majeſty a great King. Father Orleans, who had good Information of this Affair, has given us a particular Account of the Defection of this great Miniſter, from whom we ſhall borrow the two following Paragraphs. He ſays, few Men had done the King

The unexpected Defection of Chancellor Shaftsbury.

King more conſiderable Service than he, and none had been ſo zealous for reſtoring the Monarch and Monarchy to their juſt Rights, which the Troubles of the laſt Reign had incourag'd the Parliament to invade. The Project of Liberty of Conſcience is a Teſtimony of that Miniſter's Zeal for his Maſter; but meer Spight to ſee it diſappointed by that which he accounted Weakneſs in the King, caus'd him to change Sides at once, and from a devoted Subject, to become an open Male-Content, and at laſt a Chief of the Conſpirators. Two things concurr'd to throw him into theſe Extreams: The one was, his deſpairing of being able to do any Thing effectual for a Prince he thought had not Reſolution enough to carry on a great Undertaking. He already complain'd that the King had forſaken him in an Affair wherein he had promis'd to ſtand by him, and in which the Intereſt of the Crown was as much concern'd as this now mention'd. The Election of Members to fill up the Vacancies in the Houſe of Commons had been ſo order'd for a long Time, that the ſeditious Party generally prevail'd; becauſe that Houſe had aſſum'd the Authority of iſſuing the Writs. This was an Abuſe introduc'd during the Troubles of the laſt Reign, and ſuffer'd to continue after the Reſtoration, through the Weakneſs or Ignorance of thoſe who had been Chancellors before Shaftsbury. He ſays, the ancient Cuſtom was, that when any Member dy'd, the Chancellor iſſu'd a Writ under the Great Seal for electing another; by which Means, tho' the Writ contain'd nothing to obſtruct the Freedom of the Election, yet the King by this cou'd at leaſt uſe Means for diverting the Choice from falling upon Perſons that were againſt him. Shaftsbury had attempted to retrieve that Right, and brought it into Uſe during the laſt Interval of Parliament; having firſt obtain'd the King's Promiſe to ſtand firm by him, in Oppoſition to all the Complaints he foreſaw the Commons wou'd make on that Account; but they preſs'd ſo hard, that the King comply'd with them. Thus, contrary to his Maſter's Promiſe, the Chancellor had the Mortification of ſeeing his Elections made void, and the old Abuſe reſtored. From that Time he foretold, That the Liberty of Conſtience wou'd ſink, and freely declar'd, That in Caſe it did, he wou'd go over to the Parliament Party, and have no Regard for the Court; in which he was as good as his Word.

The Cauſes of it.

The ſame Author goes on, and tells us, His Maſter's giving up the Elections lay at his Heart, when the Recalling of Liberty of Conſcience put him quite out of Patience, and made him openly ſay, that that Man who forſook himſelf, deſerv'd to be forſaken; a falſe Maxim, when the Sovereign is concern'd, or that Party that cannot lawfully be forſaken. As turbulent a Man as Shaftsbury was, he perhaps had not carry'd his Reſentment ſo far, had there been no other Motive but the King's Intereſt. He that commits an Error to his own Diſadvantage, is rather to be pitied than hated; but the King's yielding the Point of Liberty of Conſcience, concern'd his Miniſters perſonally, becauſe his Majeſty by that Means diſclaiming their Advice given him, left them expos'd to the Rage of the Parliament; and the Earl, appearing to have had the greateſt Share in all the Court Projects, had Cauſe to fear that the Commons wou'd mark him out for an Example to others. This was the ſecond Motive that carry'd this Man to ſuch Extreams. It may be ſaid, he reſolv'd his preſent Zeal for the Proteſtant Religion and for the Parliament, ſhou'd expiate for that other he had expreſs'd for the Catholick Religion and Monarchy. After he had taken theſe Reſolutions, the Author ſays, the Attack was ſudden and unexpected: Never was any great Change ſo quick as that of this Miniſter. No ſooner did the King begin to incline to the recalling his Declaration of Indulgence, but he perceiv'd it,

it. He loſt no Time; the Reſolution was not taken till eleven at Night, and the next Morning he appear'd in the Houſe of Lords, at the Head of the moſt zealous Peers againſt the Catholick Religion, the Wars with Holland, and the Alliance with France. This firſt Sally ſurpriz'd the Parliament, as well as the Court, and rais'd an extraordinary Commotion in both; which Diſorder was much heightned, when the Earl diſcover'd the private Motions that had induc'd the King to grant Liberty of Conſcience, to join with France, and to declare War againſt Holland. It is a Crime in an Engliſh King to think of breaking Parliamentary Chains, and of confining that Aſſembly within the Bounds preſcrib'd by the Laws; to which it draws back the Soveraign, if he happens to make never ſo little Excurſion. His Majeſty's Deſign was before ſuſpected; but no Queſtion was made of it after Shaftsbury had ſpoke; ſo that they were upon their Guard againſt all future Projects of that Nature. 167⅔. Car. 25 Reſ. 13

Thus far the ſubtle Jeſuit, who had particular Informations: And this Matter is farther open'd in a forementiond Manuſcript left by Sir Joſeph Tyley, a Perſon moſt oppoſite to this Author, who ſays, that the Lord Clifford, that Day, had undertook to open the Debates of the Lords Houſe, for eſtabliſhing a perpetual Fund, in order to advance the Prerogative, and render Parliaments inconſiderable. He prepared a ſet Speech to that Purpoſe, which he read to the Lord Chancellor, who deſired to hear it again; and upon the ſecond Reading he charg'd his Memory with the Subſtance of it, promiſing he wou'd likewiſe come roundly into the Debate. This gave him an Opportunity he wiſh'd for to be reveng'd of the Courtiers, and the Lord Clifford, who purſuant to the Determination of the Cabal, began the Debate with the very Speech he had ſhew'd the Lord Chancellor; while his Majeſty and his Royal Highneſs were then in the Houſe to countenance the Deſign. The Country Lords, and thoſe who were not in the Secret, ſtar'd at one another; the whole Houſe, at the End of the Speech, meditating the Fate of England, remain'd in an awful Silence, when Chancellor Shaftsbury ſtood up, and anſwer'd his Speech from the Beginning to the End, ſhewing, 'That his Propoſitions were extravagant: That what he 'aim'd at wou'd end in Confuſion, and the Ruin of the Government: 'That it might perhaps ſend the Royal Family abroad again, to ſpend 'their Lives in Exile, without Hopes of a Return.' All which he ſpoke with ſo much Spirit and Sharpneſs, that he confounded the Court Counſels. While he was ſpeaking, the Duke of York, inrag'd at him, whiſper'd the King, What a Rogue have you of a Lord Chancellor? The King briskly reply'd, God's fiſh! What a Fool you have of a Lord Treaſurer? The Debate ended in a Ruffle, and the Lord Clifford narrowly eſcap'd being ſent to the Tower; and finding himſelf thus given up by the King, like his new Opponent, he declar'd, He wou'd ſerve no Prince in the World, who had not Courage to avow his Principles, and ſupport his Miniſters in the Execution of his Demands.

He defeats Clifford in the Houſe of Peers.

5. And now the Popiſh Party began to meet with a Retribution of their Counſels and Proceedings. They had render'd themſelves formidable by their obtaining many Places of Honour, Profit and Truſt; but now a Bill was depending that wou'd certainly throw them out of all, and ſecure all Places to thoſe of the Church of England alone. This was call'd the Teſt Act, which was particularly promoted, if not invented by the Earl of Shaftsbury, who reſolv'd to ſtrike directly at the Duke of York and his Friends, tho' the Act reach'd all Sorts of Diſſenters. This Bill gave a great Alarm to many Perſons, who us'd all Means to oppoſe it; but it ſoon paſs'd the Houſe of Commons, whoſe Apprehenſions of Popery daily increas'd. When it came to be debated in the Houſe of Peers, in the Preſence of the King himſelf, March 15, the famous Earl of Briſtol, tho' a profeſs'd Roman Catholick, unexpectedly ſtood up for the Bill in general, and ſpoke remarkably upon it; of which ſome Account ſhall be given to ſhew the Temper of the Times, as well as the Ingenuity of the Speaker.

The Earl of Briſtol's Speech for it.

Towards the Beginning of his Speech he declar'd himſelf 'A Catholick of the Church of Rome, not a Catholick of the Court of Rome; a 'Diſtinction he thought worthy of Memory and Reflection, whenever any ſevere Proceedings againſt thoſe they call'd Papiſts ſhou'd 'come in Queſtion, ſince thoſe of the Court of Rome did only deſerve 'that Name.' Therefore he inſiſted, 'That they ſhou'd not ſpeak 'here as Roman Catholicks, but as faithful Members of a Proteſtant Parliament.' Coming to the Bill it ſelf, he proceeded thus: 'In the firſt 'Place, my Lords, I beſeech you to conſider, That this Bill for ſecuring 'of general Fears, is brought up to you from the Houſe of Commons, 'the great Repreſentative of the People, and conſequently the beſt 'Judges of the true Temper of the Nation: A Houſe of Commons ſurpaſſing all that ever have been, in the illuſtrious Marks of their Duty, 'Loyalty and Affection to their Sovereign, both in his Perſon and Government: Such a Houſe of Commons as his Majeſty ought to conſider, and cheriſh always, with ſuch a kind of Love as is due to a Wife, 'never to be parted with unkindly, and not as a Miſtreſs, to be turn'd 'off when our Turn is ſerv'd by her. My Lords, this caſual mention of 'a Wife, ſuggeſts to my Thoughts a Purſuance of the Compariſon. I 'have obſerv'd in the Courſe of my Life, that Men who have Wives 'ſomewhat Coquets, that is a little ſubject to Gallantries, live eaſier 'Lives with them, and freer from troubleſome Contentions, than thoſe 'who have Wives of exact rigid Virtue; and the Reaſon is clear: For 'the more gameſome Ladies being conſcious of their Failings in that 'eſſential Part, are careful to diſguiſe, and repair them by kind and tender Compliances with their Husband's Humour in all other Things; 'whereas Wives ſeverely punctual and exact in the chief Matrimonial 'Duty, expect, and even exact far greater Compliances from their Huſbands, and think themſelves as it were priviledg'd by the Rigidneſs of 'their Virtue to be ſometimes troubleſome in Domeſtick Affairs; eſpecially if there be any Jealouſy in the Caſe. In like Manner, my Lords, 'it is not to be much wonder'd at, if this incomparable Houſe of Commons, tranſcending all that ever were in the grand Eſſentials of Duty, Loyalty, and Affection to their King, ſhou'd at ſometimes be a little troubleſome to him in leſſer Occurrences; eſpecially when once Fears and 'Jealouſies are on Wing. My Lords, I ſhall not pretend to determine 'whether there have been any juſt Grounds given by any violent Men, 'or by the unſeaſonable Ambition of any Roman Catholicks for ſuch 'Fears and Jealouſies; it ſuffices to exact the Neceſſity of a timely Remedy, ſince they have indeed moſt violently ſeiz'd, and diſtemper'd 'the Minds of the Major Part of his Majeſty's Proteſtant Subjects, which 'certainly no Man converſant in the World can deny. Now, my Lords, 'in Popular Fears and Apprehenſions, thoſe uſually prove moſt dangerous that are rais'd upon Grounds not well underſtood, and may rightly be reſembled to the fatal Effects of Panick Fears in Armies, where 'I have ſeldom ſeen great Diſorder ariſe from Intelligences brought in 'by Parties and Scouts, or by Advertiſements to Generals; but from 'Allarms upon groundleſs and capricious Fears of Danger, taken up we 'know not either how, or why: This no Man of moderate Experience 'in military Affairs but hath found the dangerous Effects of one Time or other;

'ous Aſſembly of the Houſe of Commons, rightly ſenſible of the dan- Ref. 13
'gerous Effects which ſo general a Diſturbance of Mens Minds in the 'Concernments of Religion (how groundleſs ſoever) might produce,
'have apply'd their Care to obviate them by this Bill: A Bill, in my 'Opinion, as full of Moderation towards Catholicks, as of Prudence,
'and Security towards the Religion of the State. In this Bill, my Lords,
'notwithſtanding all the Allarms of the Encreaſe of Popery, and Deſigns
'of Papiſts, here is no Mention of barring them from private, and mo-
'deſt Exerciſe of their Religion; no baniſhing them to ſuch a Diſtance
'from Court, no putting in Execution of Penal Laws in force againſt
'them; all their Precautions are reduc'd to this one Intent, natural to 'all Societies of Men, of Hindering a leſſer Oppoſite Party from grow'ing too ſtrong for the greater and more conſiderable One: And in this
'juſt Way of Prevention, is not the Moderation of the Houſe of Com'mons to be admired, That they have reſtrain'd it to this ſole Point, of
'debarring their Adverſaries from Offices, and Places, and from Ac-
'ceſſions of Wealth by Favour of the Sovereign? — And after all, my
'Lords, how few do theſe ſharp Tryals, and Teſts of this Act regard?
'only a few ſuch Roman Catholicks as wou'd fain hold Offices, and Pla'ces at the Price of Hypocriſy, and Diſſimulation of their true Senti'ments in Religion. My Lords, I am none of Thoſe, none of thoſe
'Wherry-Men in Religion, who look one Way, and row another. —
'Upon the whole Matter, my Lords, however the Sentiments of a Ca-
'tholick of the Church of Rome (I ſtill ſay, not of the Court of Rome)
'may oblige me, upon Scruple of Conſcience, in ſome Particulars of this 'Bill to give my Negative to it, when it comes to paſſing; yet as a 'Member of a Proteſtant Parliament my Advice prudentially cannot
'but go along with the main Scope of it; the preſent Circumſtances of 'Time, and Affairs conſider'd, and the Neceſſity of compoſing the di-
'ſturbed Minds of the People.

All theſe Proceedings made the King very uneaſy, eſpecially ſince the Mony Bill went on but ſlowly: and beſides this Teſt Act, there were other Bills on foot, which made the Roman Catholicks almoſt deſperate, and particularly one To prevent Intermarriages between Proteſtants and Papiſts, which, if paſs'd, muſt, as it was thought, have put a Stop to two ſeveral intended Marriages of the Duke of York, of which one took place. The Complaints and Demands of the Parliament ſeem'd to increaſe; therefore to allay the preſent Temper, the King not only yielded to the Teſt-Act, but likewiſe granted an Act for his moſt gracious, general and free Pardon, which prov'd very popular and acceptable. The Commons went on with more Alacrity, and the King by two ſeveral Meſſages urg'd them to a Concluſion; yet before they wou'd finiſh all, they drew up two Addreſſes of Grievances to his Majeſty, one concerning England, and the other Ireland, both fit to be remember'd, and the rather becauſe they are not taken notice of by the common Writers. The Firſt is, The Commons Addreſs concerning Grievances in England.

'Moſt gracious Sovereign, We your Majeſty's moſt Loyal Subjects, the Com'mons in this preſent Parliament aſſembled, conceiving our ſelves bound
'in neceſſary Duty to your Majeſty, and in Diſcharge of the Truſt re-
'poſ'd in us, truely to inform your Majeſty of the Eſtate of this your 'Kingdom. And tho' we are abundantly ſatisfy'd, that it hath been al'ways your Royal Will and Pleaſure, That your Subjects ſhou'd be go-
'vern'd according to the Laws and Cuſtoms of theſe Realms; yet finding,
'that contrary to your Majeſty's gracious Intentions, ſome Abuſes and
'Grievances are crept in, We crave leave humbly to repreſent them to

'your Majesty's Knowledge, and to Desire, 1. That the Imposition of 'Twelve Pence per Chaldron upon Coals, for providing of Convoys, by 'Vertue of an Order of Council, dated the 15th of May 1672, may be 'recall'd, and all Bonds, taken by Vertue thereof, cancell'd. 2. That 'your Majesty's Proclamation of the 4th of December 1672, for preventing Disorders which may be committed by Soldiers, and whereby the Soldiers now in your Majesty's Service are in a Manner exempted from 'the ordinary Course of Justice, may likewise be recall'd. 3. And whereas great Complaints have been made out of several Parts of this Kingdom of divers Abuses committed in Quartering of Soldiers, That 'your Majesty wou'd be pleas'd to give Order to redress those Abuses; 'and in particular, That no Soldiers be hereafter Quarter'd in any private Houses; and that due Satisfaction may be given to the Inn-Keepers 'and Victuallers where they lye, before they remove. 4. And since the 'Continuance of Soldiers in this Realm will necessarily produce many 'Inconveniencies to your Majesty's Subjects, We do humbly present it 'as our Petition and Advice, That when the present War is ended, all 'the Soldiers that have been rais'd since the last Session of Parliament, 'may be disbanded. 5. That your Majesty wou'd likewise be pleas'd 'to consider of the Irregularities and Abuses in Pressing Soldiers, and give 'Order for the Prevention thereof for the future. 6. And altho' it hath 'been the Course of former Parliaments to desire Redress in their Grievances, before they proceeded to give a Supply; yet we have so full 'Assurance of your Majesty's Tenderness and Compassion towards your 'People, that we humbly prostrate our Selves at your Majesty's Feet 'with these our Petitions, desiring your Majesty to take them into your 'Princely Consideration, and to give such Orders for the Relief of 'your Subjects, and the Removing these Pressures, as shall seem best to 'your Royal Wisdom.

Another concerning Grievances in Ireland.

The Second concerning Ireland was as follows: 'Most gracious Sovereign, We your Majesty's most loyal Subjects, the Commons in this present Parliament assembled, taking into Consideration the great Calamities which have formerly befallen your Majesty's Subjects of the Kingdom of Ireland from the Popish Recusants there, who for the most Part 'are profess'd Enemies to the Protestant Religion, and the English 'Interest, and how they making ill use of your Majesty's gracious Disposition and Clemency, are at this Time grown more insolent and presumptuous than formerly, to the apparent Danger of that Kingdom, and 'your Majesty's Protestant Subjects there, the Consequence whereof may 'likewise prove very fatal to this your Majesty's Kingdom of England, 'if not timely prevented. And having seriously weigh'd what Remedies 'may be most properly apply'd to these growing Distempers, do in all 'Humility present your Majesty with these our Petitions. 1. That for 'the Establishing and Quieting the Possessions of your Majesty's Subjects 'in that Kingdom, your Majesty wou'd be pleas'd to maintain the Act of Settlement, and Explanatory Act thereupon, and to recall the Commission of Enquiry into Irish Affairs bearing date the 17th of January last, 'as containing many new and extraordinary Powers, not only to the 'Prejudice of particular Persons, whose Estates and Titles are thereby 'made liable to be question'd; but in a Manner to the Overthrow of the 'Acts of Settlement; and if pursu'd, may be the Occasion of great 'Charge and Attendance to many of your Subjects in Ireland, and shake 'the Peace and Security of the whole. 2. That your Majesty wou'd 'give order, That no Papist be either continu'd, or hereafter admitted 'to be Judges, Justices of the Peace, Sheriffs, Coroners or Mayors, Sovereign or Portrieves in that Kingdom. 3. That the Titular Popish Archbishops,

'bishops, Bishops, Vicars-General, Abbots, and all other Exercising 1673.
'Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction by the Pope's Authority, and in particular, Car. 25
'Peter Talbot, pretended Archbishop of Dublin, for his notorious Dis- Ref 14
'loyalty to your Majesty, and Disobedience and Contempt of your Laws,
'may be commanded by Proclamation forthwith to depart out of Ireland,
'and all other your Majesty's Dominions, or otherwise to be prosecuted
'according to Law. And that all Convents, Seminaries, and publick
'Popish Schools may be dissolv'd and suppress'd, and the Regular Priests
'commanded to depart under the like Penalties. 4. That no Irish Pa-
'pist be admitted to inhabit in any Corporation in that Kingdom, unless 'duly licens'd according to the foresaid Acts of Settlement; and that 'your Majesty wou'd be pleas'd to recall your Letters of the 26th of Fe- 'bruary 1671, and your Proclamation thereupon, whereby general Li- 'cence is given such Papists as inhabit in Corporations there. 5. That 'your Majesty's Letters of the 28th of September 1672, and the Order
'of Council thereupon, whereby your Subjects are required not to pro- 'secute any Actions against the Irish for any Wrongs or Injuries commit- 'ted during the late Rebellion, may likewise be recall'd. 6. That Co'lonel Richard Talbot, who hath notoriously assum'd to himself the Title
'of Agent for the Roman Catholicks in Ireland, be immediately dis-
'miss'd out of all Command, either Civil or Military, and forbid any 'Access to your Majesty's Court. 7. That your Majesty wou'd be
'pleas'd, from Time to Time, out of your Princely Wisdom, to give 'such further Orders and Directions to the Lord Lieutenant, as may best
'conduce to the Encouragement of the English Planters, and Protestant
'Interest there, and the Suppression of the Insolencies and Disor'ders of the Irish Papists there. These our humble Desires we pre'sent to your Majesty, as the best Means to preserve the Peace and Safe'ty of that your Kingdom, which hath been so much of late in Danger
'from the Practices of the said Irish Papists, and particularly of the 'said Richard and Peter Talbot. And we do not doubt but your Ma'jesty will find the happy Effects thereof, to the great Satisfaction and 'Security of your Government and Person, which of all Earthly Things
'is most dear to us your Majesty's most Loyal Subjects.

These two Addresses being presented to the King, his Majesty immediately return'd this following obliging Answer, by way of Message, That he observ'd the Addresses consisted of many different Parts, therefore it cou'd not be expected there shou'd be a Present Answer: But for the several particular Things contain'd in them, he wou'd, before the next Meeting, take such effectual Care, that no Man shou'd have Reason to complain. With which the House thought Themselves and the Nation so well secured, that they presently Voted 'That the humble Thanks of 'the House be presented to his Majesty, for the often Accesses they have 'been admitted to his Majesty's Person; and for his most gracious An-'swers to the several Addresses of this House; and particularly for the 'last gracious Message, and for the Care he hath declared, He will take 'of the Protestant Religion. The Mony-Bill immediately pass'd, but under the Title of a Supply of his Majesty's Extraordinary Occasions; and with a particular Proviso tack'd to it, That no Papist shou'd be capable of holding any Publick Employment. On the 29th of March, before the Bill in Favour of Protestant Dissenters, and some others cou'd be finish'd, the King came to the House of Peers, and, besides the Mony-Bill, pass'd nine publick Acts, viz. 1. An Act for the King's Majesty's most gracious, general, and free Pardon, but with many Exceptions. 2. An Act continuing a former Act concerning Coynage. 3. An Act for enabling his Majesty to make Leases of his Lands belonging to the Dutchy of Cornwall.

The End of the Eleventh Meeting of the Second Parliament.

Of all theſe Acts none did then, or ſince, make ſo great a Noiſe as That for Preventing Dangers which happen from Popiſh Recuſants, moſt commonly call'd The Teſt Act; which required, 'That all Perſons bearing any 'Office or Place of Truſt or Profit, ſhou'd take the Oaths of Supremacy 'and Allegiance in publick and open Court, and ſhou'd alſo receive the 'Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, according to the Uſage of the Church 'of England, in ſome Pariſh Church, on ſome Lord's-Day, immediately 'after Divine Service and Sermon, and deliver a Certificate of having ſo 'receiv'd the Sacrament, under the Hands of the reſpective Miniſter and 'Church-Wardens, prov'd by two credible Witneſſes upon Oath, and 'put upon Record in Court: And that all Perſons taking the ſaid Oaths 'of Supremacy and Allegiance, ſhou'd likewiſe make and ſubſcribe this 'following Declaration; I A. B. do declare, that I do believe there is 'not any Tranſubſtantiation in the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, at, 'or after the Conſecration thereof, by any Perſon whatſoever.' This Act, and Teſt therein preſcrib'd, has been generally accounted a great Bulwark to the eſtabliſh'd Church of England. It was principally, if not ſolely levell'd at the Roman Catholicks, in order to preclude them from all Places of Note and Truſt, yet it did as effectually reach all ſtrict Diſſenters from the ſaid Church. However the former ſooneſt felt the Effects of it; and not only many Popiſh Officers quitted their Truſts, but the Duke of York Himſelf, who was High-Admiral of England, and the Lord Treaſurer Clifford, both laid down their Places. The Latter is ſaid to have been ſo much diſguſted at the King's paſſing this Bill, and ſome other Condeſcenſions, that he retired, and dy'd in Privacy and Diſcontent in his own Country of Devonſhire.

The Continuation of the WAR.

III. 1. All this while great Preparations were making both by the King of England and the States of Holland, for the Summer's Expedition by Sea. The Latter had acquired new Strength and Vigour, ſince their Revolution by the Death of the De Wits, and the brave Prince of Orange was made their chief Commander. That Prince us'd all poſſible Diligence, both by Land and Sea, to reſtore and ſecure his Country againſt the two formidable Powers of France and England. At Sea, their Fleets were in much greater Forwardneſs than the Engliſh; and to make the Naval Forces more effectual, his Highneſs took care to reconcile thoſe two glorious Commanders de Ruyter and van Tromp, ſo that for the future there was a perfect Underſtanding between them. Being got to Sea, he wrote to them, and the other Officers, to encourage them, and particularly told them, 'That the Eyes and Hearts of all the Subjects of the 'United Provinces, nay, and of all Chriſtendom were now turn'd to the 'Fleet, and were attentively obſerving what Motions, and what Attempts it wou'd make under the Valour and Conduct of thoſe who go-'vern'd it.' He further wrote thus, 'We ſhall take care to recompence 'the

'the Merit and Bravery of thoſe that ſhall give any ſignal Proofs of it, 'and ſhall provide, that great and glorious Actions ſhall not be repaid 'with Ingratitude, but with a proportionable Reward. I pray you aſſure 'all under your Flag, from the Greateſt to the Leaſt, of this Reſoluti- 'on; and at the ſame Time, let every one of them know, That no Par- 'don is to be expected by them who ſhall not do their Duty, and ſhall be 'guilty of Cowardice.' They were out at Sea before the Beginning of May, and had projected an Attempt of very great Importance, which was to dam up the Mouth of the Thames, by ſinking in it a great many Ships extraordinarily loaden, and ſo to render it impaſſable: And if that Project had ſucceeded, England wou'd a long Time have felt its Effects by the Interruption of Commerce, which wou'd thereby have been vaſtly endamag'd, without any Battel or Bloodſhed. 1673. The Forwardneſs of the Dutch.

On the other ſide, the Engliſh carry'd on their Preparations with conſiderable Diligence, but with ſeveral Impediments, and leſs Expedition, partly occaſion'd by ſome Diviſions, or perhaps Miſunderſtandings between the Duke of York, who had laid down, and Prince Rupert, who had taken up his high Office. The Prince's Friends complain that he was too much limited in his Commiſſion, that he was not befriended in the Choice of his Officers, nor never ſufficiently ſupported during the whole Expedition; ſo that they ſay, never Admiral went out to Sea with greater Diſcouragements: And if he had not us'd more than ordinary Vigour and Activity, he cou'd not have prevented the Dutch Deſign of damming up the Mouth of the Thames, nor have got ſafely paſt them, in order to joyn with the French then coming from Breſt, both which he effected with great Conduct, and difficult Management. On the 16th of May, he joyn'd the French Squadron off of the Coaſt of Rye; at which Place the King and the Duke went down to ſee the Fleet, and on the 19th left them ready to Sail with the firſt fair Wind: But before his coming away, his Majeſty made the Duke of Ormond's Son, the Earl of Oſſory, Rear Admiral of the Blue Squadron, under the famous Sir Edward Spragge. The Red Squadron, which was the Principal, was commanded by Prince Rupert, and the White by Count d'Eſtree, the French Admiral; the whole Fleet conſiſting of about a Hundred and forty Sail, of which ninety were capital Men of War. The Dutch Fleet was likewiſe divided into three Squadrons, the Firſt commanded by de Ruyter, the Second by Bankert, and the Third by van Tromp; conſiſting of fifty five Capital Men of War, fourteen Frigates, twenty five Fire-Ships, fourteen Advice-Yatches, and ſeven Galliots, in all an Hundred and fifteen Sail.

The Engliſh Preparations.

On the 28th of May, the firſt Battel this Year, but the ſecond in this War, began near the Sands of Schonevelt upon the Borders of Zealand; and this was the ſame Day on which the laſt Battel was fought in Sould-Bay. Here the Dutch Fleet lay in Safety; but when De Ruyter ſaw the Confederates appear, he weigh'd Anchor to meet them, and found them rang'd in the Form of a Creſcent. The Engliſh being ill ſatisfy'd with the Conduct of the French in the laſt Battle, and fearing their Deſertion, thought fit to place ſeveral of them under their own Squadrons; and particularly Monſieur d'Aſſedan, the French Rear Admiral, was put under Prince Rupert's Squadron, and the Marquiſs de Grancy under that of Admiral Spragge. About Twelve at Noon, Trompe and Sir Edward Spragge began the Fight, which on every Side was continu'd with vaſt Noiſe and Fury, till the Darkneſs of the Night parted them. The Fire-Ships of both Fleets were able to do but little Execution, and yet a great many of them were either burnt or ſunk. The Dutch loſt Vice-Admiral Schram, and Rear-Admiral Vlugh; and Captain Legg took one Dutch Man of War, War, but Captain Backer who loſt it, bravely retook it, but with the Loſs of his Life. The Deventer, another Dutch Ship of Sixty Guns, was diſabled; and ſtriking on the Sand in her return home, all the Men were drown'd, except Thirty. The Dutch affirm they loſt only this Ship, whereas they ſay the Confederates loſt ſeveral, either ſunk or burnt, moſt of them French and Fire-Ships, which they knew not how to uſe. It is certain that both Sides were well beaten, and ſeverely ſhatter'd, and therefore both Sides claim'd the Victory. De Ruyter, in his Letter to the Prince of Orange, ſays, We juſtly judge, that thus far the Victory, God be prais'd, is on the ſide of the States and your Highneſs. And Prince Rupert in his Letter to the Earl of Arlington, writes thus, I thought it beſt for us to ceaſe the Purſuit, and drop Anchor where I now am. On the Engliſh ſide were kill'd Captain Fowls, Captain Werden, and Captain Finch; and Colonel Hamilton had his Leg ſhot off: The Captains Legg, Holmes, Wetwang and Story, ſignaliz'd themſelves in this Battel; which Battel drove back the Engliſh to their Coaſts, and the Dutch to Schonevelt.

The Third BATTEL.

2. The Dutch having the Opportunity, by lying ſo near their own Coaſts, to refit and refurniſh themſelves, and well knowing as the Wind ſtood, the Engliſh cou'd not do the like, on the 4th Day of June came out upon the Engliſh Fleet, towards the Coaſts of Suffolk; which brought on a ſecond Battel within ſeven Days after the Former. About four in the Afternoon, the Fight again began by thoſe two valiant Commanders Tromp and Spragge, who with great Thunderings bravely engag'd each other. Soon after De Ruyter with his Squadron engag'd Prince Rupert, and Bankert fell in with D'Eſtree and the White Squadron. At de Ruyter's firſt approach, he made a ſhew of attacking the Prince, but before he was within Muſquet Shot, he ſprung his Looſ, and went off of a ſudden; which made the Prince think, he had ſome extraordinary Damage in his Ship, or that he was hurt. In no long Time the whole Dutch Fleet began to ſtand off, but continu'd Canonading the Engliſh, but at a great Diſtance, till dark Night, while the Engliſh continu'd their Station. About Mid-Night part of the Dutch Fleet tack'd, ſtanding to the Eaſt Southerly: At Two in the Morning the Engliſh tack'd alſo, and ſtood after them, but cou'd not come up before they were got again within their Sands; ſo that the Prince tack'd and ſtood to the Engliſh Coaſt, and all that cou'd be ſaid, was, that the Dutch went off in great Diſorder, but their Loſs cou'd not be known. Yet de Ruyter, in his Letter to the Prince of Orange, ſays, The next Day we ſaw the Enemies were gone, and doubt not but they made to the Thames; we ſatisfy'd our ſelves with purſuing them half Way, and then return'd to our former Station. However, the Engliſh loſt not a Ship, and but few Men; and of Captains, only White, Commander of the Warſpight, and Sadlington, Commander of the Crown, were kill'd.

The Deficiencies in the Engliſh Fleet.

The next Day after the Battel, Prince Rupert had leaſure to conſider the ill Condition of the whole Fleet, when from all Parts of it came miſerable Complaints to his Highneſs of Want of Sea Men, and all manner of Neceſſaries in every Ship, tho' all Things had been written for, and frequently promis'd that they ſhou'd be ſent. The Commanders exclaim'd that they ſhou'd be thus expos'd, ſo as not to have convenient Supplies, but to be in Want of Powder, Shot, Water, Beer, Fiſh, ſmall Stores, and what not; whereupon it being impoſſible to avoid returning home, therefore to refit and revictual themſelves as ſoon as might be, the whole Fleet ſet ſail to the Buoy of the Nore, where on the 8th of June they rod at Anchor. And on the 14th his Highneſs the Prince return'd to

London

London to give his Majeſty an Account of the Condition of his Navy, and to preſs for a ſpeedy Supply of all Neceſſaries for the Refitting of the Fleet out to Sea again. About ſeven Days after he return'd again to the Fleet, where with indefatigable Induſtry, he ſet all Things in forwardneſs, and made ſo quick a Diſpatch, that had not a Delay interven'd, of ſending Soldiers to be landed by them in Holland, they had been much ſooner out at Sea: But by the 16th of July his Highneſs weigh'd Anchor, and his Majeſty alſo in his Yatch, having a ſtrong Gale at South-Weſt, and came to the Middle-Ground; where humbly taking his leave of his Majeſty, he quickly got the whole Fleet through the Narrow, and on the 19th of July ſtood with an eaſy Sail for the Coaſts of Zealand and Holland; in all which he ſhew'd both his Skill and Labour, and prov'd himſelf an excellent Manager as to both. 1673. Recover'd by Prince Rupert.

3. After a Variety of Motions, the two contending Fleets met on Monday the 11th of Auguſt, near the Mouth of the Texel, upon the Coaſts of Holland, and brought on a Third Battel this Year, which was the Fourth and Laſt of this War. The ſeveral Squadrons were under the ſame Command as before; but now the French led the Van, Prince Rupert was in the Middle, and Sir Edward Spragge in the Rear. The Dutch having the Advantage of the Weather-Gage, came boldly on; Bankert attack'd the French under D'Eſtree, de Ruyter the Prince, and Trompe a third Time engag'd Spragge. About eight in the Morning, the Battel began with as much Noiſe and threatning Deſolation as had ever been known upon the Ocean; and it is incredible to imagine with what dreadful Rage and Thunder they equally and furiouſly batter'd each other, while Confuſion and Deſtruction appear'd in every Part of the greateſt Naval Powers in the Univerſe. But within two or three Hours Time there happen'd a conſiderable Alteration; for the French, excepting Rear-Admiral Martel, who fought with all imaginable Bravery, ſhew'd by their Conduct that their Deſign was, to husband and ſpare their Forces; and according to the Opinion of the moſt knowing Men, it was believ'd, that the Count D'Eſtree, tho' he made a ſhew of fighting bravely for a Time, had ſecret Orders from his Maſter to act in that Manner: So that about eleven a Clock they very fairly made a Tack about to the Eaſtward, under the Pretence of getting the Weather-Gage, where they in effect remain'd malicious Spectators of the reſt of the Battel. Whereupon Admiral Bankert, ſeeing the French were gone off, thought it not fit to purſue them any longer, for fear of being drawn away too far from the Main of the Dutch Fleet, but veer'd back towards the main Battel, and went to the Aſſiſtance of de Ruyter; ſo that Prince Rupert, under this unequal Conteſt, was put to great Difficulties; notwithſtanding he bravely bore up and charg'd through the Enemy ſeveral Times. Still Trompe furiouſly engag'd Spragge, and Trompe's Second, the Earl of Oſſory, who anſwer'd them with equal Bravery. In the Afternoon Spragge's Ship being diſabled, he haſtned aboard the St. George, where he put up his Flagg; which when the Earl of Oſſory ſaw, he ſent Sir John Narborough to tell him, That if he pleas'd, he wou'd ſet upon Trompe and directly board him, if he had his Aſſiſtance: Spragge commended his Heroick Reſolution, and encourag'd him to go on, and he wou'd be with him immediately; but his ſudden Death was the Loſs of a noble Deſign: For he had not been long on board the St. George, but by the Loſs of her main Maſt he was forc'd to leave her alſo; and as he was going on board the Royal Charles, the Boat was unhappily ſhatter'd to Pieces by an accidental Shot, whereby he was drown'd in the Ocean, over which he had ſo often triumph'd by his repeated Victories. Trompe being ſeverely gaul'd by the Earl of

The Fourth and laſt BATTEL.

Ossory, began to give way; but seeing de Ruyter coming towards him, he stay'd; and being both joyn'd, they fell furiously upon the Blue Squadron, vainly endeavouring to separate them from Prince Rupert, who coming in with all imaginable Speed, and others seasonably joyning with him, the Dispute was bloody and terrible on both Sides; And the Prince sending two Fire-ships, guarded by Captain Legg, amongst the Enemies Fleet, put them into such Confusion, that if the wary French, who were then Masters of the Wind, had come in, the Dispute of the Dutch concerning the Dominion of the Seas had been at an end. The brave Martel, the French Commander, in his Narrative owns, 'That if the Count 'd'Estrees wou'd have fallen in with the fair Wind upon de Ruyter and 'Bankert, when they first engag'd with Prince Rupert, they must needs 'have been enclos'd between his Highness and the Count, and so there 'wou'd have been an entire Defeat of the Enemy.

The Failure of the French.

In this Battel the Dutch lost two Flag-Officers, de Liefde and Sweers, several Captains, and about a Thousand common Sea-Men. Among the English, were slain Captain le Neve, and Captain Merryweather, both Foot Officers, and Mr. May a Voluntier; of the Sea-Commanders Sir William Reeves, and Captain Heywood, both gallant Soldiers. But the Person most lamented was Sir Edward Spragge, who is said by a Dutch Writer, to have been one of the most valiant Admirals England ever had; and of whom it was reported, that when he took leave of the King his Master, he declar'd He wou'd bring Admiral Trompe alive or dead, or else lose his own Life in the Attempt, which last accordingly came to pass. The English had ship'd six thousand Men, commanded by the Mareschal de Schomberg, for a Descent upon the Coasts of Holland; but their not being able to attempt any thing by Land, was an Argument that they were not superior at Sea. And here it may be observ'd that when ever the English engag'd the Dutch without any Foreign Assistance, they generally came off with Honour and Renown; but when they were supported, or rather joyn'd by the Power of France, they never cou'd make the like Impression. And here ended the Summer's Expedition, and in effect the whole War; only we are to take notice, that the Island Tobago, in the West-Indies, was this Year taken from the Dutch by the English Commander Sir Tobias Bridges, with a Booty of four Hundred Prisoners, and as many Negroes. The Dutch in Reprizal, had seiz'd upon the English Isle of St. Helens, which wou'd have been a great Obstruction to their East-India Trade; had it not been soon after regain'd by Captain Mundy, with a more fatal Loss to the Dutch of three rich East-India Ships: For which acceptable Service the Captain, on his Return, was Knighted by his Majesty.

The End of the Summer's Expedition.

These three Battles fought at Sea, though none of them were Victories, prov'd very advantagious to the Dutch, by keeping up the Hearts and Spirits of the People at Land, who began not only to breath after their dreadful Losses from the French, but to recover their former Strength and Vigour. All which was principally owing to the Vigilance and Activity of the Prince of Orange, who having taken his Measures with the Emperor, Spain and Brandenburg, undertook the Siege of Naerden with full Success. After the Reduction of that Place, which happen'd in the Sight of the French Army, the Prince, like another young Scipio, resolv'd to save his Country by abandoning it; and accordingly he contented himself to leave the chief Post guarded with a Part of the Army, and with the rest march'd into Germany, joyn'd Part of the Imperialists, and besieg'd Bonne, which had been put into the Hands of France in the Beginning of the War. The Boldness of this Attempt amaz'd all Men, but the Success display'd the Prudence, as well as the Bravery of it; for the

Prince

Prince took Bonne, and by that Means open'd a Paſſage for the German Forces over the Rhine, and ſo into Flanders, and gave ſuch a Diverſion and Damp to the Deſigns and Enterprize of the French, that they immediately abandon'd all their Conqueſts upon Holland with greater Celerity than they made them, retaining only Maeſtricht and the Grave, of all they had poſſeſs'd belonging to the States: All which happen'd before the Concluſion of this Year. The Dutch were tranſported at this great and unexpected Turn of Affairs, and juſtly imputed it chiefly to the Wiſdom and Conduct of the Prince of Orange; and therefore a greater Honour was done to him than to any of his illuſtrious Anceſtors: For now the States-General not only confirm'd the Office of Stadt-Holder in the Perſon of his Highneſs during Life, but ſettled it likewiſe upon his Heirs Male born in Wedlock, by a ſolemn Decree made in the latter End of the Year. And on the ſame Day the States of Zealand, to ſhew their Gratitude, made him chief Hereditary Nobleman of that Province.

IV. 1. During the Heat and Vigour of this Summer's War, a Treaty of Peace was not forgotten, which was firſt agreed, by the Mediation of the King of Sweden, to be held at Aix-la-Chapelle; but ſoon after, by the King of England's Conſent, at the City of Cologn; to which Place by the middle of June, and ſome before, repaired all the Plenipotentiaries of the ſeveral Confederates. For his Britannick Majeſty, there appear'd Sir Joſeph Williamſon, and Sir Lionel Jenkins; for the King of Spain, Count Areſchot, and Don Emanuel de Lyra; for the Emperor, Count Conningſech, and the Baron D' Iſola; Count Tott, for the Crown of Sweden; Van Beverning, Van Haren, and Odyke, for the States of Holland; and the Duke de Chauſnes, for his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty of France. But the Dutch, depending upon their Succeſſes, and having other Deſigns than were carrying on in that Place, wou'd yield to no conſiderable Point: Nor were their Plenipotentiaries ſo fully inſtructed, but that upon the Propoſitions deliver'd by the Engliſh, they pleaded they cou'd give no poſitive Anſwer, without conſulting their Maſters. So carrying things with a high Hand, they return'd to Holland, while the States had Leiſure to form an Anſwer; which when they had deliver'd at Cologn, was look'd upon as little more than a Contrivance to protract Time: By which means Cologn became a Place of great Concourſe, but of little Buſineſs.

A Treaty ſet on Foot at Cologn.

All which Time the King and the Court were preparing for the next Meeting of Parliament, which, by Adjournment only, was to be on the 20th Day of October: Before which Day ſeveral Alterations were made as to Places and Preferments. Beſides the Reſignation of the Duke of York, which ſeem'd to have been done not without Reſentment, the Lord Clifford, being a profeſs'd Roman Catholick, finding himſelf diſabled by the new Teſt Act, as was before hinted, reſign'd into his Majeſty's Hands his Staff, as Lord High Treaſurer of England, on the 19th of June; which, by the Recommendation of the favourite Duke of Buckingham, his Majeſty was pleas'd to deliver the ſame Day to the celebrated Sir Thomas Osborne, Knight and Baronet, and lately created Lord Viſcount Dunblain in Scotland. Soon after, on the Death of Sir Robert Long, Auditor of his Majeſty's Exchequer, that profitable Place was given to the witty Sir Robert Howard, who left his Office of Secretary to the Lord High Treaſurer of England, to Charles Bertie Eſquire, Brother to the Earl of Lindſey. As to the Lord Chancellor Shaftsbury, tho' his Reign appear'd to be ſhort-liv'd, he was reſerv'd for the Management of the approaching Seſſion of Parliament, upon the Succeſs of which his Fate ſeem'd much to depend. He had lately put himſelf at the Head of the Promotions in England.

Complaining Party, appear'd more reſerv'd as to the Court Intereſt, and ſaid ſeveral Things in publick Speeches which reſembled more the Patriot, than the Courtier, for which he met with a proportionable Degree of Applauſe and Diſcommendation. When Serjeant Thurland took his Oath before him as one of the Barons of the Exchequer, in his Speech he gave him this free Advice. 'In the firſt Place you are to maintain 'the King's Prerogative; and let not the King's Prerogative and the 'Law, be two things with you: For the King's Prerogative is 'Law, and the Principal Part of the Law; and therefore in main-'taining That, you maintain the Law.' But after this he further ſaid to him, 'Let me recommend to you, ſo to manage the King's Juſtice and 'the Revenues, as the King may have moſt Profit, and the Subject leaſt 'Vexation. Raking for old Debts, the Number of Informations, Pro-'jects upon Concealments, I cou'd not find, in the eleven Years Expe-'rience I have had in this Court, ever to advantage the Crown: But 'ſuch Proceedings have, for the moſt Part, deliver'd up the King's good 'Subjects into the Hands of the Worſt of Men.' Afterwards, when the new Lord Treaſurer, Sir Thomas Osborne was ſworn, he in his Speech from the Bench, among other Things, ſaid, 'Kings are as Gods, and be-'ſtow Honour, Riches and Power where they pleaſe; but in this they 'are as Men, that they can only chuſe, not make a Perſon Adequate to 'their Imployment: For if their Choice be merely Favour, not Fitneſs, 'their Omnipotency is quickly ſeen through.— There is no more to be 'ask'd of you in this Condition, but that you know your own Intereſt, 'and that will ſecure you to the King's and the Nation's. I repeat them 'thus together, becauſe none but Mountebanks in State Matters can 'think of them aſunder. And let me ſay to your Lordſhip, that how-'ever happy you have been in arriving to this high Station, yet Parta 'tueri non minor eſt Virtus. Many great Men have prov'd unfortunate, 'in not obſerving that the Addreſs and Means to attain great Things, 'are oftentimes very different from thoſe that are neceſſary to maintain 'and eſtabliſh a ſure and long Poſſeſſion of them.' The new Treaſurer thank'd the Chancellor in publick; but the next Day, when he had conſider'd the Terms in the Speech, it is ſaid he ſent to revoke his former Thanks.

The Chancellor's Speech to him.

A ſecond Marriage deſign'd for the Duke of York.

In the mean Time the Cliffordian or Popiſh Party had taken great Pains to bring about the ſecond Marriage of the Duke of York, as the ſureſt Method to ſtrengthen their Intereſt. Several Propoſals had been made to his Royal Highneſs, all of his own Religion, and particularly a long Negotiation for a Match between him and the Arch-Dutcheſs of Inſpruck, a great Fortune in Germany; but the Emperor happening to become a Widower before it cou'd be compleated, he marry'd her himſelf. Upon which the Duke, being oblig'd to caſt his Eye another Way, at laſt fix'd upon Mary D'Eſte, Siſter to Francis then Duke of Modena in Italy, and Daughter to Alphonſo D'Eſte, the third of that Name, by Laura Maneſſi. The better to advance this unequal Match, and make it appear more conſiderable, the French King declared her an adopted Daughter of France, and promis'd her a ſuitable Portion. The Match was concluded without any great Difficulty, by the Earl of Peterborough, and afterwards conſummated by the ſame Perſon, according to the Form us'd among Princes. This Marriage was contrary to the Bent of the Engliſh Nation, who began to have many Jealouſies about it; and it was ſoon known that the approaching Parliament wou'd complain of it; eſpecially ſince it was now unqueſtionable that his Royal Highneſs was a profeſs'd Roman Catholick. His Friends therefore made what Proviſions they cou'd againſt the meeting of the Parliament, which being only by Adjournment, they found ſeveral things ready to be finiſh'd, which were contrary to their Advantage; particularly the Bill for Eaſe of Proteſtant Diſſen-

Diſſenters, which wanted very little of paſſing the Houſe of Lords, and if compleated, might have prov'd a new Bulwark againſt Popery. Therefore to prevent this, and ſome other Matters, a Prorogation was thought convenient and neceſſary in this Juncture of Affairs. 1673. Car. 25 Reſ. 14

TWELFTH SESSION of the Second Parliament.

2. On the 20th Day of October, the Parliament met according to their Adjournment, and ſo made a Continuation of the Eleventh Seſſion of this Long Parliament: But they had no ſooner met, but the Houſe of Commons ſhew'd their Diſguſt againſt ſeveral Proceedings of late, and preſently voted 'That an Addreſs be made to his Majeſty, to acquaint 'his Majeſty, that it is the humble Deſire of this Houſe, that the intend-'ed Marriage of his Royal Highneſs with the Dutcheſs of Modena, be 'not conſummated; and that he may not be marry'd to any Perſon but of 'the Proteſtant Religion. Upon which the King immediately prorogu'd the Parliament to the 27th of the ſame Month; ſo that on that Day began the twelfth Seſſion of the Second Parliament, which prov'd the ſhorteſt and the ſharpeſt of any that preceded it. His Majeſty, without ſhewing any particular Diſpleaſure, from the Throne made this following Speech: 'My Lords and Gentlemen, I thought this Day to The King's Speech to both Houſes.
'have welcomed you with an honourable Peace: My Preparations for 'the War, and Condeſcenſions at the Treaty, gave me great Reaſon to 'believe ſo; but the Dutch have diſappointed me in that Expectation, 'and have treated my Ambaſſadors at Coloign with the Contempt of 'Conquerors, and not as might be expected from Men in their Conditi-'on. They have other Thoughts than Peace. This obligeth me to move 'you again for a Supply; the Safety and Honour of the Nation neceſſa-'rily requiring it. It muſt be one proportionable to the Occaſion; and 'I muſt tell you beſides, that if I have it not ſpeedily, the Miſchief will 'be irreparable in my Preparations for the next Spring. The great Ex-'perience I have had of you, Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons, will 'not ſuffer me to believe, that the Artifices of our Enemies can poſſi-'bly divert you from giving me this Supply, or that you can fail of ad-'juſting the Proportion of it. I hope I need not uſe many Words to 'perſwade you, that I am ſteady in maintaining all the Profeſſions and 'Promiſes I have made you concerning Religion and Property: And I 'ſhall be very ready to give you freſh Inſtances of my Zeal, for preſer-'ving the Eſtabliſh'd Religion and Laws, as often as any Occaſion ſhall 'require. In the laſt Place I am highly concern'd to commend to your 'Conſideration and Care the Debt I owe the Gold-Smiths, in which 'very many other of my good Subjects are involv'd: I heartily recom-'mend their Condition to you, and deſire your Aſſiſtance for their Re-'lief. There is more that I wou'd have you inform'd of, which I leave 'to the Chancellor.

Accordingly the Chancellor made the following Speech, which, upon the Account of the Speaker, the Earl of Shaftsbury, is here verbally inſerted: 'My Lords, and you the Knights, Citizens and Burgeſſes of the The Lord Chancellor Shaftsbury's Speech.
'Houſe of Commons, His Majeſty had Reaſon to expect that he ſhou'd 'have met you with the Olive Branch of Peace: His Naval Preparati-'ons, greater than in any former Years, together with his Land Forces 'he had ready for any Occaſion, gave him Aſſurance to obtain it be-'fore this Time: And the rather becauſe his Aims were not Conqueſt, 'unleſs by Obſtinacy inforc'd; but his Condeſcenſions at the Treaty have 'been ſo great, That the very Mediators have declared they were not 'reaſonably to be refus'd. He cou'd not be King of Great Britain with-'out Securing the Dominion and Property of his own Seas; the Firſt by 'an Article clear, and not eluſory of the FLAGG; the Other, by an Arti'cle that preſerv'd the Right of the Fiſhing, but gave the Dutch Permiſſion, 'as Tenants, under a ſmall Rent, to enjoy, and continue that Gainful 'Trade upon the Coaſts. The King was oblig'd, for the Security of a 'laſting Peace, as alſo by the Laws of Gratitude and Relation, to ſee the 'Houſe of Orange ſetled, and the LOVESTEIN, that CARTHA-'GINIAN PARTY, brought down. Neither in this did the King 'inſiſt beyond what was moderate, and agreeable to their Government, 'and what the Prince's Anceſtors enjoy'd amongſt them. Beſides theſe, 'they were neceſſary to the Trade of England, that there ſhou'd be a 'fair Adjuſtment of Commerce in the Eaſt-Indies; where the King's 'Demands were reaſonable, and according to the Law of Nations; 'and their Practice of late Years hath been Exorbitant and Oppreſſive, 'ſuitable only to their Power and Intereſt, and Deſtructive, if continu'd, 'to our Eaſt-India Company. Theſe were all, of any Moment, the 'King inſiſted on; as judging right, That that Peace that was Reaſona-'ble, Juſt and Fair to both Parties, wou'd be Sacred and Durable. And 'that by this Means, He ſhou'd depreſs the Intereſt and Reputation of 'that LOVESTEIN PARTY amongſt them, who ſuck'd in with 'their Milk an Inveterate Hatred to England, and tranſmit it to their 'Poſterity, as a Diſtinguiſhing Character wherein they place their Loy-'alty to their Country.

'In return to this candid, and fair Proceeding on the King's Part, his 'Majeſty aſſures you, he hath receiv'd nothing but the moſt ſcornful and 'contemptuous Treatment imaginable; Papers deliver'd in to the Me-'diators, own'd by them to be ſtuff'd with ſo unhandſom Language, that 'they were aſham'd, and refus'd to ſhew them; never agreeing to any 'Article about the Flagg, that was clear or plain; refuſing any Article of 'the Fiſhing, but ſuch a one, as might ſell them the Right of Inheritance, 'for an inconſiderable Sum of Mony, tho' it be a Royalty ſo Inherent to 'the Crown of England, that I may ſay (with his Majeſty's Pardon for 'the Expreſſion) He cannot ſell it. The Article of the Prince of Orange, 'and the Adjuſtment of the Eaſt-India Trade, had neither of them any 'better Succeſs: And to make all of a Piece, they have this laſt Week 'ſent a Trumpeter with an Addreſs to his Majeſty, being a Deduction of 'their ſeveral Offers of Peace, as they call them, and their Deſires for 'it now; but it is both in the Penning and the Timeing of it, plainly an 'Appeal to his Majeſty's People againſt Himſelf: And the King hath com-'manded me to tell you, He is reſolved to joyn Iſſue with them, and 'print both their Addreſs, and his Anſwer, that his People and the 'World may ſee how notorious Falſhoods and Slights they endeavour to 'put upon Him. In a Word, in England, and all other Places, and to 'all other Perſons in the World, they declare They offer all Things to ob-'tain a Peace from the King of England; but to Himſelf, his Miniſters, 'the Mediators, or his Plenipotentiaries, it may with Confidence and 'Truth be affirm'd, that to this Day, nay even in this laſt Addreſs, they 'have offer'd Nothing. They deſire the King's Subjects wou'd believe 'They beg for Peace, while their true Requeſt is, only to be permitted to 'be Maſters of the Seas; which they hope, if they can ſubſiſt at Land, 'Length of Time may give them; and if once got, is never to be loſt; 'nor can it be bought by any State or Empire at too great a Rate. And 'what Security their Agreement with us in Religion will afford, when 'they ſhall have the Power, former Inſtances may give Demonſtration of. 'Joint Intereſts have often ſecured the Peace of differing Religions, but 'agreeing Profeſſions have hardly an Example of preſerving the Peace of 'different Intereſts.

'This

'This being the true and natural State of Things, his Majeſty doth with 'great Aſſurance throw himſelf into the Arms of you his Parliament, for 'a Supply ſuitable to this great Affair he is engag'd in. When you con- 'ſider we are an Iſland, 'tis not Riches nor Greatneſs we contend for; 'yet thoſe muſt attend the Succeſs; but it is our very Beings are in Queſti- 'on: We fight pro Aris & Focis in this War. We are no longer Free- 'Men, being Iſlanders, and Neighbours, if they Maſter us at Sea. There 'is not ſo lawful or commendable Jealouſy in the World, as an Engliſh 'Man's, of the growing Greatneſs of any Prince or State at Sea. If 'you permit the Sea, our Britiſh Wife, to be raviſh'd, an eternal Mark 'of Infamy will ſtick upon us: Therefore I am commanded earneſtly to 'recommend to you, not only the Proportion, but the Time of the Sup- 'ply. For unleſs you think of it early, it will not be ſerviceable to the 'chief End of ſetting out a Fleet betimes the next Spring. As for the 'next Part of the King's Speech, I can add nothing to what his Majeſty 'hath ſaid. For as to Religion and Property, his Heart is with your 'Heart, perfectly with your Heart. He hath not yet learned to deny 'you any Thing; and he believes your Wiſdom and Moderation is ſuch, 'he never ſhall. He asks of you to be at Peace in Him, as he is in 'You, and he ſhall never deceive you.

'There is one Word more, I am commanded to ſay concerning the 'Debt owing to the Gold-Smiths: The King holds himſelf in Honour 'and Conſcience oblig'd to ſee them ſatisfy'd. Beſides, you all know 'how many Widows, Orphans and particular Perſons, this Publick Ca- 'lamity hath overtaken; and how hard it is, That ſo diſproportionable 'a Burthen ſhou'd fall upon them, even to their utter Ruin. The whole 'Caſe is ſo well and generally known, that I need ſay no more. Your 'Great Wiſdom hath not done it at the firſt, peradventure that the 'Trade of the Bankers might be ſuppreſſed; which End is now attain'd: 'So that now your Great Goodneſs may reſtore to thoſe poor People, 'and the many innocent Ones that are concern'd with them, ſome Life 'and Aſſurance of Payment in a competent Time. My Lords and Gen- 'tlemen, I have no more in Command, and therefore I ſhall conclude 'with my own hearty Prayers, That this Seſſion may equal, nay exceed 'the Honour of the laſt; That it may perfect what the laſt begun for 'the Safety of this King and Kingdom; That it may be for ever famous 'for having Eſtabliſh'd, upon a durable Foundation, our Religion, Laws 'and Properties; That we may not be toſs'd with boiſterous Winds, 'nor overtaken by a ſudden dead Calm: But that a gentle fair Gale may 'carry you in a ſteady, even, and reſolv'd Way into the Ports of Wiſ- 'dom and Security.

The Speech ended, and the Commons return'd to their Houſe, they were ſo affected with the Thoughts of Popery, that the firſt Thing they reſolv'd was a more than ordinary Solemnization of the Fifth of Novem- ber, and that Dr. Stilling fleet be the Preacher. Then appointing a Grand Committee for Religion, Grievances, Trade and Courts of Juſtice, they adjourn'd themſelves till the 30th Inſtant. On which Day Mr. Secretary Coventry brought from his Majeſty the following Anſwer to their Addreſs concerning the Duke of York, and his intended Marriage: 'C. R. His 'Majeſty having receiv'd an Addreſs from the Houſe of Commons, pre- 'ſenting their humble Deſire That the intended Marriage betwixt his 'Royal Highneſs and the Princeſs of Modena may not be conſummated, 'commanded this Anſwer to be return'd, That he perceiv'd the Houſe of 'Commons have wanted a full Information of this Matter, the Marriage 'not being barely Intended, but Compleated according to the Forms us'd 'amongſt Princes, and by his Royal Conſent and Authority: Nor cou'd he

'in the leaſt ſuppoſe it diſagreeable to his Houſe of Commons, his Royal 'Highneſs having been in the View of the World for ſeveral Months 'engag'd in a Treaty of Marriage with another Catholick Princeſs, and 'yet a Parliament held during the Time, and not the leaſt Exception taken 'at it.' They were no way ſatisfy'd with this Anſwer, but look'd upon this French Match in effect of far greater Danger, than the propos'd Marriage with the Arch-Dutcheſs of Inſpruck, hinted in the Anſwer, was at the Time of the Treaty thereof; for then the Duke's Religion was not certainly known to the Nation; and beſides, the Family of the Arch-Dutcheſs, the Houſe of Auſtria, did not appear to be in an equal Capacity to aſſiſt in the Propagation of that Religion, as the French at this Time did. And therefore the Houſe immediately Voted to draw up another Addreſs, with particular Reaſons againſt the Marriage; and the ſame Day voted, 'That a Bill ſhou'd be prepared for a General Teſt betwixt 'Proteſtants and Papiſts, and thoſe that refus'd to take it, ſhou'd be in-'capable of bearing any Office Military or Civil, or to ſit in Parliament, 'or to come within five Miles of the Court.' They likewiſe went on with a Bill for Repair of Churches, and for the better Recovery of ſmall Tythes.

Their grand Reſolve.

3. It was upon Friday the 31ſt of October that the Houſe of Commons firſt took into their Conſideration his Majeſty's Speech, and after a long and ſerious Debate in a grand Committee, they finally Reſolv'd, 'That the Houſe, conſidering the preſent Condition of the Nation, will 'not take into any further Debate the Conſideration of any Aid or Sup-'ply, or Charge upon the Subject, before the Time of Payment of the 'Eighteen Months Aſſeſsment, granted by a late Act of Parliament, In-'tituled, An Act for Raiſing the Sum of Twelve Hundred thirty eight 'Thouſand ſeven Hundred and fifty Pounds, be expired; Except it ſhall 'appear that the Obſtinacy of the Dutch ſhall render it Neceſſary; Nor 'before this Kingdom be effectually ſecured from Popery and Popiſh Coun-'ſellors, and the other preſent Grievances be redreſs'd.' At the ſame Time they order'd an Addreſs to be preſented to his Majeſty for a general Faſt to be obſerved throughout the Nation. Which Proceedings prov'd very uneaſy and ſhocking to the King and the Court, who therefore reſolv'd to give them one Remove more: But that it might not ſeem altogether upon the Account of denying Mony, they allow'd the Parliament to proceed; who on the Monday following attended his Majeſty with their ſecond Addreſs, with Reaſons againſt the Marriage; being then aſſured that it was not ſo far concluded, but that for Reaſon of State it might have been rejected, as it has been practis'd in ſeveral Nations, and even by the French themſelves in ſeveral Examples.

Their particular Addreſs againſt the Duke's Marriage.

The Addreſs is too remarkable to be omitted, and is inſerted as follows: 'We your Majeſty's moſt humble and loyal Subjects, the Commons in 'this preſent Parliament aſſembled, being full of Aſſurance of your Ma-'jeſty's gracious Intentions to provide for the Eſtabliſhment of Religion, 'and the Preſervation of your People in Peace and Security; and fore-'ſeeing the dangerous Conſequences which may follow the Marriage of 'his Royal Highneſs the Duke of York with the Princeſs of Modena, or 'any other of the Popiſh Religion; do hold our ſelves bound in Conſci-'ence and Duty to repreſent the ſame to your Sacred Majeſty, not doubt-'ing but thoſe conſtant Teſtimonies which we have given your Majeſty 'of our True and Loyal Affections to your ſacred Perſon, will eaſily 'gain a Belief that theſe our humble Deſires proceed from Hearts ſtill 'full of the ſame Affections towards your Sacred Majeſty, and with In-'tentions to eſtabliſh your Royal Government upon thoſe true Supports

'of

'of the Proteſtant Religion, and the Hearts of your People, with all 1673.
'Humility deſiring your Majeſty to take the ſame into your Princely
'Conſideration, and to relieve your Subjects from thoſe Fears and Ap- Cat. 25
'prehenſions which at preſent they lye under, from the Progreſs that Ref. 14
'hath been made in that Treaty. We do therefore humbly beſeech your 'Majeſty to conſider, 1. That if this Match do proceed, it will be a 'Means to diſquiet the Minds of your Proteſtant Subjects at home, and
'to fill them with endleſs Jealouſies and Diſcontents; and will bring your
'Majeſty into ſuch Alliances abroad, as will prove highly prejudicial, if not 'deſtructive, to the Intereſt of the very Proteſtant Religion it ſelf. 2. We 'find by ſad Experience, that ſuch Marriages have increas'd and encou-
'rag'd Popery in this Kingdom, and given Opportunity to Prieſts and
'Jeſuits to propagate their Opinions, and ſeduce great Numbers of your
'Majeſty's Subjects. 3. We do already obſerve how much the Party is
'animated with the Hopes of this Match, which were lately diſcourag'd
'by your Gracious Conceſſions in the laſt Meeting of this Parliament.
'4. We greatly fear this may be an Occaſion to leſſen the Affections of 'the People to his Royal Highneſs, who is ſo nearly related to the Crown,
'and whoſe Honour and Eſteem we deſire may always be entirely pre-
'ſerv'd. 5. That for another Age more at leaſt, this Kingdom will be 'under the continual Apprehenſions of the Growth of Popery, and the 'Danger of the Proteſtant Religion. Laſtly, We conſider that this Prin-
'ceſs having ſo near a Relation and Kindred to many eminent Per-
'ſons of the Court of Rome, may give them great Opportunities to pro'mote their Deſigns, and carry on their Practices amongſt us, and by 'the ſame Means penetrate into your Majeſty's moſt ſecret Counſels, and 'more eaſily diſcover the State of the whole Kingdom. And finding by
'the Opinions of very Learned Men, it is generally admitted, That ſuch
'Treaties and Contracts by Proxy are Diſſolvable, of which there are
'ſeveral Inſtances to be produc'd; We do in all Humility beſeech your
'Majeſty to put a ſtop to the Conſummation of this intended Marriage.
'And this we do the more importunately deſire, becauſe we have not 'as yet the Happineſs to ſee any Iſſue of your Majeſty that may ſucceed
'in the Government of theſe Kingdoms; which Bleſſing we moſt hearti-
'ly pray Almighty God in his due Time to beſtow upon your Majeſty
'and theſe Kingdoms, to the unſpeakable Joy and Comfort of all your
'Majeſty's Loyal Subjects, who deſire nothing more than to continue
'under the Reigns of your Majeſty, and your Royal Poſterity for 'ever.

To which Addreſs his Majeſty return'd this Anſwer, That it was a Matter he wou'd take into his preſent Conſideration, and wou'd ſpeedily return an Anſwer. After which the Commons proceeded further, and Voted the ſtanding Army a Grievance; and accordingly they prepar'd an Addreſs to be made to his Majeſty, ſhewing That the Standing Army was a Grievance, and a Burthen to the Nation. Having prepared this on the 4th of November, and deſigning that Day to wait upon his Majeſty with it, the King unexpectedly, and of a ſudden appear'd at the Houſe of Peers with his Robes and Crown. The Lords made all haſte to attend him, while the Uſher of the Black-Rod was ſent to the Commons, to command the Speaker and that Houſe immediately to come up to his Majeſty. But it happen'd that the Speaker and the Uſher met both at the Door of the Houſe of Commons; but the Speaker being within the Houſe, ſome of the Members ſuddenly ſhut the Door, and cry'd out To the Chair, to the Chair! while others cry'd The Black-Rod is at the Door! The Speaker was immediately hurry'd to the Chair, and then it was mov'd, 1. That our Alliance with France was a Grievance. 2. That the Evil Counſellors about the King were a Grievance; and, 3. That the Duke of Lauderdale was a Grievance, and not fit to be truſted or employ'd in any Office or Place of Truſt. Upon which there was a general Cry, To the Queſtion, to the Queſtion! but the Black-Rod knocking earneſtly at the Door, the Speaker leapt out of the Chair, and the Houſe roſe in a great Confuſion.

The King Prorogues the Parliament with a Speech.

Being come into the Houſe of Peers, the King from the Throne made this following Speech to both Houſes: 'My Lords and Gentlemen, I need 'not tell you how unwillingly I call you hither at this Time, being enough 'ſenſible what Advantages my Enemies both abroad and at home will reap 'by the leaſt Appearance of a Difference betwixt Me and my Parliament; 'nay, being aſſured they expect more Succeſs from ſuch a Breach (cou'd 'they procure it) than from their Arms. This, I ſay, ſhall, while I live, be 'my chief Endeavour to prevent; and for that Reaſon I think it neceſ-'ſary to make a ſhort Receſs, that all good Men may recollect themſelves 'againſt the next Meeting, and conſider, Whether the preſent Poſture of 'Affairs will not rather require their Applications to Matters of Reli-'gion, and Support againſt our only Competitors at Sea, than to Things of 'leſs Importance: And in the mean Time, I will not be wanting to let 'all my Subjects ſee, That no Care can be greater than my own, in the 'effectual Suppreſſing of Popery: And it ſhall be your Faults, if in your 'ſeveral Countries the Laws be not effectually executed againſt the Growth 'of it. I will not be idle neither in ſome Things which may add to your 'Satisfaction; and then I ſhall expect a ſuitable Return from you.' Having ſpoke thus, he Prorogu'd the Parliament to the 7th Day of January following. And thus ended the Twelfth Seſſion of the Second and Long Parliament, after it had continu'd no longer than nine Days; in which Time we do not find that the Lords tranſacted any Thing very Material, but ſeem'd rather to attend the Motions of the Houſe of Commons.

The End of the Twelfth Seſſion of the Second Parliament.

4. Now it was, that the King began more ſenſibly to find the Loſs of his old Counſellor, the Earl of Clarendon, and to feel the Difficulties brought upon him by his Favourites of the Cabal. He was now labouring and toiling, as it befell him in the greateſt Part of his Reign, to get a little Eaſe and Relief from Buſineſs, which probably he might have attain'd with no great Trouble, had he been leſs given to try Experiments. However, he reſolv'd to get free from the Perſon who had ſo great a Share in involving him of late, the Lord Chancellor Shaftsbury, whoſe Actions had render'd him very obnoxious to the Court Party, eſpecially the Duke of York. Accordingly, ſoon after the Breaking up of the Parliament, the Earl was ſent for on a Sunday Morning to Court, as was alſo Sir Heneage Finch, Attorney-General, to whom the Seals were promis'd. As ſoon as the Earl came, he retired with the King into the Cloſet, while the prevailing Party waited in Triumph to ſee him return without the Purſe. His Lordſhip being alone with the King, ſaid, Sir, I know you intend to give the Seals to the Attorney-General; but I am ſure your Majeſty never deſign'd to diſmiſs me with Contempt. The King, who cou'd not do an ill-natur'd Thing, reply'd, Godsfiſh, my Lord, I will not do it with any Circumſtance as may look like an Affront. Then, Sir, ſaid the Earl, I deſire your Majeſty will permit me to carry the Seals before you to Chappel, and ſend for them afterwards from my own Houſe; to which his Majeſty readily comply'd; and the Earl entertain'd the King with News, and other diverting Stories, till the very Minute he was to go to Chappel, purpoſely to amuſe the Courtiers and his Succeſſor, who he believ'd was upon the Rack for fear he ſhou'd prevail upon the King to to change his Mind. The King and the ſtill Chancellor came out of the Cloſet talking together and ſmiling, and went together to Chappel, which extreamly ſurpriz'd them all, who cou'd have no Opportunity to inform themſelves what was to be expected; and ſome ran immediately to tell the Duke of York all their Meaſures were broken, and the Attorney-General was ſaid to be inconſoleable. After Sermon the Earl went home with the Seals, and that Evening the King gave them to the Attorney-General, a Man of great Parts and Abilities, with the Title of Lord-Keeper. And thus ended the Reign of the great Earl of Shaftsbury, the Prevalency of which had continu'd above three Years, but the Grandeur of it, in which he had no Equal, laſted a few Days leſs than one Year. 1673. Car. 25 Ref. 14

And the Seals given to Sir Heneage Finch.

Immediately after, to oblige the Parliament and Nation as much as poſſible, on the 14th of November, his Majeſty was pleas'd to ſummon in Council the two Lords Chief-Juſtices, and the Lord Chief-Baron, and to command them to conſider of the moſt effectual Means of putting the Laws in Execution for preventing the Growth of Popery, and ſpeedily to report the ſame to his Majeſty: And at the ſame Time he was particularly pleas'd to order, 'That no Perſon who is a Roman Catholick, or 'is reputed to be of the Roman Catholick Religion, do preſume after the '18th of this Inſtant November, to come into his Majeſty's Royal Pre'ſence, or to his Palace, or to the Place where his Court ſhall be: And 'accordingly the Lord Steward, and Lord Chamberlain of his Majeſty's 'Houſhold, were order'd to cauſe his Majeſty's Pleaſure to be effectually 'put in Execution.' In purſuance of which, the King iſſu'd out a new Proclamation againſt the Papiſts, which was the Eighth of that Kind, and began with the uſual Intimation, that it was according to the Deſire of his two Houſes of Parliament. And not long after, on the 10th of December, his Majeſty was pleas'd farther to declare in Council, 'That no Popiſh Re'cuſant, or reputed to be ſo, ſhou'd preſume to come into St. James's 'Houſe, or into the Park adjoyning. So that he ſeem'd to have taken all reaſonable Care to put an End to the Fears and Apprehenſions of the Growth of Popery. And to ſatisfie his People with relation to the preſent Dutch War, he publiſh'd the Letter mention'd in the Chancellor's laſt Speech to him from the States-General of the United Provinces, who began to aſſume a higher Stile upon their late Succeſſes, and their new Alliances with the Emperor and the King of Spain. With which he publiſh'd his own Anſwer, which concluded in theſe Words, 'If you have a 'Deſire to promote the Peace in good Earneſt, ſend Powers without 'further Delay to your Deputies at Cologn, to draw up juſt and equal 'Articles with Ours; and the World ſhall ſee how ready We ſhall be to 'comply with them, and to reſume thoſe Sentiments of Friendſhip 'and Eſteem which the Kings our Predeceſſors have always had for 'your State; and to manifeſt to you That We are truly Your good 'Friend, C. R.

The King's Care to hinder Popery, &c.

But whatever was done to ſuppreſs the Fears of Popery, the formidable Contract of Marriage between the Royal Brother the Duke, and the Princeſs of Modena, took Place. And that Lady, having reſided a while at the Court of France, arriv'd at Dover on the 21ſt of November, accompany'd with her Mother the Dutcheſs of Modena, and ſeveral other Perſons of Quality, who were nobly receiv'd by his Royal Highneſs, who on the ſame Day was by the Biſhop of Oxford marry'd to the ſaid Princeſs Mary D'Eſte, then in the Bloom of her Beauty, and very little above fifteen Years of Age. A few Days after, his Majeſty himſelf, attended by the principal of the Nobility, and other Perſons of Quality, went in his Barges down the River, to meet both their Royal Highneſſes, who

The Duke of York's Marriage Conſummated.

1673. on the 26th of November arriv'd at Whitehall, where they were honourably receiv'd, and gloriously entertain'd by the King and Court.

Car. 25 Ref. 14 For a Concluſion of this Year, as in others, we ſhall take notice of the Deaths of ſeveral Perſons of Note and Eminency, and firſt of two Reverend Divines, but of different Parties and Perſuaſions, Dr. Thomas Browne, and Dr. Thomas Horton. The Former, Dr. Browne, was educated in Chriſt-Church in Oxford, became Domeſtick Chaplain to Archbiſhop Laud, and ſo Rector of Aldermary in London, and Canon of Windſor. But loſing all for his Loyalty in the troubleſome Times, he travelled, and for a while was made Chaplain to the famous Princeſs of Orange, and got a particular Acquaintance of the moſt learned Men in Holland. At the King's Return he was reſtored to what he loſt, without any further Preferment in the Church, and dy'd with the Reputation of an acute Critick, an eloquent Orator, a nice Caſuiſt, and a learned Divine. The Other, Dr. Horton, was an eminent Man of the Presbyterian Stamp, who had his Education in the Univerſity of Cambridge, where he was ſometime Maſter of Queen's College, and a celebrated Preacher. Removing to London, he became Preacher to the Society of Grey's-Inn, Reader of Divinity in Greſham College, and Miniſter of great St. Helens in the City. He was a noted Man in the Time of the late Troubles, and was eſteem'd a ſound and ſolid Divine, a good Textuary, and well skill'd in Original Languages. The next Perſon to be mention'd is Sir Robert Murrey, a Gentleman born and educated in Scotland, and afterwards in Foreign Countries, who became one of the firſt Contrivers and Inſtituters of the famous Royal Society, of which he was made the firſt Preſident. This Perſon, tho' Presbyterianly educated and affected, had the particular Favour of the King's Ear, and was indefatigable in his Undertakings, a moſt renowned Chymiſt, a great Patron of the Roſie-Crucians, and an excellent Mathematician, and no leſs vers'd in Experimental Philoſophy. He dy'd ſuddenly in his Pavilion in the Garden at White-Hall, and was, at the King's own Charge, bury'd in Weſtminſter-Abbey. And becauſe the Memory of Men excelling in any Profeſſion ought to be preſerv'd, we ſhall particularly mention Dr. John Wilſon, the moſt noted Muſician in England, Muſick Profeſſor in the Univerſity of Oxford, and Servant in Ordinary, and Favourite to both the late and preſent King, who were often charm'd with his Compoſitions, and his practical Performances, eſpecially upon the Lute, of which he was the moſt famous Maſter of the Age.

The Deaths of Dr. Browne,

Dr. Horton,

Sir Robert Murrey,

Dr. Wilſon,

After all theſe, we ſhall mention two remarkable Men, of different Principles and Practices, Oliver St. John Eſquire, and the Lord Clifford. The Former, whoſe Character has been given in the other Volume, had one of the deepeſt and moſt dreadful Hands in the late Miſeries in the Kingdom, and obtain'd the Name of Oliver Cromwell's Dark Lanthorn, for which he was excluded the Benefit of the Act of Indemnity, if he ever offer'd to accept or execute any Office, Eccleſiaſtical, Civil or Military; and conſidering the infernal and implacable Spirit with which he had acted ſo many Years, it was admired that he eſcap'd with Life. After this he liv'd retiredly, and dy'd obſcurely at his own Eſtate at Long-Thorp in Northamptonſhire, in the 75th Year of his Age; and what the laſt and dying Sentiments were of ſo great a Man, and ſo vaſt an Inſtrument, wou'd be well worth the Knowledge of the World. Sufficient has been ſaid as to the warm Character, and violent Temper of the laſt Perſon to be mention'd, the Lord Clifford, who went off the Stage in Diſcontent. We ſhall therefore only add a ſhort Story of him out of a Manuſcript formerly mention'd, which may not be improper to the preſent Year: While he had the Staff, it happen'd that the King, the Duke of York, and Himſelf,

OliverSt.John,

And the Lord Clifford.

Himſelf, were ſhut up in a Room in Conſultation, when Sir William Bucknal, a Commiſſioner of the Exciſe, came to ſpeak with the King, to whom he had free Acceſs, as frequently accommodating his Majeſty with Money. In Preſumption of his uſual Liberty, he went directly to the Room where he underſtood the King was, and hearing Diſcourſe, had the Curioſity to liſten cloſe at the Door, to which he was excited by the King's ſpeaking with ſome Earneſtneſs; but he cou'd only hear broken and imperfect Expreſſions. The Duke ſpoke ſo low he cou'd not underſtand what he ſaid, but Clifford ſpoke loud, as in Publick, and very audibly anſwer'd the King in theſe Words, Sir, if you are driven off upon Fears, you will never be ſafe; the Work will do, if you declare your ſelf with Reſolution; there are enough to ſtand by you. The King reply'd, This Name of Popery will never be ſwallow'd by the People; and upon ſaying this, he ſtarted from his Seat, crying, Some Body is at the Door! Upon which Clifford ran haſtily to it, and without ſpeaking a Word, fell furiouſly upon Sir William Bucknal, dragging him to a Pair of Stairs, from whence he kick'd him down; and ſoon after Sir William met with his Death, which was not improbably thought to have proceeded from that Misfortune. 1673. V. 1. The King having ſmooth'd the Way by ſeveral popular Acts, on the 7th Day of January both Houſes of Parliament met at Weſtminſter, according to the Prorogation, after a Receſs of two Months and three Days; and this made the Thirteenth Seſſion of the Second and Long Parliament. The Actions of the laſt Seſſion very much rais'd the Expectations of the People as to the Meeting of This; and the more becauſe, during the Interval, the States-General had made new Overtures of Peace, which was a Thing very deſirable to all the Nation. Therefore all Perſons were eager to know what the King wou'd now ſay to his Parliament, which was as followeth. The THIRTEENTH SESSION of the Second Parliament.

The King's Speech to both Houſes.

'My Lords and Gentlemen, When I parted with 'you laſt, it was but for a little Time, and with a Reſolution of Meeting 'ſuddenly again. That alone was enough to ſatisfy my Friends that they 'need not fear, and my Enemies that they cou'd not hope for a Breach 'between us. I then told you, That the Time of this ſhort Receſs ſhou'd 'be employ'd in doing ſuch Things as might add to your Satisfaction: I 'hope I have done my Part towards it; and if there be any Thing elſe 'you think wanting to ſecure Religion or Property, there is nothing 'which you ſhall reaſonably propoſe, but I ſhall be ready to receive it. 'I do now expect you ſhou'd do your Parts too, for our Enemies make 'vigorous Preparations for War, and yet their chief Hopes are to diſu-'nite us at home; 'tis their common Diſcourſe, and they reckon upon it 'as their beſt Relief.

'My Lords and Gentlemen, It is not poſſible for me to doubt your 'Affections at any Time, much leſs at ſuch a Time as this, when the 'Evidences of your Affections are become ſo neceſſary to us all. I de-'ſire you to conſider, that as the War cannot be made without a Supply, 'ſo neither can a good Peace be had without being in a Poſture of War. 'I am very far from being in love with War, for War's ſake; but if I 'ſaw any likelyhood of Peace without Diſhonour to my Self, and Da-'mage to You, I wou'd ſoon embrace it. But no Propoſals of Peace 'have yet been offer'd with Intent to Conclude, but only to Amuſe. 'Therefore the Way to a good Peace is to ſet out a good Fleet, which 'we have Time enough to do very effectually, if the Supply be not de-'lay'd. If after this a Peace ſhou'd follow, yet the Supply wou'd be ve-'ry well given; for whatever remains of it, I am willing ſhou'd be ap-'propriated for Building more Ships. To conclude, a ſpeedy, a pro-

'portionable,

1673. Car. 26 Ref. 14

'portionable, and above all a chearful Aid, is now more neceſſary than 'ever, and I rely upon you for it. I lately put you in mind of my Debt 'to the Goldſmiths, I hope a fit Time will come to take that into Con- 'ſideration. I cannot conclude without ſhewing the entire Confidence 'I have in you. I know you have heard much of my Alliance with 'France, and I believe it hath been very ſtrangely miſrepreſented to you, 'as if there were certain ſecret Articles of dangerous Conſequence; but 'I make no Difficulty of letting the Treaties, and all the Articles of them, 'without any the leaſt Reſerve, be ſeen by a ſmall Committee of both 'Houſes, who may report to You the true Scope of them: And I aſſure 'you there is no other Treaty with France, either before or ſince, not 'already printed, which ſhall not be made known. And having thus free- 'ly truſted you, I do not doubt but you will have a Care of my Ho- 'nour, and the Good of the Kingdom. The reſt I refer to my Lord 'Keeper.

Accordingly the new Lord Keeper Finch made a long and eloquent Speech, of which a great Part ought not to be omitted, beginning Thus:

The Lord Keeper Finche's Speech.

'My Lords, and you the Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes of the Houſe 'of Commons, The King hath already in part, told you, What he hath 'done for you ſince the laſt Receſs, What he is ſtill ready to do, and 'What it is he doth now expect from you: And this in Terms ſo full 'and obliging, ſo generous and ſo ſatisfactory, That He whoſe Affecti- 'ons are not rais'd by that Diſcourſe, He who cannot acquieſce in the 'Fulneſs of this Aſſurance, He whoſe Heart is not eſtabliſh'd by it in 'ſuch a Belief as may entirely diſpoſe him to the Service of the Crown, 'will hardly be recover'd to a better Diſpoſition by any other Expedi- 'ent. For indeed what better Way can be found to undeceive thoſe 'who have been abus'd? The King refers you to the Time paſt, not to 'his Promiſes, but to his Performances; gives Men leave to judge by 'what they See, of what they Hear; by what hath been done ſince the 'Laſt Seſſion, of what is offer'd you Now, and what is likely to be done 'for the Time to come. And doth not every Man ſee that the King 'hath given new Life and Motion to ſuch Laws as were long dead, or 'faſt aſleep? That he hath once more repaired the Hedge about our 'Vine-yard, and made it a Fence againſt all thoſe who are Enemies to 'the Planting it, who wou'd be glad to ſee it trodden down, or rooted 'up, and ſtudy how to ſap and undermine our very Foundations? Do 'we not ſee that the King hath made it his Care and Buſineſs to do all 'that is poſſible to preſerve our Civil Rights too, That he makes the 'Laws of his Kingdom the Meaſures not only of his Power but his Pru- 'dence, That he ſuffers no Man to be wiſer than the Laws, That he 'thinks he cannot judge of the Health or Sickneſs of his State by any 'better Indication than the Current of his Laws, and ſuffers nothing to 'remain that may in the leaſt hinder Juſtice from flowing in its due and 'proper Channel? To name a few Inſtances: If the Conviction of all 'Recuſants, and bringing them under the Penal Laws, can ſuppreſs Po- 'pery; If without ſtaying for Forms of Law in Points of Conviction, the 'preſent forbidding of Papiſts, or reputed Papiſts to come to Court, 'and the Extending this Prohibition to his Royal Palace at St. James's, 'be enough to diſcountenance them; If the not extending his Preroga- 'tive beyond its due Limits, can ſecure your Liberties; If his leſſening 'and reducing all his Land Forces, and maintaining ſo few Extraordina- 'ry, as will ſcarce be enough to mann his Fleet this Summer, can extin- 'guiſh the Fears of a Standing Army; If a rigorous and ſevere Proſecu- 'tion of all the Officers and Soldiers in his Majeſty's Guards, when they 'misbehave themſelves towards the meaneſt Subject, can ſecure your 'Proporties;

'Properties; If the Abrogation of all the Privileges from Arreſts, claim'd by his Majeſty's Servants Extraordinary, who are very numerous, can prevent the Delays and Obſtructions of Juſtice: Then ſurely his Majeſty hath Reaſon to believe, that nothing is wanting which can lawfully be Done, or modeſtly be Wiſh'd, either for your Satisfaction, or your Security. Theſe are not ſingle and tranſient Acts, but ſuch as flow from Habits; Theſe are not Leaves and Bloſſoms, but true, ſolid and laſting Fruits: Long, long! may that Royal Tree live and flouriſh, upon which theſe Fruits do grow. And yet his Majeſty's Indulgence to you reſts not here; He gives you leave to ſtudy and contrive your own Aſſurance; and if you think you want any further Security, if any Thing have eſcap'd his Majeſty's Care, who meditates nothing more than your Preſervation, you ſee you have free leave to make any Reaſonable Propoſition, and his gracious Promiſe that he will receive it. This is a Satisfaction equal to all your Wiſhes. Now if ever your Joys are full, there wants no more to the Improvement of this Happineſs, but the Wiſdom of the Parliament to uſe theſe Advantages with due Moderation. If therefore upon Enquiry you ſhall think it needful to apply any other Remedies, it is extremely to be wiſh'd that thoſe Remedies may be few, and withal, that they be gentle and eaſy too. For the Sick periſh as often by too many Remedies, as by none at all; but none fall ſo fatally and ſo finally as they who, being enter'd into ſome Degrees of Convaleſcence, reſolve to recover it in an Inſtant, and had rather make ſome great Effort, or try ſome Bold Experiment upon themſelves, than obſerve the Methods, or attend thoſe Gradual Progreſſions which are neceſſary to perfect that Health, and compleat that Recovery. 1673. Car. 26 Reſ. 14

'I muſt not omit one Inſtance more of his Majeſty's Care for you, and that is the great Induſtry and Application of Mind which his Majeſty hath us'd all along, in hopes to have obtain'd by this Time, if it had been poſſible, an honourable and juſt Peace.' Then he made a large Deduction of the Dutch Averſeneſs to Peace, their uncivil Demeanour to the King's Plenipotentiaries at Cologn, and how indirectly they dealt with his Majeſty in all the Overtures of Peace, by appealing to his own People, &c. After which he proceeded in theſe Words: 'I have done with theſe few Inſtances of his Majeſty's Care, thoſe of his Kindneſs are infinite; That which you heard this Morning is of a tranſcendent, and indeed a very ſurprizing Nature; 'Tis an Act of ſo entire a Confidence on his Majeſty's Part, that it can never be repaid by any other Tribute on your Part, but that of a true and humble Affiance in Him. I muſt now proceed to put you in mind, That there are ſome other Things which his Majeſty with great Juſtice, and great Aſſurance, doth expect from you again. The firſt is a ſpeedy and proportionable Supply; and this is of abſolute Neceſſity both for War and Peace. His Majeſty is well aſſured his Fleet is in ſuch a Forwardneſs, that if the Supply come in any reaſonable Time, you will find no Time hath been loſt in the Preparation; and it was no ſmall Matter to bring it to that paſs, that we may be as forward as our Enemies, if we pleaſe, or very near it. If the Supply be at all delay'd, it will have almoſt as ill Effect as if it were deny'd; for we may chance to be found like Archimedes, drawing Lines in the Duſt while the Enemy is entering into our Ports. And if the further Progreſs of this Fleet be ſtopp'd for want of your Concurrence, make account all Hopes of Peace are ſtopp'd too; for tho' the Fruit of War be Peace, yet it is ſuch a Fruit as we muſt not hope to gather without our Arms in our Hands. It is not the Way to have a brave Peace, to ſhew our Selves weary of the War: Who ever truſted in the Good Nature of their Enemies? It is a vigorous Aſſiſtance of the Crown that

'muſt

1673. Car. 2. Ref. 14

'must make not only our Arms conſiderable, but our Treaties too. On 'the other Side, if the putting of our ſelves into a good Poſture of War 'ſhou'd produce a Peace, as poſſibly it may do; yet you will have the 'beſt Account of your Supply your Hearts can wiſh, for his Majeſty is 'content it be appropriated to the Building of more Ships: Therefore 'if the Diſcourſe upon this Subject be a little more preſſing than ordi-'nary, you may be ſure the Occaſion is ſo too. There cannot be a high-'er Gratification of your Enemies, than to be backward in this Point; 'the very Opinion they have that you wou'd be ſo, hath already done us 'ſo much Harm, that perhaps it is one great Cauſe of the Continuance 'of the War. Had the Enemy deſpair'd of any Diviſion here, 'tis like-'ly his Proceedings had been more Sincere, and our Peace had not been 'ſo far off as now it ſeems to be. There is one Thing more the King 'hath mention'd to you, that is the Conſideration of the Gold-Smiths, 'which involves ſo many Perſons and Families, that the Concern is little 'leſs than National: It is an Affair the King lays very much to Heart, and 'hopes a Proper Time will come when a favourable Regard may be had 'to it.

'My Lords and Gentlemen, The King doth not only aſſure himſelf of 'your Affections at this Time, but from ſuch Affections ſo known and 'ſo try'd as yours, he doth yet Expect far greater Things than theſe. He 'doth Expect that you ſhou'd do your Endeavours to reſtore and improve 'the Mutual Confidence between him and his People, and that you ſhou'd 'do it in ſuch a Degree that it may recover its full Strength, and quite 'extinguiſh all their Fears and Jealouſies. For the King takes Notice, 'that the Malice of his Enemies hath been very active in ſowing ſo ma-'ny Tares, as are almoſt enough to ſpoil that Harveſt of Love and Duty 'which his Majeſty may juſtly expect to reap from the good Seed which 'he himſelf had ſown. Among the venemous Inſinuations which have 'been us'd, the Fears and Jealouſies of Religion and Liberty are of the 'worſt Sort, and the moſt dangerous Impreſſions. Certainly Malice was 'never more buſie than it hath been in theſe Reports, and it hath been 'aſſiſted by a great deal of Invention; but it is hop'd that no Man's Judg-'ment or Affections will be either miſ-led or diſturb'd by ſuch Reports. 'For Calumnies and Slanders of this Nature are like Meteors in the Air; 'they may ſeem perhaps, eſpecially to the Fearful, to be ill Prognoſticks, 'and the direct Fore-runners of Miſchief; but in themſelves they are 'vain Apparitions, and have no kind of Solidity, no Permanence or Du-'ration at all. For after a little while the Vapour ſpends it ſelf, and then 'the baſe Exhalation quickly falls back into that Earth from whence it 'came. Religion and Liberty ſtand ſecured by the moſt ſacred Ties 'that are; nay the King hath a greater Intereſt in the Preſervation of 'both, than you your ſelves: For as Religion, the Proteſtant Religion, 'commands your indiſpenſable Obedience, ſo it is a juſt and lawful Li-'berty which ſweetens that Command, and endears it to you. Let other 'Princes therefore glory in the moſt reſign'd Obedience of their Vaſſals, 'his Majeſty values himſelf upon the Hearts and Affections of his People, 'and thinks his Throne, when ſeated there, better eſtabliſh'd than the 'moſt exalted Sovereignty of thoſe who tread upon the Necks of them 'that riſe up againſt them. Since the World ſtood, never had any King 'ſo great a Cauſe to reſt upon this Security. They were your Hearts 'that mourn'd for the Abſence of the King: They were your Hearts 'and Affections which tyr'd out all the late Uſurpations, by your invin-'cible Patience and Fortitude: It was you that taught our Engliſh World 'to ſee and know, That no Government cou'd be ſettled here, but upon the

'the true Foundations of Honour and Allegiance. This, this alone made Way for all the happy Changes which have follow'd. And yet Poſterity will have cauſe to doubt, which was the greater Felicity of the two, That Providence which reſtored the Crown, or That which ſent us ſuch a Parliament to preſerve it when it was reſtored. What may not the King now hope from You? What may not you aſſure your ſelves from Him! Can any Thing be difficult to Hearts ſo united, to Intereſts ſo twiſted and interwoven together, as the King's and Yours are? Doubtleſs the King will ſurpaſs himſelf at this Time in endeavouring to procure the Good of the Kingdom; do but you excel your ſelves in the continual Evidences of your Affections, and then the Glory of Reviving this State will be entirely due to this Seſſion. Then they who wait for the Languiſhing and Declenſion of the preſent Government, will be amaz'd to ſee ſo happy a Criſis, ſo bleſt a Revolution: And Ages to come will find Cauſe to celebrate your Memories, as the trueſt Phyſicians, the wiſeſt Counſellors, the nobleſt Patriots, and the beſt Seſſion of the beſt Parliament that ever King or Kingdom met with.' 1673. Car. 26 Reſ. 14

Notwithſtanding theſe affecting Speeches, both Houſes ſoon manifeſted their Diſcontent at the Continuance of the War with Holland, at the exorbitant Power of France, and the Prevalence of Popiſh Counſels, beſides other inferior Matters. As to the Growth of Popery, the Houſe of Lords in this Seſſion led the Way, and preſented an Addreſs to his Majeſty, humbly beſeeching him, 'That he wou'd be graciouſly pleas'd to iſſue out his Royal Proclamation, requiring all Papiſts and reputed Papiſts, within five Miles of London, Weſtminſter, or Southwark, not being Houſholders, nor attending Peers of this Realm as menial Servants, to repair to their reſpective Dwellings, or to depart Ten Miles from the Cities and Borough aforeſaid, and not to return during this Seſſion of Parliament: And likewiſe that his Majeſty wou'd be pleas'd to give Order to the Quarter-Seſſions, that they give in a faithful Account of what Houſholders are within the Cities or Borough aforeſaid, and five Miles thereof, who are of that Profeſſion; and that the Quarter-Seſſions do adjourn themſelves from Time to Time for that Purpoſe.' According to which Addreſs, his Majeſty without Delay, iſſu'd out his Proclamation, dated January 14th, declaring, 'That he had ſeriouſly conſider'd the Addreſs of his moſt dutiful and loyal Subjects, the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in this preſent Parliament aſſembled, and did accept it with much Contentment and Satisfaction: And as he had always manifeſted his Zeal for the Preſervation of the true Religion eſtabliſh'd in this Kingdom, and to hinder the Growth and Increaſe of the Popiſh Religion; ſo he was now ready, upon this Occaſion, to prevent all Fears and Dangers that might ariſe by the Concourſe of Perſons of that Profeſſion, in or near his Cities of London, or Weſtminſter, &c.

The Lords Addreſs againſt Popery.

The King's Proclamation upon it.

In purſuance of the ſame End both Lords and Commons immediately after joyn'd in an Addreſs to his Majeſty for a General Faſt, uſing theſe very Words, 'We your Majeſty's moſt Loyal and Obedient Subjects, &c. being paſſionately ſenſible of the Calamitous Condition of this Kingdom, not only by reaſon of the War wherein it is at preſent involv'd, but many other inteſtine Differences and Diviſions amongſt Us, which are chiefly occaſion'd by the undermining Contrivances of Popiſh Recuſants, whoſe Numbers and Inſolencies are greatly of late increaſed, and whoſe reſtleſs Practices threaten a Subverſion both of Church and State; all which our Sins have juſtly deſerv'd, &c.' To which the King readily comply'd, and the 4th of February was appointed for the Day of Humiliation.

The Commons Proceedings againſt Popery,

2. The Houſe of Commons, in their Way, proceeded with great Warmth and Vigour; and firſt agreed 'That the humble and hearty 'Thanks of this Houſe be return'd to his Majeſty for thoſe Acts which 'he had done ſince the laſt Prorogation, towards the Suppreſſing and 'Diſcountenancing of Popery, and for his gracious Promiſes and Aſſur-'ances in his laſt Speech.' But when they proceeded to the Conſideration of the Speech it ſelf, which they did upon the ſame Day, they ſoon came to this grand Reſolve, 'That the Houſe will in the firſt Place pro-'ceed to have their Grievances Effectually redreſs'd, the Proteſtant Re-'ligion, their Liberties and Properties effectually ſecured, and to ſup-'preſs Popery, and remove all Perſons and Counſellors popiſhly affected, 'or otherways obnoxious, or dangerous to the Government.' Which being done, to ſhew their further Deteſtation of Popery, they immediately order'd an Addreſs to his Majeſty, 'That the Militia of the City of 'London, and County of Middleſex, may be in readineſs at an Hour's 'Warning, and the Militia of all other Counties of England, at a Day's 'Warning, for Suppreſſing of all tumultuous Inſurrections, which may 'be occaſion'd by Papiſts, or any other malecontented Perſons.' To which Addreſs his Majeſty made this gracious Anſwer, That he wou'd take a ſpecial Care, as well for the Preſervation of their Perſons, as of their Liberties and Properties.

And the late Cabal.

The Commons in the next Place reſolv'd to ſtrike at three Members of the famous Cabal, which were Buckingham, Arlington and Lauderdale: As to Shaftsbury, whoſe Contrivances had been deepeſt amongſt them, he, by his late Activity againſt Popery and former Counſels, had made his Peace with the Country Party, of whom he was making himſelf the Head. Buckingham was now beginning to tread the ſame Steps, but at preſent that was unknown to the Commons, who reſolved to attack him ſpeedily; but firſt they began with the Scotch Miniſter of State, and Reſolved, nemine contradicente, 'That an Addreſs be preſented to 'his Majeſty to remove the Duke of Lauderdale from all his Imploy-'ments, and from his Preſence and Counſels for ever, being a Perſon obnoxi-'ous and dangerous to the Government.' Soon after they debated upon ſome Heads of Accuſation againſt the Duke of Buckingham; and while the Debate continu'd, a Letter was ſent from the Duke to the Speaker, requeſting to be heard before that honourable Houſe, which was granted, and he was admitted with great Ceremony on the 13th Day of January. His Deſign was not only to acquit and ingratiate himſelf, but likewiſe to ſcreen the Reputation of the Earl of Shaftsbury, and throw what Odium he cou'd upon the Earl of Arlington. But his Diſcourſe, which conſiſted of a peculiar Sort of Wit and Eloquence, ſeem'd ſo looſe and uncertain, that they reſolv'd the next Day to tye him down to ſome certain Queries, drawn up in Writing, to which he was to give diſtinct Anſwers. Accordingly the next Day he appear'd in great Splendor, and with a particular Addreſs made this following Speech:

The Duke of Buckingham's Speech to them.

'Mr. Speaker, I give the Houſe my humble Thanks for the Honour 'you have twice done me, eſpecially Expreſſing my ſelf ſo ill Yeſterday. 'I hope you will conſider the Condition I am in, in danger of paſſing in 'the Cenſure of the World for a vicious Perſon, and a Betrayer of my 'Country; I have ever had the Misfortune to bear the blame of other 'Men's Faults. I know the revealing the King's Counſels, and corre-'ſponding with the King's Enemies, which are laid againſt me; but I 'hope for your Pardon if I ſpeak Truth for my Self. I told you Yeſter-

'day,

'day, if the Triple League had any Advantage in it (I ſpeak it without 1673.
'Vanity) I had as great a Hand in it as any Man. Then upon the In- Car. 26
'ſtance of the French Ambaſſador, I was ſent into France upon the ſad Reſ. 14
'Subject of Condoling the Death of Madam, where I urg'd for the Ser'vice of the King, that the French ought not to endeavour to make Them-
'ſelves Conſiderable at Sea, of whom we had Reaſon to be more jealous than
'of the Dutch, becauſe the French then wou'd have Power to conquer
'us. When I return'd, I found all Demonſtrations that the French had 'no ſuch Thoughts, but that the King of England ſhou'd be Maſter at 'Sea. I do not pretend to judge whether I or other Men were in the 'Right, I leave the Judgment of that to this honourable Houſe. At 'this Time my Lord Shaftsbury and my Self advis'd not to begin a War
'without the Advice of the Parliament, and the Affections of the Peo'ple; this was my Lord Shaftsbury's Opinion and Mine, but not my 'Lord Arlington's. My next Advice was not to make uſe of French
'Ships, half their Value in Mony wou'd have been more ſerviceable. I
'alledg'd they wou'd be of no Uſe to us, by reaſon of their Want of Ex-
'perience in our Seas, and there wou'd be great Danger in their learning
'the Uſe of them; which Advice my Lord Arlington oppos'd: notwith-
'ſtanding the King was ſo deſirous of avoiding a Breach with France, that 'he ſent me to Dunkirk, and my Lord Arlington to Utrecht, where I
'ſtill endeavour'd to get Mony inſtead of Ships. At my firſt Audience,
'the King of France was willing to comply, but after ſome Returns and
'Letters from hence, he was alter'd; but I make no Reflections upon
'Perſons, but barely State Matters of Fact. Then it was my Lord
'Shaftsbury's Advice and Mine ſo to order the War, as that the French
'ſhou'd deliver us ſome Towns of their Conqueſts into our Hands; an
'uſeful Precaution in former Times. My Lord Arlington wou'd have 'no Towns at all for one Year; and here is the Cauſe of the Condition
'of our Affairs. We ſet out a Fleet with Intention to land Men in or'der to the taking of Towns: the French Army go on Conquering and 'get All, and we get Nothing, nor agree for any. Pray conſider who it 'was that was ſo often lockt up with the French Ambaſſador: My Spi'rit moves me to tell you, That when we were to conſider what to do,
'we were to adviſe with the French Ambaſſador. I will not trouble you
'with Reports, but pray look not upon me as a Peer, but an Honeſt
'Engliſh Gentleman, who has ſuffer'd much for my Love to my Coun'try. I had a Regiment given me, which was Sir Edward Scott's; I 'gave him ſixteen Hundred Pound for it: There is no Papiſt Officer in
'it, nor Iriſh Man. I ſhall ſay nothing of my Extraordinary Gains, I 'am ſure I have loſt as much Eſtate as ſome Men have gotten, and that 'is a big Word! I am honeſt, and when I appear otherwiſe, I deſire to 'dye. I am not the Man that has gotten by all this; yet after all this I 'am a Grievance: I am the cheapeſt Grievance this Houſe ever had; and
'ſo I humbly ask the Pardon of the Houſe for the Trouble I have 'given.

The Speaker then proceeded to ask the Duke the following Queſtions by Order of the Houſe, to each of which his Grace gave an Anſwer.

1. Whether any Perſons declared to your Grace any ill Advices or Purpoſes againſt the Liberties and Privileges of this Houſe, or to alter the Government; Who they were, and What they advis'd? A. 'There is an old Proverb, Mr. Speaker, Over Shoes over Boots. This reflects upon one that is now living, and ſo I deſire Pardon for ſaying any Thing farther, fearing it may be thought a malicious Invention of mine, the Perſon being dead. I have ſaid nothing yet but what I can juſtify, but this I cannot.' His Anſwers to their Queries.

2. Some Words fell from your Grace Yeſterday, wherein you were pleas'd to ſay you had gotten nothing, but others had gotten three, four or five Hundred Thouſand Pounds: Who were they that had gotten it, and by what Means? A. 'I am not well acquainted by what Means 'they got ſo much, being not at all acquainted with the Ways of getting 'Money. What the Duke of Ormond has got is upon Record, being 'about five hundred Thouſand Pounds; my Lord Arlington has not 'got ſo much, but he has got a Great Deal.' 3. By whoſe Advice was the Army rais'd, and Monſieur Schomberg made General? A. 'I cannot 'ſay by whoſe Advice, but, upon my Honour, not by mine. I was told 'by a Man that's dead, that my Lord Arlington ſent for him, and it will 'be eaſily prov'd.' 4. By whoſe Advice was this Army brought up to awe the Debates and Reſolutions of the Houſe of Commons? A. 'I muſt 'make to this the ſame Anſwer as I did before; it was a Diſcourſe from 'a Man dead to one now living. If I had deſerv'd the Honour, I think 'I might have had the Command of that Army before Him; but Schom- 'berg was told my Lord Arlington wou'd have the Government by an 'Army.' 5. Who made the Triple Alliance? A. 'My Lord Arling- 'ton and my ſelf were only employ'd to treat; and finding the Danger 'we were in of being Cheated, we preſs'd the Ambaſſadors to ſign before 'they had Power; and tho' 'twas an odd Requeſt, yet they did ſign.' 6. Who made the firſt Treaty with France, by which the Triple Alliance was broken? A. 'I made that Treaty.' 7. By whoſe Advice was the Exchequer ſhut up, and the Order of Payment there broken? A. 'I was 'not the Adviſer; I am ſure I loſt three Thouſand Pound by it.' 8. Who advis'd the Declaration in Matters of Religion? A. 'I do not diſown 'that I advis'd it; being always of Opinion that ſomething was to be 'done in that Nature in Matters of Conſcience, but no further than 'the King might do by Law. 9. Who advis'd the Attacking the Smyrna 'Fleet before the War was proclaim'd? A. 'It was my Lord Arling- 'ton's Advice; I was utterly againſt it, as careful of the Honour of the 'Nation, and incurr'd ſome Anger by it. My Lord Arlington princi- 'pally mov'd it, and I might ſay more.' 10. By whoſe Advice was the ſe- cond Treaty at Utrecht? A. 'My Lord Arlington and I were ſent over, 'and I found in Holland the greateſt Conſternation imaginable, like the 'Burning of the Rump in England, the People crying, God bleſs the 'King of England! and Curſing the States; and had we then landed, 'we might have conquer'd the Country. The Prince of Orange wou'd 'have had the ſame Share in the Peace with France that we had, but 'tho' the King's Nephew, I thought he muſt be kind to his own Coun- 'try: If we had made Peace then, we had been in a worſe Condition 'than before; and laſtly the Prince of Orange hop'd for a good Peace 'with us upon that Treaty; but I never cou'd conſent that France muſt 'have All and we Nothing. The Conſequence wou'd be that Holland 'muſt intirely depend upon France; and I think it a wiſe Article, That 'the French were not to make Peace without us.' 11. By what Coun- ſel was the War begun without the Parliament, and thereupon the Par- liament Prorogu'd? A. 'My Lord Shaftsbury and I were for adviſing 'with the Parliament, and averſe to the Prorogation. I can ſay nothing, 'but I believe the Parliament will never be againſt a War for the Good 'of England.' 12. By whoſe Advice was the Parliament Prorogu'd the 4*th of* November laſt? A.——.

The Houſe was ſo little ſatisfy'd with the Duke's Speech, and his ſeveral Anſwers, that upon a further Debate they came to this Reſolution,

Their Vote againſt him.

'That an Addreſs be preſented to his Majeſty, to remove the ſaid Duke 'of Buckingham from all his Imployments that are held during his Maje- 'ſty's Pleaſure, and from his Preſence and Counſels for ever' The next Day

Day they enter'd upon a Debate about the Earl of Arlington, who at his own Requeſt, was likewiſe admitted to be heard in the Houſe. In making of his Defence, he anſwer'd ſome Parts of the Duke of Buckingham's Speeches, and fairly gave the Honour of the Triple Alliance to Sir William Temple. But he was ſo far from giving Satisfaction to the Houſe as to his own Conduct, that they preſently drew up Articles of Impeachment againſt him, under this Title; Articles of treaſonable and other Crimes of high Miſdemeanor againſt the Earl of Arlington, Principal Secretary of State, viz. 'I. The ſaid Earl hath been a conſtant and vehe- 'ment Promoter of Popery, and Popiſh Counſels. 1. By procuring Com- 'miſſions for all the Papiſts lately in Command, who made their Appli- 'cation to him only, as a known Favourer of that Faction; there be- 'ing not one Commiſſion ſign'd by the other Secretary, many of which 'Commiſſions were procured and ſign'd by him ſince the ſeveral Ad- 'dreſſes of the two Houſes of Parliament to his Majeſty, and the Paſſing 'the late Act againſt Popery. 2. By procuring his Majeſty's Letter, 'Commanding Iriſh Papiſts and Rebels to be let into Corporations, and 'admitted into the Commiſſions of the Peace, and other Offices of Truſt, 'Military and Civil, contrary to the eſtabliſh'd Laws and Conſtitutions 'of that Realm, to the great Terror of the King's Proteſtant Subjects 'there. 3. By not only ſetting up and ſupporting the aforeſaid Papiſts 'there, but bringing the moſt violent and fierceſt of them to command 'Companies and Regiments of the King's Engliſh Subjects there, to the 'great Diſhonour and Danger of this Kingdom. 4. By openly and avow- 'edly Entertaining and Lodging in his Family a Popiſh Prieſt, contrary 'to the known Laws of the Land; which ſaid Prieſt was a noted Soli- 'citor and Promoter of the Popiſh Faction, and hath ſince fled out of 'this Kingdom. 5. By procuring Penſions in other Mens Names for Po- 'piſh Officers, contrary to, and in Illuſion of the late Act of Parliament. '6. By obtaining Grants of conſiderable Sums of Money to be charg'd 'upon the Revenue of Ireland, for the moſt violent and pernicious Pa- 'piſts there; particularly two Thouſand Pounds for one Colonel Fitz- 'Patrick, a notorious Iriſh Rebel, whoſe Mother was hang'd in the late 'Wars for Murthering ſeveral Engliſh, and making Candles of their Fat; 'this Grant being procured for the ſaid Fitz-Patrick at a Time when 'he was accus'd to the ſaid Lord Arlington of high Crimes by the now 'Lord Lieutenant of Ireland. 7. By procuring his Majeſty to releaſe to 'ſeveral Iriſh Papiſts, ſome whereof were deeply engag'd in the horrid 'Rebellion of that Kingdom, the Chieferys, or Head-Rents reſerv'd to 'the Crown, out of the forfeited Eſtates of Papiſts there, being a prin- 'cipal Part of his Majeſty's Revenue in that Kingdom.

Their Articles of Impeachment againſt the E. of Arlington.

'II. That the ſaid Earl hath been guilty of many undue Practices to 'promote his own Greatneſs, and hath imbezzelled and waſted the Trea- 'ſure of this Nation. 1. By procuring vaſt and exorbitant Grants for 'Himſelf, both in England and Ireland, breaking into the Settlement of 'that Kingdom, and diſpoſſeſſing ſeveral of the Engliſh Adventurers and 'Soldiers of the Proprieties and Free-Holds, in which they were duly 'and legally ſtated, without any Colour of Reaſon, or Suggeſtion of 'Right. 2. By charging exceſſive, and almoſt incredible Sums for falſe 'and deceitful Intelligence. 3. By procuring his Majeſty's Hand for the 'giving away, from his firſt entrance into his Office, the Value of three 'Millions of Sterling Money at the leaſt; the ſeveral Grants whereof are 'extant, counterſign'd by him, and by him only. 4. That the ſaid 'Earl, preſuming to trample upon all Eſtates and Degrees of the Sub- 'jects of this Realm, the better to ſubdue them to his Will and Plea- 'ſure, hath cauſeleſly and illegally impriſon'd many of his Majeſty's 'Subjects.

1673. Car. 26 Ref. 14

'Subjects. 5. That he did procure a Principal Peer of the Realm to 'be unjuſtly impriſon'd, and to be proclaim'd Traytor, without any 'Legal Proceeding or Tryal, and did maliciouſly ſuborn falſe Wit-'neſſes with Money to take away his Life, upon Pretence of Treaſona-'ble Words.

'III. That the ſaid Earl hath falſely and trayterouſly betray'd the great 'Truſt repos'd in him by his Majeſty, as Counſellor and Principal Secre-'tary of State. 1. By entertaining a more than uſual Intimacy with the 'French Ambaſſador, not only lodging him in his Houſe, but letting him 'into the King's moſt ſecret Counſels. 2. By altering in private, and 'ſingly by Himſelf, ſeveral ſolemn Determinations of his Majeſty's Coun-'cil. 3. By procuring a Stranger to have the chief Command of the late 'rais'd Army, for the Invaſion of Holland, to the great Diſhonour and 'Diſcouragement of all the Legal Nobility and Gentry of this Nation. '4. By adviſing his Majeſty to admit of a Squadron of French Ships to 'be join'd with our Engliſh Fleet (the ſad Conſequence whereof we have 'ſince felt) notwithſtanding the King of France had agreed to ſend a Sup-'ply of Men, in order to have the Fleet wholly Engliſh. 5. Whereas 'the King was advis'd by ſeveral of the Counſellors to preſs the French 'King to deſiſt from making any farther Progreſs in the Conqueſt of the 'Inland Towns of Holland, whereof England was to have no Benefit, and 'to turn his Army upon thoſe Maritime Towns that were by the Trea-'ty to be ours, his Lordſhip gave the King Counſel to deſiſt; where-'by that Part of our Expectation was wholly fruſtrated. 6. Whereas 'the King was advis'd by ſeveral of his Council not to enter into this 'War, till his Majeſty was out of Debt, and had advis'd with his Par-'liament, his Lordſhip was of Opinion to the contrary, and gave his 'Advice accordingly. 7. When the French Ships were diſpers'd after 'the late Fight at Sea, and had loſt all their Anchors and Cables by rea-'ſon of the foul Weather that then enſu'd, he perſuaded his Majeſty to 'ſend them eighty Cables and Anchors, although it was then objected, 'and he knew it to be true, That his Majeſty had not at that Time 'any more in his Stores to ſupply his own Ships in caſe of the like 'Neceſſity. 8. He hath trayterouſly correſponded with the King's Ene-'mies beyond the Seas, and contrary to the Truſt repos'd in him, hath 'given Intelligence to them.

Not ſatisfy'd with what they had done againſt the Earl of Arlington, whom they look'd upon as a notorious Romaniſt, the Commons proceed-ed to prepare a ſevere Bill For a General Teſt, to diſtinguiſh between Proteſtants and Papiſts, and to prevent the Danger and further Growth of Popery, and for a more eaſie and ſpeedy Conviction of Popiſh Recuſants; and Thoſe that ſhall refuſe to take it, be made incapable to enjoy any Office, Military or Civil, to ſit in either Houſe of Parliament, or to come within five Miles of the Court. Tho' there wanted Time to bring the Bill into a Law, yet the Teſt it ſelf is not to be forgotten, which was in theſe Words: 'I A. B. do ſolemnly, from my Heart, and in the 'Preſence of Almighty God, profeſs, teſtifie and declare, That I do 'not believe in my Conſcience That the Church of Rome is the only 'Catholick and Univerſal Church of Chriſt, out of which there is no 'Salvation; Or that the Pope hath any Juriſdiction or Supremacy over 'the Catholick Church in General, or over my ſelf in Particular, or 'that it belongs to the ſaid Church of Rome alone to judge of the 'true Senſe and Interpretation of the Holy Scriptures; Or that in the 'Holy Sacrament of the Euchariſt, there is made a perfect change of 'the whole Subſtance of the Bread into Chriſt's Body, or of the whole 'Subſtance of the Wine into Chriſt's Blood, which Change the ſaid

A Peace in Forwardneſs.

3. All theſe Proceedings prov'd very uneaſy to thoſe of the Court, who daily became more ſenſible that nothing cou'd be effected without a ſudden Peace with Holland. The Negotiation that had been ſet on foot for a General Peace at Cologn, was juſt then a breaking by the exorbitant Demands of the French and their Allies; ſo that the States-General, finding there was no Reliance to be made on ſuch a Peace, ſtruck in with the general Inclination of the Parliament and People of England, and us'd all Methods to make a ſeparate Peace with that Kingdom. In order to which they made uſe of the Spaniards, who by Vertue of their Alliance with the Dutch had lately declared War againſt France; and for that purpoſe ſent full Powers to their Ambaſſador, the Marqueſs de Freſno, to treat on that Subject at London; who manag'd it ſo well, and ſo ſeaſonably, that his Britannick Majeſty was induc'd to deſert the French, and once more to make the United Provinces his Friends and Allies. And therefore on the 24th Day of January, the King came to the Houſe of Peers, and ſending for the Commons, he made this ſignificant Speech; 'My 'Lords and Gentlemen, At the Beginning of this Seſſion I told you, 'as I thought I had Reaſon to do, That the States-General had not 'yet made me any Propoſals which cou'd be imagin'd with Intent to 'Conclude, but only to Amuſe. To avoid this Imputation, they have 'now ſent me a Letter by the Spaniſh Ambaſſador, offering me ſome 'Terms of Peace, upon Conditions Formally drawn up, and in a 'more decent Stile than before. It is upon This, that I deſire your 'ſpeedy Advice: For if you ſhall find the Terms ſuch as may be em- 'braced, your Advice will have great Weight with Me; and if you 'find them defective, I hope you will give me your Advice and Aſ- 'ſurance how to get better Terms. Upon the whole Matter I doubt 'not but you will take care of my Honour, and the Honour and Safe- 'ty of the Nation, which are now ſo deeply concern'd.

The King's Speech upon it.

With this Speech, the King deliver'd to the two Houſes Copies of the Memorial from the Spaniſh Ambaſſador, together with Propoſals from the Dutch in Order to a Treaty. The Ambaſſador's Memorial, after a large diſplaying of the Dangers from the boundleſs Attempts and Ambition of France, concludes in theſe Words: 'And I cannot but promiſe 'my ſelf from Conſiderations of this Importance, a ſpeedy, favourable, 'and benign Anſwer to return to the Queen my Miſtreſs, whereby to 'bind up in a cloſer Tye of Friendſhip the Thoughts, and Inclinations 'of the Subjects of both Crowns: For ſhou'd a contrary Anſwer be gi- 'ven to the Adjuſtment that is propos'd on ſuch reaſonable Terms, Spain 'muſt be oblig'd to take other Meaſures for its Security; it being incom- 'patible that a ſincere Friendſhip, or a Peace can ſubſiſt between the 'two Crowns, if your Majeſty will perſevere in the Engagements of this 'War.' Upon Reading of this, and the Dutch Propoſals in the Houſe of Commons, they voted their humble and hearty Thanks to be return'd to his Majeſty for his moſt gracious Speech: and immediately after they Reſolv'd, 'That upon Conſideration had upon his Majeſty's ſaid gracious 'Speech, and the Propoſals of the States General of the United Provin- 'ces, this Houſe is of Opinion That his Majeſty be humbly advis'd to pro-

Thanks.

'ceed in a Treaty with the States-General, in Order to a ſpeedy Peace.' The Lords alſo joyning in the ſame Reſolution of Advice, it was ſolemnly preſented to his Majeſty, who return'd this direct Anſwer, My Lords and Gentlemen, I cannot better thank you for your Advice than by following it; which I ſhall endeavour, and doubt not of your Aſſiſtance to enable me to perform it.

The Houſe of Commons, tho' they were well pleas'd with the Proſpect of a Peace, proceeded in their uſual Way, and on the 7th of February went into a Committee of the whole Houſe, to take into their Conſideration the Grievances of the Nation, in which they particularly Reſolv'd, 'That the Continuace of any Standing Forces in this Nation, other than 'the Militia, is a great Grievance and Vexation to the People; and it is 'the humble Petition and Addreſs of this Houſe to his Majeſty, That 'he will immediately cauſe to be disbanded that Part of them that were 'rais'd ſince the 1ſt Day of January, 1663.' This Matter gradually led them into an uncommon Debate concerning the King's Guards, which had been eſtabliſh'd ſoon after the Reſtoration; and theſe following Reaſons were given in For Disbanding the Horſe and Foot-Guards, commonly call'd the King's Life-Guard. 1. 'That according to the Laws of the Land, 'the King hath no Guards but thoſe call'd Gentlemen Penſioners, and Yeomen of the Guard. 2. That ever ſince this Parliament, although there 'have been ſo many Seſſions, they never ſettled the Life-Guard by Act 'of Parliament; nay, they have been ſo far from it, that whenſoever 'they have been ſo much as mention'd in the Houſe of Commons, they 'wou'd never in the leaſt take any favourable Notice of them, always 'looking upon them as a Number of Men unlawfully aſſembled, and in 'no reſpect fit to be the leaſt countenanc'd by the Parliament of England. '3. That they are of vaſt Charge to the King and Kingdom. 4. That 'they are altogether uſeleſs to this Kingdom, as doth plainly appear by 'his Majeſty's moſt happy and peaceable Reign ſince his bleſſed Reſtoration; there being ſo much real and mutual Love, Confidence and Truſt 'between his Majeſty and his good People, which is daily manifeſted by 'his Majeſty's frequent truſting and expoſing his Sacred Perſon to his 'People without a Guard. 5. That Guards, or Standing Armies, are 'only in uſe where Princes govern more by Fear, than by Love, as in 'France, where the Government is Arbitrary. 6. That this Life-Guard 'is a Standing Army in diſguiſe, and that as long as they continue, the 'Roots of a Standing Army will remain amongſt us; and therefore it is 'impoſſible effectually to deliver this Nation from a Standing Army, till 'theſe Guards are pull'd up by the Roots. 7. That the Life-Guard is a 'Place of Refuge and Retreat for Papiſts and Men Popiſhly affected, 'and a School and Nurſery for Men of debauched and arbitrary Princi'ples, and Favourers of the French Government, as it did too plainly ap'pear in the Caſe of Sir John Coventry. 8. That if the Life-Guard 'were disbanded, the King wou'd thereby ſave ſome Hundred Thou'ſands of Pounds per annum; which wou'd in a few Years enable him to 'pay all his Debts, without burthening his good People with any further 'Taxes to that End.

The Commons Reaſons againſt the King's Guards.

Theſe Proceedings were very diſtaſteful, if not mortifying to the Court Party; yet ſtill the King ſeem'd reſolv'd not to ſhew any outward Marks of Diſobligation, but proceeded with all Vigour in finiſhing the Peace with Holland, which was brought to ſo ſpeedy an Iſſue, that on the 11th Day of February, he came to the Houſe of Peers, and ſending for the Commons he made this Speech to both Houſes; 'My Lords and 'Gentlemen, In purſuance of your Advice, I have made a ſpeedy, 'an

'your Addreſs for the Disbanding of the Forces, I have, ſince the 'Peace made with the Dutch, given Orders for Disbanding them; Car. 26
'nay, I have order'd to disband more than you deſired. As for Reſ. 14
'your Addreſs about the Iriſh Regiments, I have order'd to ſend
'them back into Ireland. But I muſt needs acquaint you, That there 'is a great Want of Capital Ships, and I wou'd be glad to be equal in 'Number with my Neighbours, and I hope I ſhall have your Aſſiſt-
'ance upon ſo good an Occaſion, to preſerve the Honour and Safe'ty of this Nation.' This Speech ſo affected the Houſe of Commons, that they immediately Reſolv'd, 'That the humble and hearty Thanks
'of their Houſe be return'd to his Majeſty for his making a ſpeedy Peace,
'and for his gracious Anſwers to the Addreſſes of their Houſe concern'ing the Standing Forces.

The Commons proceed ſtill againſt Grievances.

But ſtill the Commons, inſtead of granting Mony, proceeded to the further Conſideration of the Grievances of the Nation, and particularly Voted 'That a Committee be appointed to inſpect the Laws
'lately made in Scotland, whereby an Army is authoriz'd to march
'into England, or Ireland; and peruſe ſuch other Laws as do tend 'to the Breach of the Union of the two Nations.' They likewiſe in a grand Committee, ſhortly after took into their Conſideration the State and Condition of the Kingdom of Ireland, and Reſolv'd, 'That a Com'mittee be appointed to inſpect the State and Condition of that King'dom; and more eſpecially to conſider of the State of Religion; and
'the Militia, and the Forces of that Kingdom, and examine the Matters
'of Fact relating thereunto.' About the ſame Time, when they were upon the Topick of Grievances, they appointed another Committee 'To 'inſpect the Laws, and to conſider how the King may commit any Sub'ject by his immediate Warrant, as the Law now ſtands, and to report
'their Opinions: And further, they were order'd to conſider how the 'Law now ſtands touching the Committing of Perſons by the Coun'cil-Table, and to report the ſame.' Upon which Occaſion, they brought in a particular Bill concerning Writs of Habeas Corpus, a Bill much for the Liberty of the Subject, which was read three Times, and paſs'd the Houſe of Commons. They likewiſe order'd a Bill to be brought in, For a Teſt to be taken by the Members of both Houſes. And thus for above twelve Days, they went on without Intermiſſion, or Interruption.

The King had now great Occaſion to exerciſe his Talent of Diſſimulation, which of late ſeem'd to have been improv'd, and become more habitual. He found it beſt to ſtifle his Reſentments, and, ſince there was very little Proſpect of Money, to part as ſpeedily and amicably as he cou'd. Therefore taking the happy Opportunity of compleating the Peace, he reſolv'd to put an End to the Seſſion, and on the 24th Day of February, he came to the Houſe of Peers, where ſending for the Commons, he made this following Speech to both Houſes; 'My Lords and
'Gentlemen, When I was here laſt, I told you the Peace was Sign'd; I 'am now come to tell you it is Ratify'd; and I hope it will prove a hap'py and laſting Peace to both Nations. This, and the Spring coming on
'ſo faſt, it will be convenient for You to be in your Countries, both for 'your own Buſineſs and mine. And I therefore think fit to make a Re-
'ceſs at this Time, the Winter being more convenient for Buſineſs. In 'the mean Time I will do my Endeavour to ſatisfie the World of my
'Stedfaſtneſs for the Securing the Proteſtant Religion, as it is now eſta-
'bliſh'd, and your Properties; and I deſire that you in your ſeveral Coun'ties will endeavour to satisfie the People therewith. I have no more to 'say at this Time, but that I have commanded my Lord Keeper to pro-'rogue the Parliament to the Tenth of November next.' And accordingly the Lord Keeper prorogu'd both Houses to that Time, and so put an End to the Thirteenth Session of the Second and Long Parliament, after it had sat six Weeks and three Days, without having granted or voted any Money, or having one single Act pass'd. The Prorogation was for a little above nine Months, but they did not really meet till almost fourteen Months, and in a much hotter Season of the Year.

The Peace proclaim'd.

4. Within four Days after the Parliament broke up, February 28, the Peace was solemnly publish'd and proclaim'd, by the Heralds, and other Officers, after the usual Form, in the several Parts of London and Westminster; which was receiv'd in all Places with a general Satisfaction, express'd by the loud Acclamations of the People, and all the outward Marks of Joy and Transport. The Treaty it self was founded on that of Breda in the Year 1667, and the Marine Treaty made at the Hague in 1668, and consisted of five distinct Articles, of which here follows the Substance:

The Articles of it.

'I. It is agreed, That the Ships and Vessels belonging to the United 'Provinces, as well Men of War and Ships of Defence, as others, whe-'ther single or in Fleets, which shall happen to meet the King of Great 'Britain's Men of War in the British Seas, whether they also be single 'or in Fleets, provided they carry the King's Flagg, shall strike their 'Flagg, and lower their Topsail: And the said States of the United 'Provinces shall order all their Commanders at Sea fully and bona fide 'to comply with this Article. II. It is agreed to make certain convenient 'Laws concerning Trade and Commerce of both Parties in the Indies, 'and other Places out of Europe, to an exact and reciprocal Rule; and 'limit the same within certain unalterable Laws. And because it ap-'pears too difficult to be immediately perfected, both Parties consent 'it shall be deferr'd; and Commissioners be nominated within three 'Months after the Conclusion of the Peace, who shall meet at London, 'and conclude the Matter in the most amicable Way. III. Whereas the 'English complain of being detain'd in Surinam contrary to Articles, it 'is agreed, That the States-General shall bona fide take care that the 'said Articles shall be executed; and that the Space of three Months shall 'be allow'd to the English Inhabitants for the selling their Estates, who 'shall be transported at a moderate Rate, and be permitted to carry away 'their Slaves with them. IV. It is agreed, That if either Party shall, 'during this War, have possess'd themselves of any Countries, Islands, 'Towns, Forts, Colonies, or other Places belonging to the other Party, 'all and every of the same, without any Distinction of Place or Time, 'shall be immediately and bona fide restored in the same Condition they 'shall happen to be in, when Notice shall come of the Conclusion of the 'Peace in those Places. V. To put an End to all Occasions and Causes 'of new Questions, Pretensions and Actions, of what sort soever they be, 'or by what Name or Pretext soever claim'd, it is agreed, that the said 'States-General shall pay to the King of Great Britain the Sum of eight 'hundred Thousand Patacoons; which Sum the said States-General shall 'pay at certain Days, as followeth; viz. a Fourth Part thereof as soon 'as the Ratifications shall be exhibited, and the Rest the Three ensuing 'Years by Equal Portions.

The End of the Second DUTCH WAR.

And thus ended the Second Dutch War that happen'd since the Restoration, which lasted from the publick Proclamation of the War, to the Proclaiming claiming the Peace, juſt two Years, wanting two Weeks, and four Days, which was above five Months ſhorter than the laſt. And here it is obſervable, that in the laſt War, when the Engliſh contended with all the Power of Holland and France, they had greater Succeſs in their Battels, than now when they had joyn'd with the Power of France againſt Holland alone: So Inſignificant, as well as Unfortunate was his Britannick Majeſty's Alliance with ſuch an inſinuating and uncertain Monarch as the French King. 167¾. I. 1. THE remaining Part of the Reign, tho' free from all actual Wars and Foreign Invaſions, was ſtill the moſt buſie Part; and was moſtly taken up with Inteſtine Diſputes, and Domeſtick Diſturbances, both in the Houſes of Parliament, and throughout the whole Country, which ſometimes produc'd very ungrateful and tragical Effects. Tho' the publick Affairs were chequer'd with a ſtrange Mixture of Felicity and Calamity, or rather Pleaſure and Vexation, yet Eaſe and Luxury ſtill encreas'd, and, as well as Faction and Diſcord, ſtrove mightily to be predominant in the Nation. The King and the Court ſeem'd reſolv'd that the Former ſhou'd have the Aſcendent; and his Majeſty himſelf took more Pains to enjoy a quiet and undiſturb'd Life, than ſome have done to ruin the Peace of whole Kingdoms; which made him too liable to be led by ſuch as pretended to the peculiar Art of Relieving. As a great Man obſerves, from his own natural Diſpoſition, he deſired nothing but to be eaſie himſelf, and that every Body elſe ſhou'd be ſo; and wou'd have been glad to ſee the leaſt of his Subjects pleas'd, and to refuſe no Man what he ask'd. But this Softneſs of Temper made him apt to fall into the Perſuaſions of whoever had his Kindneſs and Confidence for the Time, how different ſoever from the Opinions he was of before; and he was very eaſie to change Hands when when thoſe he employ'd had engag'd him in any Difficulties; ſo as nothing look'd ſteddy in the Conduct of his Affairs, nor appear'd to aim at any certain End. Yet ſure no Prince had more Qualities to make him lov'd, with a great many to make him eſteem'd, and all without a Grain of Pride or Vanity in his whole Conſtitution; nor cou'd he ſuffer Flattery in any Kind, growing uneaſy upon the firſt Approaches of it, and diverting it to ſome other Subject. Where he was pleas'd to be familiar, he ſhew'd great Quickneſs of Conception, Pleaſantneſs of Wit, with Variety of Knowledge, and more Obſervation and truer Judgment of Men than cou'd be imagin'd from ſo careleſs and eaſie a Manner as was natural to him in all he ſaid or did. But having abandon'd himſelf to Pleaſures, this Humour made him loſe many great Opportunities of Glory to himſelf, and Greatneſs to his Crown, which the Conjunctures of his Reign had forc'd him to reflect upon; and made way for the aſpiring Deſigns of a Neighbour Prince, which wou'd not have appear'd, or cou'd not have ſucceeded in the World, without the Application and Arts employ'd to manage this eaſy and inglorious Temper that became ſo viſible to the World. 1674. Car. 26 Ref. 15

The King offers his Mediation towards a general Peace.

As ſoon as the Peace was concluded with Holland, the King's firſt Care was to ſoften the Stroke as much as he cou'd towards France; which was done or attempted, by repreſenting the Neceſſities of it, which needed no Diſſimulation, and likewiſe to offer his Mediation between the ſtill contending Parties, in Order to bring about a general Peace, which wou'd conduce both to his Honour and his Quiet. He was very deſirous to make France ſome Amends for Abandoning their Intereſt, and making a ſeparate Treaty: Yet the Spaniſh Miniſters at Bruſſels, as we learn from Sir Richard Bulſtrode, were at this Time of Opinion, That his Majeſty had made this Peace with the full Conſent of the French King, which wou'd in the end prove more to that Monarch's Advantage than their Conjunction; and that it was a great Miſtake in thoſe who thought this Peace was made by Conſtraint of the Parliament, which he had rather made by his own Election. Their Reaſons were, 'That his Britannick 'Majeſty finding ſo ſtrong an Union againſt France, that it was like to be 'a general War in theſe Parts of Europe, and that there was no diſin-'tereſs'd Prince ſufficiently puiſſant to become Mediator; the King 'therefore by quitting of France, and declaring a Neutrality, was the on-'ly Prince in Europe able to balance, and conſequently to be a Mediator; 'which was at this Time propoſing: And that if the French King cou'd 'but maintain the War this Summer, his Majeſty of England wou'd get 'ſo great Advantages by carrying away all the Trade, and wou'd be ſo 'enrich'd by that and the Retrenchment of his Army, that he wou'd the 'next Year be able, without the Aſſiſtance of Parliament, to carry on a 'War againſt thoſe that ſhou'd refuſe a reaſonable Peace.' Whatever their Conceptions were, the King's Endeavours were for a general Treaty, and ſuch as might reſtore the Peace, and ſettle the Repoſe of Chriſtendom. The only Difficulties that appear'd in this great Affair, were what the Confederates were like to make in accepting the King's Mediation, whoſe late Engagements with France had made him thought very partial on that Side. And the Houſe of Auſtria now finding that Crown abandon'd by England, had too greedily ſwallow'd the Hopes of being fully reveng'd, to deſire any ſudden Treaty till their expected Succeſſes in the War might reduce France to the Terms of the Pyrenean Treaty.

The French King accepts of it.

To make way for this extraordinary Work, the French King in a ſhort Time thought fit to accept and approve of the King of England's Offer of Mediation; that of Sweden being ended by the Cologn Aſſembly's breaking up in Expoſtulations and Quarrels upon the Emperor's ſeizing the Perſon of Prince William of Furſtenburgh, a Subject of the Empire, but an Inſtrument

Inſtrument of France, as his Brother the Biſhop of Strasburgh had been in all the late Invaſions of that Crown upon their Neighbours. In this difficult Affair, ſince the Declenſion and Diſſolution of the Cabal, none was thought ſo proper to effect it as Sir William Temple, who had gain'd ſo much Credit with Spain as well as Holland, from the Negotiations he had formerly run through at the Hague, Bruſſels, and Aix-la-Chapelle, by which the remaining Parts of Flanders had been ſav'd out of the Hands of France in the Year 1668. But having often reflected upon the unhappy Iſſue of his laſt Negotiations from the fatal Turn of Counſels in the Engliſh Court, and from the counter Deſigns of the Cabal, he reſolv'd, before he went on his Embaſſy, to know the Ground on which he ſtood; and in order to that, to ſound the King's true Sentiments and Diſpoſitions, as to the Meaſures he had now taken, or rather renew'd, and truſt no more to his Miniſters, who had ſo much deceiv'd either Him or Themſelves.

To effect this he had a long Audience with the King in his Cloſet, where he took Occaſion to reflect upon the late Counſels and Miniſtry of the Cabal, 'how ill his Majeſty had been adviſ'd to break Meaſures and 'Treaties ſo ſolemnly taken and agreed; how ill he had been ſerv'd, and 'how ill ſucceeded by the violent Humour of the Nation's breaking out 'againſt ſuch Proceedings, and by the Jealouſies they had rais'd againſt 'the Crown.' The King ſaid, 'Twas true, he had ſucceeded ill; but if he had been well ſerv'd, he might have made a good Buſineſs enough of it; and ſo proceeded in a good meaſure to juſtifie what was paſt. Sir William was ſorry to find ſuch a Preſage of what might happen again from the like Thought; and therefore he freely went to the Bottom of the Matter, and made a juſt Detection of all French Counſels and Meaſures. He ſhew'd 'how difficult, if not impoſſible, it was in England to ſet up the 'ſame Religion or Government that was in France; That the univerſal 'Bent of the Nation was againſt Both; That many who were, perhaps, 'indifferent enough in the Matter of Religion, conſider'd it cou'd not 'be chang'd here but by Force of an Army; and that the ſame Force 'which made the King Maſter of their Religion, made him Maſter of 'their Liberties and Fortunes. That in France there was none to be 'conſider'd but the Nobles and the Clergy; That if a King cou'd en-'gage them in his Deſigns, he had no more to do; for the Peaſants 'having no Land, were as inſignificant in the Government, as the 'Women and Children are here. That on the contrary, the great 'Bulk of Land in England lies in the Hands of the Yeomanry or lower 'Gentry; and their Hearts are high by Eaſe and Plenty, as thoſe 'of the French Peaſantry are diſpirited by Labour and Want. That 'the Kings of France are very great in Poſſeſſions of Land, and in De-'pendances by ſuch vaſt Numbers of Offices both Military and Civil, as 'well as Eccleſiaſtical; whereas thoſe of England having few Offices to 'beſtow, having parted with their Lands, their Court of Wards and Knights 'Services, have no Means to raiſe or keep Armies on foot, but by Sup-'plies from their Parliaments, nor Revenues to maintain any Foreign 'War by other Ways. That if he had an Army on foot, yet if com-'poſ'd of Engliſh, they would never ſerve Ends that the People hated 'and fear'd. That the Roman Catholicks in England were not the Hun-'dredth Part of the Nation, and in Scotland not the two Hundredth; 'and it ſeem'd againſt all common Senſe, to think by one Part to govern 'Ninety Nine that were of contrary Minds and Humours. That for 'Foreign Troops, if they were few, they wou'd ſignify nothing but to 'raiſe Hatred and Diſcontent; and how to raiſe, to bring over at once, 'and to maintain many, was very hard to imagine. That the Force 'which ſeem'd neceſſary to ſubdue the Liberties and Spirits of this Na-'tion,

Sir William Temple's private Diſcourſe with the King.

'tion, cou'd not be leſs than an Army of threeſcore Thouſand Men, ſince 'the Romans were forc'd to keep twelve Legions to that purpoſe, the 'Norman to inſtitute ſixty two Thouſand Knights Fees, and Crom- 'well left an Army of near eighty Thouſand Men.' After this Sir William took occaſion to mention Monſieur Gourville, whom he knew the King eſteem'd the ſoundeſt Head of any French Man he had ſeen; and ſaid, 'That he never knew but one Foreigner that underſtood England 'well, and that was Him; who when he was at Bruſſels the firſt Dutch 'War, and heard the Parliament grew weary of it, he ſaid, The King 'had nothing to do but to make the Peace: Adding, That he had been 'long enough in England, ſeen enough of that Court, and People, and 'Parliaments, to conclude, That a King of England, who will be the 'MAN of his People, is the greateſt King in the World; but if he will 'be Something more, by G—d he is Nothing at all. The King heard Sir William very attentively, but ſeem'd a little impatient at firſt: Yet at laſt he declar'd Sir William had Reaſon in all, and ſo had Gourville; and then laying his Hand upon Sir William's, he added like a true King of England, And I will be the MAN of my People.

2. Sir William Temple being appointed Ambaſſador Extraordinary for the forementioned Ends, and all his Diſpatches finiſh'd, he departed for Holland in July. His Inſtructions in General were, 'To aſſure the 'States of his Britannick Majeſty's Friendſhip, and firm Reſolution to 'obſerve his Treaties with them; then to offer his Mediation in the pre- 'ſent War, in which both They and almoſt all Chriſtendom were en- 'gag'd; and after their Acceptance of it, to endeavour it likewiſe with 'all their Allies; and, to that End, to engage the Offices and Inter- 'vention of the States: But, in particular, immediately after his Arri- 'val at the Hague, to repair to the Prince of Orange, then in the Field, 'to give him Part of his Majeſty's Intentions in all this Affair, and Aſſu- 'rance of his Kindneſs; and engage his Highneſs as far as cou'd be, to 'ſecond his Majeſty's Deſires, in promoting a General Peace, wherein 'the United Provinces ſeem'd to have the greateſt Intereſt.

He is ſent Ambaſſador to Holland.

Upon his Arrival at the Hague, Sir William deliver'd his Credentials to the proper Preſident, and made a Viſit to Penſionary Fagel, in which he ſoon diſcover'd a ſtrong Inclination in the States to a Peace, as far as was conſiſtent with the Honour and Engagements of their Allies; and was aſſur'd of the States Readineſs to accept of his Maſter's Mediation. After which his Excellency went to Antwerp, in hopes of finding the Prince of Orange at his Camp between that City and Louvain, where he had lain ſometime expecting the Advance of the Confederate Forces; but his Highneſs having two Days before march'd beyond Louvain, Sir William repair'd to Bruſſels, there to deſire a Guard to convey him to the Camp. Having ſent his Secretary to the Governor Count Montere-ry with his Compliments, and Deſires of a Guard, the Count return'd the firſt very coldly, and the other with ſuch Excuſes, as amounted to a Refuſal. In reality, the Spaniards were grown ſo jealous of his Britannick Majeſty's Mediation offer'd at the Hague; of the States and Peoples violent Inclination to a Peace, and of the Offices they thought the Engliſh Ambaſſador might uſe to ſlacken the Prince of Orange in the Proſecution of their preſent hopeful Deſigns; that he found it was reſolv'd by the Spaniards, in concert with the Prince Himſelf, firſt to delay, and then to hinder any Interview between his Highneſs and Him, till the Campaign was ended. Sir William being ſenſible of this, and unwilling to expoſe either his Majeſty's Character, or Credit with his Nephew, he very prudently return'd to the Hague, where he had long Converſations with with the Penſionary; by which he gain'd the Lights neceſſary to diſcover the preſent Scene of Affairs, and the Pulſes of the Confederates, in what related to the General Peace.

His Propoſals to Penſionary Fagel.

His Excellency let him know 'How much his Majeſty was ſatisfy'd 'with That he had lately made with the States; how much he was re- 'ſolv'd to continue and cultivate it; and how much Reaſon he had to be 'content with the Poſture that had left him in Peace with all his Neigh- 'bours, while they were all in War. That the Advantages of Commerce 'from it, were enough to make him trouble himſelf no further about the 'Peace of Chriſtendom, if his Goodneſs and Piety did not prevail more 'with him, than his Intereſt. But that theſe, and the Deſire of a Gene- 'ral Good, had perſuaded him to offer his Mediation in the preſent Con- 'teſts. That it had been already accepted by France, and that the Em- 'peror and Spain had promis'd to conſider of it in concert with their 'Allies. That the States Ambaſſadors at London, had aſſur'd his Maje- 'ſty their Maſters wou'd be pleas'd with it, and doubted not their Con- 'ſent, that the Treaty ſhou'd be at London; and that thereupon his Ma- 'jeſty had charg'd him with a Letter to the States, to offer them his Me- 'diation. That he cou'd not doubt their accepting it with the beſt Grace 'that cou'd be; for he knew their Intereſt was to have a Peace, and not 'to diſoblige the King. That if his Majeſty was Partial to any Side, they 'ought to believe it wou'd be to that wherein his own Nephew was ſo 'deeply concern'd; and the more, becauſe he proffer'd his Offices to- 'wards a Peace, at a Time when the Advantages and Preparations for 'War run ſo high on the French ſide, as he doubted the Events might 'ſhew if it continu'd. That they knew his Intereſt wou'd not ſuffer him 'to ſee Flanders loſt; and that conſidering what had paſs'd; his Honour 'wou'd not ſuffer him to think of Preſerving it any other Way than by 'that of a Peace. That he wou'd be glad to ſee that Country left by 'the next Peace, in a better Poſture of Defence than it was by the laſt; 'and the Spaniſh Territories lye cloſer and rounder than they were then 'left. That when this ſhou'd be concluded, his Majeſty wou'd be ready 'to enter into the ſtrongeſt Guarantees they cou'd deſire, and might 'with Honour enter into a War to preſerve it, tho' he cou'd not to ob- 'tain it.

Fagel's Anſwer.

The Penſionary firſt gave Sir William Thanks for his good Offices in the late Peace, and in all the Meaſures of Friendſhip that had interced- ed between his Maſter and them ſince the firſt Breach: 'He applauded 'the King's Reſolution in ſo pious and generous an Offer, and acknow- 'ledg'd his Intereſt might lead him to other Meaſures: That he doubt- 'ed not the States Willingneſs to accept it; all the Difference wou'd be 'about the Time, and the Manner of doing it. As to this, he ſaid, they 'cou'd not do it at leaſt without the Communication of their Allies; but 'wou'd immediately give them Part of his Majeſty's Offer, and the States 'Diſpoſition to receive it. That for the Terms of a Peace, they wou'd 'be content to make his Majeſty the Arbiter of it: That they had late- 'ly recover'd all the Towns they had loſt, except Grave and Maeſtricht, 'the laſt of which was in ſome meaſure engag'd to Spain; and for the 'other, they doubted not of having a good Account of it ſoon. But he 'doubted whether their Allies wou'd be ſo eaſy in their Expectations or 'Demands; and it was impoſſible for the States to leave them, who had 'ſav'd their Country from Ruin, when two ſuch great Kings had invaded 'them; nor to break the offenſive Treaties they had made with the Em- 'peror, Spain and Brandenburgh. That the Terms ſtipulated with Spain 'oblig'd them to reduce France to the Pyrenean Treaty; with only this 'Reſerve in one Article, Unleſs it ſhou'd be otherwiſe agreed by Conſent

'Them; tho' they were both equally ſenſible of the ambitious Deſigns of 'the French, as well as their Reſentment to the States. That they cou'd Car. 26
'never hope for ſuch another Conjuncture, to reduce them to ſuch Reſ. 15
'Bounds as might give Safety to their Neighbours, and Quiet to Chri-
'ſtendom. That it was a wrong Time to enter into a Treaty between 'France and Spain, becauſe they knew they cou'd not handſomly de'mand the Reſtitution of any Towns loſt by the Spaniards in Flan-
'ders in the laſt War, and given up by the ſucceeding Peace; yet the 'King and They both knew, That without it a Peace cou'd never be 'ſafe for Flanders, nor for Holland, nor conſequently for England. But 'he believ'd there wou'd not paſs many Days before ſome deciſive
'Action wou'd happen between the two Armies, then not far diſtant in 'the Field, which might make room for a Negotiation of Peace the 'next Winter; in which his Majeſty wou'd find the Intereſts and Hu-
'mours of a Trading Country, as theirs was, very ſtrong, and diſpos'd
'to preſs their Allies, as far as poſſible, to facilitate ſo great and ſo good
'a Work.

3. The Penſionary had Reaſon to expect ſome ſudden Action in the Field: For about the middle of Auguſt was fought the famous Battel of Seneffe, between the Confederates under the Command of the Prince of Orange, and the French under the renowned Prince of Conde. But it prov'd not an Action ſo deciſive as was expected from two Armies of ſo great Force, and ſo animated by the Hatred and Revenge of the Parties, as well as by the Bravery and Ambition of the Commanders. The Succeſs of this Battel was ſo differently reported by thoſe that engag'd in it, that it was hard to judge of the Victory, which each Side challeng'd; and perhaps neither with any good Reaſon. The Confederates claim'd it, becauſe they were laſt upon the Field; and the French upon the greateſt Number of Priſoners and Standards they carry'd away: But whoever had the Honour, they both ſeverely felt the Loſs. Only we muſt not forget that the Prince of Orange, now about twenty three Years of Age, did glorioufly diſtinguiſh himſelf in this fierce Conteſt; of which there is the moſt undoubted Evidence. Count de Zouche, the German General, in his Letter to the States, ſays, 'That in the whole Courſe of the Action, 'the Prince had ſhew'd the Conduct of an aged Commander, the Cou-'rage of a Cæſar, and the undaunted Bravery of a Marius.' The Prince of Conde himſelf gave this Teſtimony, That he had done like an old Captain in all, but only in venturing himſelf too much like a young Man; in both which he Himſelf was remarkable that Day. Sir Richard Bulſtrode, then Envoy at the Court of Bruſſels, in a Letter to the Earl of Arlington, dated Aug. 17. has theſe Words, 'It is acknowledg'd by all Perſons, that 'the Courage and Conduct of the Prince of Orange was that Day to be 'admired, who flew from one Part of the Field to another, not only to 'encourage his Men, but from the firſt to the laſt of the ſeveral Engage-'ments, and in the Heat of every Attack, was the foremoſt, and has 'thereby gain'd Immortal Honour.' In another Letter to the ſame Perſon about ten Days after, he ſays, 'Never General more endeavour'd to 'put an Army in good Order, or took more Pains, or was more diligent 'in that great Station, than his Highneſs; being ſo indefatigable in his 'Perſon, of ſo excellent a Temper, ſo valiant againſt his Enemies, and 'ſo obliging to his whole Army, that he is in general cry'd up for the 'moſt hopeful Prince living, and that he is like to be a greater General 'than any of his Anceſtors.

The Prince of Orange's Behaviour.

1674. Car. 26 Ref. 15

After the Repair neceſſary to each Camp, both Armies took the Field again, and gave a general Expectation of another Battel: but the Prince of Conde ſo well choſe and fortify'd his Encampments, as not to be forc'd out without apparent Diſadvantages. Hereupon the Prince of Orange ſat down before Oudenarde in September, and gain'd his End of drawing the Prince of Conde out of his cautious Marches, who came immediately to relieve it. Upon Sight of the French Army, the Prince of Orange propos'd to draw out and attack them before they were reſted after their hard Day's March. The Spaniards were willing, but Count de Zouche wou'd not agree to it, and ſo the hopeful Occaſion was loſt; and with ſuch Diſcontent among the Generals, that the next Day the Germans left their Trenches, and march'd away about a League, leaving room to the French to put what Relief they pleas'd into the Town. Hereupon the Prince of Orange was forc'd to riſe too; and leaving Part of the Dutch Forces with Count Monterey, the Spaniſh Governor, went himſelf with the reſt to preſs on the Siege of Grave; being reſolv'd, ſince he fail'd in what he deſign'd in the Favour of the Spaniards, to free his own Country from the laſt Mark of their intended Servitude. The Place had been inveſted a Month before; yet the Prince found the Siege but little advanc'd at his Arrival, and the Dutch Soldiers ſo foil'd with the brave Defence from within, that nothing cou'd have carry'd the Place at this Seaſon, about the Middle of October, but the former Humour of leading on his Men whenever they ſhrunk. By which, and his uſual Vigour, as well as the common Methods of ſuch Sieges, he took Grave by the End of the Month, with equal Glory to Himſelf, and Satisfaction to all the United Provinces; and diſpoſing his Forces into Winter Quarters, he return'd to the Hague about the middle of November.

He takes Grave.

4. Being arriv'd there, Sir William Temple apply'd himſelf to his Highneſs, and particularly acquainted him with his 'Majeſty's perſonal Kind-'neſs and Eſteem for him; his Reſolution to cultivate his preſent Friend-'ſhip with the States, and his Deſire to ſee a General Peace reſtored to 'Chriſtendom; in which he intended to act wholly in concert with his 'Highneſs, whoſe Opinion as to the Thing, and the Conditions moſt ne-'ceſſary for his Highneſs to inſiſt on, He much deſir'd to underſtand as 'ſoon and fully as he cou'd.' The Prince anſwer'd him with full Expreſſions of Duty and Kindneſs to his Majeſty, and Deſires of a near Conjunction between the two Nations; which, he thought, alone cou'd make his Majeſty ſafe at Home and Abroad. For the Peace, he ſaid, Tho' he cou'd make many Complaints of both the Spaniards and Imperialiſts Conduct ſince their Treaties, yet the States cou'd not with any Faith or Honour, make any ſeparate Peace upon any Terms that France cou'd offer them. That a general Peace cou'd not be made, without leaving Flanders in a Poſture of defending it ſelf upon any new Invaſion, againſt which no Guarantees cou'd ſecure it: That Spain cou'd not quit the Country of Burgundy or Cambray, or any Thing in Flanders, beyond the Pyrenean Treaty, except Aire and St. Omer. This, his Highneſs ſaid, was his Opinion: But if he might know the King's, and find it at all conſiſtent with the Safety of his Country, and his own Honour towards his Allies, he wou'd do all he cou'd to bring it about, as he had already done the Point of his Majeſty's Mediation; which was accepted at Vienna and Madrid. Sir William alledg'd, 'That the King having been the Author and Guarantee 'of the Peace of Aix-la-Chapelle, and not having ſeen the French driven 'out of any Town given them by that Treaty, cou'd with ill Grace pro-'poſe any Thing to France beyond thoſe Terms, unleſs it were upon 'ſome Equivalent.' The Prince reſolutely reply'd, 'Twere better going on with the War, let it laſt as long, and coſt as much as it wou'd. That his Majeſty might, if he pleas'd, induce France to whatever Terms he thought juſt; and cou'd never ſhow him ſo much Kindneſs as to bring him out of this War with Honour. If he wou'd not, he muſt go on till ſome Change happen'd, to make the Peace neceſſary on one Side or other. How it wou'd happen he cou'd not tell, and muſt leave it to God; but he thought they had as fair a Game as the French: He was ſure they might have been abſolutely beaten at Seneffe, if Count de Zouche had ſo pleas'd; and have had a fair Blow for it again at Oudenarde. That he was ſure Germany cou'd furniſh more and better Men than France; and they were now in a manner united in the common Defence: But however, he muſt perform what his own Honour, as well as that of the States had engag'd to their Allies, let it coſt what it wou'd. 1674. Car. 26 Reſ. 15

Sir William finding the Prince immoveable upon theſe Diſcourſes, he turn'd them another Way, to a tender Point, about which the Engliſh King and Court wou'd gladly have been ſatisfy'd; which was upon Occaſion of the many diſcontented Perſons in England, at the Courſe of the laſt War and Miniſtry, who were ſuſpected to have correſponded with Holland, about raiſing Seditions, and perhaps, Inſurrections in England, if the War had continu'd, and the Dutch Fleet appear'd upon the Engliſh Coaſts, that were like to be unguarded the next Summer, by reaſon of his Majeſty's wanting Money to ſet out a Fleet. It was believ'd, among others, that the Earl of Shaftsbury was one that had lately play'd this Game, who having been at the Bottom of the Counſels of the Cabal, had firſt done all he cou'd towards the Deſtruction of the Dutch, and after that turn'd ſhort upon the Court, and the reſt of the Cabal, fell in with the popular Humour both in City and Parliament, decry'd the preſent Conduct and Deſigns, tho' with the Loſs of his Chancellor's Place, and was ſuſpected to manage a Practice in Holland for ſome Inſtructions in England. Upon which Account Sir William told the Prince 'What the 'King ſuſpected of ſome of his Subjects, without naming any; how much 'Service it wou'd be to his Majeſty to know them more certainly, and 'how kind it wou'd be in his Highneſs to diſcover them.' Here the Prince was upon the Reſerve, and ſaid, He was ſure the King wou'd not preſs him upon a Thing ſo much againſt all Honour, as to betray Men that profeſs'd to be his Friends. Yet in a ſerious and private Diſcourſe afterwards, the Prince acknowledg'd ſo much in general, That during the laſt War, neither the States nor He in particular, were without Applications made them from ſeveral Perſons, and conſiderable, in England, who wou'd fain have engag'd them to head the Diſcontents that were rais'd by the Conduct of the Court in that whole War; which he knew was begun and carry'd on quite contrary to the Humour of the Nation, and might, perhaps, have prov'd very dangerous to the Crown, if it had not ended as it did.

The Prince is immoveable.

The Engliſh Ambaſſador gave his Majeſty an Account of all that paſs'd this Year between the Prince and Him; which was look'd upon at Court both as cold to his Majeſty, and ſtiff as to the Peace, which great Work they found cou'd not be brought about without another Campaign, and a conſiderable Space of Time. Still the King had the Honour of a Mediator for the general Peace of Chriſtendom, being the principal neutral and uningag'd: Notwithſtanding which he became in effect a ſecret Penſioner to the French King, as ſufficiently appears by the Letters publiſh'd by the late Duke of Leeds; wherein we find that that Monarch, being apprehenſive of the Power of his Britannick Majeſty, and his reaſſuming the Tripple Alliance, tho' much diſoblig'd at the ſeparate Peace, was willing to comply with his Wants and his Pleaſures, and to allow him a conſiderable annual Stipend or Gratuity, of at leaſt a Hundred Thouſand Pounds, beſides caſual Donatives. This has been believ'd and deny'd according to the Affections of a Party, but never ſo authentickly publiſh'd as in the foremention'd Letters: Of which we may properly in this Place take notice of one from Ambaſſador Mountagu at Paris to the King, in 1677, wherein he has theſe Words; 'I am ſure the Greatneſs of the King of 'France is ſupported only by your Majeſty's Connivance at what he does, 'and the good Will Chriſtendom ſees you have for him. The Advantage 'he has by it, even in the Point of Revenue, by his Conqueſts, does 'amount to five Times the Sum you have now from him; and tho' After-'Games are hard to play, I think I underſtand this Court ſo well, and if 'you care to have it done, I am confident I cou'd get you, by Agree-'ment, a Million of Livres a Year to be paid while the War ſhall laſt, 'and four Millions after the Peace ſhall be made; I mean, Sir, over and 'above what you have from France now.' In another Letter written ſhortly after to the Lord Treaſurer, the Ambaſſador ſays thus: 'I ex-'pect his Chriſtian Majeſty's Anſwer to the Demands I made by the King's 'Directions, of two hundred Thouſand Pounds Sterling, to be paid till 'the General Peace is concluded; taking for granted that it will be con-'form to my Orders from the King, to inſiſt either upon two Million of 'Livres a Year, during the War, and four Millions after the Peace, or 'elſe two hundred Thouſand Pounds Sterling during the War. But I 'am told this Morning, that Mr. Courtin has agreed this Matter with the 'King my Maſter, and in your Lordſhip's Preſence; and that his Maje-'ſty will be content with two Millions of Livres a Year only during the 'War; which, I confeſs, ſurpriz'd me extreamly, conſidering the Ne-'ceſſity of his Majeſty's Condition, and the Poſitiveneſs of his Commands 'to me to inſiſt upon two hundred Thouſand Pounds Sterling, which I 'had done very effectually, and muſt have ſucceeded in, conſidering the 'Reaſonableneſs of the Demand, except the Generoſity of the King our 'Maſter's Nature, who values Money ſo little, has already condeſcended 'to the leſſer Sum of two Millions; in which I am afraid, by the End of 'the Year, he will fall ſhort of being able to ſupport all the emergent 'Occaſions that may happen, and perhaps France be a greater Sufferer 'by it than he Himſelf.' But to return to the preſent Year, and the Domeſtick Affairs of England.

5. The King was believ'd to have been ſo much offended with the Proceedings of the Parliament in their laſt Seſſion, that it was much diſcours'd of that he had no Inclination to meet them again; tho' they had been ſo long endear'd to him, by ſo many agreeable Acts and continual Supplies. Hence the Popular Rumour aroſe, That his Majeſty intended to Diſſolve the Parliament: But the King apprehending that a Report of this Nature might irritate ſome of the Leading Members, and be otherwiſe prejudicial to his Affairs, he publiſh'd a Proclamation in May, Declaring, 'That whereas of late many Perſons ill-affected to the Go-'vernment, have aſſum'd to themſelves a Liberty in their ordinary Diſ-'courſes, to cenſure and defame the Proceedings of State, whereby they 'endeavour to create and nourish in the Minds of his Majeſty's good Sub-'jects, an evil Opinion of Things they underſtand not; and further to 'promote their ſeditious Ends, they do daily invent falſe News, and 'ſpread the ſame abroad among the People, to the great Scandal of his 'Majeſty's Government: Whereof his Majeſty taking notice, and in Par-'ticular of that very falſe Report of an Intention to Diſſolve this pre-'ſent Parliament, which hath not been under Deliberation, his Majeſty 'ſeeing no Cauſe to change his Reſolutions taken touching their Meet-ing.

The Papiſts Endeavours for a Diſſolution.

However it was, it is obſervable that both the Papiſts on one Side, and the Proteſtant Diſſenters on the other, began to long for a Diſſolution of this Parliament, which had been ſo ſtrict againſt both: And the Former this very Year made ſome very bold Efforts towards the obtaining of ſo great a Point, and ſome other Advantages as to their Religion and Intereſt. One of the moſt active Sticklers in this Cauſe was Mr. Edward Coleman, Secretary to the Duke of York, a Perſon of a warm forward Diſpoſition, very zealous in his Way, and of ſuch good natural Parts, and ſo ſenſible of them, that he was thought capable of undertaking very great Projects, and believ'd to be much incourag'd by his Party. However, he certainly attempted ſeveral Things above his Sphere, if not his Capacity, and maintain'd ſuch Correſpondencies with Foreigners, who were Enemies to the Engliſh Conſtitution and Religion, as afterwards gave Occaſion to ſtrange and unexpected Diſturbances in the Nation. His Letters of Correſpondence are remarkable, and ſome of them having been writ this Year, we ought to take notice of two or three directed to the French King's Confeſſor, and the Pope's Inter-Nuncio. The firſt Letter that was diſcover'd was dated the 29th of June this Year, and began thus: 'I am commanded to tell you, That his Royal Highneſs, my Ma- Coleman's Letters. I.
'ſter, is very ſenſible of the Friendſhip of his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty,
'which he will endeavour to cultivate very carefully, and to give him all
'poſſible Aſſurances of it, to take away all Jealouſies that his Enemies
'wou'd raiſe to the contrary. That his Royal Highneſs has done nothing
'in any Manner whatſoever, nor in any Place, againſt the Intereſt of his
'moſt Chriſtian Majeſty, but hath render'd him all the good Offices he hath 'been capable of. That as for Recalling the Parliament, and touching
'my Lord Arlington, his Highneſs is altogether of Opinion of his Maje-
'ſty, That neither One or Other is uſeful, but quite contrary, very dan'gerous as well for England as France; and that his moſt Chriſtian Ma-
'jeſty is in great Danger of loſing the Neutrality of England at the next
'Seſſion (if the Parliament meet) as he loſt its Alliance by the Peace of 'Holland at the Laſt; becauſe the Lower Houſe and their Friends (as the 'furious Proteſtants, and the Malignants in the Houſe of Lords) have a
'Deſign to leſſen his Royal Highneſs, and root out the Catholick Religi'on; and they think they cannot make uſe of any other fitter Means to 'attain their Ends, than to raiſe the Dutch, and to perplex his moſt Chri-
'ſtian Majeſty, as much as lies in their Power. That his Highneſs doubts
'not, but it is abſolutely neceſſary for the Intereſt of his moſt Chriſtian
'Majeſty, and his Royal Highneſs, to uſe all Endeavours to hinder the 'Meeting of the Parliament, by perſuading his Britannick Majeſty, That 'his Greatneſs, his Honour, and his Quiet, are no leſs concern'd there-
'in than Theirs: So that if his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty wou'd write free'ly his Thoughts thereupon to his Br— Majeſty to forewarn him of the 'Danger he apprehends from thence, and wou'd withal think fit to make 'him the ſame generous Offer of his Purſe, to perſuade him to diſſolve
'the preſent Parliament, as he hath done to his Highneſs for the Electi'on of Another, perhaps he wou'd ſucceed therein by the Aſſiſtance we
'wou'd give him here. As for another Parliament, it wou'd be eaſy
'enough to get ſuch a one as we wiſh for; the Conſtitutions of our Par-
'liaments being of ſuch a Nature, that as there is Nothing to be hop'd
'for by the King from an Old One, ſo there is Nothing to be fear'd from

‘ a New One; becauſe ſuch a One at their firſt Meeting muſt needs aſſiſt
‘ his Majeſty, ſo far as to inable him to acknowledge his Obligations both
‘ to his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty, and to all the World.——

2. In a ſecond Letter, in September, after ſome Compliments, and Aſſurances of his Maſter's Steadineſs, &c. he proceeds thus: ‘ For the firſt ‘ Point in your Letter, his Royal Highneſs has commanded me to tell ‘ you, that he will govern himſelf according to your Advice, and treat
‘ of Nothing concerning the Catholick Religion with Monſieur Rouvigny,
‘ nor with any other Perſon than your Self; but that he will communi‘ cate to you all Things he ſhall find neceſſary for the Good of the Ca-
‘ tholicks, and ſhall be very well pleas'd to receive Advices from you there‘ upon. For the reſt, his Royal Highneſs does a little wonder, that he ‘ hears nothing from Monſieur Rouvigny touching the Second Point of ‘ your Letter, ſince you have written ſo poſitively, that he had Order to ‘ confirm, and procure Execution of what his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty ‘ propos'd to him the 2d of June laſt, by your Mediation.—His moſt Chri- ‘ ſtian Majeſty made a very generous Offer to his Royal Highneſs of the ‘ Aſſiſtance of his Purſe, to enable him to defend them both from the ‘ Evils that threatned him, and by good luck, his Royal Highneſs has la-‘ bour'd with ſo much Diligence and Succeſs, that the Dangers which ‘ they apprehended are a little put off: But one Thing more is neceſſa-
‘ ry for the perfect ſecuring their Affairs; and without making one ſtep ‘ more, all that he has already done will ſignify nothing. For that the ‘ Aſſiſtance of his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty is no leſs neceſſary at preſent,
‘ than heretofore, to ſubdue intirely Thoſe, who being exaſperated againſt
‘ his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty, as much as againſt his Royal Highneſs, and ‘ are angry with his Royal Highneſs, only becauſe he is unalterably ad‘ dicted to the Intereſt of his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty, will exerciſe their ‘ Malice and their Rage with more Brutality than ever, if they find Oc‘ caſion for it hereafter. If you can therefore by your Credit, obtain ‘ from his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty the Accompliſhment of the Offer of his ‘ Purſe, for raiſing the Reputation of his Royal Highneſs, in the Opini‘ on of his Britannick Majeſty, and for putting him in a Condition to re-‘ ſiſt the ſharpeſt Batteries of the Adverſaries of his moſt Chriſtian Maje-‘ ſty and Royal Highneſs, to wit, the Poſſibility they pretend to get Mo‘ ney from the Parliament, and the Impoſſibility of having any elſewhere,
‘ by which they often keep the Mind of his Britannick Majeſty in ſu‘ ſpence, and wherein they place their Hope they have to conquer him at ‘ laſt: There will nothing more remain to be fear'd by his moſt Chriſtian ‘ Majeſty, or his Royal Highneſs, but his Royal Highneſs will be able to ‘ Diſſolve the Parliament with Eaſe, and afterwards, in Recompence of ‘ the ſaid Aſſiſtance, will perform on his Part all that his moſt Chriſtian
‘ Majeſty ſhall ask of him, and will proceed with Sincerity upon the Word
‘ of a Prince (that no Man can reproach him for the Violation of) for the ‘ Intereſt of his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty.

3. In a third Letter of Mr. Coleman's to the Pope's Inter-Nuncio, dated September the 4th, he tells him, ‘ That the Duke's principal Deſign is,
‘ to uſe the Pope's Interpoſition, and by that means to eſtabliſh himſelf
‘ in the Poſſeſſion of his Eſtate, through the Aſſiſtance of France and ‘ Spain, and to turn all their Cares for the Eaſe of the Pope's Friends,
‘ and particularly for the Catholicks of the Church, againſt their great Ene‘ mies; and aſſures him he will find, That the Pope never had an Occaſi-
‘ on ſo favourable as at this Hour, to inrich thoſe of his Family, and to ‘ augment the Number of his Friends; and if he lets it ſlip, he will ne‘ ver find the like: So that if ever they propoſe to make uſe of the Trea-
‘ ſure of the Church, 'tis now they ought to do it, for they can demand

‘ nothing

'nothing that the Duke will not be capable to do for the Pope's Friends: 1674.
'On the other ſide, without their Aid, he will run great hazard of being 'loſt, both Himſelf and his Aſſociates.' And in another Letter of Octo- Car. 26 ber 3. Mr. Coleman to the Inter-Nuncio begins thus: 'You agree with Reſ. 15
'me, that Money is the only Means of bringing the King into the Duke's 4.
'Intereſt, and of diſengaging him from the Parliament; and you muſt
'alſo agree with me, that nothing can more promote the Intereſt of the 'Catholick Party, which is the principal Object of the Duke's Care and 'Affection, and of the Hatred of the Parliament, and which muſt hope
'or fear, according as the one or other of them increaſe in Power.——
'Nothing in the World is more certain, than that the King has a good
'Inclination towards the Duke and the Catholicks, and wou'd joyn him-
'ſelf willingly and inſeparably to their Intereſts, if he did not apprehend
'ſome Danger from ſuch an Union; which, however, he wou'd not have
'Cauſe to fear, if he found their Intereſt, and conſequently their Power,
'ſo far advanc'd above that of their Adverſaries, that they ſhou'd neither
'have the Power nor the Boldneſs to conteſt any Thing with them;
'which the King cou'd ſee in a very little Time, if we cou'd perſuade
'him to do two or three Things: And I am certain Money cou'd not 'fail of perſuading him to it; for there is Nothing it cannot make him
'do, tho' it were as much to his Prejudice, as this we endeavour to per-
'ſuade him to, will be to his Advantage.' Theſe, and other Letters ſufficiently prove the Deſigns, as well as the Expectations of the Popiſh Party, and likewiſe their great Influence in the Court; and in one of them it is expreſly ſaid, That it was by their own Intereſt, that the Parliament was put off from ſitting this Year. It had been actually Prorogu'd to the 10th of November; but on the 22d of September, his Majeſty was pleas'd to publiſh a Proclamation for the further Proroguing the Parliament to the 13th Day of April 1675. Yet to ſeem to anſwer the Addreſſes of the laſt Meeting, he was pleas'd to ſhew a publick Care for ſuppreſſing Popery, and convicting Romiſh Prieſts and Jeſuits, and did not only order them to be immediately tranſported, but promis'd a Reward of five hundred Pounds for any one that ſhou'd be taken up.

6. For the Remainder and Concluſion of the Year, we have little elſe to take notice of, but the Honours and Preferments, the Deaths and Deceaſes of ſome conſiderable Perſons of Note and Eminency. As to Honour, we ſhall begin with one very peculiar and uncommon, rather accepted of, or condeſcended to, than conferr'd upon the King Himſelf, which was the Freedom of the famous City of London. His Majeſty having been nobly and magnificently entertain'd at Guild-Hall on the 29th of October, when Sir Robert Viner was ſworn Lord Mayor, was graciouſly pleas'd to accept of the Freedom of the City, in the Chamberlain's Office, from the Hands of Sir Thomas Player, the preſent Chamberlain. Upon which the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Common Council unanimouſly reſolv'd to teſtify their deepeſt Senſe of ſo unparallel'd a Favour and Honour done to the City, beyond the Example of all his Progenitors. And accordingly, not long after the Lord Mayor, attended by his Brethren and the Commons, attended on his Majeſty in the moſt ſolemn Manner in the Banquetting-Houſe; where he and the Chamberlain on their Knees, preſented the King with the Copy of the ſaid Freedom of the City, curiouſly written in Vellum, and adorn'd with Gilding after the fineſt Manner, in a large Square Box of Maſſy Gold; the Seal of the ſaid Freedom hanging at it, inclos'd in another Box of Gold, ſet all over with large Diamonds of a very great Value. All which his Majeſty was pleas'd graciouſly to accept, with many Expreſſions of extraordinary Kindneſs to the

the City; ſo that there appear'd all the Marks of indiſſoluble Love and Affection on one Side, as well as unalterable Duty and Loyalty on the other.

As to Offices and Honours conferr'd by his Majeſty this Year, the firſt Perſon diſtinguiſh'd was John Earl of Mulgrave, who by the Favour of the Dutcheſs of Cleveland, obtain'd the noble Honour of the Garter, when ſeveral others were diſappointed, and was inſtall'd at Windſor on the 28th of May. About the ſame Time Robert Earl of Sunderland was admitted into the Privy-Council; and not long after, the Earl of Peterborough was ſworn into the ſame Honour of a Privy-Counſellor, and after that the ſame Honour was conferr'd upon the Earl of Strafford. Sir Leoline Jenkins and Sir Joſeph Williamſon, the King's Ambaſſadors Extraordinary and Plenipotentiaries for the Treaty at Cologn, arriv'd at White-Hall in May, and were very graciouſly receiv'd by his Majeſty: And for a Reward of this Service, Sir Joſeph Williamſon, having been one of the Clerks of the Privy-Council, was now made Principal Secretary of State: Which Place became vacant by the Advancement of the Earl of Arlington, who, upon the Reſignation of the Earl of St. Albans Sept. 11th receiv'd the Staff of Lord Chamberlain of his Majeſty's Houſhold, and with this publick Reaſon given, That it was in Recompence of his long and faithful Service, and particularly for having perform'd the Office of Principal Secretary of State for the Space of Twelve Years, to his Majeſty's great Satisfaction. On the contrary, the Duke of Buckingham, who had been a Perſonal Favourite of the King, began now again to decline very much in the good Opinion of his Majeſty. He had made two Lord Treaſurers, and other Miniſters of State; but now was ſo far ſunk, that, being Chancellor of the Univerſity of Cambridge, his Majeſty thought fit to declare that Place vacant. Whereupon the Senate of the Univerſity, in a full Aſſembly, the beſt to oblige his Majeſty, unanimouſly elected his Grace the Duke of Monmouth to ſucceed him, who was accordingly inſtall'd in Worceſter Houſe; the Vice-Chancellor, Dr. Spencer, making an eloquent Speech in Engliſh, and Dr. Paman the Univerſity Orator another in Latin, upon that Occaſion. And when the great Ceremony was over, the new Chancellor treated the whole Company, amounting to near three hundred Perſons, with great Splendor and Magnificence.

The Deaths of Biſhop Laney,

Of the conſiderable Perſons that dy'd this Year, we ſhall begin with a worthy Prelate of the Church, Dr. Benjamin Laney, Biſhop of Ely, a Perſon educated in the Univerſity of Cambridge, where he was Maſter of Pembroke Hall, and Vice-Chancellor, and likewiſe Chaplain in Ordinary to King Charles the Firſt, in the Misfortunes of whom he became a great Sharer; and upon the Account of his great Learning and Loyalty, he was appointed to attend his Majeſty in the famous Treaty of Uxbridge: After innumerable Sufferings, and ſome Years Exile with the preſent King, he was mounted through ſeveral Preferments to this rich Biſhoprick, where he dy'd in Honour and Reputation. The next was Sir John Vaughan Knight, Lord Chief Juſtice of the Common-Pleas, a Welſhman by Birth, who after an Academical Education in Oxford, was particularly incourag'd by the great Selden and others, to take pains in the municipal Laws of the Nation, beſides other Parts of Knowledge; all which he undertook with ſuch Succeſs, that he became the moſt noted and learned Lawyer of his Time, and was juſtly rewarded with this high Station in the Law; in which he was ſucceeded by Sir Francis North, his Majeſty's Attorney-General, who afterwards became Lord Keeper of the Great Seal. The Third to be mention'd is Dr. Jonathan Goddard, a celebrated Phyſician and Vertuoſo, belonging to Cromwell himſelf,

Judge Vaughan

Dr. Goddard,

himſelf, who made him one of his Council of State, after he had given him the Wardenſhip of Merton Colledge in Oxford. Afterwards he became Fellow of the Colledge of Phyſicians, and of the Royal-Society, and Profeſſor of Phyſick in Greſham Colledge, where he ſhew'd himſelf a zealous Member for the Improvement of Natural Knowledge, but more eſpecially in Experiments, and the Secrets of Chymiſtry. 1674. Car. 26 Reſ. 15

The two laſt Perſons we ſhall name, are the Earl of Clarendon and Mr. John Milton, two the moſt oppoſite Perſons in the World in Principles and Practices, tho' both of extraordinary Abilities. Sufficient has been ſaid as to the Character and Fortunes of the Former; therefore we ſhall only add that this great Man dy'd at Roan in France, in the 67th Year of his Age, after ſeven Years Exile from his Native Country, from which he deſerv'd a much better Fate; and that it is to this Exile that the World owes a conſiderable Part of his glorious Hiſtory; but the moſt valuable Part, from the Reſtoration to his Diſgrace, is ſtill, and we fear ever will be, wanted in this Nation. The other, Mr. John Milton, had his Education, and firſt diſplay'd his Parts in Chriſt-Colledge in Cambridge, which he improv'd by his Travels and his indefatigable Induſtry to that Degree, that he became the Wonder of the Age, tho' always affecting uncommon and heterodoxical Opinions. He was made Latine Secretary to the long Parliament, and afterwards to Cromwell Himſelf; in which Stations he ſhew'd himſelf a moſt inveterate and unexampled Enemy to the Memory of the Murder'd and Martyr'd King; inſomuch that at the Reſtoration ſome of his Books were order'd to be burnt, and he himſelf was in great Danger. He was certainly a Man of prodigious Parts, and wrot many Books; but what did moſt, and moſt juſtly diſtinguiſh him was his Poetry, particularly his Paradiſe loſt, in which he manifeſted ſuch a wonderful ſublime Genius, as perhaps was never exceeded in any Age or Nation in the World. After he had loſt both his Eyes by hard Studying, he this Year dy'd at Bunhill near London, in the ſame Year of his Age with the laſt mention'd Earl of Clarendon.

The Earl of Clarendon,

And John Milton.

II. 1. All this Winter the Court and the Miniſtry were very much divided in their Intereſts and Deſigns, and cou'd not well tell how to ſteer with Relation to the next intended Meeting of the Parliament, which ſome were reſolv'd to oppoſe, and others to promote. The Earl of Arlington was very active and induſtrious to recover and ſecure his Intereſt, which began ſenſibly to decline, while that of the Earl of Danby encreas'd, who ſucceeded the Lord Clifford in the Treaſury, which had ever been the Height of the Earl's Ambition; which gave him an implacable Envy and Hatred againſt the Treaſurer, and which no Offices of Friends cou'd ever allay. This Earl now found himſelf a Sufferer by having ſo deeply engag'd in the Cabal, that the Country was againſt him for his Attempts, and the King diſpleas'd at his ill Succeſs. Yet ſtill he thought himſelf out of Danger from the Parliament, and therefore appear'd zealous for their Sitting; and to increaſe his Reputation with them, and to become a Favourite, he ſet himſelf all he cou'd to proſecute the Roman Catholicks, and to oppoſe the French Intereſt. To ſhew his Zeal againſt the firſt, he reviv'd ſome old dormant Orders for Prohibiting Papiſts to appear about the King, and put them in Execution at his firſt coming into his Office of Lord Chamberlain. And he had gone ſo far as to joyn with the Duke of Ormond and Secretary Coventry, to perſwade his Majeſty to remove his Brother wholly from Court and Publick Buſineſs, as a Means to appeaſe the Diſcontents of the Parliament, occaſion'd by the late Conduct of Affairs. By which Counſel he had very much offended the Duke; and finding himſelf ill both with his Roy- 167⅘. Car. 27 Reſ. 15

al Highneſs and the People, and daily declining in Credit with the King, he thought there was no Way of retrieving his Game, but by making himſelf the Inſtrument of ſome ſecret and cloſe Meaſures, that might be taken between the King and the Prince of Orange abroad. He firſt infus'd into his Majeſty the 'Neceſſity and Advantage of ſuch a Negotiation, and then that of his being employ'd in it, from the Intereſt his Lady's Friends and Kindred in Holland wou'd be able to give him, as well as from the Credit of having been ſo long in the Secret of the King's Affairs, and ſo beſt able to give them ſuch Colours as might render the late Conduct of them leſs diſagreeable to the Prince. Tho' he profeſs'd great Friendſhip to Sir William Temple, then at the Hague, yet he repreſented him as unlikely to be truſted with ſuch Confidence from the Prince, as was requiſite in this nice Affair, for having been ſo intimate with De Wit in his former Embaſſy.' His Suggeſtions prevail'd upon the King, who cou'd not refuſe an old Servant into whoſe Family he had marry'd a Son; and ſo he went over with all the Auxiliaries that ſeem'd uſeful in this Expedition, carrying not only his own Lady, Siſter to Ambaſſador Odyke, but her Siſter Oſſory, whoſe Converſation was very agreeable to the Prince; Sir Gabriel Sylvius, who pretended a great Intimacy with Monſieur Bentinck; Dr. Durel, a Man fit to deal with Monſieur Mureſt a French Miniſter in Credit with the Prince; and the Lord Oſſory, who had a great Share in the Prince's Eſteem and Kindneſs, as well from his Marriage into that Family, as from his Perſonal Bravery; a Quality lov'd by the Prince, even in an Enemy. All this was concerted without the Knowledge of the Lord Treaſurer Danby, who had been made to believe, that a Letter from the Prince to Monſieur Odyke, had given an Occaſion to this Journey; as if the Prince had deſir'd ſome Perſon at the Hague from the King, with whom he might enter into the laſt Confidence. But his Highneſs aſſured Sir William Temple, that there was no ſuch Thing, and that Monſieur Rouvigny, the French Ambaſſador at London, had more Part in the Journey than He, and perhaps any Man elſe; and that all the Endeavours us'd towards a general Peace, came from that Side.

He makes a private Journey to the Hague.

He applys to Sir W. Temple.

However inſtructed, yet thus ſupported, the Lord Arlington went to the Hague, and told Sir William Temple at their firſt Meeting, 'That 'he came over to ſet ſome Things right between the King and the Prince, 'that he doubted were amiſs, and ſettle a perfect Kindneſs and Confi'dence between them; to effect which he muſt go to the Bottom of the 'Sore, and rake into Things paſt; which was an unpleaſant Task, and 'which Sir William cou'd not do, as having no Part in the King's Buſi'neſs during that Time, wherein the Prince took his Offence at the 'Counſels of England. That his Majeſty had choſen him for this Of'fice, becauſe he cou'd beſt juſtify his Maſter's Intentions to his Highneſs, 'in the whole Courſe of that Affair. That for the intended Peace, tho' 'his Majeſty deſir'd it, yet he wou'd not meddle with it, unleſs the 'Prince, of Himſelf, made any Overtures about it; but wou'd only en'deavour to give the Prince what Lights he cou'd as to the State of 'Things in general, and what he might hope from his Allies, as well as 'from France: That if the Prince made no Advances to him upon it, 'he wou'd let it fall, and leave it in Sir William Temple's Hands.' He ſaid beſides, 'That after having fought the King's Battle with the Prince, 'he muſt fight another of his own, who did not deſerve the Coldneſs his 'Highneſs had of late expreſs'd to him; and when that was done, all 'his Buſineſs was ended.' He therefore deſir'd Sir William wou'd introduce him and the Lord Oſſory the firſt Time to the Prince, and after that he wou'd give his Excellency no more Trouble. Sir William Temple

ple told his Lordſhip, 'He was glad to ſee him, let his Buſineſs be what 'it wou'd: That he ſhou'd be gladder yet that the King's Buſineſs ſhou'd 'be done, let it be by whom it wou'd; but much more that it might be by 'Him: That for ſetting Matters right between the King and the Prince, 'he thought it the beſt Office that cou'd be done them both. That for 'the Way he mention'd of Raking into the Sore, and fighting of Bat- 'tles, in Defence or Juſtification of what is paſt, he knew not what to 'ſay to it; but wou'd leave it to their own Diſcretions: But for what 'he knew in particular of the Prince's Humour and Thoughts, whate-'ver he did of that Sort, he believ'd ſhou'd be very gentle, and not go 'too deep; being of Opinion, That Expoſtulations were apt to end well 'between Lovers, but ill between Friends.

Sir William's Anſwer.

Sir William Temple was well entertain'd during the Courſe of this Adventure; for the Lord Arlington told him every Day what he thought fit of all that paſs'd between the Prince and him; and his Highneſs told him not only the Thing, but the Manner of it, which was more important than the Matter it ſelf. His Lordſhip told him much of his 'Epo-'ſtulations, and with what good Turns of Wit he had juſtify'd the King's 'Part in the late War, and his own; but upon all he found the Prince 'dry, ſullen and uneaſy. That as to the State of Chriſtendom, and what 'related to that general War he was engag'd in, he made him no Over-'tures at all, not entering further than That the King might bring him 'out of it with Honour, if he pleas'd, and with Safety to Europe; if 'not, it muſt go on, till the Fortunes of the Parties Changing, made way 'for other Thoughts.' On the the other Side the Prince freely acquainted Sir William Temple with 'what Arrogance and Inſolence the Lord 'Arlington had enter'd upon all his Expoſtulations with him; ſhewing 'not only in his Diſcourſe, as if he pretended to deal with a Child, and 'cou'd by his Wit make him believe what he pleas'd; but in the Man-'ner of it, as if he had taken himſelf for the Prince of Orange, and 'Him for the Lord Arlington. That all he ſaid was ſo Artificial, and 'giving ſuch falſe Colours to Things every Body knew, that he that was 'a plain Man cou'd not hear it, and was never ſo weary of any Conver-'ſation in his Life.' In a Word, by all the Prince told Sir William Temple upon it, his Highneſs was provok'd at the Lord Arlington, and not very much pleas'd with the King's Intentions upon the Errand; tho' he ſaid, He was ſure his Majeſty never intended he ſhou'd treat it in the Manner he had, if he remember'd that he was his Nephew, tho' nothing elſe.

The Earl applies to the Prince of Orange.

The Penſionary and Count Waldeck perceiv'd, That the Bent of the Lord Arlington was, Firſt to draw the Prince into ſuch Meaſures of a Peace as France then ſo much deſired. Secondly, into a Diſcovery of thoſe Perſons who had made Advances to the Prince or the States, of raiſing Commotions in England. Thirdly, into ſecret Meaſures with the King, of aſſiſting him againſt any Rebels at home, as well as Enemies abroad. And Fourthly, into the Hopes or Deſigns of a Match with the Duke of York's eldeſt Daughter. Tho', they ſaid, the Earl found the Prince wou'd not enter at all into the Firſt; was obſtinate againſt the Second; treated the Third as a Diſreſpect to the King, to think he cou'd be ſo ill belov'd, or ſo imprudent as to need it: And upon mention made of the laſt by the Lord Oſſory, he took no further hold of it, than ſaying, His Fortunes were not in a Condition for him to think of a Wife. The Lord Arlington, equally diſappointed and diſcontented, took the firſt Opportunity of returning into England; and ſo finiſh'd his Myſtical Journey, which is here the more unveil'd, becauſe tho' it brought forth no preſent Fruits, yet Seeds were then ſcatter'd, which afterwards pro-duc'd great Events. At his Return to Court, he was receiv'd but coldly by the King, and ill by the Duke, who was angry that any mention was made of his Daughter, tho' it was only done by the Lord Offory, and unknown whether with Order from the King or no: So that never any Strain of Court-Skill and Contrivance ſucceeded ſo unfortunately, and ſo contrary to all the propos'd Ends of it. Inſtead of Advancing the general Peace, he left it deſperate; inſtead of eſtabliſhing a Confidence between the King and the Prince, he left it colder than he found it; inſtead of entering into any Perſonal Friendſhip with the Prince, he left an Unkindneſs that laſted ever after; inſtead of retrieving his Credit at Court, which he found waining upon the Encreaſe of the Lord Danby's, he made an end of all he had left with the King, who ever after us'd him with no further Confidence than the Forms of his Place; and found the Treaſurer's Credit more advanc'd in ſix Weeks he had been away, than it had in many Months before.

His ill Succeſs.

He ſinks in the Court.

As the Credit of this Earl declin'd, ſo ſeveral Perſons at Court took the liberty to act and mimick his Perſon and Behaviour, as had been formerly done againſt the Lord Chancellor Clarendon; and it became a common Jeſt for ſome Courtier to put a black Patch upon his Noſe, and ſtrut about with a White-Staff in his Hand, in order to make the King merry; yet he held his Lord Chamberlain's Place to the Day of his Death. The Reaſon of the King's Coldneſs, or perhaps Diſpleaſure, is believ'd to proceed from his late turning towards the popular Stream, and more eſpecially his outward Proceedings againſt the Papiſts, when the Court believ'd him to be one inwardly himſelf. Concerning this, I have receiv'd a particular Story from an unqueſtionable Hand; namely, That Colonel Richard Talbot, afterwards Earl of Tyrconnel, having been ſome time abſent from the Court, upon his Return, found the Earl of Arlington's Credit in a low Condition, and ſeeing him one Day acted by a Perſon with a Patch and Staff, he took occaſion to expoſtulate this Matter with the King, with whom he was very familiar; remonſtrating how very hard it was that poor Harry Bennet ſhou'd be thus us'd, after he had ſo long and faithfully ſerv'd his Majeſty, and follow'd him every where in his Exile. The King hereupon began to complain too, declaring what Cauſe he had to be diſſatisfy'd with Harry Bennet's Conduct, who had of late behav'd himſelf after a ſtrange Manner; for not content to come to Prayers, as others did, he muſt be conſtant at Sacraments too: Why, ſaid Talbot interrupting him, does not your Majeſty do the very ſame Thing? Gods fiſh! reply'd the King with ſome Heat, I hope there is a Difference between Harry Bennet and Me.

1675. The FOURTEENTH SESSION of the Second Parliament.

2. The Way being paved by a new Proclamation, and likewiſe a Declaration againſt Popiſh Prieſts, Jeſuits, &c. on the 13th Day of April, both Houſes of Parliament met at Weſtminſter, according to the laſt Prorogation, after a Receſs and Interval of almoſt fourteen Months. The Expectations and Curioſities of the People of late were encreas'd at every Meeting of Parliament; and now more eſpecially, ſince it had been ſo much doubted whether they ſhou'd ever meet again. This was the Fourteenth Seſſion of the Second and Long Parliament, at which the King appear'd with great Solemnity, and open'd it with this following Speech from the Throne to both Houſes; The King's Speech to both Houſes.

'My Lords and Gentlemen, The principal End 'of my Calling of you now, is to know what you think may be yet want-'ing to the Security of Religion and Property, and to give my Self the 'Satisfaction of having us'd the utmoſt of my Endeavours to procure and 'ſettle a Right and Laſting Underſtanding between us: For I muſt tell 'you, I find the contrary ſo much labour'd, and that the pernicious De-

'ſigns

'ſigns of ill Men, have taken ſo much place under Specious Pretences, 1675.
'that it is high Time to be watchful in preventing their Contrivances;
'of which this is not the leaſt, That they wou'd by all Means they can Car. 27
'deviſe, make it Unpracticable any longer to continue this preſent Par- Ref. 15
'liament. For that Reaſon, I confeſs, I cannot think ſuch have any good
'Meaning to Me: And therefore when I conſider how much the greateſt
'Part of this Parliament has either Themſelves or Fathers, given me Te-
'ſtimonies of their Affections and Loyalty, I ſhou'd be extreme loath to 'oblige thoſe Enemies, by parting with ſuch Friends: And they may be 'aſſur'd, That none ſhall be able to recommend themſelves to Me by any 'other Way, than their good Services. I have done as much on my Part
'as was poſſible, to extinguiſh the Fears and Jealouſies of Popery; and
'will leave nothing undone that may ſhew the World my Zeal to the Pro-
'teſtant Religion, as it is Eſtabliſh'd in the Church of England, from 'which I will never depart.

'I muſt needs recommend to you the Condition of the Fleet, which 'I am not able to put into that Eſtate it ought to be, and which will re'quire ſo much Time to repair and build, that I ſhou'd be ſorry to ſee
'the Summer (and conſequently a whole Year) loſt, without providing 'for it. The Seaſon of the Year will not permit any long Seſſion; nor
'wou'd I have call'd you now, but in hopes to do ſomething that may 'give Content to all my Subjects, and to lay before you the Conſiderati-
'on of the Fleet; for I intend to meet you again in Winter. In the mean 'Time, I earneſtly recommend to you all, ſuch a Temper and Modera-
'tion in your Proceedings, as may tend to unite us all in Counſel and 'Affections, and diſappoint the Expectations of thoſe, who can hope on'ly by violent and irregular Motions to prevent the bringing this Seſſion
'to a happy Concluſion. The reſt I leave to my Lord Keeper.

Accordingly the Lord Keeper made a long and eloquent Speech to this venerable Aſſembly, of which the greateſt Part ought not to be omitted, beginning thus, 'My Lords, &c. The Solemnity of this Day's Ap- The Lord Keeper Finch's Speech.
'pearance is equal to the Weight and Importance of the Occaſion; The 'Matters to be treated of, deſerve no leſs than an Aſſembly of the Three
'Eſtates, and a full Concourſe of all the Wiſe and Excellent Perſons
'who bear a Part in this Great Council, and do conſtitute and compleat
'this high and honourable Court. —— His Majeſty begins with the Con-
'ſideration of Religion; He ſees it is the firſt Thing in all your Thoughts,
'and you cannot but ſee that it hath been, and ſtill is, the firſt and prin'cipal Part of his Care. He hath alſo conſidered Religion, Firſt in Ge'neral, as it is Proteſtant, and ſtands in Oppoſition to Popery: And up-
'on that Account it is that he hath awaken'd all the Laws againſt the Pa-
'piſts: There is not one Statute extant in all the Volumes of our Laws,
'but his Majeſty hath now put in a Way of taking its full Courſe againſt
'them. And upon this Account alſo it is, That in a League lately re-
'new'd with a Proteſtant Crown, his Majeſty hath made it one Article
'of that League, that there ſhall be a mutual Defence of the Proteſtant
'Religion. His Majeſty hath conſider'd Religion again more particular'ly, as it is the Proteſtant Religion Eſtabliſh'd by Law in the Church of 'England; He ſees that as ſuch, it is not only beſt ſuited to the Monar-
'chy, and moſt likely to defend it, but moſt able to defend it ſelf againſt
'the Enemies of all Reformation: And therefore upon this Account it is 'that his Majeſty, with equal and impartial Juſtice, hath reviv'd all the 'Laws againſt Diſſenters and Nonconformiſts; but not with equal Seve'rity: For the Laws againſt the Papiſts are edg'd, and the Execution
'of them quicken'd by new Rewards propos'd to the Informers: Thoſe
'againſt Diſſenters are left to that Strength which they have already.

'Both

1675. Car. 27 Ref. 15

'Both theſe, and all other Laws whatſoever, are always underſtood to 'be ſubject to the Pleaſure of a Parliament, which may alter, amend, or 'explain them as they ſee Cauſe, and according with publick Conveni-'ence. For when we conſider Religion in Parliament, we are ſuppos'd 'to conſider it as a Parliament ſhou'd do, and as Parliaments in all Ages 'have done; That is, as it is a Part of our Laws, a Part, and a neceſſary 'Part of our Government. For as it works upon the Conſcience, as it 'is an inward Principle of the Divine Life by which good Men do go-'vern all their Actions, the State has Nothing to do with it, 'tis a Thing 'which belongs to another Kind of Commiſſion than that by which we ſit 'here.——

'In the next Place the King hath thought fit to direct your Conſidera-'tions upon the Safety and Honour of the State; both which are then beſt 'provided for, when we keep up the Strength and Reputation of our 'Fleet. It is not altogether the natural Decay of Shipping, no nor the 'Accidents of War, that have leſſen'd our Fleet, tho' ſomething may 'be attributed to both theſe; but our Fleet ſeems rather to be weakned 'for the preſent, by being out-grown and out-built by our Neighbours.' Then proceeding to diſcourſe of the Laws in general, he told them, 'In 'making of Laws therefore it will import us to conſider, That too ma-'ny Laws are a Snare, too few are a Weakneſs in the Government; too 'gentle are ſeldom obey'd, too ſevere are as ſeldom executed; and San-'guinary Laws are for the moſt Part either the Cauſe or the Effect of a 'Diſtemper in the State. To eſtabliſh this State there ſeems not to need 'many Laws; ſome will always be wanting: And tho' all that is want-'ing ſhou'd not now be finiſh'd, yet whatever ſhall remain unfiniſh'd, 'may be perfected in Winter, at which Time we have a gracious Inti-'mation from his Majeſty, that we ſhall meet again.' Then ſpeaking of the preſent Happineſs of the Nation, he proceeded thus; 'We are new-'ly gotten out of an expenſive War, and upon Terms more honourable 'than ever. The whole World is now in Peace with us; all Ports are 'open to us, and we exerciſe a free and uninterrupted Traffick through 'the Ocean: And we are reaping the Fruits of all this Peace by a daily 'Improvement of our Trade, and the Encreaſe of our Shipping and Na-'vigation. Our Conſtitution ſeems to be ſo vigorous and ſtrong, that 'nothing can diſorder it, but our ſelves. No Influences of the Stars, 'no Configurations of the Heavens are to be fear'd, ſo long as theſe two 'Houſes ſtand in a good Diſpoſition to each other, and both of them in 'a happy Conjunction with their Lord and Soveraign. Why ſhou'd we 'doubt it? Never was Diſcord more unſeaſonable. A Difference in 'Matters of the Church wou'd gratify the Enemies of our Religion, and 'do them more Service than the beſt of their Auxiliaries. A Difference 'in Matters of State wou'd gratify our Enemies too, the Enemies of our 'Peace, the Enemies of this Parliament, that hope to ſee, and practiſe 'to bring about Revolutions in the Government. They well underſtand, 'That the beſt Health may be deſtroy'd by too much Care of it; an 'anxious ſcrupulous Care, a Care that is always tampering; a Care that 'labours ſo long to purge all ill Humours out of the Body, that at laſt it 'leaves neither good Blood nor Spirits behind. In like manner there are 'two Symptoms which are dangerous in every State, and of which the 'Hiſtorian hath long ſince given us Warning: One is, when Men do 'Quieta movere; when they ſtir thoſe Things or Queſtions which are, 'and ought to be in Peace; and like unskilful Architects, think to mend 'the Building by removing all the Materials which are not plac'd as they 'wou'd have them. Another is, Cum Res parvæ magnis Motibus agun-'tur; When Things, not of the greateſt Moment, are agitated with

'greateſt Heat; and as much Weight is laid upon a New, and not al- 1675.
'ways very Neceſſary Propoſition, as if the whole Sum of Affairs de- Car. 27
'pended upon it.——
'My Lords and Gentlemen, The King is far, infinitely far, from fear- Reſ. 15
'ing any Exceſs of this Kind here; He knows too well the Wiſdom, the 'Honour, and the Loyalty of this great Aſſembly, to apprehend any Kind 'of Error either in your Judgments, or your Affections. He does not 'only find himſelf ſafe, but he thinks himſelf arm'd too, while he is at'tended with ſuch a Nobility, ſuch a Gentry as this. You that were 'able to raiſe the King's Affairs when they were in their loweſt and moſt
'deplor'd Condition, will ſurely be able to keep them from any Relapſe.
'You that were able to make this Government take Root again, will ſure-
'ly be able to preſerve it in a growing and a flouriſhing Eſtate. Such 'Pilots need not fear a Storm! If you cou'd, this Conſideration alone
'were enough to ſupport you, That you carry Cæſar and his Fortunes;
'you ſerve a Prince in whoſe Preſervation Miracles are become Familiar;
'a Prince in whoſe Stile Dei Gratiâ ſeems not to be written by a Vul-
'gar Pen, but by the Arm of Omnipotence it ſelf. Raiſe up then, by 'your Example, the Hearts and Hopes of all thoſe whom ill Men have 'wrought upon to ſuch a Degree, as to caſt them into a Sadneſs, and
'into a Deſpondency, which is moſt unreaſonable. What the Romans
'ſcorn'd to do after the Battel of Cannæ, What the Venetians never did
'when they had loſt all their Terra Firma; That Men are now taught
'to think a Virtue, and the Sign of a wiſe and good Man, Deſperare de
'Republicâ. And all this in a Time of as much Juſtice and Peace at 'home; As good Laws for the Security of Religion and Liberty; As
'good Execution of thoſe Laws; As great Plenty of Trade and Com'merce abroad, and as likely a Conjuncture of Affairs for the Continu'ance of theſe Bleſſings to us, as ever Nation proſper'd under. Con'firm the Faith then of thoſe that are made weak, by ſhewing them the 'Stedfaſtneſs of your Belief; Give the King the Hearts of all his Sub'jects, by making him a Preſent of yours. Then will the King eſteem
'himſelf a richer Prince than if he were poſſeſs'd of all the Treaſures of
'the Eaſt: Then, tho' this Seſſion ſhou'd cloſe in a few Weeks, yet it 'may be Perpetual for the Fruit it ſhall produce, and for the Comme'moration that will follow it. Then will this Year be a true Year of 'Jubilee; and we ſhall have nothing to wiſh or pray for in this World,
'but the bleſſed Continuance of his Majeſty's long and happy Reign over
'us.

The Houſe of Commons appear'd in a very good Humour, and the firſt Thing they did was to Vote, 'Their humble and hearty Thanks to The Commons Thanks.
'his Majeſty for his gracious Promiſes and Aſſurances explain'd in his
'ſaid Speech, to preſerve and maintain us in the Eſtabliſh'd Religion,
'and our Properties according to Law, and for his Calling us together
'at this Time for that Purpoſe.' Which being preſented to the King in a full Body in the Banquetting-Houſe, his Majeſty return'd this gracious Anſwer, That he had a great Confidence in his Houſe of Commons; and that the ſaid Houſe may be confident that he wou'd always preſerve them in the Eſtabliſh'd Religion, and in their Liberties and Properties. This did not hinder them from an immediate Proceeding to a new Bill againſt the Growth of Popery; in debating of which they came to theſe three Reſolves. 1 'That in the Bill there be inſerted a Clauſe for Payment Their Reſolves againſt Popery.
'of a conſiderable Reward to any Perſon that ſhall diſcover any Popiſh
'Prieſt, who upon Tryal ſhall be prov'd to be ſo, to be paid by the Per-
'ſon to whom he ſhall be prov'd to have ſaid Maſs, or by ſuch as have
'wittingly receiv'd, ſuccour'd or entertain'd ſuch Popiſh Prieſt. 2. That

'He

1675. Car. 27 Ref. 16

'He ſhall be eſteem'd to be a Popiſh Prieſt, who ſhall be prov'd to have 'ſaid Maſs, or officiated either in this Realm, or in any Foreign Coun-'try, in the Manner of a Prieſt, according to the Uſage of the See of 'Rome, if ſuch Prieſt be not reconcil'd to the Church of England; and 'that theſe Votes ſhall not prejudice the Laws now in being concerning 'Popiſh Prieſts. 3. That Penalties be laid on all that are prov'd to have 'remain'd with any ſuch Popiſh Prieſt, when he ſhall be ſaying Maſs, or 'Officiating in the Manner of a Prieſt, according to the Uſage of the See 'of Rome.' Shortly after, they added two Reſolves more, viz. 1. 'That 'a Clauſe be inſerted into the ſaid Bill, to regulate and reſtrain Mr. At-'torney General to enter any Noli proſequi. 2. That another Clauſe be 'inſerted for the more effectual Proſecution, and Levying of Penalties 'upon Popiſh Recuſants.

After they had ſhewn their Diſlike and Reſentment againſt the Papiſts and their Proceedings, they reſolv'd to take notice of the Duke of Lauderdale, the only remaining Perſon in Favour, of the late Cabal. And to compleat their Accuſation againſt him, they had the Teſtimony of Dr. Gilbert Burnet, an eminent Scotch Divine, who had formerly been intimate with his Grace, but for good Reaſons had alter'd his Opinion of him, and his Actions. What he teſtify'd againſt this Miniſter was, 'That coming 'into England, the firſt Saturday in September 1673, he went to viſit 'the Duke of Lauderdale in his Lodgings in Whitehall, where the Duke 'and he diſcours'd of the Affairs of England and Scotland, and particu-'larly of the Proceedings of Parliament concerning the Declaration for 'ſuſpending Penal Laws in Matters Eccleſiaſtical: And being afterwards 'ask'd, Whether if Scotland being call'd to aſſiſt the King, they wou'd 'aſſiſt him or not, he anſwer'd, he thought they wou'd not; but the Duke 'reply'd, He believ'd they wou'd, and that his coming into England wou'd 'bring a great many. That the Duke asking him of the Affairs of Scot-'land, he anſwer'd, The People in Scotland that were at ſuch a Di-'ſtance, cou'd not imagine what to think of the King's Speech and Decla-'ration. Whereunto the Duke reply'd, Hinc illæ Lachrymæ! and that 'all had forſaken the King but Himſelf and the Lord Clifford.

Upon which, and other Informations, the Commons drew up a particular Addreſs againſt him to the King, which after the Preamble runs thus: 'Yet we find upon ſerious Examination of the State of this King-'dom, That there is a great Jealouſie ariſen from ſome late Proceedings 'in the Hearts of your Subjects, That ſome Perſons in great Imployment 'under your Majeſty have fomented Deſigns contrary to the Intereſt both 'of your Majeſty and your People, intending to deprive us of our anci-'ent Rights and Liberties, &c. Among thoſe who are at preſent im-'ploy'd under your Majeſty, we have juſt Cauſe to accuſe for a Promo-'ter of ſuch Deſigns the Duke of Lauderdale, lately created Earl of 'Guilford, becauſe we have heard it teſtify'd in our Houſe by ſeveral 'of our own Members, That in the Hearing before the Council of the 'Caſe of Mr. Whaley, who had committed Mr. James contrary to your 'Majeſty's Declaration of the 15th of March, 1671, He the ſaid Duke of 'Lauderdale did openly affirm in the Preſence of your Majeſty ſitting in 'Council, and before divers of your Subjects attending there, That your 'Majeſty's Edicts ought to be obey'd; for your Edicts are equal with 'Laws, and ought to be obey'd in the firſt Place; thereby, as much as 'in him lay, juſtifying the ſaid Declaration, and the Proceedings there-'upon, and declaring his Inclinations to arbitrary Counſels, in Terror of 'your good People. And we are farther confirm'd in this Opinion by 'late Acts of Parliament of a very ſtrange and dangerous Nature, which 'we have obſerv'd amongſt the Printed Statutes of your Kingdom of Scot-

The Commons Addreſs againſt the Duke of Lauderdale.

'land;

'land; the first whereof was in the Third Session of the First Parliament held there under your Majesty, Cap. 25. and the other in your Majesty's second Parliament, Cap. 2. the like whereof was never past since the Union of the two Kingdoms, and are directly contrary to the Intention of an Act past here in the fourth Year of the Reign of King James, For the utter Abolition of all Memory of Hostility, and the Dependencies thereof between England and Scotland, and for the Repressing of Occasions of Discords and Disorders in Time to come; And of a like Act past about the same Time in the Kingdom of Scotland. By Force of which said late Acts, there is a Militia settled in that Kingdom of Twenty Thousand Foot and Two Thousand Horse, who are oblig'd to be in a Readiness to march into any Part of this Kingdom, for any Service wherein your Majesty's Honour, Authority and Greatness may be concern'd; and are to obey such Orders and Directions as they shall from Time to Time receive from the Privy-Council there. By colour of which general Words we conceive this Realm may be liable to be invaded under any Pretence whatsoever; and this hath been done, as we apprehend, principally by the Procurement of the said Duke of Lauderdale; he having all the Time of these Transactions been principal Secretary of the said Kingdom, and chiefly intrusted with the Administration of Affairs of State there, and Himself Commissioner for holding the Parliament at the Time of passing the latter of the said Acts, whereby the Providing of the said Horse and Foot is effectually impos'd upon the said Kingdom, and that Extraordinary Power vested in the Privy-Council there: And we conceive we have just Reason to apprehend the ill Consequences of so great and unusual a Power; especially when the Affairs of that Kingdom are manag'd by the said Duke, who hath manifested himself a Person of such pernicious Principles. We do therefore in all Humility implore your Sacred Majesty, considering how universal a Fame and Clamour of the said Misdemeanors runneth openly throughout this your Realm, that for the Ease of the Hearts of your People, who are possess'd with extraordinary Grief and Sorrow to see your Majesty thus abus'd, and the Kingdom endanger'd, your Majesty wou'd graciously be pleas'd to remove the said Duke of Lauderdale from all his Imployments, and from your Majesty's Presence and Counsels for ever, as being a Person obnoxious and dangerous to the Government.

1675. Car. 27. Ref. 16

After some Time of Consideration, the King return'd the following Answer to the House of Commons in Writing: 'His Majesty hath consider'd of the Address against the Duke of Lauderdale, and the Reasons accompanying it: As to the Acts of Parliament mention'd to have been pass'd in Scotland, his Majesty observes that the First of those Acts was in the Year 1663, which was long before the Duke of Lauderdale was his Majesty's Commissioner in that Kingdom; And the Latter was in Pursuance of the Former. And as to the Words, by the Time of Mr. Whaley's Cause his Majesty perceiving, that if they had been spoken, they must have been spoken before the late Act of General Pardon: And his Majesty being sensible how great a Satisfaction and Security, the inviolable Preservation of the former Act of Indemnity and Oblivion hath been to all his Subjects; cannot but apprehend the dangerous Consequences of Inquiring into any Thing that hath been pardoned by any Act of General Pardon; least the Example of that might give Men Cause to fear their Security under the Act of Oblivion.' This Answer was so little Satisfactory to the Commons, that they afterwards resolv'd to draw up another Address against the Duke; but that, as well as many other Matters, prov'd abortive.

The King's Answer.

1675. Car. 27 Ref. 16

The Commons Accuſation of the Earl of Danby.

3. After the Commons had gone ſo far againſt the Scotch Favourite, they began to think upon the Engliſh One, the Lord Treaſurer Danby, who had carry'd many Things with a high Hand, and an over-ruling Genius; ſo that he prov'd a fit Mark to be ſingled out by Emulation and Detraction. The Sum of the Accuſation againſt him was, I. 'That the 'Earl had overthrown the ancient Courſe and Conſtitution of the Ex-'chequer, by perverting the Method of Receipts, in Payments and Ac-'counts contrary to Law; whereby the King's Revenue is put into Con-'fuſion and a waſteful Way of Expence, to the Deſtruction of his Cre-'dit, and expoſing his Treaſure to private Bargains and Corruptions; 'and had ingroſs'd to Himſelf the Power of Diſpoſing all the King's 'Revenues; laying aſide the Chancellor and Under-Treaſurer of the 'Exchequer, whereby all Checks and Controlls are avoided. II. That 'a Suit of Law being intended about the Marriage of the Daughter of 'Sir Thomas Hyde, the ſaid Earl caus'd one Mr. Brandley, a Principal 'Witneſs in the Cauſe, to be arreſted by an extraordinary Warrant 'from one of the Secretaries of State, and to be kept for ſome Time 'in cloſe Cuſtody; during which the Earl's Agents labour'd with Mr. 'Brandley by Threats and Promiſes not to declare the Truth, and at 'Midnight he was brought and examin'd before the King in the pre-'ſence of the Earl; whereupon Mr. Brandley was induc'd to deliver in 'a Teſtimony againſt his own Knowledge and Conſcience, he being then 'in dureſſe: And all this was done with an Intent to procure the ſaid 'Heireſs to be marry'd to the Earl's ſecond Son. III. That the Earl 'had receiv'd very great Sums of Mony, beſides the extraordinary Re-'venue, which had been waſtefully ſpent; and far greater Sums than 'ever iſſu'd out for Secret Service, without Account; the King's Debts 'remaining unpaid, the Stores unfurniſh'd, and the Navy unrepaired. 'IV. The Earl had violated the Rights and Properties of the People, 'by ſtopping, without Authority, thoſe legal Payments due in the Ex-'chequer. V. That tho' the Office of a Lord Treaſurer is always very 'full of neceſſary and great Imployments, yet the Earl had alſo aſſum'd to 'himſelf the Management of the Iriſh Affairs, which before were always 'diſpatcht by the Secretaries, and paſs'd in Council; thereby ſubtlely en-'abling himſelf the better to convert great Sums of Mony out of the 'Iriſh Revenues to his own private Advantage. VI. That the Earl had 'procured great Gifts and Grants from the Crown, whilſt under great Debts, 'by Warrants counterſign'd by Himſelf. VII. That on Decemb. 4th '1674, at the Hearing of a Cauſe in the Treaſury Chamber, ſome Acts 'of Parliament now in being were urg'd againſt a Proclamation, and con-'trary to what his Lordſhip aim'd at; whereupon the Earl, in Contempt 'of the Law, utter'd this Arbitrary Expreſſion, That a new Proclama-'tion is better than an old Act. Upon his Lordſhip's Report to the Pri-'vy-Council, the Perſon in Queſtion being a Foreigner, and not obey-'ing ſuch Proclamation, but purſuing his Right at Law, was baniſh'd 'the Kingdom.' Thus early did the Houſe of Commons ſtrike at this great Man; but when the Articles were particularly and at ſeveral Times examin'd, they firſt ſtruck out one, and then another, till upon the whole they concluded that there was not ſufficient Ground for an Impeachment againſt him.

A further Addreſs.

Not reſting here, the Commons proceeded to another Matter not leſs unacceptable to the King, whoſe Honour was particularly concern'd in it; And this was 'An humble Addreſs to his Majeſty for the ſpeedy recal-'ing all his Subjects home out of the French King's Service; and for 'hindering any more from going over for that Service for the future.' The King ſeem'd willing to comply with the latter Part, but was apparently rently averſe to the Former; and therefore after ſome Conſideration, return'd this Anſwer in Writing: 'That ſuch Troops of his Subjects that 'were in the moſt Chriſtian King's Service, before the late Treaty made 'with the States General of the United Provinces, and were not by that 'to be recall'd, as they are at preſent become inconſiderable in their 'Number; ſo his Majeſty conceives they cannot be recall'd, without de- 'rogating from his Honour and Dignity, and to the Prejudice of the 'Peace he now enjoyeth; which he hath publickly profeſs'd to maintain 'with all his Neighbours: But as to the Prohibiting the going over of 'any more, his Majeſty will renew his Proclamation, and uſe all other 'effectual Means both to forbid and hinder it.' Accordingly the King did iſſue out his Proclamation to prohibit his Subjects from going into the French King's Service; and tho' it proceeded ſo far as to recall all ſuch as had enter'd into his Service, ſince the Concluſion of the Peace with Holland, yet it gave not full Satisfaction; and they prepared a Second Addreſs, with this Addition, 'That the Officers of the ſeveral 'Ports do take care for hindering any more going over for that Service 'for the future. 1675. Car. 27 Reſ. 16 The King's Anſwer.

4. But before this, and ſeveral other Things cou'd come to any Maturity, there appear'd a famous Struggle in the Houſe of Peers, who began to think the Commons leſs zealous in their Loyalty, or perhaps more conſiderate in ſupporting the Prerogative than they had formerly been; and therefore had brought in a remarkable Bill Entituled, An Act to prevent the Dangers which may ariſe from Perſons diſaffected to the Government. By which Bill, unexpectedly brought in, all ſuch as enjoy'd any beneficial Office, or Employment, Eccleſiaſtical, or Civil, or Military, to which was added Privy-Counſellors, and Members of Parliament; were under a Penalty to take this following Oath: I A. B. do declare, that it is not lawful upon any Pretence whatſoever, to take up Arms againſt the King; and that I do abhor that Traiterous Poſition of taking Arms by his Authority, againſt his Perſon, or againſt Thoſe that are Commiſſion'd by him in Purſuance of ſuch Commiſſion: And I do ſwear, That I will not at any Time endeavour the Alteration of the Government, either in Church or State. So help me God. This Oath had, in part, been introduc'd and enforc'd in the Corporation Act, and then in the Militia Act, and afterwards in full, in the Five-Mile Act againſt the Diſſenting Teachers, but at thoſe Times limited and apply'd to more particular Perſons and Caſes. But being now contriv'd to be more general, and in effect univerſal, and at a Time when the Fervour of the Nation had much abated, it rous'd a Spirit among many of the Lords, who reſolv'd to Canvaſs the Matter with a more rigorous Strictneſs than formerly it had been done; and it occaſion'd a warm Author to ſay, No Conveyancer cou'd ever in more compendious or binding Terms, have drawn a Diſſettlement of the whole Birth-Right of England. A grand Debate amongſt the Lords,

The Bill was brought in by the Earl of Lindſey, and receiv'd its firſt Reading and Appointment for the Second without much Oppoſition. At the Second Reading the Lord Keeper, and ſome other of the Court Lords, recommended the Bill in ſet and elaborate Speeches, the Keeper calling it a moderate Security to the Church and Crown; and the other Lords declaim'd very much upon the Rebellion of the late Times, the great Number of Phanaticks, and the dangerous Principles of Rebellion ſtill remaining. But the Earl of Shaftsbury, now a total Deſerter of the Court, with ſome other Country Lords, earneſtly preſs'd that the Bill might be laid aſide, and that they might not be engag'd in the Debate of it; 'or elſe that that Freedom they ſhou'd be forc'd to uſe in the ne- Upon the Account of a new Bill.

1675. Car. 27 Ref. 16

'ceſſary Defence of their Opinion, and the preſerving of their Laws, 'Rights and Liberties, which this Bill wou'd overthrow, might not be 'miſconſtrued: For there were many Things that muſt be ſpoken upon 'the Debate, both concerning Church and State, that it was well known 'they had no Mind to hear.' Notwithſtanding this, the other Party call'd for the Queſtion of referring the Bill to a Committee; whereupon the Earl of Shaftsbury at large laid open all the miſchievous Deſigns and Conſequences of the Bill; and other Lords joyn'd with him with ſuch Reſolution, that the Debate laſted five Days before the Bill was committed to a Committee of the whole Houſe; which had hardly ever happen'd to any Bill before, and occaſion'd theſe two following Proteſtations.

A Proteſtation. The firſt Proteſtation runs thus; 'We whoſe Names are underwrit-'ten, being Peers of this Realm, do according to our Rights and anci-'ent Uſage of Parliaments, declare that the Queſtion having been put 'whether the Bill, Entituled An Act to prevent the Danger which may 'ariſe from Perſons diſaffected to the Government, doth ſo far intrench 'upon the Priviledges of this Houſe, that it ought therefore to be caſt 'out: It being reſolv'd in the Negative, we do humbly conceive that 'any Bill which impoſeth an Oath upon the Peers with a Penalty, as this 'doth, that upon the Refuſal of that Oath, They ſhall be made uncapa-'ble of Sitting and Voting in this Houſe, as it is a Thing unprecedented 'in former Times, ſo is it, in our humble Opinion, the higheſt Invaſion 'of the Liberties and Priviledges of the Peerage, that poſſibly may be, 'and moſt deſtructive of the Freedom which they ought to enjoy as 'Members of Parliament; becauſe the Priviledges of Sitting and Voting 'in Parliament is an Honour they have by Birth, and a Right ſo inherent in 'them, and inſeparable from them, as that nothing can take it away, but 'what by the Law of the Land muſt withal take away their Lives, 'and corrupt their Blood; upon which Ground we do here enter our 'Diſſent from that Vote, and our Proteſtation againſt it.' Subſcrib'd, Buckingham, Bridgewater, Wincheſter, Salisbury, Bedford, Dorſet, Aylsbury, Briſtol, Denbeigh, Pagitt, Hollis, Peter, Berkſhire, Mohun, Stamford, Hallifax, De-la-mer, Eure, Shaftsbury, Clarendon, Grey Roll, Say and Seal, Wharton. The ſecond Proteſtation was againſt the Vote

Another. of committing the Bill, in theſe Words: 'The Queſtion being put Whe-'ther the Bill ſhou'd be committed, it being carry'd in the Affirmative, 'and We after ſeveral Days Debate, being in no Meaſure ſatisfy'd, but 'ſtill apprehending that this Bill doth not only ſubvert the Priviledges, 'and Birth-right of the Peers, by impoſing an Oath upon them with the 'Penalty of loſing their Places in Parliament; but alſo, as we humbly 'conceive, ſtrike at the Root of Government; it being neceſſary to all 'Government to have Freedom of Votes and Debates in Thoſe, who 'have Power to alter, and make Laws, and beſides, the expreſs Words 'of this Bill obliging every Man to abjure all Endeavours to alter the 'Government in the Church, without regard to any Thing the Rules 'of Prudence in the Government, or Chriſtian Compaſſion to Prote-'ſtant Diſſenters, or the Neceſſity of Affairs at any Time, ſhall or may 'require. Upon theſe Conſiderations, We humbly conceive it to be of 'dangerous Conſequence to have any Bill of this Nature, ſo much as 'Committed, and do enter our Diſſents from that Vote, and Proteſtati-'on againſt it. Subſcribed, Buckingham, Wincheſter, Salisbury, Den-bigh, Briſtol, Berkſhire, Clarendon, Stamford, Shaftsbury, Wharton, Mohun, De-la-mer.

Theſe Proteſtations were read even by the Commons, and they rais'd a Storm againſt the Subſcribers in their own Houſe, where the very Liberty of entering Proteſtations was diſputed; but ended at laſt with a Vote, 'That the Reaſons given in the ſaid Proteſtations, did reflect up-'on the Honour of the Houſe, and were of dangerous Conſequence.' This begat a new Proteſtation, in which they declar'd, 'That they had 'no Intention to reflect upon any Member, much leſs upon the whole 'Houſe; therefore they proteſted againſt the Vote it ſelf.' Yet upon the Commitment of the Bill theſe Lords obtain'd two previous Votes, implying, 'That it ſhou'd not extend to deprive the Members of either 'Houſe of Parliament, of their ancient Freedom and Priviledge of De-'bating any Matters whatſoever, or Repealing, or Altering of any old, 'or preparing any new Laws, or redreſſing any publick Grievance; but 'all ſhou'd have the ſame Freedom of Speech, and all other Privileges, 'as they had before the making this Act.' But this did not ſatisfy as to the Bill it ſelf, and the Nature of the Oath, about which there aroſe very warm and many Days Debates, of which ſome Particulars are neceſſary to be remember'd. The firſt Thing enter'd upon, was, Whether there ſhou'd be an Oath at all in the Bill; in which the Lord Halifax, with great Acuteneſs, undertook to make it appear, 'That as there really was 'no Security to any State by Oaths, ſo alſo no Private Perſon, much leſs 'States-Man, wou'd ever order his Affairs as relying upon it; no Man 'wou'd ever ſleep with open Doors, or unlock'd up Plate or Treaſure, 'ſhou'd all the Town be ſworn not to rob: So that the Uſe of multiply-'ing Oaths had been moſt commonly to exclude, or diſturb ſome honeſt 'conſcientious Men, who never wou'd have been prejudicial to the Go-'vernment.' It was alſo inſiſted on by the ſame Lord and others, 'That 'the Oath impos'd by the Bill contain'd three Clauſes, the two former 'Aſſertory, and the laſt Promiſſory; and that it was worthy the Conſi-'deration of the Biſhops, Whether Aſſertory Oaths, which are properly 'appointed to give Teſtimony of a Matter of Fact, of which a Man is 'capable to be aſſur'd by the Evidence of his Senſes, be lawful to be made 'uſe of to confirm or invalidate Doctrinal Propoſitions; and whether that 'Legiſlative Power, which impoſes ſuch an Oath, doth not neceſſarily 'aſſume to it ſelf an Infallibility. And as to Promiſſory Oaths, It was 'deſir'd that thoſe learned Prelates wou'd conſider the Opinion of Gro-'tius de jure Belli & Pacis, lib. 2. cap. 3. who ſeems to make it plain, 'that thoſe Kind of Oaths are forbidden by our Saviour Chriſt, Mat. 5. 34, '37. and whether it wou'd not become the Fathers of the Church, when 'they have well weigh'd that and other Places of the New Teſtament, to 'be more tender in multiplying Oaths, than hitherto the great Men of 'the Church have been?' But the Biſhops carry'd the Point, and an Oath was order'd by the Majority of the Houſe.

The Continuation of the Debate.

After ſome further Conſiderations, they proceeded to the Particulars of the Oath, as Firſt, I A. B. do declare that it is not lawful upon any Pretence whatſoever, to take up Arms againſt the King. Againſt which it was objected, 'That it might introduce a mighty Change in the Go-'vernment, to oblige all the Men of Truſt in England, to declare the 'exact Boundary, and Extent, of the Oath of Allegiance, and enforce 'ſome Things to be ſtated, that are much better involv'd in Generals, 'and perhaps are not capable of another Way of Expreſſion, without 'great Wrong on the one Side, or the Other. There was a Law of '25 Edward 3, That Arms ſhall not be taken up againſt the King, and it 'is Treaſon ſo to do, and it was a very juſt and reaſonable Law: But it 'was an idle Queſtion at beſt, to ask Whether Arms in any Caſe can be 'taken up againſt a Lawful Prince, becauſe it neceſſarily brought a Diffi-'culty into every Man's Mind, How there can be a Diſtinction then left 'between Abſolute and Bounded Monarchies, if Monarchs had only the

of the Oath in the Bill.

I.

'Fear

1675. Car. 27 Ref. 16

'Fear of God, and no Fear of Human Reſiſtance to reſtrain them.' And it was further urg'd, 'That if the Chance of Human Affairs ſhou'd give 'the French King a juſt Title and Inveſtiture in the Crown of England, 'and he ſhou'd avowedly own a Deſign by Force, to change the Religi- 'on, and, by the Extirpation of the Chief of the Proteſtant Party, make 'his Government here as abſolute as in France, whether in ſuch, or like 'Caſes, the Oath wou'd be a Service to the Government as it is now 'eſtabliſh'd? It was They overthrew the Government, that propos'd to 'place any Part of it above the Fear of Man: For in the Engliſh Go- 'vernment, and all limited Monarchies, there every individual Subject 'was under the Fear of the King and his People, either for breaking the 'Peace, or diſturbing the common Intereſt every Man had in it; or if 'he invaded the Perſon or Right of his Prince, he invaded his whole 'People, who had bound up in him and deriv'd from him all their Li- 'berty, Property and Safety: As alſo the Prince himſelf, was under the 'Fear of breaking that golden Chain and Contexture between Him and 'his People, by making his Intereſt contrary to that they juſtly and right- 'ly claim'd. And therefore, ſaid they, neither our Anceſtors, nor any 'other Country, free like ours, while they preſerv'd their Liberties, did 'ever ſuffer any Mercenary, or ſtanding Guards to their Prince; but 'took care That his Safety ſhou'd be in Them, as theirs was in 'Him.

2. They went further in the ſecond Particular of the Oath, And that I do abhor that Trayterous Poſition of taking Arms by his Authority againſt his Perſon: Againſt which they alledg'd, 'That if this were meant an 'Explanation of the Oath of Allegiance, to leave Men without Pretence 'to oppoſe where the individual Perſon of the King was, that the Pro- 'poſition as it was here ſet down was Univerſal, and yet in moſt Caſes 'the Poſition was not to be abhor'd by honeſt or wiſe Men: For there 'was but one Caſe, and that never like to happen again, where this Po- 'ſition was in danger to be Trayterous, which was the Caſe of the Long 'Parliament, made perpetual by the King's own Act, by which the Go- 'vernment was perfectly alter'd, and made inconſiſtent with it ſelf; but 'it was to be ſuppos'd the Crown had ſufficient Warning, and full Power 'to prevent falling into the like Danger. But the other Caſes were ma- 'ny, and ſuch as may every Day occur, wherein this Poſition was ſo far 'from being Trayterous, that it wou'd prove neceſſary and a Duty. As 'in the famous Inſtance of Henry the Sixth, who being a ſoft and weak 'Prince, when taken Priſoner by his Couſin Edward the Fourth, that 'pretended to the Crown, and the great Earl of Warwick, was carry'd 'in their Armies, gave what Orders and Commiſſions they pleas'd, and 'yet all that were Loyal to him adhered to his Wife and Son, fought in 'a pitcht Battel againſt him in Perſon, and retook him: This was di- 'rectly taking up Arms by his Authority againſt his Perſon, and againſt 'thoſe that were Commiſſion'd by him; and yet to this Day no Man ever 'blam'd them, but thought that if they had done otherwiſe, they had be- 'tray'd their Prince.' Then they mention'd the Inſtance of King Charles the Sixth of France, and of King James in his Minority, and then put the Caſe, 'That ſhou'd a future King of England, of the ſame Temper 'with Henry the 6th, or Charles the 6th of France, be taken Priſoner by 'the Spaniard, Dutch, or French, whoſe overgrowing Power ſhou'd give 'them Thoughts of univerſal Empire, and ſhou'd, with the Perſon and 'the Commiſſion of the King, invade England for a Conqueſt, were it not 'ſuitable to the Engliſh Loyalty to joyn with the Son of that King, for 'the Defence of his Father's Crown and Dignity, even againſt his Perſon 'and Commiſſion? In thoſe and the like Caſes it was not juſtify'd, but that

'the ſtrict Letter of the Law might be otherwiſe conſtrued, and when 1675.
'wiſely conſider'd, fit it ſhou'd be ſo; yet that it was not ſafe either for 'the Kingdom, or Perſon of the King and his Crown, that it ſhou'd be Car. 27
'in expreſs Words ſworn againſt: For, ſaid they, if we ſhall forſwear all Ref. 16
'Diſtinctions, which ill Men have made uſe of, either in Rebellion or
'Hereſy, we muſt extend the Oath to all the Particulars of Divinity and
'Politicks.' To this Biſhop Morley of Wincheſter reply'd, That to take up Arms in ſuch Caſes, was not againſt, but for the Perſon of the King. Upon which his Lordſhip was told, That he might as well, and much better, have left it upon the old Oath of Allegiance, than have made ſo wide a Gap in his new Declaration.

The laſt Particular in the declaratory Part of the Oath was, Or againſt thoſe that are Commiſſion'd by him in Purſuance of ſuch Commiſſion. In 3.
this they ſaid, 'The Mask was plainly pluck'd off, and Arbitrary Go- 'vernment appear'd bare-fac'd, and a ſtanding Army eſtabliſh'd by Act of 'Parliament: For if whatſoever was by the King's Commiſſion, cou'd not be
'oppos'd by the King's Authority, then a ſtanding Army was Law when'ever the King pleas'd: And yet the King's Commiſſion was never thought
'ſufficient to protect or juſtify any Man, where it is againſt his Autho- 'rity, which is Law; this allow'd, the whole Law of England was al-
'ter'd, in the moſt eſſential and fundamental Parts of it, and made the 'whole Law of Property to become Arbitrary, and without effect, when'ever the King pleas'd. For Inſtance, if in a Suit with a great Favourite,
'a Man recovers Houſe and Lands, and by Courſe of Law be put into
'Poſſeſſion by the Sheriff, and afterwards a Warrant is obtain'd by the 'Intereſt of the Favourite, to command ſome Soldiers of the Standing
'Army to take Poſſeſſion and deliver it back, in ſuch a Caſe, the Man
'in Poſſeſſion may juſtify the Defence of Himſelf, by killing thoſe who
'ſhall forceably endeavour to enter his Houſe; here the Party, whoſe
'Houſe is invaded, takes up Arms by the King's own Authority againſt
'thoſe, who are Commiſſion'd by him. In like manner, if the Soldiers had 'been Commiſſion'd to defend the Houſe againſt the Sheriff, when he firſt
'went to take Poſſeſſion, no Order or Commiſſion of the King's cou'd put
'a Stop to the Sheriff, who had ſtill the King's Authority in raiſing the
'Poſſe of the County to put the Law in Execution.' They further ſaid,
'It was not out of the Way to ſuppoſe, That if any King hereafter ſhou'd,
'contrary to the Petition of Right, demand and levy Money by Privy-
'Seal, or otherwiſe, and cauſe Soldiers to enter and diſtrain for ſuch il'legal Taxes, that in ſuch a Caſe any Man might defend his Houſe againſt
'them; and yet this was of the ſame Nature with the former, and againſt
'the Words of the Declaration. Theſe Inſtances, tho' ſomewhat rough,
'were to be excus'd when All was concern'd; and however happy they 'were now in a Prince, the Suppoſitions were not extravagant, when
'they conſider'd that Kings were but Men, and ſurrounded with greater
'Temptations than others.' The Lord Keeper ſaid Theſe were remote Inſtances; to which the Earl of Salisbury quickly and freely reply'd, That they wou'd not hereafter prove ſo, when this new Declaration had made the Practice of them Juſtifiable: Many other Things were urg'd, but leſs Fundamental, and the Debate laſted ſixteen or ſeventeen whole Days, the Houſe often ſitting till Nine at Night, and ſometimes till Midnight: In the Concluſion of which, the Duke of Buckingham, as General of the Party, and laſt in the Field, made a famous Speech conſiſting of eloquent, regular, and well-plac'd Non-Senſe, hoping that that might prevail when Nothing elſe wou'd; and ſo brought Confuſion into the Houſe.

5. But

1675. Car. 27 Ref. 16

A great Difference between the Lords and Commons.

5. But the whole was diverted and interrupted by an Accident that rais'd a violent Conteſt and Diviſion between both Houſes, with relation to the Powers and Priviledges of Parliament. It was occaſion'd by one Dr. Shirley's bringing an Appeal in the Houſe of Lords, from a Decree in Chancery, againſt Sir John Fagg, a Member of the Houſe of Commons; which that Houſe look'd upon as an open Infringement of their Priviledges. Accordingly they order'd Dr. Shirley to be taken into Cuſtody of the Serjeant at Arms; and the firſt Account they heard of him was, That the Warrant for taking the Doctor into Cuſtody was forceably taken from the Serjeant's Deputy by the Lord Mohun. Upon which they ſent to the Upper Houſe to demand Juſtice againſt the ſaid Lord Mohun, and inſtead of Reparation receiv'd this Anſwer from them, 'That 'the Lord Mohun had done Nothing but what was according to his Du-'ty.' The Commons deſired 'That there might be no further Proceed-'ings in the Cauſe before their Lordſhips;' which occaſion'd a Meſſage from them, 'That a Conference be deſired by the Lords to know whe-'ther the Houſe of Commons own'd the Warrant for taking Dr. Shir-'ley into Cuſtody.' They anſwer'd 'They wou'd conſider of it,' and Reſolved, 'That the Meſſage laſt receiv'd from the Lords, was an un-'parliamentary Meſſage; and that Whoſoever ſhou'd appear at the Bar 'of the Lords Houſe to proſecute any Suit againſt any Member of theirs, 'ſhou'd be deem'd an Infringer of the Priviledges of Parliament.' Soon after they receiv'd this Reſolution of the Houſe of Peers, 'That it is 'the undoubted Right of the Lords in Judicature to receive and deter-'mine in Time of Parliament Appeals from Inferior Courts, tho' Mem-'bers of either Houſe be concern'd, that there may be no Failure of Ju-'ſtice in the Land; and from their Rights and Priviledges, and the Ex-'erciſes thereof, their Lordſhips will never depart.' The Commons on the other Side reſolv'd, 'That it is the undoubted Right of their Houſe, 'That none of the Members thereof be Summon'd to attend the Houſe 'of Lords, during the Seſſion and Priviledge of Parliament; and that a 'Conference be deſired with their Lordſhips thereupon.' To which the Lords ſent an Anſwer, 'That they agreed to a Conference to Morrow 'Morning, provided Nothing was offer'd then that might concern their 'Lordſhip's Juriſdiction.' Upon this the Commons Voted, 'That it 'was no Grant of a Conference, as it was deſired;' and proceeded ſo far as to Reſolve, 'That there lyes no Appeal to the Juriſdiction of the 'Lords in Parliament from Courts of Equity.' And farther to ſhew their Authority, they took up Serjeant Pemberton, Serjeant Peck, Sir John Churchill and Mr. Porter, in Weſtminſter-Hall, as being Council in the Caſe, by the Speaker's Warrant, and committed them to the Cuſtody of the Serjeant at Arms; and Sir John Fagg, their own Member, for his Compliance with the Lords, was ſent to the Tower.

The Merits of the Cauſe.

The Reaſons on both Sides for theſe Proceedings, are worth the Inſerting, eſpecially ſince they were never publiſh'd before. The Lords in a Conference deliver'd theſe by the Lord Privy-Seal:

For the Lords.

'1. The Lords 'do take notice of the Houſe of Commons their ordering into Cuſtody 'of their Serjeant at Arms Mr. Serjeant Pemberton, Mr. Serjeant Peck, 'Sir John Churchill, and Mr. Charles Porter, Counſellors at Law, aſ-'ſign'd by their Lordſhips at the Barr of their Houſe. 2. The Lords 'do judge theſe Orders for Impriſonment to be Illegal and Arbitrary, 'and the Exerciſe thereof a great Indignity to the King's Majeſty in this 'his higheſt Court of Judicature in this Kingdom, the Lords in Parlia-'ment, where his Majeſty is higheſt, and where the laſt Reſort in all 'Cauſes, and over all Perſons, is undoubtedly fix'd, and permanently 'lodg'd.

'lodg'd. 3. It is an unexampled Uſurpation, and Breach of Priviledge 1675.
'againſt the Houſe of Peers, That their Orders or Judgments ſhou'd
'be diſpens'd with, or endeavour'd to be controverted, or the Execu- Car. 27
'tion thereof obſtructed by the Lower Houſe of Parliament, who are Ref. 16
'no Court, nor have any Authority to adminiſter an Oath, or give any 'Judgment. 4. It is a tranſcendent Invaſion of the Rights and Liberties
'of the Subject, and againſt Magna Charta, and the Petition of Right, 4
'and many other Laws which have provided That no Free-Man ſhall
'be impriſon'd, or otherwiſe reſtrain'd of his Liberty, but by due Pro-
'ceſs of Law. 5. This tends to the Subverſion of the Government of 'this Kingdom, and to the Introducing of Arbitrarineſs and Diſorders.
'Becauſe it is in the Nature of an Injunction from the Lower Houſe,
'who have no Authority, nor Power of Judicature over inferior Sub'jects, much leſs over the King and Lords, againſt the Orders and Judg'ments of the Supream Court. We are further commanded to acquaint
'you, That the Lords have therefore, out of the Juſtice which they are 'Diſpenſers of againſt Oppreſſion and Breach of Laws, by Judgment
'of this Court, ſet at Liberty, by the Gentleman-Uſher of the black
'Rod, all the ſaid Perſons, and prohibited the Lieutenant of the Tower,
'and all other Keepers of Priſons, and all Perſons moleſting or charging
'the ſaid Gentlemen, or any of them, in this Caſe; and if any Perſon
'whatſoever ſhall preſume to the contrary, their Lordſhips will exe'cute Authority with thoſe intruſted for putting the Laws in Execu'tion.

To which the Commons return'd the following Anſwer: 'Your Lord- For the Commons.
'ſhips having deſired the laſt Conference upon Matters of high Import- 'ance, concerning the Dignity of the King, and Safety of the Govern- 'ment, the Commons did not expect to hear from your Lordſhips at 'that Conference Things ſo contrary to, and inconſiſtent with the Mat'ters upon which the ſaid Conference was deſir'd, as were then deliver'd
'by your Lordſhips. It was much below the Expectations of the Com'mons, that after the Repreſentation of your Lordſhip's Meſſage of Mat'ters of ſo high Importance, the Part upon which the Conference was 'grounded, ſhou'd prove only the Commitment of four Lawyers to the
'Cuſtody of their own Serjeant at Arms, for a manifeſt Violation of the 'Priviledges of their Houſe. But the Commons were much more
'ſurpriz'd, when your Lordſhips had introduc'd the Conference with 'an Aſſurance That it was in Order to a good Correſpondence between the 'two Houſes, that your Lordſhips ſhou'd aſſume a Power to judge
'the Orders of the Houſe of Commons for impriſoning the ſaid Law'yers, to be illegal and arbitrary, and the Execution thereof a great
'Indignity to the King's Majeſty; with many other high Reflections up'on the Houſe of Commons, throughout the whole Conference; Where-
'by your Lordſhips have condemn'd the whole Houſe of Commons as 'Criminal, which is without Precedent or Example, or any Ground or
'Reaſon ſo to do. 1. It is not againſt the King's Dignity for the Houſe
'of Commons to puniſh by Impriſonment the Commoner that is guilty
'of violating thoſe Proceedings that be according to the known Laws and
'Cuſtoms of Parliament, and the Rights of their Priviledges, declared
'by the King's Royal Predeceſſors in former Parliaments, and by Him-
'ſelf in this. But your Lordſhips claiming to be the Supream Court,
'and that his Majeſty is higheſt in his Royal Eſtate in the Court of Ju-
'dicature there, is a Diminution of the Dignities of the King, who is
'higheſt in his Royal Eſtate in full Parliament, and is derogatory to the 'Authority of the whole Parliament, by appropriating it to your Selves.
'2. The Commons did not by this Impriſonment infringe any Priviled-

1675. Car. 27 Ref. 16

'ges of the House of Peers, but only defend and maintain their own: 'On the other Side, your Lordships do highly intrench on the Rights 'and Priviledges of the House of Commons, by denying them to be any 'Court, or to have any Authority or Power of Judicature; which if ad-'mitted, will leave them without any Power or Authority to preserve 'themselves. As for what the Lords call transcendent Invasion of the 'Rights and Liberties of the Subject, and against Magna Charta, the 'Petition of Right, and many other Laws, the House of Commons 'presume your Lordships know, That neither the Great Charter, Pe-'tition of Right, or any other Laws, do take away the Laws and Customs 'of Parliament, or of either House of Parliament; or else your Lord-'ships have much forgotten the Great Charter; and those other Laws 'in the several Judgments you have pass'd upon the King's Subjects in Cases 'of Priviledges: But the Commons cannot find by Magna Charta, or 'any other Laws, or ancient Customs of Parliament, That your Lord-'ships have any Jurisdiction in Cases of Appeals from the Courts of Equi-'ty. We are further commanded to acquaint you, That the Inlargement 'of those Persons in Prison by Order of the House of Commons by the 'Gentleman Usher of the Black-Rod, and the Prohibition which threat-'ens all Officers, and other Persons whatsoever, not to receive or detain 'them, is an apparent Breach of the Rights and Priviledges of the 'House of Commons; and they have therefore caused them to be reta-'ken into the Custody of the Serjeant at Arms, and have committed 'them to the Tower.

The King interposes.

6. These Disputes running very high, and more like to encrease, than meet with any Accommodation, the King thought fit to summon both Houses of Parliament to White-Hall, where, June 5, he made the following Speech to them: 'My Lords and Gentlemen, You may remember 'That at the Meeting of the Session, I told you No Endeavours wou'd 'be wanting to make the Continuance of this Parliament Unpracticable: 'I am sorry that Expression hath so quickly shew'd you the Truth of 'what I then said; but I hope you are all convinc'd, That the Intent of 'all these Contrivances is only to procure a Dissolution. I confess, I look 'on it as a most malicious Design of those that are Enemies to Me, and 'the Church of England; and were the Contrivers known, I wou'd not 'doubt but the Dislike of their Practices wou'd alone be a Means of 'bringing the Houses to a good Understanding: But since I cannot pre-'scribe any Way how to arrive to the Discovery of it, I must tell you 'plainly my Opinion, That the Means of coming to any Composure be-'tween your Selves, cannot be without admitting of such Free Confe-'rences, as may convince one another by the Reasons then offer'd, or 'enable Me to judge rightly of the Differences, when all hath been said 'on both Sides, as the Matter will afford. For I am not to suffer the 'Differences to grow to Disorders in the whole Kingdom, if I can pre-'vent it; and I am sure my Judgment shall be Impartial between my two 'Houses of Parliament; but I must let you know, That whilst you are 'in Debate about Your Priviledges, I will not suffer my Own to be in-'vaded. I have no more to say to you at this Time, but to desire, as 'I did when we met first, That you wou'd yet consider, and not suffer 'ill Mens Designs to hinder this Session from a happy Conclusion.

The Commons immediately Resolv'd, nemine contradicente, 'That 'the humble and hearty Thanks of this House be return'd to his Maje-'sty for his gracious Speech this Day made to both Houses of Parlia-'ment, and the Expressions therein contain'd.' But Resolv'd also, 'That it 'doth not appear to this House, That any Member thereof hath either con-

'triv'd

'triv'd or promoted the Differences between the two Houſes of Parliament, in Aſſerting the Rights of the Commons of England, and the 'Priviledges of this Houſe, or to have done any Thing inconſiſtent with 'his Duty, or the Truſt in him repoſed.' The Lords on the other Side ſent the Uſher of the Black-Rod to the Tower to demand the four Lawyers committed by the Commons; but being refuſed by Sir John Robinſon the Lieutenant, they addreſs'd the King for Removing him from his Place, to which his Majeſty return'd an uncertain Anſwer. This failing, the Lieutenant was ſerv'd with four Writs of Habeas Corpus, to bring the ſaid four Lawyers before the King and his Parliament at Weſtminſter the next Morning. This was a puzling Caſe to the Lieutenant, who immediately advis'd with the Houſe of Commons, who did not only promiſe him Protection, but came to theſe following Reſolves. '1. That 'no Commoner of England, committed by the Order or Warrant of 'this Houſe for Breach of the Priviledges, or Contempt of the Autho-'rity of the ſaid Houſe, ought without the Order of this Houſe to be 'by any Writ of Habeas Corpus, or any other Authority whatſoever, 'made to appear and anſwer, or to do, or receive any Determination 'in the Houſe of Peers, during the Seſſion of Parliament wherein ſuch 'Perſons were committed. 2. That the Order of the Houſe of Peers 'for iſſuing out the Writs of Habeas Corpus is inſufficient and illegal, 'for that it is general, and expreſſeth no particular Cauſe of Priviledge, 'and commands the King's Great Seal to be put to Writs not returnable 'before the ſaid Houſe of Peers. 3. That the Lord-Keeper be acquaint-'ed with theſe Reſolutions, to the end that the Writs of Habeas Corpus 'be ſuſpended, as contrary to Law, and the Priviledges of this Houſe. '4. That a Meſſage be ſent to the Lords, to acquaint their Lordſhips, 'That theſe Gentlemen were committed by the Order and Warrant of 'this Houſe, for manifeſt Breach and Contempt of the Authority of this 'Houſe. 5. That a Meſſage be ſent to the Houſe of Lords to deſire a 'Conference upon the Subject Matter of the laſt Conference.

The Diſputes increaſe.

But they immediately receiv'd a more material Meſſage themſelves from the King, who reſolving not any longer to be perplex'd with endleſs Difficulties, ſent for them to the Houſe of Peers, where from the Throne he made this following Speech to both Houſes: 'My Lords and 'Gentlemen, I think I have given ſufficient Evidence to the World that 'I have not been wanting on my part, in my Endeavours to procure the 'full Satisfaction of all my Subjects, in the Matters both of Religion and 'Property. I have not only invited you to thoſe Conſiderations at our 'firſt Meeting, but I have been careful through the whole Seſſion, that 'no Concern of my own ſhou'd divert you from them. Beſides, as I 'had only deſign'd the Matter of it to be the Procuring of good Laws, 'ſo, for the Gaining of them, I have already waited much longer than 'I intended, and ſhou'd have been contented ſtill to have continu'd my 'Expectations, had there any Hopes remain'd of a good Concluſion: 'But I muſt confeſs the ill Deſigns of our Enemies have been too prevalent 'againſt thoſe good ones I had propos'd to my ſelf, in behalf of my Peo-'ple; and thoſe unhappy Differences between my two Houſes are grown 'to ſuch a Height, that I find no poſſible Means of putting an End to 'them, but by a Prorogation. It is with great Unwillingneſs that I make 'uſe of this Expedient, having always intended an Adjournment, for the 'Preſerving of ſuch good Bills as were unfiniſh'd; but my Hopes are, 'that by this Means, the preſent Occaſion of Differences being taken 'away, you will be ſo careful hereafter of the Publick, as not to ſeek 'new Ones, nor to revive the Old. I intend to meet you again in Win-'ter,

The King prorogues the Houſe with a Speech.

The End of the Fourteenth Session of the Second Parliament.

'ter, and have directed my Lord Keeper to Prorogue you till the thir'teenth Day of October next.

Thus on the 9th Day of June ended the Fourteenth Session of the Second and Long Parliament, after it had continu'd very near the Space of two Months. Only five Bills were pass'd, and all of them private, therefore not mention'd. Others were in a considerable Forwardness, and three Hundred Thousand Pounds was design'd to be given the King for the Building of Ships; but at the same Time the Commons had determin'd to appropriate the ancient Tunnage and Poundage, amounting to four hundred Thousand Pounds a Year, to the Use of the Navy, as it was first design'd; but this was no ways acceptable to the Court, and was thought to be one Occasion of the Loss of the Other. Indeed they seem'd to have had very little Inclination to give Money, and particularly upon the Account of the present Lord Treasurer, at whose Greatness they were not a little uneasy; and tho' they had in effect acquitted him of the Articles against him, yet the most considerable of them, fomented by the Lord Arlington himself, had agreed, not to consent to give the King any Money while the present Lord Treasurer continu'd in his Place.

III. 1. Before, and during this Interval of Parliament, the General Peace, in which his Britannick Majesty was so nearly concern'd, proceeded by slow Steps beyond Sea. After the English Mediation had been fully accepted, the first Point consider'd on was the Place of Treaty, which occasion'd no small Dispute; the several Parties reciprocally proposing or rejecting several Places: But at last, Sir William Temple, who was very active in it, having nam'd Cleve and Nimeguen, the Latter was agreed on first by France, and afterwards by the Allies. But it soon appear'd that Nothing of Moment cou'd be brought to bear till the finishing of the next Campaign; which prov'd but of little Honour or Advantage to the French in Flanders, but much worse to them upon the Rhine. Here they receiv'd a Blow much more considerable to them than the Loss of a Province, which was the Death of the famous Mareschal de Turenne, who was taken off by a Cannon Ball in a Skirmish. The Astonishment was unspeakable in the French Camp, upon the Loss of such a General; and the Presumption as great in that of the Imperialists, who look'd upon themselves as Masters of the whole French Army, that was straitned between them and the Rhine, in want, distemper'd, and above all discourag'd by the Fall of their Captain. All others had the same Expectation; but the Mareschal de Lorge taking the Command of the Army, had the Honour of making a Retreat that was worth a Victory; and by the Force of Order and Conduct, with the Bravery of the English Troops, and Captain Churchill among them, he pass'd the Rhine in Sight of the Imperialists, and preserv'd the French Army. The Imperialists soon after took Triers, and with their Allies made such a Progress, and Change in the Face of Affairs, that the King of England in a Letter to Sir William Temple, bid him use it for an Argument to induce the Prince of Orange to be easy in the Business of Peace, That it was now Time for him to begin to apprehend again the Greatness of the House of Austria, instead of that of France. When Sir William afterwards put the Prince in mind of this new Apprehension, his Highness very readily reply'd, There was no Fear of that, till they shou'd go beyond the Peace of the Pyrennees; whenever that shou'd happen, he shou'd be as much a French Man, as he was now a Spaniard.

Affairs abroad.

In the mean Time the King of England, seeing the Negotiations of the Peace for a Time laid asleep, sent for Sir William Temple to take a short

Turn

Turn into England, and give him an Account of all the Obſervations he had made abroad, in the preſent Conjunctures and Diſpoſitions; as well as receive his Majeſty's Inſtructions, for the future Progreſs of his Mediation. Upon his Arrival ſoon after the Prorogation of the Parliament, his Majeſty diſcovering to him the ſeveral Reaſons that had mov'd him to it, ſaid, That he doubted much while the War laſted abroad, it wou'd give Occaſion or Pretence for thoſe Heats that had of late appear'd in the Parliament, and make him very uneaſy in his Revenue, which ſo much needed their Aſſiſtance: That ſome of the warm Leaders in both Houſes had a mind to engage him in a War with France, which they ſhou'd not do for many Reaſons; and, among the reſt, becauſe he was ſure if they did, they wou'd leave him in it, and make uſe of it to ruin his Miniſters, and make him depend upon them more than he intended, or any King wou'd deſire. But beſides all this, he doubted an impertinent Quarrel between the Lord Treaſurer and Lord Chamberlain, did him more Diſſervice in the Parliament than he cou'd imagine: For the laſt did not care what Harm he did his Buſineſs there, ſo he hop'd to ruin the Lord Treaſurer; and had perſuaded a great many in the Houſe of Commons, that this wou'd certainly be compaſs'd, if they were ſtanch, in giving no Mony during his Miniſtry. That Sir William knew they were both his Friends, and He deſir'd he wou'd reconcile them while he ſtay'd in England. Sir William endeavour'd it, but fail'd: The Earl of Danby was very inclinable, being ſo poſted as to deſire only to continue where he was; but the Lord Arlington was ſo uneaſy at his preſent Condition, which he chiefly attributed to the Treaſurer's Greatneſs, that he was unmanageable upon that Subject. So that when Sir William found the Wound too much rankled to be cured, he deſiſted; telling each of them, That ſince he cou'd not make them Friends, he wou'd however live with them both, as if they were ſo; and deſir'd them not to expect he ſhou'd ſacrifice one Friend to another. The Treaſurer was contented with this Frankneſs; but the Earl of Arlington cou'd not bear this neither, but grew dry and ſtiff in all that paſs'd between them two; often mingling little Reproaches of Sir William's Greatneſs with the Treaſurer; and grew ſo weary of the Scene at Court, where he found himſelf left out, that he retired into the Country for the reſt of the Summer.

The King's Diſcourſe with Sir William Temple.

Thus the Seeds of Diſcontent, that had been ſown in the Parliament under the Counſels of the Cabal, began to ſpring faſt, and root deep, after their Power was wholly at an End; and theſe Heats were, under other Covers, fomented by two of the Chief that compos'd that Miniſtry, Shaftsbury and Buckingham, and with the Help of Time and Accidents, grew to thoſe Flames that afterwards appear'd. But whatever began or increas'd them, it is certain theſe Agitations in England had remarkable Effects on thoſe on the War and Peace abroad. For the Confederates were confident, That the Humour of the Parliament and People wou'd at length engage the King in their Quarrel; which they knew wou'd force France to ſuch a Peace as they deſired. Among the reſt, Spain was ſo preſuming, That England wou'd not ſuffer the Loſs of Flanders, that they grew careleſs of its Defence, or of thoſe Orders and Supplies that were neceſſary to it; at preſent relying upon the Dutch to preſerve it, and on the King of England hereafter, whenever he ſhou'd find it more in Danger. And theſe Conſiderations made the Allies leſs inclinable to a Peace, which they might have had upon better Conditions the following Winter, than ever after fell to their Share, by Revolutions not then foreſeen, but yet ſuch as were juſtly ſuſpected by thoſe who knew the Weakneſs of the Spaniards, the Diviſions of the Imperial, and the uncertain Meaſures of the Engliſh Court.

Diviſions at home.

At

1675. Car. 27 Ref. 16

At home, the chiefeſt Preparations, as well as the greateſt Expectations, were about the next meeting of Parliament, the Diſſolution of which was deſired by moſt of the Diſſenting Party, but not now ſo much by the Roman Catholicks, who look'd upon the Caſe as to them to be very much alter'd, as we find by ſome of Mr. Coleman's Letters, which were written in this Interval of Parliament, and are of too great Moment to be wholly omitted. In one dated Auguſt 30, to the Pope's Inter-Nuncio, he has theſe Words; 'The Duke hath almoſt ſurmounted all the Difficulties 'which have oppos'd his Eſtabliſhment: The Face of his Affairs are well 'chang'd; for we now paſſionately wiſh to ſee the coming on of the Par-'liament, which we ſo much fear'd before: And while it was held doubt-'ful whether it ought to meet or no, we employ'd all our Power to bring 'it on; which Point we have gain'd but within theſe few Days. And 'for my Part, I no ways doubt but that we ſhall receive as much good 'by it, as we apprehended ill, provided that the Duke fail not in the 'Execution of the good Reſolutions which he hath taken.' In a long Letter wrote about a Month after to the French King's Confeſſor, Father Le Cheſe, in which he gave him a ſhort Hiſtory of three Years Tranſactions, he ſays thus: 'I take our Caſe to be much the ſame, as it was the 'laſt Seſſions; if we can advance the Duke's Intereſt one Step forward, 'we ſhall put him out of the Reach of all Chances for ever, and all wou'd 'come over to him as the only ſteady Center of our Government. In or-'der to this, we have two great Deſigns to attempt the next Seſſions: '1. That which we were about before, viz. To put the Parliament up-'on making it their humble Requeſt to the King, That the Fleet may be 'put to his Royal Highneſs's Care. 2. To get an Act for a General Li-'berty of Conſcience. If we carry theſe two, or either of them, we ſhall 'in effect do what we liſt afterwards.——Therefore if his moſt Chriſtian 'Majeſty wou'd ſtand by us a little in this Conjuncture, and help us to 'ſuch a Sum as twenty Thouſand Pounds Sterling (which is no great 'Matter to venture upon ſuch an Undertaking as this) I wou'd be con-'tent to be ſacrific'd to the utmoſt Malice of my Enemies, if I did not 'ſucceed. I have propos'd this ſeveral Times to Monſieur Rouvigny, 'who ſeems always of my Opinion, but I know not [being a Proteſtant] 'whether he will be as zealous in this Point as a Catholick wou'd be; be-'cauſe our prevailing in theſe Things will give the greateſt Blow to the 'Proteſtant Religion here, that ever it receiv'd ſince its Birth, which 'perhaps he wou'd not be very glad to ſee; eſpecially when he believes 'there is another Way of doing his Maſter's Buſineſs without it, which 'is by a Diſſolution of the Parliament.——But I think our Caſe extream-'ly alter'd from what it was a Year ago in relation to a Diſſolution; for 'then the Body of our governing Miniſters, all but the Earl of Arling-'ton, were entirely united to the Duke, and wou'd have govern'd his 'Way, if they had been free from all Fear and Controul, as they wou'd 'have been, if the Parliament had been diſſolv'd: But having ſince then 'been engag'd in quite different Counſels, and embark'd themſelves and 'Intereſts upon other Bottoms, having declar'd themſelves againſt Pope-'ry, &c. to diſſolve the Parliament ſimply, and without any other Step 'made, will leave them to govern what Way they liſt, &c.' Soon after, and a little before the Meeting of the Parliament, he ſent another Letter to the ſame Confeſſor, which, when diſcover'd, made a mighty Impreſſion upon the Nation, and the more becauſe he told him of writing after a Way inviſible to other People, by the Juice of a Lemon, &c. In which Letter, he has theſe ſtartling Words: 'We have here a mighty Work 'upon our Hands, no leſs than the Converſion of three Kingdoms, and 'by that perhaps the ſubduing of a Peſtilent Hereſy, which has domi-'neered Coleman's remarkable Letters.

'neered over a great Part of this Northern World a long Time; there 'were never ſuch Hopes of Succeſs ſince the Death of Queen Mary, as 'now in our Days: When God has given us a Prince who is become '(may I ſay, a Miracle) zealous of being the Author and Inſtrument of 'ſo glorious a Work; but the Oppoſition we are ſure to meet with, is 'alſo like to be great; ſo that it imports us to get all the Aid and 'Aſſiſtance we can, For the Harveſt is great, and the Labourers but 'few. 1675. The FIFTEENTH SESSION of the Second Parliament.

2. Before the Meeting of the Parliament, thoſe Debates in the Houſe of Lords concerning the new intended Act and Oath were made publick; which ſo affronted and offended the Court, that an Order was given for the burning of them. This was no popular, but was thought a neceſſary Act, to prepare the Way for the next Seſſion, which according to Prorogation met on the 13th Day of October, after a Receſs or Interval of a little above four Months. This was the Fifteenth Seſſion of the Second and Long Parliament, concerning which Mens Curioſities and Expectations were rais'd as high as any that preceded it. The King being ſeated on the Throne, and adorn'd with his Robes and Crown, made the following Speech to both Houſes: The King's Speech to both Houſes. 'My Lords and Gentlemen, I meet 'you now with more than uſual Concern for the Event of this Seſſion; 'and I know it is but what may reaſonably be expected from that Care 'I owe to the Preſervation of the Government. The Cauſes of the laſt 'Prorogation, as I for my part do not deſire to remember, ſo I hope no 'Man elſe will, unleſs it be to learn from thence, how to avoid the like 'Occaſions for the future; And I pray conſider how fatal the Conſe-'quence may be, and how little Benefit is like to redound to the People 'by it. However, if any Thing of that Kind ſhall ariſe, I deſire you 'wou'd deferr thoſe Debates, till you have brought ſuch Publick Bills to 'Perfection as may conduce to the Good and Safety of the Kingdom; 'and particularly I recommend to you, whatever may tend to the Secu-'rity of the Proteſtant Religion as it is now eſtabliſh'd in the Church of 'England.

'I muſt likewiſe deſire your Aſſiſtance in ſome Supplies, as well to take 'off the Anticipations which are upon my Revenue, as for Building of 'Ships; and tho' the War has been the great Cauſe of theſe Anticipati-'ons, yet I find by a late Account I have taken of my Expences, that I 'have not been altogether ſo good a Husband, as I might have been, and 'as I reſolve to be for the Future: Although at the ſame Time I have 'had the Satisfaction to find, That I have been far from ſuch an Extra-'vagancy in my own Expence, as ſome wou'd have the World believe. 'I am not ignorant, that there are many who wou'd prevent the Kind-'neſs of my Parliament to me at this Time; but I as well know that 'your Affections have never fail'd me: And you may remember, it is 'now above Three Years ſince I have ask'd you any Thing for my own Uſe. 'The Reſt I refer to my Lord Keeper.

Accordingly the Lord Keeper made a Speech, which for the Importance of it is given without Abridgment or Mutilation: The Lord Keeper Finch's Speech. 'My Lords, and 'you the Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes of the Houſe of Commons, The 'Cauſes of this preſent Aſſembly, and the Reaſons which have mov'd his 'Majeſty to command your Attendance upon him at this Time, are of 'the higheſt Importance. The King reſolves to enter into Terms of 'ſtricteſt Correſpondence and Endearment with his Parliament; To take 'your Counſel in his moſt weighty Affairs; To impart all his Cares to 'you; To acquaint you with all his Wants and Neceſſities; To offer you 'all that can be yet wanting to make you enjoy your Selves; To eſtabliſh

'a right Underſtanding between Himſelf and his Three Eſtates, and between the Eſtates Themſelves; To redreſs all your juſt Complaints, and 'to put all his Subjects at Eaſe, as far as in him lies, and can conſiſt with 'the Honour and Safety of the Government. And having made all theſe 'Advances, he doubts not but you will behave your ſelves like thoſe that 'deſerve to be call'd the King's Friends, and that you will put him at 'Eaſe too. There is no Cauſe why any Fears of Religion or Liberty 'ſhou'd divert you: For his Majeſty hath ſo often recommended to you 'the Conſiderations of Religion, ſo very often deſired you to aſſiſt him 'in his Care and Protection of it, That the Defender of the Faith is become the Advocate of it too, and hath left all thoſe without Excuſe 'who ſtill remain under any kind of Doubts or Fears. Again, the Care 'of your Civil Rights and Liberties hath been ſo much his Majeſty's, 'that the more you reflect upon theſe Concerns, the more you will find 'your ſelves oblig'd to acknowledge his Majeſty's Tenderneſs of you, and 'Indulgence to you. Search your own Annals, the Annals of thoſe Times 'you account moſt Happy, you will ſcarce find one Year without an 'Example of ſomething more Severe, and more Extraordinary, than a 'whole Reign hath yet produc'd. Peruſe the Hiſtories of Foreign Nations, and you ſhall find, Statues and Altars too have been erected to 'the Memories of thoſe Princes, whoſe beſt Virtues never arriv'd to Half 'that Moderation, which we live to ſee and enjoy. No King did ever 'meet a Parliament with juſter Cauſe of Confidence in their Affections! 'And therefore his Majeſty will not ſuffer himſelf to doubt, but relies 'firmly upon it, that you never will forſake him, when he is under any kind 'of Difficulties. He doth aſſure himſelf that you will now think fit to 'provide for his Honour and your own Safety, by helping him to pay 'ſome Part of his Debts, and to make his Navy as Great and as Conſiderable, as it ought to be. For the Greatneſs of the King is the Greatneſs and Safety of his People. The Springs and Rivers which pay Tribute to the Ocean, do not leſſen but preſerve themſelves by that Contribution. It is impoſſible that thoſe Affections that Piety and Allegiance firſt planted, which Perſecution cou'd not abate, which the gracious Influences of his Majeſty's happy Government have hitherto encreas'd, ſhou'd now appear to Wither and Decay: But then the beſt Indication of the Heart is by the Hand. And becauſe it is of infinite Moment to the King's Affairs that there ſhou'd be a chearful Concurrence to his Supplies, there let Hand and Heart both join in the Oblation, for that will make it a Sacrifice well pleaſing indeed.

'My Lords and Gentlemen, The Happineſs of this preſent Age, and 'the Fate and Fortune of the next too, is very much in your Hands, and 'at this Time; All that you would deſire to ſettle and improve; All that 'you wou'd wiſh to ſecure and tranſmit to your Poſterities, may now be 'accompliſh'd. Wou'd you raiſe the due Eſtimation and Reverence of 'the Church of England to its juſt Height? Wou'd you provide for the 'Safety and Eſtabliſhment of it? Do there want any Laws to ſecure the 'Peace and Quiet of the State? Wou'd you enrich and adorn this Kingdom, by providing for the Extent and Improvement of Trade, by introducing new and uſeful Manufactures, and by Encouraging thoſe we 'have already? Wou'd you prevent all Frauds and Perjuries, all Delays 'and Abuſes in the Adminiſtration of Juſtice? Wou'd you preſerve a famous City from being depopulated by the Suburbs? Wou'd you reſtrain the Exceſs of thoſe new Buildings which begin to ſwarm with Inhabitants unknown? All your Petitions of this Kind will be grateful to 'the King; and you may with Eaſe effect all theſe and much more which 'your great Wiſdoms will ſuggeſt to you. A little Time will ſerve to make 'many

'many excellent Laws, and to give you the Honour to be the Repairers of all our Breaches; ſo as that Time be wholly employ'd upon the Publick, and not taken up by ſuch Conſiderations as are leſs Meritorious. If therefore there be any without Doors, that labour to diſunite your Counſels, or to render them ineffectual; If they can hope that the Occaſions for this may ariſe from ſome Differences within your ſelves, or hope by thoſe Differences to diſguiſe their own Diſaffections to your good Proceedings; 'tis in your Power to defeat thoſe Hopes, to pull off this Diſguiſe, and to ſecure a happy Concluſion of this Meeting, by ſtudying to preſerve a good Correſpondence, and by a careful avoiding all ſuch Queſtions as are apt to engender Strife. And if ever there were a Time, when the Gravity of the Counſel, the Wiſdom, and good Temper of a Parliament, were neceſſary to ſupport that Government which only can ſupport theſe Aſſemblies, certainly this is the Hour. You ſee with what Zeal the King hath recommended to you a good Agreement between your ſelves; and that he doth it with all the Care and Compaſſion, all the Earneſtneſs and Importunity, fit for ſo great a Prince to expreſs, who wou'd be very ſorry that any ſuch Misfortune as your Diſagreement, ſhou'd either deprive him of your Advice and Aſſiſtance, or his People of thoſe good Laws which he is ready to grant you. There is no other Way our Enemies can think of, by which 'tis poſſible for this Seſſions to miſcarry; for Fears and Jealouſies cannot enter here, Calumnies and Slanders will find no Place amongſt wiſe and good Men. They that uſe theſe Arts abroad, will quickly be diſcredited, when the World ſhall ſee the generous Effects of your Confidence. Men will deſpair of attempting any Diſturbance in the State, when they ſee every Step that tends that Way, ſerves only to give you freſh Occaſions to teſtify your Loyalty and your Zeal. You have all the Reaſon in the World to make Men ſee this; For you have the ſame Monarchy to aſſert, the ſame Church to defend, the ſame Intereſts of Nobility and Gentry to maintain, the ſame excellent King to contend for, and the ſame Enemies to contend againſt.

1675. Car. 27 Reſ. 16

'And now, My Lords and Gentlemen, Since the whole Seſſion of Parliament is in the Judgment and Conſtruction of our Law but as One Day, let us all endeavour that the Morning of it, the firſt Entrance upon it, may be with ſuch fair and auſpicious Circumſtances as may give the whole Kingdom an Aſſurance of a bright and chearful Day. Let no ill Humours gather into Clouds to darken or obſcure it; for this Day is a Critical Day, and more depends upon that Judgment of our Affairs which will be made by it, than can eaſily be imagin'd. It imports us therefore to take care that no Part of this Time be loſt; let every precious Minute of this Day be ſpent in receiving ſuch Acts of Grace and Goodneſs as are ready to flow from the King, and in making ſuch Retributions for them as may become the grateful Hearts of the beſt of Subjects to the beſt of Kings. So ſhall this Day become a Day of Diſappointment and Diſcomfort to our Enemies, but to us and all good Men a Glorious Day, a Day of Triumph and Deliverance, a Memorable and Joyful Day to this preſent, and to all future Generations.'

The Proceedings of the Commons.

Notwithſtanding all this Rhetorick, and all theſe Promiſes, the Houſe of Commons began with reaſſuming ſuch publick Bills as they had ſet on foot in the laſt Seſſion, and others that prov'd to the more immediate Liberty of the Subject; as the Bill for Habeas Corpus; that againſt ſending Men Priſoners beyond Sea; another againſt raiſing Money without Conſent of Parliament; a fourth againſt Papiſts ſitting in either Houſe; another for ſpeedier Convicting of Papiſts; another for Recalling the King's

1675. Car. 27 Ref. 16

Subjects out of the French Service, &c. But in these, they suffer'd themselves to be diverted, or rather interrupted by a private Quarrel that happen'd between the Lord Cavendish, Sir Thomas Meers, and Colonel Thomas Howard in St. James's Park; in which they thought themselves so far concern'd in Honour, that they first sent the Lord Cavendish, one of their Members, and afterwards Colonel Howard, to the Tower. And after that order'd a Bill to be brought in to prevent Challenges, Duels and Quarrels, and the Mischiefs that may thereby ensue.

The Accounts of the Nation Stated.

3. After a Week's Sitting, the Commons began to think of the King's Desire of a Supply, and took into Consideration all the Charges and Expences of the late War. The Account in short stands thus in the Journals of the House of Commons: The Charges of the two Years War amounted to two Millions and forty Thousand Pounds; and what was given by the Parliament, what arose from the Customs that ought to have been appropriated, and what was gain'd by the Prizes, and the Dutch Contributions at last, did all together amount to three Millions and forty thousand Pounds; so there remain'd a full Million misapply'd or wasted by ill Management. In consequence of which they add, 'That at the 'Beginning of this War, by the illegal stopping of the Exchequer, the 'rest of the Revenue, as well as the Customs before mention'd, were 'discharg'd of all Incumbrances, and became a clear Revenue to the 'Crown, and was more than enough to satisfy all other reasonable Ex'pences of the Crown and Government ever since, and so there is no 'Reason to give a Tax whilst we continue in a Peace. But if it be ob'jected, That since the said Million of Money is gone, and this over'grown Revenue is all spent, and even now goes on to be further charg'd 'in these two Years of Peace, than it was left charg'd after the said 'two Years of War; and tho' it is own'd Things are much amiss, 'and the Management very ill, wishing it might be amended, yet the 'Parliament must look forwards, the Government must be supported, the 'Counsels must not be made desperate, and therefore the King must be sup'ply'd: The Answer is, That this Kind of Reasoning and Timerousness 'hath brought on us all the Taxes and Mischiefs we have suffer'd these 'Nine Years past, and yet nothing amended; and they still go on, till 'they are made desperate, which the Parliament ought to prevent. There 'is no Fear of Breaking the Bankers the Second Time, and paying Debts 'by that dishonourable Way; it is easy to demonstrate how the last con'tracted Debt may be in a few Years discharg'd by the Revenue, and 'his Majesty's necessary Expences sufficiently supply'd by honest and care'ful Management. No Parliament is oblig'd to pay the King's Debts by 'a Tax: By the like Reasoning we ought to pay such another about a 'Year and a half hence, and so encourage the Court to exact two Milli'ons and a Half Yearly, as hitherto they have done, to the great Dis'quiet and Impoverishment of the Nation; and if (unlook'd for) they 'shou'd prove good Husbands or Frugal, then to the imminent Hazard 'and Loss of Parliaments, and the ancient Liberties of the Subject, as 'now in France. Since the War is ended, the whole Charge of the Go'vernment both by Sea and Land amounts not to above Seven Hundred 'Thousand Pounds per Annum; and the clear Income of the Revenue 'at present comes at least to Sixteen hundred Thousand Pounds per An'num; Quære, What is become of near a Million per Annum? And yet 'the King hath these two Years last, proh Dolor! anticipated his Reve'nue near a Million more, as his Creatures, and worthy Trustees for their 'Country, have confess'd in Parliament, as a powerful Argument to en'force the Commons to pay such Debts, and by a farther Law entail per-

'lation.

Upon Conſideration of all this, they finally Reſolv'd, 'That they wou'd
'not grant any Supply to his Majeſty for the taking off the Anticipations
'that were upon his Revenue.' But ſoon after they voted a Supply of Three Hundred Thouſand Pounds for the Building of Twenty Ships of War, viz. One Firſt Rate, of fourteen Hundred Tun; Eight Second Rates, of eleven Hundred Tun; and Eleven Third Rates, of ſeven Hundred Tun. But again reſolv'd to appropriate the ancient Tunnage and Poundage to the Uſe of the Navy; which prov'd very unacceptable to the Court. Another Thing under Conſideration was the Trade with France, concerning which Sir George Downing deliver'd the following Paper, intituled, A Schedule of the Trade as it is at preſent carry'd on between England and France, in the Commodities of the Native Product and Manufacture of each Country, calculated as exactly as poſſible, in Obedience to the Command of the right honourable the Lords Commiſſio-ners for the Treaty of Commerce with England, humbly tender'd to your Lordſhips. 'The Particulars of the Commodities exported from Eng'land to France, and the Commodities imported from France into Eng'land, are for Brevity ſake omitted; and by the Accounts given to the 'Lords Commiſſioners, it is perceiv'd, That the Linnen and Silk Manu'factures only imported from France amount to upwards of eight hun'dred Thouſand Pounds; and that the Manufacture of Wool and Silk
'exported into France doth not amount to eighty five Thouſand Pounds;
'as alſo that all other Commodities of the Product and Manufacture of 'England exported into France, doth not amount to ninety Thouſand
'Pounds more: Whereas the Wine, Brandy, and other Commodities of 'the Product and Manufacture of France, imported into England, a'mount to upwards of three hundred Thouſand Pounds, beſides an in'credible Value of Toys, rich Apparel, Point Lace, &c. and ſo it is ap'parent that the Exports of our natural Commodities and Manufactures
'to France, are leſs in Value by at leaſt a Million Sterling than the Na'tive Commodities and Manufactures of France, which we receive from 'thence; And if your Lordſhips pleaſe to reflect thereupon, they will
'diſcover the Prejudices the Engliſh Nation ſuſtains, and the great Advan'tages the French have, and do eaſily make by holding the Treaty in
'Suſpence; this Notice upon the Matter excluding Trade thither, whilſt
'in the mean Time the French enjoy all and as great Advantages, as 'they can reaſonably expect by any Treaty.' Upon this Subject they order'd a Bill to be brought in, which was receiv'd with Approbation.

A Supply voted.

An Account of the Trade with France.

The Houſe of Commons, eſpecially of late Years, had acted very unlike Penſioners, tho' they were often ſo term'd by Way of Reproach.
Therefore being one Day inform'd of Reports ſpread abroad of Money diſpers'd, and Rewards given among Members of the Houſe for giving their Votes and promoting Bills, they enter'd upon a Debate, and con-triv'd a Teſt for purging the Members, and vindicating the Honour of the Houſe. This Teſt never being publiſh'd, will be worth the Remembring, and runs thus: 'I A. B. do proteſt before God, and this Houſe
'of Parliament, That directly nor indirectly, neither I, nor any for my
'Uſe to my Knowledge, have ſince the firſt Day of January 1672, had,
'or receiv'd any Sum or Sums of Money by Ways of Impreſt, Gift, Loan,
'or otherwiſe from the King's Majeſty, or any other Perſon by his Ma-
'jeſty's Order, Direction or Knowledge, or by Authority deriv'd from 'his ſaid Majeſty, or any Pardon, Diſcharge, or Reſpite of any Mony
'due to his ſaid Majeſty upon Account, or any Grant, Penſion, Gratui-

'ty, or Reward, or any Promiſe of any ſuch Office, Place or Command, 'of or from his Majeſty, or out of any Money, Treaſure or Eſtate, of 'or belonging to his Majeſty, or of, from, or by any Foreign Ambaſſa-'dor, or Miniſter, or of, or from any other Perſon in the Name, or by 'the Appointment, or with the Knowledge of his Majeſty, or any of 'them; otherwiſe than what I have now in Writing faithfully diſcover'd, 'and deliver'd to this Houſe, which I have ſubſcrib'd with my Name: Nei-'ther do I know of any ſuch Gift, Grant, or Promiſe ſo given or made 'ſince the ſaid Time to any other Member of this Houſe, but what I 'have alſo inſerted in the ſaid Writing; nor have I given my Vote in 'Parliament for any Reward, or Promiſe whatſoever. So help me God, &c.

4. As this, and ſome other uſeful Matters were carrying on, the Houſe was diſturb'd, and thrown into a Ferment by two Things that happen'd ſoon after. The firſt was the Inſolence of ſome Papiſts and Jeſuits, particularly one named Monſieur St. Germain, a celebrated Jeſuit, who, underſtanding that one Monſieur Luzancy, had been lately converted from the Romiſh to the Proteſtant Religion, and had publickly preach'd upon that Occaſion, ventur'd even in this Seſſion of Parliament, with ſome others, to ſet upon Luzancy in his Lodgings, and by Threats and Terrors of aſſaſſinating him, and of carrying him away by Force beyond Sea, compell'd him to tranſcribe and ſign a pretended Recantation, of what he had ſo preach'd and publiſh'd, to the great Violation of his Honour and Conſcience. The whole Matter at large was laid before the Secretaries of State, and likewiſe before the Houſe of Commons, with theſe Additions of Monſieur Luzancy, which ought not to be forgot, viz.

The Inſolence of ſome Romiſh Prieſts.

'The ſaid Monſieur St. Germain, ſeveral Times conferring with Me, 'has atteſted to me what follows: 1. That the King was a Roman Ca-'tholick in his Heart. 2. That the Court were endeavouring to get a 'Liberty of Conſcience in England for the Roman-Catholicks, and that 'granted, in two Years moſt of the Engliſh wou'd acknowledge the 'Pope. 3. That he knew the King's Intentions concerning Religion, and 'that he was ſure his Majeſty wou'd approve of all he ſhou'd do in that 'Matter. 4. That he laugh'd at the Parliament, as being only a Wave 'that had but a little Time; and ſaid that no Body was better welcome 'at Court, and had greater Intriegues with any of the Nobility than He. '5. That it was good ſometimes to force People to Heaven; and that 'there were an infinite Number of Prieſts and Jeſuits in London, that did 'God very great Service. All theſe Things will be ſworn by Mr. Lu-'zancy to have been affirm'd by the Jeſuit St. Germain, who is the buſi-'eſt Man amongſt them all againſt Proteſtants; and many Perſons of good 'Credit and Repute are alſo ready to juſtify upon Oath, that ſeveral of 'the Roman-Catholicks have ſpoken Things quite as bad, or worſe: In 'a Word, they are grown ſo bold and inſolent, eſpecially the French and 'Iriſh, that a Proſelyte cannot walk the Streets, without being threat-'ned at every Step, and call'd a Thouſand opprobrious Names.

This, as it caus'd a Heat in the Houſe, ſo it brought forth a Proclamation from the King, not only promiſing Protection and Incouragement to Monſieur Luzancy, but alſo a Reward of two Hundred Pounds for the taking the ſaid Monſieur St. Germain. But that active Jeſuit ſoon made his Eſcape, and took a proper Refuge in France, from whence he held a conſtant Correſpondence with the zealous Mr. Coleman ſo often mention'd. In one of his Letters to him, dated December 11th in this Year, He tells him 'A Friend had given the French King's Confeſſor to 'underſtand, That his Majeſty of France ought not to do any Thing 'with the King of England, but by the Duke of York; and he hath pro'ceed, in Caſe that Way be made Uſe of.' In another Letter directed to Car. 27

Mr. Coleman about a Month after, it is ſaid, 'Monſieur St. Germain has Ref. 16
'obſerv'd to the Confeſſor of the King of France, how great the Pow'er of the Duke of York is, by the Diſgrace of the two Perſons con'cerning which Mr. Coleman had writ to Monſieur St. Germain; and that 'the vigorous Counſels which were all abſolutely neceſſary, whereby to
'ſucceed in the Traffick of the Catholicks, came from the Duke of York,
'by the Inſpiration of Mr. Coleman, who alſo alone was moſt truly link'd
'to the Welfare of the Commerce of the King of England, the Duke
'of York, and the Catholicks.

The Indignation rais'd in the Houſe by the Inſolence and Activity of the Popiſh Party, gave them Occaſion to conſider, as they had done of late Years, of more moderate Proceedings againſt the Proteſtant Diſſenters. Upon which Subject the Duke of Buckingham exerted himſelf in the Houſe of Lords, in a particular Speech, which being inſerted in the Commons Journals, is proper to be remember'd, and the more becauſe it was ſo publickly diſpers'd: 'My Lords, There is a Thing call'd
'Liberty, which (whatſoever ſome Men may think) is that the People
'of England are fondeſt of; it is that they will never part with, and is
'that his Majeſty in his Speech has promis'd us to take a particular Care
'of. This, my Lords, in my Opinion, can never be done without giving 'an Indulgence to all Proteſtant Diſſenters. It is certainly a very uneaſy
'Kind of Life to any Man, that has either Chriſtian Charity, Humanity,
'or good Nature, to ſee his Fellow-Subjects daily abus'd, diveſted of their 'Liberty and Birth-Rights, and miſerably thrown out of their Poſſeſſions
'and Free-Holds, only becauſe they cannot agree with others in ſome
'Opinions and Niceties of Religion, which their Conſciences will not 'give them leave to conſent to; and which, even by the Confeſſion of 'thoſe, who wou'd impoſe them upon them, are no ways neceſſary to 'Salvation. But, My Lords, beſides this, and all that may be ſaid upon
'it, in Order to the Improvement of our Trade, and Increaſe of the 'Wealth, Strength and Greatneſs of this Nation (which, with your 'Leave, I ſhall preſume to diſcourſe of ſome other Time) there is, me-
'thinks, in this Notion of Perſecution a very groſs Miſtake, both as to 'the Point of Government, and the Point of Religion. There is ſo as 'to the Point of Government, becauſe it makes every Man's Safety de'pend on the wrong Place; not upon the Governors, or Man's living
'well towards the Civil Government eſtabliſh'd by Law, but upon his
'being tranſported with Zeal for every Opinion that is held by Thoſe
'that have Power in the Church that is in Faſhion; and I conceive it's a
'Miſtake in Religion, becauſe it is poſitively againſt the expreſs Doctrine
'and Example of Jeſus Chriſt. Nay, My Lords, as to our Proteſtant
'Religion, there is ſomething in it yet worſe; for We Proteſtants main'tain That none of thoſe Opinions which Chriſtians differ about, are In-
'fallible; and therefore in us it is ſomewhat an inexcuſable Conception,
'That Men ought to be depriv'd of their Inheritance, and all the certain
'Conveniencies and Advantages of Life, becauſe they will not agree
'with us in our Uncertain Opinions of Religion. My humble Motion
'therefore to your Lordſhips, is, That you wou'd give leave to bring in 'a Bill of Indulgence to all Proteſtant Diſſenters. I know very well
'that every Peer of this Realm hath a Right to bring into Parliament any
'Bill he conceives to be uſeful to his Nation: But I thought it more re-
'ſpectful to your Lordſhips to ask your Leave before; and I cannot think
'the doing of it will be any Prejudice to the Bill, becauſe I am confident
'the Reaſon, the Prudence, and the Charitableneſs of it, will be able to 'juſtify

'justify it to this House, and the whole World.' Accordingly the House gave his Grace leave to bring in a Bill to that Purpose.

The Revival of the Dispute between the two Houses.

5. But this, and several other Bills depending were totally interrupted and lost by the second Thing to be mention'd, which threw both Houses into a Ferment; and this was the Revival of the unfortunate Contest between them, concerning Dr. Shirley and Sir John Fagg; the Former having continu'd his Process against the Latter, and the Lords themselves adhered to their first Hearing of his Appeal. Upon which the Commons again voted it a Breach of Privilege, and laid their Commands upon Sir John Fagg, their own Member, not to make any Defence at the Lords Bar in the said Appeal; and after that desired a Conference with the Lords, For avoiding Differences between the two Houses. This being obtain'd, on the 19th of November, the Commons deliver'd a short Paper in these Words: 'His Majesty having recommended to us at the 'Opening of this Session of Parliament, the Avoiding this Difference, if 'possible; and if it cou'd not be prevented, that then we shou'd deferr 'the Debate, till we had brought such Publick Bills to Perfection, as 'may conduce to the Good and Safety of the Kingdom: The Commons 'esteem it a great Misfortune, that contrary to that most excellent Advice, the Proceedings in the Appeal, brought the last Session against Sir 'John Fagg by Dr. Shirley, have been renew'd, and a Day set for hearing the Cause: And therefore the Commons have judg'd it the best 'Way, before they enter into the Argument of the Defence of their 'Rights in this Matter, to propose to your Lordships the putting off the 'Proceedings in that Matter for some short Time, that so they may, according to his Majesty's Advice, give a Dispatch to some Bills, now 'before them, of great Importance to the King and Kingdom; which 'being finish'd, the Commons will be ready to give your Lordships such 'Reasons against those Proceedings, and in Defence of their Rights, as 'we hope may satisfy your Lordships, that no such Proceedings ought 'to have been.' This was succeeded the same Day by something really violent or unseasonable, viz. Resolved and Declared, &c. 'That whosoever shall prosecute any Appeal before the Lords against any Commoner of England, from any Court of Equity, shall be deem'd a Betrayer of the Rights and Privileges of the Commons of England, and 'shall be proceeded against accordingly; and Order'd, That this Resolution be affix'd to the Lobby, Westminster-Hall Gate, and all the Inns of 'Court and Chancery.

This threw all into a Flame, and the Lords immediately Voted, 'That 'the Paper posted up in several Places against the Judicature of the House 'of Peers, was Illegal, Unparliamentary, and tending to the Dissolution 'of the Government.' Several Speeches were made by the Lords, and among the rest the Earl of Shaftsbury began his with these Words, Our All is at Stake! and afterwards proceeded thus: 'This Matter is no less 'than your whole Judicature, and your Judicature is the Life and Soul 'of the Dignity of the Peerage of England; you will quickly grow burthensome if you grow useless: You have now the greatest and most useful End of Parliaments in you, which is not to make new Laws, but to 'redress Grievances, and to maintain the old Land-Marks. The House 'of Commons Business is to complain, your Lordships to redress, not 'only the Complaints from them, that are the Eyes of the Nation, but 'all other particular Persons that address to you. A Land may groan 'under a Multitude of Laws, and I believe ours does; and when Laws 'grow so multiply'd, they prove oftner Snares than Directions and Security to the People' Then speaking of the Commons, he said, 'I am 'willing

'willing to come to Conference whenever the Diſpute ſhall begin again, and dare undertake to your Lordſhips, That they have neither Precedent, Reaſon, nor any juſtifiable Pretence to ſhew againſt us; and therefore, my Lords, if you will part with this undoubted Right meerly for asking, where will the asking ſtop? — I have all the Duty imaginable to his Majeſty, and ſhall with all Submiſſion give way to any Thing he ſhou'd think of Importance to his Affairs: But in this Point it is to alter the Conſtitution of the Government; and there no Reaſon of State can be an Argument to your Lordſhips, to turn your ſelves out of that Intereſt you have in the Conſtitution of the Government: 'Tis not only your Concern that you maintain your ſelves in it, but 'tis the Concern of the pooreſt Man in the Kingdom that you keep your Station. 'Tis your Lordſhips Concern, and that ſo highly, that I will be bold to ſay, the King can give none of you a Requital or Recompence for it. What are empty Titles? What is preſent Power, or Riches and a great Eſtate, wherein I have no firm nor fix'd Property? 'Tis the Conſtitution of the Government, and Maintaining it, that ſecures your Lordſhips, and every Man elſe, in what he hath. The pooreſt Lord, if the Birthright of the Peerage be maintain'd, has a fair Proſpect before him for Himſelf or his Poſterity; but the greateſt Title, with the greateſt preſent Power and Riches, is but a mean Creature, and maintains thoſe in Abſolute Monarchies no otherwiſe than by ſervile and low Flatteries, and upon uncertain Terms. My Lords, it is not only your Intereſt, but the Intereſt of the Nation, that you maintain your Rights; for let the Houſe of Commons and Gentry of England think what they pleaſe, there is no Prince that ever govern'd without Nobility or an Army: If you have not one, you muſt have the other, or the Monarchy cannot long ſupport, or keep it ſelf from tumbling into a Democratical Republick; Your Lordſhips and the People have the ſame Cauſe, and the ſame Enemies. My Lords, wou'd you be in favour with the King? 'Tis a very ill Way to it, to put your ſelves out of a future Capacity to be conſiderable in his Service: I do not find in Story, or in Modern Experience, but that 'tis better, and a Man is much more regarded, that is ſtill in a Capacity and an Opportunity to ſerve, than He that hath wholly depriv'd himſelf of all for his Prince's Service: And I therefore declare, That I will ſerve my Prince as a Peer, and will not deſtroy my Peerage to ſerve him.——

1675. Car. 27 Ref. 16

Matters were carry'd ſo high in the Houſe of Lords, and the Commons were look'd upon ſo dangerous and pernicious at this Time, that the Lord Mohun propos'd to make an Addreſs to his Majeſty to diſſolve the preſent Parliament, and call another. This occaſion'd a warm Debate, which laſted till eight a Clock on Saturday Night; when the Queſtion being put for the Addreſs, it paſs'd in the Negative by only two Voices, fifty againſt forty eight. The chief Lords for the Addreſs were His Royal Highneſs Himſelf, the Duke of Buckingham, the Earls of Mancheſter, Shaftsbury, Clarendon, Mulgrave, Scarſedale and Eſſex, the Lords Hallifax, Wharton, Mohun and Townſhend. The chief againſt the Addreſs were the Lords Keeper, Treaſurer, Privy-Seal and Great Chamberlain, Duke Lauderdale, the Earls of Northampton, Briſtol, and Oſſery, and all the Biſhops that were preſent. The King himſelf, who had been us'd to cut thoſe Knots he cou'd not unty, reſolv'd to put an End to all Diſputes, and on Monday Morning, the 22d of November, came to the Houſe of Peers, and ſending for the Commons, he prorogu'd the Parliament till the 15th Day of February come Twelve-Month; which was the longeſt ſingle Prorogation, but not the longeſt Interval of Parliament, that had been known in the whole Reign. He only paſs'd three private private Bills, of which one was For Rebuilding the Town of Northampton, which this Year had ſuffer'd a vaſt Loſs by Fire, to the value of Two Hundred Thouſand Pounds. And thus ended the Fifteenth Seſſion of the Second and Long Parliament, after it had continu'd only five Weeks and two Days.

6. For a Concluſion and Completion of this Year, we are to take Notice of ſome Tranſactions, which may ſeem to be of an inferior Conſideration, but ſuch as ought not to be wholly omitted. When all ſorts of Pleaſures, Diverſions and Gallantry reign'd in the Court, in the Month of May, his Highneſs the Prince of Newburgh was pleas'd to make a Viſit to the King of England; and coming over in one of his Majeſty's Yatches, appointed to tranſport him from Calais, he arriv'd at Greenwich, and immediately came to Town with a noble Train of fifty Attendants, among whom were ſeveral Perſons of Quality: Shortly after he was introduc'd at Court, and ſaluted both their Majeſties, and his Royal Highneſs, by whom he was receiv'd with very particular Demonſtrations of Kindneſs and Eſteem, and with repeated Entertainments upon the Thames and other Places, for the ſake of the Duke his Father, who had ſhewn remarkable Civilities to his Majeſty in his Exile. In June, his Highneſs repair'd to the Univerſity of Oxford, where he was receiv'd after the Manner of the Prince of Tuſcany, was created Doctor of Laws, and was extremely ſatisfy'd with the Civilities and Curioſities of the Place. In the ſame Year came over to the Engliſh Court the Famous Dutcheſs of Mazarine, who had formerly the greateſt Fortune of any Lady in Europe, and was judg'd to have as much Merit, at leaſt ſo far as Wit and Beauty cou'd extend, the two captivating Qualities of her Sex. She was once thought a fit Match for the King Himſelf, and ſo deſign'd; but now with the Loſs of her Fortune and her Reputation, and the final Parting from her Husband, ſhe was forc'd to take Refuge in the Engliſh Court; where ſhe was for a while ſet up as a Rival to the Dutcheſs of Portſmouth, and might probably have prov'd ſo, had not her amorous Inclinations towards another been too ſoon diſcover'd to the King; who notwithſtanding allow'd her a Half Penſion, four Thouſand Pounds a Year: And her Houſe for many Years became the Rendezvous of all the Men of Wit and Quality, and the Scene of all the News of the Town, of Gaming, curious and exquiſite Entertainments, and all manner of Diverſions.

And the Dutcheſs of Mazarine.

Promotions this Year.

As to Preferments and Promotions this Year, they were not very numerous or conſiderable; on the 31ſt of March, his Majeſty was graciouſly pleas'd, in Conſideration of the good and faithful Services of Thomas Povey Eſquire, to cauſe him to be Sworn one of the Maſters of Requeſts, in the Room of Sir Thomas Beverly deceas'd. On the 23d of June, his Majeſty was pleas'd, in Conſideration of the eminent Loyalty and Sufferings of Giles Strangeways Eſquire, to cauſe him to be ſworn of his moſt honourable Privy-Council, and accordingly he took his Place at the Board. On the 15th of October, his Grace the Duke of Albemarle was ſworn of his Majeſty's moſt honourable Privy-Council. On December 19, his Majeſty, as a particular Mark of his Grace and Favour to the right Honourable Heneage Lord Finch, Baron of Daventry, was pleas'd to change his Title of Lord Keeper of the Great Seal of England, into that of Lord High Chancellor of England. On the 19th of January, his Majeſty conſidering the good Services of Richard Bulſtrode Eſquire, as his Agent with the Governor of the Spaniſh Netherlands, had been pleas'd to appoint him his Reſident in that Court, and as a farther Mark of his Favour, this Day to confer the Honour of Knighthood upon him. Two Days after his Majeſty was pleas'd to cauſe the right Reverend Henry

Henry Compton, Lord Biſhop of London, to be ſworn one of the Lords of his Privy-Council, and accordingly his Lordſhip took his Place at the Board. To this worthy Prelate was in a great Meaſure owing the happy Education of the two young Princeſſes, the Lady Mary and the Lady Anne, who by his Means were brought up in the Principles of the Church of England, and were this Year ſolemnly confirm'd by him in the King's Chapel, being thirteen and eleven Years old, to the great Joy and Satisfaction of all who had any Fears and Apprehenſions of Popery. 1675. Car. 27 Reſ. 16

The young Princeſſes confirm'd.

Of the eminent Perſons that dy'd this Year, we ſhall begin with two celebrated Divines of the Church of England, Dr. Humphrey Henchman, and Dr. John Lightfoot; the Firſt was educated in Clare-Hall in the Univerſity of Cambridge, from whence he juſtly roſe by ſeveral Steps to be Biſhop of Salisbury, and then of London, and Lord Almoner to the King: He was for his Wiſdom and Prudence highly eſteem'd by his Majeſty, whoſe happy Eſcape after the Battel of Worceſter, this pious Prelate did admirably well manage, eſpecially when he came in a Diſguiſe near Saliſbury. He was ſucceeded by the foremention'd Dr. Compton, the youngeſt Son to the famous Earl of Northampton. The other, Dr. Lightfoot, was Maſter of Catharine-Hall in the Univerſity of Cambridge, and a Divine of a peculiar Mold, who wonderfully diſtinguiſh'd himſelf by an inexhauſtible Fund of Rabinical Learning; in which, if his Judgment had been every way equal to his Labours and Diſcoveries, he muſt have been the greateſt Man of the Age. He was ſucceeded in his Maſterſhip by Dr. John Echard, a Perſon ſo nearly related to the Author, that he cannot give him his juſt Character without Suſpicion of Partiality. The next Perſon to be mention'd is Mr. Richard Smith, a Citizen of London, a Perſon who was infinitely curious in, and inquiſitive after Books and Manuſcripts, and ſuffer'd nothing conſiderable to eſcape his Notice, ſo that in Time he liv'd to ſee himſelf Maſter of one of the choiceſt and beſt collected Libraries in the whole Kingdom; which after his Death was ſold and broken in pieces, to the great Reluctancy of publick-ſpirited Men. Two others are to be mention'd, of different Genius's, Faculties, &c. The Firſt was Dr. Thomas Willis, the moſt renowned Phyſician of his Time, educated in the Univerſity of Oxford, where he was made Profeſſor of Natural Philoſophy, and for a conſiderable Time diſplay'd his Skill with wonderful Succeſs. Afterwards, upon the Invitation of Archbiſhop Sheldon, he remov'd to London, where he became the moſt celebrated in the College of Phyſicians, as well as the Royal Society, and gain'd the Admiration of all Foreigners, as well as thoſe of his own Country, by his Learned Writings, and his extraordinary Cures, the Pains and Labours of which are thought to have ſhorten'd his Life, and carry'd him off in the 54th Year of his Age. The laſt was Mr. Bulſtrode Whitelock, a Perſon who in the late Times made a greater Noiſe and Figure than any of the reſt, and has been many Times mention'd in the laſt Volume, therefore the leſs to be ſpoken of here. We ſhall only take notice of him as an Author who diſtinguiſh'd himſelf by his Memorials of the Engliſh Affairs, in which he has ſhewn himſelf one of the moſt impartial Writers of his Party, and conſequently the more to be rely'd on: It is look'd upon as a very valuable Work, yet it is convenient to let the Reader know, That in the Month of January 16$\frac{52}{53}$, Page 694, Fig. 3. the Author has theſe Words, in his additional Manuſcript: My Wife alſo burnt many of my Papers relating to the Publick Affairs, which makes the preſent Relations the leſs perfect. About twenty Years of his Life were moſt publick and active, and the laſt fifteen as obſcure and retired.

IV. 1. The following Year 1676, in which there cou'd be no Meeting of Parliament, was in a great measure taken up with Pleasures and Diversions, and ordinary Occurrences at home, and with slow Progresses of a Mediation and a general Peace abroad. In the Beginning of it, the People of England were so impatient for a general secure Peace, and so jealous of the Increase of Popery and the French Power, that they took the liberty of reflecting upon the King and his Ministry in so open a Manner, that it was thought fit by Order of Council to put down all common Coffee-Houses by Proclamation, with this Reason given, 'Because 'in such Houses, and by the Occasion of the Meeting of disaffected Per- 'sons in them, divers false, malicious and scandalous Reports were de- 'vis'd and spread abroad, to the Defamation of his Majesty's Govern- 'ment, and to the Disturbance of the Quiet and Peace of the Realm.' Soon after another Proclamation was publish'd for 'discovering and pu- 'nishing Malicious and Disaffected Persons, who did daily devise and pub- 'lish, as well by Writing as Printing, sundry false, infamous and scanda- 'lous Libels; endeavouring thereby not only to Traduce and Reproach 'the Ecclesiastical and Temporal Government of this Kingdom, and the Pub- 'lick Administrations of the same, but also to stir up and dispose the Minds 'of his Majesty's Subjects to Sedition and Rebellion.' But upon Petition of the Merchants and Retailers of Coffee and Tea, a Permission was granted to keep open their Coffee-Houses to the 24th of June; upon Condition, that every Keeper of such House shou'd use his utmost Endeavour to prevent and hinder all scandalous Papers, Books or Libels, concerning the Government, or the Publick Ministry, from being brought into his House, or to be read or divulg'd; and to prevent and hinder all Persons from declaring and uttering in his House all manner of false and scandalous Reports of the Government, or any of the Ministers thereof.

But his Majesty's greatest Concern at present was abroad, where he had undertaken, by the consent of all Parties, to be the Mediator for the Peace of the Western World. Nimeguen, as was formerly mention'd, was the Place appointed for this grand Treaty; and to this Place there gradually and slowly repair'd the Ambassadors and Plenipotentiaries from the Emperor, from France, Spain, Sweden, Denmark, Holland, Brandenburg, Savoy, Lorrain, and several Princes of the Empire. The English Mediators and Ambassadors were Sir William Temple, and Sir Leoline Jenkins, who arriv'd at the Place in July; but they only found there two of the Parties concern'd, namely the French and the Dutch Plenipotentiaries: The rest were some Months in coming in; and to the English were afterwards added the Lord Berkley, and Mr. Laurence Hyde, second Son to the late Earl of Clarendon. The French were the most forward in forming the Congress, and hastned their Ambassadors to be upon the Place; hoping by their Readiness, and the great Backwardness of some of the Allies, to make way for separate Treaties, especially with the Dutch. On the contrary the House of Austria was sullen, and like many Losers, were slow and resty in all their steps towards this Treaty: The Germans hop'd for great Successes in their Arms this Campaign, and the Spaniards flatter'd themselves with the Interests his Britannick Majesty had in the Preservation of Flanders, and with the Part his Parliament had of late taken in their Affairs; and both were in hopes that something wou'd arise from one of these Sides, to countenance a Pretence that cou'd not bear as Things stood at present. The Swede was very earnest for a Peace, as having a better Prospect of recovering himself that Way, than by the Course of a War. Denmark and Brandenburg were were violent for continuing the War, finding the Swedes weak, divided, and not relievable by France, otherwiſe than with their Money, and hoping to drive them this Summer out of Germany. The States-General were very deſirous of a Peace, having no Pretenſions of their own, but to get well out of a War that had ſo much damag'd their Trade and Revenues; but they durſt not break from their Confederates; not truſting England enough, nor France at all, ſo as to leave themſelves in a Condition of depending upon either of them after the Concluſion of the Peace. One general Thread ran through the Counſels on both Sides; on the French, to break the Confidence and Union of the Confederacy by different Paces and Advances to the ſeveral Parties in the Courſe of the Treaty; on the Confederates, to preſerve the ſame Union and Confidence with which they had carry'd on the War, even after the Peace ſhou'd be made. As to the King of England, tho' he was offer'd by ſome of the Parties to be Arbiter as well as Mediator in the preſent Differences, and was known by all to have it in his Power to make what Figure he pleas'd, yet he choſe the latter, and gave Orders to his Miniſters only to perform the Offices of a bare Mediation, and to avoid the Parties ſubmitting their Differences to his Determination. And indeed the Counſels at Court were ſo in Balance, between the Deſires of living at leaſt fair with France, and the Fears of too much diſpleaſing the Parliament, that their Steps upon the whole Affair look'd like croſs Purpoſes, which none at home or abroad cou'd well underſtand; and were often miſtaken by both Parties engag'd in the War, as well as by both Parties in the Houſe of Commons. 1676. Car. 28 Ref. 17

2. All this Time the War was carried on with Vigour by the French, and the Campaign began with ſufficient Glory to Them; for before the middle of April, the Mareſchal Crequi inveſted the Town of Conde with ſixteen Thouſand Men. This haſtned the Prince of Orange's March from Roſendale to joyn the Spaniſh General, the Duke De Villa-Hermoſa, which he did at Cambron, on April 26th; but the French King and his Brother the Duke of Orleans, with a Re-inforcement of ten Thouſand Men came before Conde, and order'd the Town to be ſo furiouſly batter'd and ſtorm'd on every Side, that the Garriſon was forc'd to ſurrender at Diſcretion, tho' the Prince of Orange was march'd as far as Granville in order to relieve them. Soon after, the French ſat down before Bouchain, a ſmall Town of Importance between Cambray and Valenciennes, and keeping the Communication between thoſe two Places, which in a ſhort Time was likewiſe ſurrender'd to them. After which the French King, who judg'd he had made a ſufficient Appearance in Perſon, in the Beginning of June return'd to Paris, leaving the Command of his Army in the Netherlands to the famous Mareſchal Schomberg. The Progreſs of the French in Flanders.

In the mean Time the Prince of Orange having inveſted Maeſtricht, reſolv'd about the End of July to lay a formal Siege to it; this being the only Town of the Dutch Provinces remaining in the French Hands, and fortify'd by them with all the Advantages of Art and Expence, and with a Garriſon of eight Thouſand Men under Monſieur Caloo, a daring Commander who reſolv'd to hold out to the laſt. This Siege was carry'd on with uncommon Bravery, and many deſperate Aſſaults. About the middle of Auguſt, the Prince, who expos'd himſelf upon all Occaſions, receiv'd a Muſquet-Shot in his Arm; at which, perceiving that thoſe about him were diſcourag'd, he immediately pull'd off his Hat with the wounded Arm, and wav'd it about his Head, to ſhew the Wound was only in the Fleſh, and the Bone ſafe; whereupon they all reviv'd, and The Attempts of the Prince of Orange.

the Prince went on without Interruption in all the Motions of the Siege. But there were two principal Reaſons why he cou'd not carry the Place; firſt, the River was grown ſo ſhallow, that he was forc'd to ſtay ſome Days for his heavy Cannon from Ruremond for want of Water; then the Forces he expected from the Biſhop of Munſter and Princes of Lunenburg never came to his Aſſiſtance; to which if it be added, that a cruel Sickneſs fell into the Army, which weaken'd it more than all the Attacks they made upon the Town, the Diſappointment is not to be wonder'd at; For this not only gave Monſieur Schomberg an Opportunity to beſiege and take Aire, but Encouragement to march even through the Heart of the Spaniſh Netherlands, to the Relief of Maeſtricht. Upon whoſe Approach, it was agreed in a Council of War, that the Siege ſhou'd be rais'd; with which the Campaign ended in the Dutch and Spaniſh Provinces.

The Campaign being ended, all Parties began to turn their Thoughts towards the Motions of the Treaty at Nimeguen; and the Prince of Orange, no ways ſatisfy'd with the dilatory Progreſs of the Emperor, the German Princes, and the King of Spain, was by Penſionary Fagel advis'd of the Neceſſity of making a ſeparate Peace, if no other cou'd be obtain'd. Sir William Temple had ſeveral Conferences with the Prince upon this Subject, and one Day told him 'That the Penſionary in a Diſ-'courſe with him, was of Opinion that nothing elſe cou'd be done 'but to make a ſeparate Peace, and that he knew not a Man in Hol-'land who was not of his Mind.' Upon which his Highneſs, interrupting him, ſaid, Yes, I am ſure I know One, and that is my Self, and I'll hinder it as long as I can; but if any Thing ſhou'd happen to me, I know it wou'd be done in two Days. Then the Ambaſſador ask'd him, 'Whe-'ther he was of the Penſionary's Mind as to what he thought likely to 'happen the next Campaign:' He acknowledg'd, That the Appearances were ill, but Campaigns did not always end as they began; That Accidents might happen which no Man cou'd foreſee, and that if they came to one fair Battle, none cou'd anſwer for the Event: That the King of England, if he pleas'd, might make the Peace before it began; but if he was ſo indifferent as to let that Seaſon paſs, for his Part, he was oblig'd to go on, and take his Fortune. Then he told him, That he had that very Morning ſeen a poor old Man tugging alone in a little Boat with his Oars, againſt the Eddy of a Sluce upon a Canal; that when with the laſt Endeavours he was juſt got up to the Place intended, the Force of the Eddy carry'd him quite back again; and thus three or four Times while the Prince ſaw him. Then he concluded, That this old Man's Buſineſs and his were too much like one another; and that He ought however to do juſt as the old Man did, without knowing the Succeſs, any more than what happen'd in the poor Man's Caſe.

His Reſolution againſt a ſeparate Peace.

3. To return to England; the King having, as it is thought, with ſome Reluctancy made Peace with Holland, and being now in a Neutrality with other Princes, appear'd reſolv'd to keep the Peace at home. But the Dutch on one Side ſuſpected, that he ſecretly gave Aſſiſtance to the French; and the French again alledg'd, that ſome Engliſh Ships were retain'd in the Service of Holland. Hence, 'Upon Complaints made to 'the King by the Miniſters of ſeveral Princes now in Amity with his 'Majeſty, that divers of his Subjects had lately taken Commiſſions 'from ſome Princes and States now in Amity with his Majeſty, to ſerve 'at Sea againſt others, who are likewiſe his Majeſty's Allies; his Majeſty, for 'the Preſervation and Continuance of Friendſhip and Amity between 'him and his reſpective Allies,' thought fit by his Royal Proclamation given at White-Hall, May 17th 'Strictly to prohibit and forbid all his Sub-'jects

The King's Orders concerning Neutrality, &c.

'jects whatſoever to take any Commiſſion at Sea from any Foreign Prince or State, againſt any other Foreign Prince or State now in Amity with his Majeſty, or to ſerve as Mariners or Sea-Men in any Ship or Veſſel which ſhall be employ'd againſt any Prince or State now in Amity with his Majeſty, during the preſent War.' Shortly after, upon further Complaints from abroad, that Acts of Hoſtility were ſuffer'd to be committed under the Protection of the Engliſh Coaſts and Ports, his Majeſty was pleas'd to cauſe another Royal Proclamation to be publiſh'd, in which he declared, 'That finding the Security of Navigation and Commerce to and from his Majeſty's Ports, in this Time of War, hath been very much diſturb'd, and that even the Revenue due to his Ports hath been violated, his Will and Pleaſure is, that theſe following Rules and Ordinances be obſerv'd: I. That within his Majeſty's Ports, Havens and Creeks, and the Precincts thereof, no Hoſtilities ſhall be committed by any of the Parties whatſoever, but that all Ships during their being in the ſaid Ports, &c. ſhall be under his Majeſty's ſpecial Protection; that the Ships and Goods of all Aggreſſors or Offenders herein ſhall be ipſo facto Confiſcate, notwithſtanding any Commiſſion of War they may have. II. That all his Majeſty's Officers and Subjects do, as far as in them lies, prohibit the Roving of Men of War ſo near his Majeſty's Coaſts or Ports, as may give Apprehenſion to the Merchant-Men that their Paſſage is unſafe, or may hinder the Commerce of his Subjects. That all his Majeſty's Officers do ſuccour and reſcue all Merchant-Men and others, as ſhall be attack'd upon his Majeſty's Coaſts, and apprehend and ſeize the Offenders, in order to bring them to condign Puniſhment.' — To which were added five other Rules and Orders, all deſign'd to inforce the like general Intention of Neutrality and impartial Protection. 1676. Car. 28 Reſ. 17

But while the French in a ſpecial Manner receiv'd the Benefit of theſe Orders, the Engliſh Veſſels cou'd not be ſo protected from the Injuſtice and Inſolence of their Privateers; who, after the ſeparate Peace between England and Holland, were let looſe, and ſwarming in the Channel, pick'd up many of the Engliſh Merchant-Men, and, as if in open War, made Prizes of them. And upon Complaint of this Grievance in the French Court, the Method of Redreſs prov'd a new Oppreſſion: For Sir Ellis Leighton, Secretary to the Engliſh Ambaſſador in the Court of France, being appointed to Solicit in that Court the Reſtitution of the Engliſh Ships, and their Ladings, thus ſhamefully taken by French Privateers, he behav'd himſelf corruptly in the Negotiation, by making open Contracts, and receiving Bribes in the Proſecution of the Merchants Affairs, and ſometimes making private Agreements with the French Privateers to deſiſt from, and relinquiſh all farther Solicitations of the Intereſt of the Engliſh Subjects, to the great Detriment and Loſs of the Merchants concern'd. All which being made to appear to his Majeſty in Council, he was taken into Cuſtody, in order to be ſent Priſoner to the Tower, and to a full Proſecution: But being conſcious of the Effects, he made his Eſcape from the Meſſenger, and fled from Juſtice. The Inſolence of the French Privateers.

Under the Preſſure of theſe Loſſes and Indignities, the Lords of the Committee of Trade, by the repeated Petitions from the Merchants and Sea-Men, found themſelves oblig'd to preſent to his Majeſty in Council, a Report touching the Injuries which his Subjects ſuſtain'd by the French Privateers; with a Liſt of ſuch Engliſh Ships as had been ſeiz'd by them ſince December 1673, to the Number of fifty Three, concluding thus, 'Wherefore conſidering that the Root of all this Diſorder ariſes from the Violence and Rapine of the French Capers, who ought to be look'd on as the Diſturbers of the Publick Quiet, and Enemies to the good 'Friend- A Repreſentation of them to the King.

'Friendſhip between the two Crowns; We are humbly of Opinion, 'That your Majeſty has juſt Occaſion, from the Injuries paſt, and thoſe 'which are now depending, and which do every Day increaſe, to make 'a very ſerious Repreſentation of all unto his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty; 'and not only preſs for ſome better Method of Repairing the Grievan-'ces mention'd, but earneſtly to inſiſt on the Calling in of all Privateers: 'Or elſe your Majeſty muſt do Right, and give Defence to your Sub-'jects from all the Inſolencies which they ſo frequently meet.' Sign'd Finch C. Angleſey, Bath, Bridgewater, Craven, H. Coventry, J. Ernle, G. Carteret, and Robert Southwell. To which Report, this particular

His Anſwer. Anſwer in Council was given: 'His Majeſty taking into his ſerious Con-'ſideration the daily Complaint of his Subjects, and having a great Senſe 'and Reſentment of their ill Uſage, hath thought fit to approve the ſaid 'Report, and is therefore graciouſly pleas'd to order, and it is hereby or-'der'd accordingly, That the Right Honourable Mr. Henry Coventry do 'immediately tranſmit to his Majeſty's Ambaſſador at Paris a Copy there-'of, that ſo the evil and unhappy State of theſe Things may be made 'known to that Court, and the Remedies preſs'd for in his Majeſty's 'Name, which are propos'd by the ſaid Report. And Maſter Secre-'tary is alſo to attend the French Ambaſſador here with the ſame Re-'preſentation, and to expoſtulate upon all theſe Hardſhips, and the lit-'tle Remedy given to his Majeſty's Subjects, either in the Merits of their 'Cauſes, or the Recommendations of them by his Majeſty: That ſo his 'Excellency being made ſenſible of his Majeſty's Diſpleaſure herein, and 'the reaſonable Diſcontent of his Subjects, there may be by his Care ſuch 'lively Impreſſions hereof fix'd with the King his Maſter, and the 'Miniſters of France, as may redreſs the Evils that are complain'd of, 'and obtain the juſt Remedies which are propos'd.

Notwithſtanding this, no other Satisfaction cou'd be obtain'd, than by doing Juſtice to themſelves, by a Reprizal on ſeveral of their Privateers; and this only Method did by no means repair the Loſſes of private Men, tho' it ſeem'd a ſort of a Vindication of the Publick Honour. Theſe Inſolencies of the French, however, had this Effect, that they made the People of England more and more impatient for a Sitting Parliament, expecting and hoping that this inſufferable Grievance wou'd then be effectually redreſs'd by a Reparation of their Damages, or at leaſt by an open War. By way of Preparation for this Meeting, the King thought fit to take notice of the Dangers of Popery, which grew more open and viſible every Day: And tho' the Intervals of Parliament gave Impunity

Complaints againſt the Papiſts. and Connivance to the Romiſh Prieſts and Jeſuits, yet Complaints were publickly made to the King and Council, who particularly in October were inform'd, 'Of the bold and open Repair made to ſeveral Places, 'and eſpecially to her Majeſty's Chappel in Somerſet-houſe, and the 'Houſes of Foreign Ambaſſadors, Agents, and other Publick Miniſters, 'for the hearing of Maſs, and other Worſhip and Service of the Romiſh 'Church; and that the ſaid Ambaſſadors, Agents, and Miniſters do per-'mit and ſuffer, both daily Maſſes to be ſaid, and other Worſhip and 'Service to be perform'd in their Houſes in a publick manner by Engliſh, 'Scotch and Iriſh Prieſts; and alſo Sermons in Engliſh, to be preached 'in the ſaid Houſes and Chappels, contrary to the expreſs Laws and 'Statutes of this Kingdom.' Upon hearing of this, an Order of Council

A Redreſs was ſoon after iſſued out, declaring, 'That his Majeſty had taken the 'ſaid Complaint into ſerious Conſideration, and being ſenſible thereof, 'as a matter highly tending to the Violation of the Laws of the Realm, 'and the Scandal of Religion and Government, and Breach of good Or-'der; and in his Princely Wiſdom weighing the dangerous Conſequence thereof,

'ance, that they wou'd not permit Maſſes, or other Service, to be ſaid

'precedent Ambaſſadors or Agents here. His Majeſty thinking fit that 'Notice ſhou'd be firſt given to the ſaid Publick Miniſters (the rather 'to teſtify his Reſpects unto them) before the ſtricter Courſe his Maje-
'ſty hath reſolv'd be taken with his own Subjects, by a vigorous Proſe-
'cution and Infliction of Penalties and Puniſhments, for the preventing 'and repreſſing the like hereafter.

4. As the People grew impatient for a Sitting Parliament, ſo a great many appear'd ſuſpicious of their Meeting; and the long Interval of Seſſions began ſo much to open the Mouths of the City and Country, that on the 23d of December his Majeſty thought fit to quiet his loving Subjects by the certain Proſpect of a Sitting Parliament, and by a Proclamation to declare, 'That having been pleas'd to continue this preſent Parliament by 'Prorogation until the 15th of February now next coming, he had a 'full Purpoſe and Reſolution, that the Parliament ſhould be then holden:
'And he was deſirous, for divers weighty Conſiderations, to have then
'a full Aſſembly of the Members of both Houſes.' But before we arrive at that Aſſembly, we are to conclude the old Year with ſome few Promotions, and the Deaths of ſeveral notable Men. In Places and Honours there were no conſiderable Alterations. On the 26th of April the Promotions, &c.
Lord Biſhop of Durham, Dr. Crew, was ſworn one of the Lords of his Majeſty's Privy-Council. The Honour of Knighthood, as was uſual of late, was conferr'd on the two Sheriffs of London and Middleſex, Sir John Peak and Sir Thomas Stamp. And on the 28th of October, both their Majeſties, accompany'd by their Royal Highneſſes, and the Lady Mary and the Lady Anne, and attended by many of the Nobility and principal Perſons of Quality, were pleas'd to accept of a hearty Invitation from the City, and to honour the new Lord Mayor Sir Thomas Davis, with their Preſence, firſt at the great Show in Cheapſide, and afterwards in the Guildhall at Dinner, where the Entertainment was exceeding ſplendid and magnificent in all kinds, and very much to the Satisfaction of their Majeſties, and the whole Court. Not long after Sir Thomas Doleman, Knight, was Sworn one of the Clerks of his Majeſty's moſt Honourable Privy-Council, in the room of Sir Edward Walker Deceaſed.

We are to remember ſeveral celebrated Perſons that died this Year, The Deaths of Biſhop Reyof various Genius's and Characters; and ſhall begin with two learned Di- nolds, vines of the Church of England, Dr. Edward Reynolds, and Dr. Iſaac Baſire. The former, an Oxonian, was brought up in the Presbyterian way, became one of the Aſſembly of Divines, and was for ſeveral Years the Glory of their Party in the City of London: But after the Reſtauration, he thought fit to comply with the Church of England, and the Act of Uniformity, and was rewarded with the Biſhoprick of Norwich, which he held to his Death; leaving behind him the Character of a Man of excellent Parts and Endowments, of a very great Wit, Fancy and Judgment, an eminent Divine, and highly eſteem'd by all Parties for his famous Preaching, and his exemplary Life and Converſation. The other,

Dr.

1676. Car. 2 Ref. 17

Dr. Basire,

Dr. Basire, was educated in the University of Cambridge, and became one of the late King's Chaplains, and Archdeacon of Northumberland, before the breaking out of the Troubles of England. After which he shew'd himself eminent both for his Loyalty and Learning, and Travell'd into several Countries in the East, as Syria, Palestine, Mesopotamia, Ægypt, Greece, &c. where he made himself famous by his indefatigable Labours and Enquiries into the State of the Eastern Churches, and by displaying the Nature and Excellency of his own among the Patriarchs and learned Men in those Countries. After the Restauration he again took Possession of his Archdeaconry, which together with a Prebendary of Durham, was all the Preferment held by this learned and laborious Man.

Judge Hale,

We shall next mention three famous Knights, Sir Matthew Hale, Sir William Morrice, and Sir Edward Walker. The first was a Gloucestershire Gentleman, and famous both for Law and Divinity, a great Genius, and an Ornament of the English Nation; who by mighty Industry, and the Acquaintance of great Men, Glanvile, Noy, Selden, Vaughan, &c. arriv'd at a more than ordinary Perfection in the Municipal Laws of the Kingdom; for which he was highly distinguish'd in the most difficult Times, and afterwards made Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer, and then Lord Chief Justice of the King's-Bench: In both which Stations he did not only manifest a great Reach and a profound Judgment, but such an unaffected Honesty and Uprightness, as can never be exceeded. To sum up his Character in the Words of the celebrated Writer of his Life, 'He was one of the greatest Patterns that this Age hath afforded, whether in his private Deportment as a Christian, or in publick Employments, either at the Bar, or on the Bench.' The second was Sir William Morrice, a Devonshire Gentleman, who tho' inferior to the other, was so considerable for the prudent Management, and so serviceable in the great Work of the Restauration, that his Name ought to live in History; for which he was rewarded not only with the Honour of Knighthood, but with being made Principal Secretary of State. But after eight Years Preferment, he desir'd to resign his Place, and retire into the Country, where he had provided a choice Library of Books; which prov'd his principal Diversion, and most sensible Pleasure during the last Years of his Life. The last was Sir Edward Walker, of Somersetshire by Birth, a zealous and loyal Gentleman, who was highly intrusted by the late King in his greatest Difficulties, was made Secretary of War, and Garter King at Arms. He is more particularly to be remember'd for his Diligence and careful Observation in collecting and recounting the grand Occurrences that pass'd in the King's Army in the Civil Wars; from whose Papers the Lord Clarendon had the greatest and most considerable helps, in writing the warlike Parts of his famous History.

Sir William Morrice,

Sir Edward Walker,

Mr. J. Tombes,

We have three or four other notable Men to mention, but as different as can be; and first Mr. John Tombes, Batchelor of Divinity, educated in the University of Oxford; a Person who in Time became the Head of the Anabaptist Sect, and their most celebrated Preacher: He was one of incomparable Parts, well vers'd in the Greek and Hebrew Languages, and a most excellent Disputant, so exceeding apprehensive, that he could find out the End upon the first entry of the Disputes. He was turn'd out of Lemster by the Act of Uniformity, and dy'd at Salisbury, having shewn himself as much averse to the Presbyterian, as to the Church of England Doctrines. The next to be mention'd is Mr. Henry Stubbe, the noted Physician and Philosopher, commonly call'd the Doctor of Warwick, from the Place of his Habitation. He was educated in the University of Oxford, where he soon discover'd a warm Head, and a most moſt pragmatical Spirit, and afterwards he became as various and bold a Writer as any in the Age. He was dextrous with his Pen, whether pro or con, that few or none cou'd equal, anſwer, or come near him; having admirable Parts, a prodigious Memory, and a great Knowledge in the common Languages and Sciences: But he had a violent and reſtleſs Head, and no fix'd Principles, ſo that his Raſhneſs often brought him into Danger. After a Life of perpetual Toil and Hurry, he was drown'd near the Bath, in the 47th Year of his Age. The third was Mr. John Ogilby, a Scotch Man by Birth, and only a Dancing-Maſter by Education, who by his own great Labour and Pains made himſelf famous for a great many things, and gain'd the Favour and Acquaintance of the King, and the chief Men of the Kingdom. The great Poets he tranſlated, the voluminous Books that he publiſh'd, the Cuts, Maps and Surveys that he made, together with the Projects he contriv'd, all ſhew him to be a Perſon of uncommon Reach and wonderful Induſtry; and it is ſaid, that if he had been carefully educated when young, he might have prov'd the Glory of the Scotch Nation. Laſt of all died George Digby, the famous Earl of Briſtol, a Perſon who had undergon as much Variety of Fortunes as any Man, whoſe Character has been already given, and his Actions often remembred. He dy'd in the 65th Year of his Age, and his Garter was given to the Lord Treaſurer Danby, who now appear'd the greateſt Favourite in the Court.

V. 1. All the laſt Year had in a great Meaſure fill'd an Interval of Parliament, the Prorogation of which was very near fifteen Months, and the longeſt ſingle Prorogation that ever had been known. The length of this, together with the Deſires of a great many in the Nation, occaſion'd three or four Books to be writ, in order to prove the preſent Parliament to be diſſolv'd, according to the ancient Laws of the Kingdom. Others were written on the contrary ſide, by the Encouragement of the preſent Miniſtry, and particularly two call'd Pacquets of Advices, &c. To the Men of Shaftsbury, &c. all which made a conſiderable Noiſe in the Nation, and very much increas'd the Curioſity and Expectations of the People, at the Meeting of the Parliament, which, according to Prorogation, was on the 15th Day of February. This was the Sixteenth Seſſion of the ſecond and long Parliament; at which Meeting a vaſt number of People crowded into Weſtminſter-Hall, the Court of Requeſts, the Painted-Chamber, the Lobbies, and all Places near the Houſes, being fill'd with more than ordinary Doubts and Expectations. The King, ſeated on the Throne in the Houſe of Peers, adorn'd with his Robes and Crown, made this remarkable Speech to both Houſes.

The SIXTEENTH Seſſion of the ſecond Parliament.

The King's Speech to both Houſes.

'My Lords and Gentlemen, I have call'd you together again after a long 'Prorogation, that you might have an Opportunity to repair the Miſ-'fortunes of the laſt Seſſion, and to recover and reſtore the right Uſe of 'Parliaments. The time I have given you to recollect your ſelves in, 'and to conſider whither thoſe Differences tend, which have been ſo 'unhappily manag'd and improv'd between you, is enough to leave you 'without all Excuſe, if ever you fall into the like again. I am now re-'ſolv'd to let the World ſee, That it ſhall not be my Fault, if they be 'not made happy by your Conſultations in Parliament. For I declare 'my ſelf very plainly to you, that I am prepared to give you all the Sa-'tisfaction and Security in the great Concerns of the Proteſtant Religion, 'as it is eſtabliſh'd in the Church of England, that ſhall reaſonably be 'ask'd, or can conſiſt with Chriſtian Prudence; and I declare my ſelf as 'freely, that I am ready to gratify you in a further Security of your Li-'berty and Property (if you can think you want it) by as many good

1676. Car. 29 Ref. 17

'Laws as you ſhall propoſe, and as can conſiſt with the Safety of the Government, without which there will neither be Liberty nor Property left to any Man.

'Having thus plainly told you what I am ready to do for you, I ſhall deal as plainly with you again, and tell you what it is I do expect from you. Firſt, I do expect and require from you, That all Occaſions of Differences between the two Houſes be carefully avoided; for elſe they who have no Hopes to prevent your good Reſolutions, will hope by this Reſerve to hinder them from taking any Effect. And let all Men judge who is moſt for Arbitrary Government, they that foment ſuch Differences as tend to Diſſolve all Parliaments; or I, that wou'd preſerve This and all Parliaments from being made uſeleſs by ſuch Diſſenſions. In the next place, I deſire you to conſider the Neceſſity of Building more Ships, and how much all our Safeties are concern'd in it. And ſince the Additional Revenue of Exciſe will ſhortly expire, you that know me to be under a great Burden of Debts, and how hard a ſhift I am making to pay them off as faſt as I can, I hope will never deny me the Continuance of this Revenue, and ſome reaſonable Supply to make my Condition more eaſy. And that you may be ſatisfy'd how impoſſible it is (whatſoever ſome Men think) to ſupport the Government with leſs than the preſent Revenue, you may at any Time ſee the yearly eſtabliſh'd Charge; by which it will appear, That the conſtant and unavoidable Charge being paid, there will remain no Overplus towards the Diſcharging thoſe Contingencies which may happen in all Kingdoms, and which have been a conſiderable Charge to me this laſt Year. To conclude, I do recommend to you the Peace of the Kingdom, in the careful Prevention of all Differences; the Safety of the Kingdom, in Providing ſome greater Strength at Sea; and the Proſperity of the Kingdom, in aſſiſting the neceſſary Charge and Support of the Government. And if any of theſe good Ends ſhou'd happen to be diſappointed, I call God and Men to Witneſs this Day, That the Misfortune of that Diſappointment ſhall not lye at my Door. The reſt I refer to the Chancellor.

Whereupon the Chancellor made a long and eloquent Speech, the greateſt Part of which ſeems neceſſary to be remember'd. 'My Lords, &c.

The Lord Chancellor's Speech.

'By the moſt gracious Pleaſure of the King, you are here again aſſembled to hold another Seſſion of this Parliament; wherein the King expects your Advice and your Aſſiſtance; your Advice in the Matters of the higheſt Deliberation, your Aſſiſtance in Matters of extream and preſſing Difficulty. Your Deliberations will chiefly be exercis'd about thoſe Things which belong to your Peace, the Peace of the Church, and the Peace of the State; two Conſiderations of ſo cloſe a Connexion between Themſelves, that in the very Original Writ of Summons, by vertue of which you ſtill ſit here, they are jointly recommended to your Counſel and your Care. The Peace of the Church is harder to preſerve than the Peace of the State; for they who deſire Innovations in the State, moſt commonly begin the Attempt upon the Church. And by this Means it comes to paſs, That the Peace of the Church is ſo often diſturb'd, not only by thoſe poor miſtaken Souls, who deſerve to be pity'd, but by malicious and deſigning Men, who deſerve to be puniſh'd: And while Things continue in this Eſtate, it cannot be avoided but that the Laws which are neceſſary to reſtrain the Malicious, muſt and will ſometimes diſquiet and wound thoſe that are Weak. What Remedies are fit for this Diſeaſe, Whether the Fault be in the Laws, or the Men, in the Men that ſhou'd Obey, or in the Men that ſhou'd Execute;

'Execute; Whether the Cure be a Work of Time and Patience, or of 1667.
'Zeal and Diligence; or Whether any new Expedient can be found to Car. 29
'ſecure the Ship from that Storm which the ſwelling of two contrary Reſ. 17
'Tides ſeems to threaten, is wholly left to your Advice: The King hath
'call'd you for that End, and doubts not but your Counſels will be ſuch
'as ſhall tend to Safety and to Eſtabliſhment.

'The Peace of the State requires as much of your Care and Vigilance
'too: Our Peace at Home, and our Peace Abroad. As for that Abroad,
'We are at this Time, bleſſed be God for his Mercy to us, and the 'King for his Care of us, in perfect Peace with all the Nations upon Earth:
'Such a Peace as makes us the Envy of the Chriſtian World, and hath 'enabled us to do our ſelves Right againſt the Infidels: Such a Peace as
'brings with it all the Fruits of Peace, and deſerves not only our Prayers
'for the Continuance of it, but our beſt and moſt watchful Care that 'nothing may be done on our Part to give it an Interruption. But then
'we muſt conſider again, that our Peace Abroad will not ſubſiſt any 'longer than while we maintain our Peace at Home: For without this,
'no Kingdom can be able to act in its full Strength; and without that,
'the Friendſhip or Enmity of any Nation ceaſes to be conſiderable to its 'Neighbours. Now 'tis a great and dangerous Miſtake in thoſe, who 'think the Peace at Home is well enough preſerv'd, ſo long as the Sword
'is not drawn; whereas in Truth nothing deſerves the Name of Peace,
'but Unity: Such an Unity as flows from an unſhaken Truſt and Confi'dence between the King and his People, from a due Reverence and 'Obedience to the Laws, and to his Government, from a religious and
'aweful Care, not to remove the Ancient Land-marks, not to diſturb
'thoſe Conſtitutions which Time and the Publick Convenience hath ſet-
'tled, from a Zeal to preſerve the whole Frame and Order of the Go'vernment upon the old Foundations, and from a perfect Deteſtation
'and Abhorrency of all ſuch as are given to change: Whatever falls ſhort
'of This, falls ſhort of Peace too. If therefore there be any Endea'vours to renew, nay if there be not all poſſible Endeavours to extin-
'guiſh the Memory of all former Provocations and Offences, and the *Oc-
'caſions* of the like for the future; If there be ſuch Diviſions as beget
'great Thoughts of Heart; Shall we call this Peace, becauſe it is not
'War, or becauſe Men do not yet take the Field? As well we may call
'it Health, when there is a dangerous Fermentation in the Blood and
'Spirits, becauſe the Patient hath not yet taken his Bed.

Then laying open the Difficulties with Relation to the Weakneſs of the Fleet and the King's particular Debts, he proceeded thus: 'One Diffi'culty more there is, without which all the reſt were none, and that is
'the ſtrange Diffidence and Diſtruſt, which like a general Infection be'gins to ſpread it ſelf through all the Corners of the Land. Much of this
'riſes from the Artifice of ill Men, who create and nouriſh all the Suſpici-
'ons they can deviſe; But the Cure of it lies perfectly in your Hands, for 'all will preſently vaniſh as ſoon as Men ſhall ſee your Acquieſcence, and the 'Fruits of it in a chearful Concurrence with his Majeſty to all theſe good and 'publick Ends which he hath now ſo earneſtly recommended to you. It
'wou'd be ſomewhat ſtrange, and without all Example in Story, that a Na'tion ſhou'd be twice ruin'd, twice undone, by the ſelf-ſame Ways and 'Means, the ſame Fears and Jealouſies. Will any Man that but gives him-
'ſelf leave to think, refuſe to enjoy and take comfort in the Bleſſings that 'are preſent, only for fear of future Changes and Alterations? Surely it is 'enough for any Kingdom, and more than moſt Kingdoms of the World
'can boaſt of, to have their Affairs brought into ſuch Condition, that 'they may in all Human Probability, and unleſs by their own Default,

1676. Car. 29 Ref. 17

'continue a Long Time ſafe and happy. Future Contingencies are not 'capable of any certain Proſpect: A Security beyond that of Human Pro- 'bability, no Nation ever did or ever ſhall attain to. If a Kingdom be 'Guarded by Nature againſt all Dangers from Without, and then will 'rely too much upon what Nature hath done for them; If a Kingdom be 'warn'd and caution'd againſt all Dangers from Within, by former Ex- 'periences, and then will either forget, or make no uſe of thoſe Expe- 'riences; If a Kingdom be powerful in Shipping and Navigation, and 'then ſee their Neighbours endeavouring to overpower them that Way, 'without being ſolicitous to augment and reinforce their own naval 'Strength; If a Kingdom be happy in the frequent Aſſemblies of their 'great Councils, where all that is grievous may be redreſs'd, and all that 'is wanting may be enacted, and then will render thoſe Councils uſeleſs 'and impracticable, by continuing endleſs Diſtractions; who can won- 'der if their Affairs ſhou'd begin to be leſs proſperous, when otherwiſe, 'humanly ſpeaking, and in all common Probability, their Condition wou'd 'have been out of the Reach of Fortune, and their Security in a manner 'Impregnable.

'My Lords and Gentlemen, If the Preſaging Malice of our Enemies 'ſhou'd Portend any ſuch Fate as this to befall us, the Wiſdom and Mag- 'nanimity of this great Council will quickly be too hard for all their Au- 'guries: The Honour and Loyalty of this auguſt and venerable Aſſem- 'bly will leave no kind of Room for ſuch Divinations. You that have 'the Happineſs to live under ſo excellent a Monarchy, ſo admirable a 'Conſtitution and Temper of Government; You that remember what 'the Want of this Government coſt us, and the miſerable Deſolations 'which attended it, have all the Motives, and are under all poſſible Obli- 'gations to ſecure and advance the Intereſt of it. The King on his Part 'meets you with ſo open and ſo full a Heart, and ſo abſolutely reſolv'd 'to do his utmoſt to Glad the Hearts of his People, that it muſt be the 'ſtrangeſt Infelicity in the World, if either He or his Subjects ſhou'd 'meet with any Diſappointments here. For the King hath no Deſires 'but what are Publick, no Ends or Aims which terminate in Himſelf; 'All his Endeavours are ſo entirely bent upon the Welfare of his whole 'Dominions, that he doth not think any Man a good Subject who doth 'not heartily love his Country: And therefore let no Man paſs for a good 'Patriot, who doth not heartily love and ſerve his Prince. Private Men 'indeed are ſubject to be miſ-led by Private Intereſts, and may entertain 'ſome vain and ſlender Hopes of ſurviving the Publick; but a Prince is 'ſure to fall with it, and therefore can never have any Intereſts divided 'from it. To live and dye with the King is the higheſt Profeſſion a 'Subject can make, and ſometimes 'tis a Profeſſion only and no more; 'but in a King 'tis an abſolute Neceſſity, 'tis a Fate inevitable, that he 'muſt live and dye with his People. Away then with all the vain Ima- 'ginations of thoſe who infuſe a Misbelief of the Government; Away 'with all thoſe ill-meant Diſtinctions between the Court and the Country, 'between the Natural and the Politick Capacity; and let us all who go 'about to perſuade others that there are ſeveral Intereſts, have a care 'of that Precipice to which ſuch Principles may lead them: For the firſt 'Men that ever began to diſtinguiſh of their Duty, never left off till they 'had quite diſtinguiſh'd themſelves out of their Allegiance. Let no Con- 'tention then come near this Place, but that of a noble Emulation who 'ſhall ſerve his Country beſt, by well ſerving of the King; Let no Paſſi- 'ons enter here, but that of a pious Zeal to lay hold upon all Op- 'portunities of Promoting the Honour and Service of the Crown, till 'our Enemies deſpair of ever profiting by any Diſorders amongſt us.

'And

'And let all who pray for the long Life and Proſperity of the King, add 'their Endeavours to their Prayers, and ſtudy to prolong this Sacred 'Life, by giving him all the Joys of Heart which can ariſe from the 'Demonſtrations of the lively and the warm Affections of his Peo-'ple. 1676. Car. 29 Ref. 17

This Rhetorical Speech was ſhortly after ſucceeded by one of another Kind, deliver'd by the volatile Duke of Buckingham, who before had been prepar'd to diſpute the Validity and Eſſence of the preſent Parliament. Therefore as ſoon as the Commons were withdrawn from the upper Houſe, and a Bill offer'd to be read, his Grace ſtood up, and with great Briskneſs deſir'd to be heard firſt. Conſidering the Man, the Argument, and Event, it will be very proper to inſert a great Part of his Speech. After an Introduction he thus comes to the Point; 'The Queſtion is not 'what we are to do, but Whether at this Time we can do any Thing as 'a Parliament; it being clear to me that the Parliament is Diſſolv'd: 'And if in this Opinion I have the Misfortune to be miſtaken, I have 'another Misfortune joyn'd to it; for I deſire to maintain the Argument 'with all the Judges and Lawyers in England, and leave it afterwards to 'your Lordſhips, whether I am in the right or no.' After that, ſpeaking of the other Houſe, he ſaid, 'I have often wonder'd how it ſhou'd 'come to paſs, that this Houſe of Commons, in which there are ſo many honeſt, and ſo many worthy Gentlemen, ſhou'd yet be leſs reſpectful to your Lordſhips, as certainly they have been, than any Houſe of 'Commons that were ever choſen in England; and yet if the Matter be 'a little enquired into, the Reaſon of it will plainly appear. For, My 'Lords, the very Nature of the Houſe of Commons is chang'd; they 'do not think now that they are an Aſſembly that are to return to their 'own Houſes, and become Private Men again; but they look upon themſelves as a Standing Senate, and as a Number of Men pick'd out to be 'Legiſlators for the reſt of their Lives: And if that be the Caſe, they 'have Reaſon to believe themſelves our Equals. But, My Lords, 'tis a 'dangerous Thing to try Experiments in a Government: Men do not 'foreſee the ill Conſequences that muſt happen, when they go about to 'alter the Eſſential Parts of it, the Cuſtoms and Conſtitutions of Parliaments. For all Governments are Artificial Things, and every Part of 'them has a Dependence one upon another: And it is with them as with 'Clocks and Watches; if you ſhou'd put great Wheels in the place of 'little ones, all the Movement wou'd ſtand ſtill: So that we cannot alter 'any one Part of a Government, without prejudicing the Motions of the 'whole.——I ſhall go on to ſhew you, why, in my Opinion, we are at 'this Time no Parliament. The Ground of this Opinion of mine is taken from the ancient and unqueſtionable Statutes of this Realm; and 'give me leave to tell your Lordſhips by the Way, That Statutes are 'not like Women, for they are not one jot the worſe for being old. This 'Firſt Statute is that in the 4th of Edward III. viz. It is accorded, That 'a Parliament ſhall be holden every Year once, and more often, if need 'be. Now tho' theſe Words are as plain as a Pike Staff, and no Man 'living, that is not a Scholar, cou'd poſſibly miſtake the Meaning of 'them; yet the Grammarians in thoſe Days made a ſhift to explain, That 'the Words, if need be, related as well to the Words every Year once, 'as to the Words more often; and ſo by this Grammatical Whimſey of 'theirs, have made the Statute to ſignify juſt nothing at all. For this 'Reaſon, in the 36th Year of the ſame King's Reign, a new Act of Parliament was made, in which thoſe unfortunate Words if need be, are 'left out; and that Act of Parliament, relating to Magna Charta and 'other Statutes, made good. Here now, my Lords, there is not left the leaſt

The Duke of Buckingham's Speech to prove the Parliament diſſolv'd.

1676. Car. 29 Ref. 17

'leaſt Colour or Shadow for any Miſtake; for it is plainly declar'd, 'That the Kings of England muſt call a Parliament once within a 'Year.

Then mentioning the Objection rais'd from the two Triennial Bills, he further ſaid, 'There have been ſeveral Half Kind of Arguments drawn 'out of theſe Bills againſt the old Statutes, which I confeſs I never cou'd 'remember, nor indeed thoſe that urg'd them to me ever durſt own: For 'they always laid their Faults upon ſome Body elſe, like ugly fooliſh Chil-'dren, whom becauſe of their Deformity and Want of Wit, their Pa-'rents are aſham'd of, and ſo turn them out of the Pariſh.—The whole 'Matter, my Lords, is reduc'd to this ſhort Dilemma; Either the Kings 'of England are bound by the Acts above-mention'd, or elſe the whole 'Government of England by Parliaments and by Law is abſolutely at 'an End: For if the Kings of England have Power, by an Order of 'theirs, to invalidate an Act made for the Maintenance of Magna Char-'ta, they have alſo Power, by an Order of theirs, to invalidate Magna 'Charta it ſelf. This, my Lords, I think is a Power that no Lawyer will 'pretend the Kings of England have; and yet this Power muſt be al-'low'd, or elſe we that are met here this Day cannot act as a Parliament. 'For we are now met by vertue of the laſt Prorogation, and that Prorо-'gation is an Order of the King's point-blank contrary to two Acts of 'Parliament, that ſay, That a Parliament ſhall be holden once within a 'Year; and the Prorogation ſaith, A Parliament ſhall not be held with-'in a Year, but ſome Months after; and this is a plain Contradiction, 'and conſequently the Prorogation is void. Now if we cannot Act as 'a Parliament, by vertue of this laſt Prorogation, I beſeech your Lord-'ſhips by vertue of what elſe can we act? Shall we act by vertue of the 'King's Proclamation? Pray, my Lords, how ſo? Is a Proclamation of 'more Force than a Prorogation? Or if a Thing that hath been order'd 'the firſt Time, be not valid, doth the ordering it the ſecond Time make 'it good in Law? I have heard indeed, That two Negatives make an 'Affirmative, but I never heard before That two Nothings ever made 'any Thing. Well, but how then are we met? Is it by our own Ad-'journment? I ſuppoſe no Body has the Confidence to ſay that: Which 'way then is it? Do we meet by Accident? That Thing may be grant-'ed; but an accidental Meeting can no more make a Parliament, 'than an accidental Clapping a Crown upon a Man's Head, can make a 'King.——

'Oh! but ſay ſome, if the Prorogation be null and void, then things 'are juſt as they were before, and therefore the Parliament is ſtill in 'being. I confeſs there wou'd be ſome weight in this but for one thing, 'which is, that not one word of it is true: For if, when the King had 'Prorogu'd us, we had taken no Notice of the Prorogation; but had 'gone on and adjourn'd our ſelves de Die in Diem, then I confeſs things 'had been juſt as they were before. But ſince upon the Prorogation 'we went away, and took no care of our ſelves for our Meeting again, 'if we cannot meet and act by vertue of that Prorogation, there is an 'Impoſſibility of our meeting and acting any other way. One may as 'properly ſay, that a Man that is kill'd by Aſſault is ſtill alive, becauſe 'he was kill'd unlawfully, as that the Parliament is ſtill alive becauſe the 'Prorogation was unlawful. The next Argument thoſe are reduc'd to, 'who wou'd maintain this to be a Parliament, is, That the Parliament is 'Prorogu'd ſine Die, and therefore the King may call them again by Pro-'clamation. Now the Statute ſays, That a Parliament ſhall be holden 'once within a Year; and the Prorogation having put them off till a 'Day without the Year, that Day in the Eye of the Law is no Day at 'all,

'all, that is ſine Die: And the Prorogation might as well have been put off 1677.
'till ſo many Months after Dooms-Day; and then I think no Body wou'd
'have doubted, but that had been a very ſufficient Diſſolution. — Ano- Car. 29
'ther Thing which they much inſiſt upon, is, That they have found out a Reſ. 17
'Precedent in Queen Elizabeth's Time, when a Parliament was once Pro-
'rogu'd three Days beyond a Year. This is but one Precedent, and of a 'very odd kind of Nature; for it was in the Time of a very great
'Plague, when every Body of a ſudden was forc'd to run away one from
'another, and ſo being in haſte, had not leiſure to calculate well the Time
'of the Prorogation; tho' the Appointing it to be within three Days of 'the Year is an Argument to me, that their Deſign was to keep with'in the Bounds of the Acts of Parliament. Now I beſeech your Lord-
'ſhips, what more can be drawn from the ſhewing this Precedent, but 'only that Becauſe once upon a Time a Thing was done Illegally, there-
'fore your Lordſhips ſhou'd do ſo again now.— Oh! but ſay they, you
'muſt think Prudentially of the Inconveniencies which will follow upon
'it; for if this be allow'd, all thoſe Acts which were made in that Seſſion
'of Parliament will then be void. It is the Part of Prudential Per-'ſons to examine the Inconveniencies on both Sides, to weigh which are
'the Greateſt, and to be ſure to avoid them. And, my Lords, to that 'Kind of Examination I willingly ſubmit this Cauſe; For I preſume it 'will be eaſy for your Lordſhips to judge, which of theſe two will be 'of the moſt dangerous Conſequence to the Nation; Either to allow
'that the Statutes made in that particular Seſſion are void, (which may 'eaſily be confirm'd by a Lawful Parliament) or to lay it down for a 'Maxim,' "That the Kings of England, by a particular Order of "theirs, have Power to break all the Laws of England when they
"pleaſe."——

'It is plain then in my Opinion, That we are no more a Parliament;
'and I humbly conceive, your Lordſhips ought to give God Thanks for
'it, ſince it has pleas'd him by his Providence to take you out of a Con'dition, wherein you muſt have been entirely uſeleſs to his Majeſty, to 'your Selves, and to the whole Nation. For, I do beſeech your Lord-
'ſhips, if nothing of this I have urg'd were true, what honourable Ex-
'cuſe cou'd we find for our Acting again with this Houſe of Commons?
'Except we cou'd pretend an Exquiſite Art of Forgetfulneſs to avoid 'calling to Mind all that paſs'd between us laſt Seſſions; and unleſs
'we cou'd have alſo a Faculty of teaching the ſame Art to the whole 'Nation. What Opinion cou'd They have of us, if it ſhou'd happen,
'that the very ſame Men, who were ſo earneſt the laſt Seſſion, for ha'ving this Houſe of Commons Diſſolv'd, when there was no Queſtion
'of their lawful Sitting, ſhou'd be now willing to joyn with them again,
'when without Queſtion they are Diſſolv'd? Nothing can be more dan'gerous to a King or a People, than that the Laws ſhou'd be made by an
'Aſſembly, of which there can be no doubt, Whether they have 'Power to make Laws or no: And it wou'd be in us inexcuſable, if we
'ſhou'd over-look this Danger, ſince there is for it ſo eaſy a Remedy,
'which the Law requires, and which all the Nation longs for, namely,
'The Calling a new Parliament: That only can put his Majeſty into a
'Poſſibility of Receiving Supplies; That can ſecure your Lordſhips the 'Honour of Sitting in this Houſe like Peers, and of being ſerviceable
'to your King and Country; and that can reſtore to all the People of 'England their undoubted Rights of Chuſing Men frequently to repre-
'ſent their Grievances in Parliament. Without this, all we can do wou'd
'be in vain; the Nation may languiſh a while, but muſt periſh at laſt:
'We ſhou'd become a Burden to our Selves, and a Prey to our Neigh'bours.

167$\frac{6}{7}$. Car. 29 Ref. 17

'bours. My Motion therefore to your Lordſhips ſhall be, That we 'humbly addreſs our Selves to his Majeſty, and beg of him for his own 'Sake, as well as for the People's Sake, to give us Speedily a new Par- 'liament; that ſo we may unanimouſly, before it be too late, uſe our 'utmoſt Endeavours for his Majeſty's Service, and for the Safety, the 'Welfare, and the Glory of the Engliſh Nation.

This ſurprizing Speech was thought ſo bold and ſhocking, by the Lords in the Miniſtry, that one of them mov'd that the Duke might be call'd to the Bar. But the Earl of Shaftsbury, who was fully prepar'd, oppos'd this Motion as improper and extravagant; and did with great Courage and Sharpneſs of Application, ſecond and enforce the Duke of Buckingham's Argument; and the Earl of Salisbury and the Lord Wharton fell in briskly on the ſame Side. While one of them was Speaking, the Duke took a Pen and writ the following Syllogiſm; 'It is a Maxim in 'the Law of England, that the Kings of England are bound up by all 'the Statutes made pro bono Publico; that every Order or Direction 'of theirs, contrary to the Scope and full Intent of any ſuch Statute, is 'Void and Null in Law: But the laſt Prorogation of the Parliament 'was an Order of the King's contrary to an Act of King Edward III. 'made for the greateſt Common Good, viz. The Maintenance of all the 'Statutes of England, and for the Prevention of the Miſchiefs and Grie-'vances which daily happen: Ergo the laſt Prorogation of Parliament 'is Void and Null in Law.' After which he appeal'd to the Biſhops, whether it was not a true Syllogiſm, and to the Judges, whether the Propoſitions were not true in Law. The Debates aroſe to that Height, that all the four Lords were order'd to be ſent to the Tower, for Contempt of the Authority and Being of the preſent Parliament, there to remain during the Pleaſure of his Majeſty and the Houſe of Peers. In the mean Time, the Duke of Buckingham took the Opportunity of ſlipping out of the Houſe, while the Lord Angleſey was arguing againſt committing them. The Houſe finding he had withdrawn himſelf, were in a Rage, and deſign'd to addreſs the King for a Proclamation againſt him; but the Duke, foreſeeing the Event, wou'd not give them ſo much Trouble, and appear'd the next Day in his Place. The Court Lords immediately cry'd out To the Bar! But his Grace, who cou'd readily turn any Thing ſerious into Jeſt, and extricate himſelf out of any Difficulties, roſe up and ſaid, He begg'd their Lordſhips Pardon for Retiring the Night before; That they very well knew the exact Oeconomy he kept in his Family, and perceiving their Lordſhips intended he ſhou'd be ſome Time in another Place, he only went home to ſet his Houſe in Order, and was now come to ſubmit to their Lordſhips Pleaſure, which was to ſend him to the Tower after the Earls of Shaftsbury and Salisbury, and the Lord Wharton. We hear that the Earl of Shaftsbury, being jealous of the Duke's ſetting himſelf up for the Head of his Party, us'd to ſpeak ſlightly of him as a Man Inconſtant and Giddy, which the other hearing, reſented. It happen'd afterwards that the Duke, the Earl of Salisbury, and the Lord Wharton, being diſcharg'd on their Submiſſion, and only the Earl of Shaftsbury continu'd in the Tower; the Earl look'd out of a Window as his Grace was taking Coach, and cry'd, What, my Lord, are you going to leave us? Ay, my Lord, ſaid he, ſuch giddy headed Fellows as I can never ſtay long in a Place. The Earl of Shaftsbury was continu'd above a Year, as will be afterwards remember'd. The Lords further to ſhew their Reſentment, order'd one Dr. Cary to be brought to the Bar of their Houſe, and to be queſtion'd concerning a Book he had carry'd to the Preſs, treating of the Illegality of the Prorogation; and becauſe he wou'd not ſatisfy them in ſome Interrogatories, they fin'd him a Thouſand Pounds

2. These active and vigorous Proceedings of the House of Peers, so much to the Honour and Advantage of the Commons, seem'd to have brought that House into a better, or more giving Temper than they had been in some late Sessions. For, notwithstanding some little Opposition from a few Members, they soon agreed to grant a Tax of near six hundred Thousand Pounds towards the Building and Furnishing of thirty Ships of War, and without appropriating any Part of the Customs. And whereas the additional Excise upon Beer and Ale, which had been granted upon the Triple Alliance, was now of course to expire on the 24th of June this Year, a Bill for Continuing of it three Years longer likewise pass'd without any Difficulty. Yet they refus'd three Bills sent down from the Lords, One entituled An Act for Securing the Protestant Religion, by Educating the Children of the Royal Family, and providing for the Maintenance of the Protestant Clergy. Another, For the more effectual Conviction and Prosecution of Popish Recusants. A Third, For the Regulation of the Press, with a Clause to break open a House on Suspicion of any Pamphlets. The two first they rejected, as not answering the Ends of their Titles, and the last as too severe, at a Time when they thought the People under some Necessity of declaring their Minds, especially against the growing Power of France. This last seem'd their great Concern; and the general Disposition of the House was either for declaring War, or making stricter Alliances for preventing the Progress of the French Conquests in Flanders, and on the Rhine, which now began to appear more formidable than ever. Accordingly they made this following Address to the King: 'We your Majesty's most loyal Subjects, 'Sc. do most humbly offer to your Majesty's Consideration, That the 'Minds of your People are much disquieted with the manifest Dangers 'arising to your Majesty by the Growth and Power of the French King; 'especially by the Acquisitions already made, and the farther Progress 'like to be made by him, in the Spanish Netherlands, in the Preservation and Security whereof, we humbly conceive the Interest of your Majesty, and the Safety of your People are highly concern'd; and therefore 'we humbly beseech your Majesty to take the same into your Royal 'Care, and to strengthen your self with such stricter Alliances, as may secure 'your Majesty's Kingdoms, and secure and preserve the said Spanish Netherlands, and thereby quiet the Minds of your Majesty's People.' To which the King shortly after gave this following Answer; That his Majesty was of the Opinion of his two Houses of Parliament; That the Preservation of Flanders was of great Consequence; and that he wou'd use all Means in his Power for the Safety of his Kingdom.

The Proceedings of the Commons.

Their Address to the King.

The Answer.

Shortly after, on the 26th of March, they drew up a second Address, as follows: 'We your Majesty's most Loyal Subjects, 'Sc. do with 'unspeakable Joy and Comfort, present our humble Thanks to 'your Majesty, for your Majesty's gracious Acceptance of our late Address, and that your Majesty was pleas'd in your Princely Wisdom to 'to express your Concurrence and Opinion with your two Houses in reference to the Preservation of the Spanish Netherlands. And we do 'with most earnest and repeated Desires implore your Majesty, that you 'would be pleas'd to take timely Care to prevent those Dangers that 'may arise to these Kingdoms by the great Power of the French King, and 'the Progress he daily makes in those Netherlands and other Places. 'And therefore that your Majesty wou'd not defer the entering into 'such Alliances as may obtain those Ends; and in Case it shall happen, 'that in Pursuance of such Alliances, your Majesty shou'd be engag'd in

A Second Address.

'a War with the French King, we do hold our Selves oblig'd, and do 'with all Humility and Chearfulneſs aſſure your Majeſty, That we your 'moſt Loyal Subjects ſhall always be ready upon Signification thereof in 'Parliament, fully, and from Time to Time, to aſſiſt your Majeſty with 'ſuch Aids and Supplies, as, by the Divine Aſſiſtance, may enable your 'Majeſty to proſecute the ſame with Succeſs. All which we do moſt 'humbly offer to your Majeſty as the unanimous Senſe and Deſire of the 'whole Kingdom.

Debates upon it. Upon a ſolemn Debate in the Houſe, thoſe againſt the Addreſs argu'd and alledg'd, 'That to preſs the King to make farther Alliances with the 'Confederates againſt the French King, was in effect to preſs him to a 'War, that being the direct and unavoidable Conſequence thereof: 'That the Conſideration of War was moſt proper for the King, who 'had full Intelligence of Foreign Affairs, and knew the Arcana Impe-'rii. That it was a dangerous Thing haſtily to incite the King to a 'War; ſince our Merchant-Ships and Effects wou'd immediately be ſeiz'd 'by the French King, who wou'd thereby probably acquire the Value of 'near a Million to enable him to maintain the War againſt us: That he 'wou'd fall upon our Plantations, and take, plunder and annoy them: 'That he wou'd ſend out abundance of Privateers, and take, and di-'ſturb our Trading Ships in theſe Seas, and in the Mediterranean.' It was further alledg'd, 'That at preſent we had not ſo many Ships of War as 'He, and thoſe Thirty which were to be built with the ſix hundred 'Thouſand Pounds now given, cou'd not be finiſh'd in two Years: That 'we had not Naval Stores and Ammunition, &c. ſufficient for ſuch 'a Purpoſe; and if we had, yet the Seaſon of the Year was too far ad-'vanc'd to ſet out a conſiderable Fleet, and we cou'd not now lay in 'Beef, Pork, &c. That when we were engag'd in a War, the Dutch 'wou'd probably leave us in it, and ſo gain to themſelves the ſingular Ad-'vantage of ſole Trading in Peace, a Priviledge we now enjoy, and 'ſhou'd not be weary of. That it was next to impoſſible to make Alliances 'with the ſeveral Parties as might be expected, ſuch and ſo various were 'the Intereſts and Croſs-Biaſſes, of and amongſt the Emperor, the Spa-'niard, the Dane, the Dutch, the Brandenburger, and the ſeveral leſſer 'Princes of Germany, and others. That we may eaſily enter into a War, 'but it wou'd be hard to find the Way out of it, and a long War wou'd 'be deſtructive to us; for the Emperor, the French, Spaniard, &c. uſe 'to maintain War for many Years; yet a Trading Nation, ſuch as 'England, cou'd not endure a tedious War.

In Anſwer to theſe Allegations, on the other Side it was inſiſted on, 'That they did not Addreſs for making War, but making Leagues, which 'might be a Means to prevent a War: That the beſt Way to preſerve 'Peace, was to be in a Preparation for War: That admitting a War 'ſhou'd enſue thereupon, as was not unlikely, yet in Concluſion that 'wou'd tend to our Peace and Safety; for it cou'd not be deny'd, That 'if the Power of France were not reduc'd, and brought to a more equal 'Ballance, we muſt firſt or laſt, fight or ſubmit. That it was commonly the Fate of thoſe who kept themſelves Neutral, when their Neigh-'bours were at War, to become a Prey to the Conqueror. That now or 'never was the Seaſon to make War with France, while we may have 'ſuch Auxiliaries; and if it were a formidable Thing to engage him now, 'how much more when this Opportunity was loſt, the Confederacy diſ-'ſolv'd, and we left to withſtand him alone? That as to his ſeizing our 'Merchants Effects, the Caſe is the ſame now as it wou'd be three Years 'hence, or whenever the War ſhall commence: And as to our Plantati-'ons and Traders, we muſt look upon the French as Powerful, but not

'Omni-

'Omnipotent; and we may as well defend them as the Dutch do theirs 1677.
'by Convoys, &c. and chiefly when the French ſhall have ſo many Ene- Car. 29
'mies, and we ſo many Friends, as no other time is like to afford. Reſ. 17
'They were ſorry, indeed, to hear we wanted Ships, Stores, &c.
'but hop'd it wou'd appear to be otherwiſe. That the Seaſon was not
'ſo far ſpent, but that a competent Fleet might be ſet out this Summer;
'and that, however defective we might be in this kind, the Dutch were 'ready to make an effectual Supplement in that behalf. That however
'ill and falſe ſome Men might eſteem the Dutch, yet Intereſt will not
'lye; and it is ſo much their Intereſt to confine and reduce the French,
'that it is not to be imagin'd but that they will ſteadily adhere to every
'Friend, and every Alliance they ſhall joyn with for that purpoſe.
'That however various the ſeveral Confederates and their Intereſts were,
'yet a common Alliance might be made with them againſt the French,
'and the preſent Alliance may be extended to England. That a numerous
'and vigorous Conjunction againſt the French King is the way to ſhorten
'the Work; whereas, if he ſhou'd hereafter attack us ſingly, he wou'd
'continue the War on as long as he pleas'd, till he made an end of it and us 'together by our final Deſtruction.' In concluſion they urg'd, 'That the 'preſent was the beſt time for the purpoſe, and that it wou'd give Re'putation to the Confederates, and immediate Comfort and Courage
'to our beſt Friends, and Safety to our ſelves in futurity againſt the Old
'perpetual Enemy of England.'

3. The Arguments on this ſide prevail'd; and the ſecond Addreſs was preſented to his Majeſty on the 30th of March, but they receiv'd no Anſwer till 12 Days after. In the mean time they vigorouſly proceeded in the finiſhing of ſeveral good Bills, as one for taking away the Writ De Hæretico Comburendo, a Law that had made many People very uneaſy, eſpecially now when the Fears of Popery were increaſing. Another againſt the Profanation of the Lord's-Day: A third for the Augmentation of ſmall Vicarages, which had brought a Scandal upon the Perſons, as well as Revenues of the Clergy. Another remarkable one againſt Frauds and Perjuries, with ſome others. While they were thus buſily employ'd, on the 11th of April, they receiv'd this Meſſage from the King, His Majeſty having conſider'd your laſt Addreſs, and finding ſome late Alterations in Affairs Abroad, thinks it neceſſary to put you in mind, that the only way to prevent the Dangers which may ariſe in theſe Kingdoms, muſt be putting his Majeſty timely in a Condition to make ſuch fitting Preparations as may enable him to do what may be moſt for the Security of them. And if for this Reaſon you ſhall deſire to ſit any longer time, his Majeſty is content you may adjourn now before Eaſter [this Year the 15th of April,] and meet again ſuddenly after, to ripen this Matter, and to perfect ſome of the moſt neceſſary Bills now depending. The King's Meſſage to them.

Upon this Meſſage it was mov'd, that the Houſe ſhou'd adjourn till after Eaſter, with a Reſolution to enable the King to make ſuch Preparations as ſhou'd be thought neceſſary, and alſo paſs ſome neceſſary Bills for the Kingdom; 'Which if they did not, the blame of the Neg- Debates upon it.
'lect muſt reſt upon themſelves, and it wou'd be obſerv'd, they had not
'ſate to any Effect this four Years; and that now they had a Seſſion,
'and had given a Million, they took little care to redreſs Grievances, or
'paſs good Laws for the People; and that they ſhou'd not be able to 'give any Account of themſelves to their Neighbours in the Country,
'unleſs they ſhou'd face them down, that there was no Grievance or
'Miſchief in the Nation to be redreſs'd, and that the King had ſtopp'd
'their Mouths by offering them to ſit longer.' Others ſaid, 'They

1677. Car. 2. 9 Ref. 17

'ſhou'd perfect two Money-Bills, and give the King Eaſe, and take another time to conſider further of Religion, Liberty and Property, eſpecially ſeeing all Bills now depending wou'd be kept on foot; the intended Receſs being deſign'd only for an Adjournment: That they had very good Laws already, and wou'd give their Shares in any new ones they were making, to be in the Country at the preſent time; that it was neceſſary for them to be there the 10th of May, to execute the Money Bill, and ſome time was to be allow'd for their Journeys, and Reſt after it; that the Paſſing ſome neceſſary Bills, came in the end of the King's Meſſage, and by the by; for his Majeſty ſaith, That if for this Reaſon, that is, for making of Preparations, &c. they ſhou'd deſire to ſit longer; and if ſo, then alſo take the Opportunity of paſſing ſuch Bills.' So the Senſe and Inclination of the Houſe was to riſe before Eaſter, as had been before intimated and expected. Then they fell upon the main Conſideration of the Meſſage, and to make a preſent Anſwer. In the Debate, the Majority ſhew'd themſelves zealous againſt France; and when it was objected, 'That it was not convenient for his Majeſty to declare his ſecret Purpoſes in a publick Aſſembly;' they reply'd, 'They did not much deſire Secrecy; for let the King take a great Reſolution, and put himſelf at the Head of his Parliament and People in this weighty and worthy Cauſe of England, and let a Flying Poſt carry the News to Paris, and the French King do his worſt.

But being a very thin Houſe at this time, by reaſon of an expected Receſs at Eaſter, they were very cautious of giving in any large Proportion; yet as an Earneſt of what they intended, they were willing to do ſomething at preſent, and accordingly they voted the following Anſwer, which was preſented to the King by the Speaker and the whole Houſe on the 13th of April:

An Anſwer to it.

'We your Majeſty's moſt Loyal Subjects, &c. do with great Satisfaction of Mind obſerve the Regard your Majeſty is pleas'd to expreſs to our former Addreſſes, by intimating to us the late Alteration of Affairs Abroad, and do return our moſt humble Thanks for your Majeſty's moſt gracious Offer made to us thereupon in your late Meſſage: And having taken a ſerious Deliberation of the ſame, and of the Preparations your Majeſty hath therein intimated to us were fitting to be made, in order to thoſe publick Ends we have at preſent provided a Security in a Bill for the Additional Duty of Exciſe, upon which your Majeſty may raiſe the Sum of Two hundred thouſand Pounds. And if your Majeſty ſhall think fit to call us together again for this purpoſe in ſome ſhort time after Eaſter, by any publick Signification of your Pleaſure, commanding our Attendance; we ſhall at our next Meeting not only be ready to reimburſe your Majeſty what Sums of Money ſhall be expended upon ſuch extraordinary Preparations as ſhall be made in purſuance of our former Addreſſes; but ſhall likewiſe with thankful Hearts proceed then, and at all other times, to furniſh your Majeſty with ſo large a proportion of Aſſiſtance and Supplies upon this Occaſion, as may give your Majeſty and the whole World, an ample Teſtimony of our Loyalty and Affection to your Majeſty's Service; and as may enable your Majeſty, by the help of Almighty God, to maintain ſuch ſtricter Alliances as you ſhall have enter'd into, againſt all Oppoſition whatſoever.' Hereupon his Majeſty, within two Days, ſent this ſecond Meſſage to the Houſe: His Majeſty having conſider'd the Anſwer of this Houſe to the laſt Meſſage about enabling him to make fitting Preparations for the Security of theſe Kingdoms, finds by it that they have only enabled him to borrow Two hundred thouſand Pounds upon a Fund given him for other Uſes; his Majeſty deſires therefore this Houſe ſhou'd know, and he hopes they will always believe of him, that not only that Fund, but any other within his Power ſhall be engag'd to the utmoſt for the Preſervation of his Kingdom: But as his Majeſty's Condition is, (which he doubts not but is as well known to this Houſe as himſelf) he muſt tell them plainly, That without the Sum of Six hundred thouſand Pounds, or Credit for ſuch a Sum, upon new Funds, it will not be poſſible for him to ſpeak or act thoſe things which ſhou'd anſwer the Ends of their ſeveral Addreſſes, without expoſing the Kingdom to much greater Danger. His Majeſty doth further acquaint you, that having done his Part, and laid the true ſtate of things before you, he will not be wanting to uſe the beſt means for the Safety of his People, which at preſent he is capable of.

The Houſe fell into an immediate Conſideration of an Anſwer, and after a ſhort Debate, they drew up the following Addreſs: 'We your 'Majeſty's moſt loyal Subjects, &c. having conſider'd your Majeſty's laſt 'Meſſage, and the gracious Expreſſions therein contain'd, for employing 'your Majeſty's whole Revenue at any time, to raiſe Money for the Pre-'ſervation of your Majeſty's Kingdoms, do find great Cauſe to return our 'moſt humble Thanks to your Majeſty for the ſame, and to deſire your 'Majeſty to reſt aſſur'd, that you ſhall find as much Duty and Affection 'in us, as can be expected from a moſt loyal People, to their moſt graci-'ous Sovereign: And whereas your Majeſty is pleas'd to ſignify to us, 'That the Sum of Two hundred thouſand Pounds is not ſufficient without 'a further Supply, to enable your Majeſty to ſpeak or act thoſe things 'deſir'd by your People, We humbly take leave to acquaint your Majeſty, 'that many of our Members being (upon an Expectation of an Adjourn-'ment before Eaſter) gone into their ſeveral Countries, we cannot 'think it Parliamentary in their Abſence, to take upon us the granting 'of Money; but do therefore deſire your Majeſty to be pleas'd that this 'Houſe may adjourn it ſelf for ſuch a ſhort time, before the ſaid Two 'hundred thouſand Pounds be expended, as your Majeſty ſhall think fit, 'and by your Royal Proclamation to command the Attendance of all 'our Members at the Day of Meeting. By which time we hope your 'Majeſty may have ſo form'd your Affairs, and fix'd your Alliances, in 'purſuance of our former Addreſſes, that your Majeſty may be graci-'ouſly pleas'd to impart them to us in Parliament; and we no ways 'doubt, but at our next aſſembling, your Majeſty will not only meet 'with a Compliance in the Supply your Majeſty deſires; but withal, 'ſuch farther Aſſiſtance as the poſture of your Majeſty's Affairs ſhou'd 'require. In confidence whereof, we hope your Majeſty will be encou-'rag'd in the mean time to ſpeak and act ſuch things as you ſhall judge 'neceſſary for attaining thoſe great Ends, as we have formerly repreſent-'ed to your Majeſty.'

Another Addreſs from the Commons.

The King had no ſooner receiv'd this Addreſs, but, finding the Mony Bills ready, the ſame Evening, April the 16th, he came ſuddenly to the Houſe of Peers, and being ſeated on his Throne with the uſual Solemnity, he ſent for the Houſe of Commons, and gave his Royal Aſſent to the ſeveral Bills preſented to him, viz. 1. An Act for raiſing the Sum of Five hundred eighty four thouſand Pounds, &c. for the ſpeedy building thirty Ships of War. 2. An Act for an additional Exciſe upon Beer, Ale, and other Liquors for three Years. 3. An Act for the better Obſervation of the Lord's-Day. 4. An Act for Prevention of Frauds and Perjuries. 5. An Act for taking Affidavits in the Country, to be us'd in the Courts of Weſtminſter-Hall. 6. An Act for confirming and perpetuating Augmentations made by Eccleſiaſtical Perſons, on ſmall Vicarages and Curacies. 7. An Act for taking away the Writ De Hæretico Comburendo. 8. An Act for Naturalizing of Children of his Majeſty's Engliſh Subjects born born in Foreign Countries during the late Troubles. 9. An Act for Erecting a Judicature to determine Differences touching Houſes burnt by the late dreadful Fire in Southwark. 10. An Act for the better Repairing and Maintaining the Peer of Great Yarmouth. Of all theſe Acts the Fourth, Againſt Frauds and Perjuries, has been diſtinguiſh'd and commended, as one of univerſal Benefit to the Nation; and a moſt eminent Lawyer has declar'd his Opinion of it, 'That it is of that Weight and 'Worth, that every Paragraph is equal to another Act of Parliament.' After the paſſing theſe Acts, the Lord Chancellor, by his Majeſty's Command, acquainted the two Houſes, that they had leave to Adjourn themſelves till the 21ſt of May next. And thus the Parliament broke up, and had a Receſs of near five Weeks, having had an imperfect, but not diſhonourable Seſſion, of a little above two Months.

The Parliament Adjourn'd.

4. What ſo much excited the Vigour and Activity of the Houſe of Commons, was the great Progreſs of the French abroad, as was before hinted; who, while the Engliſh Court was taken up with Pleaſures, were with their great Monarch purſuing their Glory with irreſiſtable Force. They had block'd up Cambray and Valenciennes in the Beginning of the Year; and about the End of February, having provided ſufficient Magazines in the Winter, they began to break into Flanders, and into the Parts of Germany on the other ſide of the Rhine, and with all the moſt cruel Ravages of Burning and Spoiling thoſe Parts of Germany that cou'd be exercis'd, and ſuch as had not been us'd by either Side ſince the War began. The Allies and Plenipotentiaries at Nimeguen made Complaints of this new Manner of War to his Britannick Majeſty, who employ'd his Offices towards France, to hinder ſuch a Proſecution of a Conteſt, while a Peace was treating under his Mediation; but the Thing was done, and their Point was gain'd, before any Interpoſition cou'd take place. Being ſecure againſt any Diverſion from the Rhine, about the Beginning of March, the French King ſat down before Valenciennes; and having ſurmounted the very Force of the Seaſons, he took it on the 17th of that Month. From thence he march'd with a mighty Army, and laid Siege to Cambray with one Part of it, and to St. Omer with the other, under the Duke of Orleans. After five Days Siege from the Opening of the Trenches, he took Cambray, like all the other Spaniſh Towns, by Surrender upon Articles; but the Citadel held out for ſome Days longer.

The Progreſs of the French King.

In the mean Time, the Dutch, finding the French thus going on, while the Treaty at Nimeguen ſerv'd but for an Amuſement, reſolv'd to venture another Campaign; being kept up to this Reſolution by the Vigour of the Prince of Orange, who urg'd them to the Obſervance of their Treaties, and their Intereſt in the Defence of Flanders. The Spaniards were very negligent, ſo that his Highneſs with all imaginable Diligence and Application, cou'd not come to the Relief of Valenciennes or Cambray, but with Part of the Forces of the States alone; and without either Troops, or ſo much as Guides furniſh'd him by the Spaniards, he march'd directly to St. Omer, reſolving to raiſe that Siege with the Hazard of a Battel, how diſadvantagious ſoever. The Duke of Orleans leaving a ſmall Part of his Troops to defend his Trenches before St. Omer, march'd to meet the Prince of Orange, being on the Way reinforc'd by Monſieur de Luxemburg, with all the Troops the French King cou'd ſpare out of his Army, before the Citadel of Cambray. Theſe Armies met, and fought with great Bravery at Mont-Caſſel, where after a ſharp Diſpute, the firſt Regiment of the Dutch Infantry began to break, and fall into Diſorder: The Prince rode immediately to that Part where the ſhock

The Fight of Mont-Caſſel.

ſhock began, rally'd them ſeveral Times, and renew'd the Charge; but at laſt was born down by the plain Flight of his Men, whom he was forc'd to reſiſt like Enemies, and fall in among them with his Sword in his Hand; and cutting the firſt croſs over the Face, cry'd out aloud, Raſcal! I'll ſet a Mark on Thee at leaſt, that I may hang thee afterwards. Neither Voice nor Action, Threats nor Example, cou'd give Courage to Men who had already loſt it; and ſo the Prince was forc'd to yield to the Stream that carry'd him back to the reſt of his Troops, which yet ſtood firm; with whom, and what he cou'd gather of thoſe that had been routed, he made a Retreat that, as Sir William Temple ſays, wanted little of the Honour of a Victory; the Safety of the Dutch Army being wholly owing to his Highneſs's Conduct and Bravery. After this Misfortune, both St. Omer and the Citadel of Cambray were ſurrender'd to the French about the 20th of April; with which the Spaniards loſt the main Strength of their Frontier of Flanders on that Side, as they had done that on the other by Aeth and Charleroy in the former War, as likewiſe all the Hopes of raiſing Contributions in France, which was a great Part of the Subſiſtance of the Spaniſh Troops: So as there now remain'd nothing of Frontier conſiderable, beſides Namur and Mons to the Land, and Oſtend and Nieuport to the Sea. 1677. Car. 29 Reſ. 17

The Neglect of the Spaniards.

After all, the Spaniards were ſo extremely paſſive, that they ſeem'd to have abandon'd the Fate of Flanders to the Care of the Engliſh and Dutch, with a Reſignation more becoming good Chriſtians than wiſe Reaſoners. From whence the foremention'd Author obſerv'd, from all he had ſeen, heard or read, That nothing was ſo fallacious, as to reaſon upon the Counſels and Conduct of Governments, from what one conceives to be their true Intereſts: For in all Places there was an Intereſt of the Governors, and another of the Governed; and further, there was an Intereſt of Quiet Men, that deſire only to keep what they have; and another of Unquiet Men, who deſire to obtain what they have not. Therefore He never cou'd find a better Way of Judging the Reſolutions of a State, than by the Perſonal Temper and Underſtanding, or Paſſions and Humours of the Princes, or chief Miniſters, that were then at the Head of Affairs. But the Spaniards reaſon'd only the common Way, from what they thought the Intereſt of each Country: They knew Holland wou'd ſave Flanders if they cou'd; and they were ſure England cou'd, if they wou'd; and believ'd they wou'd be brought to it at laſt by the Increaſe of the Danger, the Force of their Intereſt, and the Humour of the People. In this Hope or Preſumption they were much flatter'd by the Miniſters then in England, de Salinas, Envoy from Spain, and Fonſeca, Conſul there, who did indeed very induſtriouſly foment the Heats that began to appear about this Time in Parliament, upon the Apprehenſions of the French Conqueſts; which mov'd them to make the already mention'd Addreſſes to the King. De Salinas proceeded ſo far, as to tell ſome of the Commons, That the King was very angry at their Addreſs, and ſaid, That the Authors of it were a Company of Rogues: Which making a great Noiſe in the Houſe, his Majeſty reſented it as a Piece of Malice, or at leaſt as a Deſign to inflame the Commons; and thereupon order'd de Salinas to depart the Kingdom within certain Days.

All this Time France had ſo much regard to the Jealouſies of England and Holland, of their deſigning an Entire Conqueſt of Flanders, that after having gain'd thoſe three important Frontier Towns ſo eaſily in the Spring, and diſpos'd his Army into Quarters of Refreſhment, the King went to Dunkirk; from whence he ſent the Duke of Crequi to his Britannick Majeſty with a Compliment and a Letter, importing, 'That to ſhew 'he had no Intention to conquer Flanders, but only to make a General 'Peace,

The Offers of France.

1677. Car. 29 Ref. 18

'Peace, he was contented, notwithſtanding the great Advantages and 'Forces he had at preſent, to make a General Truce, in Caſe his Allies 'the Swedes wou'd agree to it, which he deſir'd his Majeſty to inform 'himſelf of, ſince he had not Convenience of doing it, for want of Li- 'berty of Couriers into Sweden.' The Contents of this Letter were promoted by the French Ambaſſadors at Nimeguen, among the ſeveral Miniſters there, till they found it had an Effect contrary to what was intended, and was taken by all for too groſs an Artifice. Even Beverning the Dutch Plenipotentiary, tho' of all others the moſt forward for a Peace, reſented it ſo openly, that he ſaid, That the French were to be commended, who never neglected any thing of Importance, nor ſo much as of Amuſement: That they had given their Blow, and wou'd now hinder the Allies from giving Theirs: That the Reſerve of Sweden's Conſent was an eaſy Way of avoiding the Truce, if the Allies ſhou'd accept it: That this it ſelf cou'd not be done, becauſe Flanders wou'd be left ſo open, as to be eaſily ſwallow'd up by the next Invaſion, having no Frontier on either ſide. That for his Part, he deſired the Peace contrary to the Politicks of his Aſſociate Beuninghen, and the other Miniſters of the Allies in England; ever affirming, That notwithſtanding all their Intrigues and Intelligences there, he was aſſur'd, That his Britannick Majeſty wou'd not enter into the War to ſave the laſt Town in Flanders. In purſuance of this Confidence, he follow'd all the Ways imaginable towards a Peace, and by ſuch Steps as ſome thought forwarder than his Commiſſion allow'd, and very ill concerted with thoſe of the Allies; ſo that about July all Points were ſeparately, and in a great meaſure adjuſted between the French and the Hollanders.

The Continuation of the SIXTEENTH SESSION of Parliament.

VI. 1. In the mean Time, on the 21ſt of May, the Parliament of England met according to Adjournment, after a Receſs of near five Weeks, and this was a Continuation of the Sixteenth Seſſion of the ſecond and long Parliament. This began without any Speech from the King; but the Meeting was open'd by a verbal Meſſage from his Majeſty to the Houſe of Commons, deliver'd by Mr. Secretary Coventry, by which 'His Majeſty acquainted the Houſe, That having according to 'their Deſire in their Anſwer to his late Meſſage, April 16. directed their 'Adjournment to this Time; becauſe they did alledge it to be Unparlia- 'mentary to Grant Supplies when the Houſe was ſo thin, in Expectation 'of a ſpeedy Adjournment; and having alſo iſſu'd out his Proclamation of 'Summons, to the End there might be a full Houſe, he did now expect 'they wou'd forthwith enter upon the Conſideration of his laſt Meſſage, 'and the rather, becauſe he intended there ſhou'd be a Receſs very 'quickly.' Upon this it was mov'd, That the King's laſt Meſſage of April 16, and the Anſwer to it ſhou'd be read: Which being done, after a long Silence, a Debate began about their Expectation, and Neceſſity of Alliances; and particularly it was intimated 'That an Alliance with 'Holland was moſt expedient, for that we ſhou'd deceive our ſelves if 'we thought we cou'd be defended otherwiſe; we alone cou'd not with-'ſtand the French, his Purſe and Power was too great; nor cou'd the 'Dutch withſtand him, but both together might.' The general Argument was, 'That they came with an Expectation to have Alliances de-'clared, and if they were not made ſo as to be imported, they were not 'call'd or come to that purpoſe they deſired, and hop'd to meet upon; 'and if ſome few Days might ripen them, they wou'd be content to Ad-'journ for the mean Time.' The Secretary and others ſaid, 'Theſe Al-'liances were things of great Weight and Difficulty, and the Time had 'been ſhort; but if they were finiſh'd, yet it was not convenient to pub-

'liſh them, 'till the King was in a Readineſs and Poſture to proſecute and 'maintain them; 'till when his Majeſty cou'd not ſo much as ſpeak out, 'i. e. without firſt receiving ſix Hundred Thouſand Pounds, according 'to the Words of his Meſſage.' By others it was obſerv'd and ſaid, 'That they met now upon a publick Notice by Proclamation, which 'Proclamation was in purſuance of their laſt Addreſs, in which Addreſs 'they deſire the King They may Adjourn for ſuch Time, as within which, 'they hop'd, Alliances might be fix'd, ſo as to be imparted. They men-'tion'd not any particular Day; if his Majeſty had not thought this Time 'long enough for the purpoſe, he might have appointed the Adjourn-'ment for a longer Time; or he might have given Notice by Proclama-'tion, That upon this Account they ſhou'd Re-Adjourn to a yet longer 'Time.' In this State of Uncertainty, the Houſe adjourn'd for two Days, having firſt order'd the Committee for the Bill for Recalling his Majeſty's Subjects out of the Service of the French King, to ſit in the After-noon, when they went through the Bill. 1677. Car. 29 Reſ. 18

The Commons being met at the Time appointed, his Majeſty ſent a Meſſage for the Houſe to attend him immediately at the Banquetting Houſe in White-Hall, where he made the following Speech to them: Gentlemen, I have ſent for you hither that I might prevent thoſe Miſtakes and Diſtruſts which I find ſome are ready to make, as if I had called you together only to get Money from you, for other Uſes than you wou'd have it imploy'd. I do aſſure you on the Word of a King, that you ſhall not repent any Truſt you repoſe in Me, for the Safety of my Kingdoms; and I deſire you to believe I wou'd not break my Credit with you; but as I have already told you, That it will not be poſſible for me to Speak or Act thoſe Things which ſhou'd anſwer the Ends of your ſeveral Addreſſes, without expoſing my Kingdoms to much greater Dangers, ſo I declare to you again, I will neither hazard my own Safety, nor Yours, until I be in a better Condition than I am able to put my ſelf, both to defend my Subjects, and offend my Enemies. I do further aſſure you, I have not loſt one Day ſince your laſt Meeting in doing all I cou'd for your Defence; and I tell you plainly, it ſhall be your Fault and not mine, if your Security be not ſufficiently provided for. The King's Speech to them.

The Commons returning to their Houſe, reſolv'd to conſider of the Speech in a full and regular Debate: In which the Secretary and others propounded the Six Hundred Thouſand Pounds Supply, but ſaid, 'They 'did not preſs the Houſe, but they might do as they pleas'd: But if they 'expected Alliances to be made, and made known, that Sum muſt be 'firſt granted: The King had the ſame Power of making War and Leagues, 'as this Houſe had in giving Money; He cou'd not have Money with-'out them, nor they Alliances without Him. He had conſider'd the 'Matter, and found that he ought by ſuch a Sum to be enabled to main-'tain and proſecute his Alliances, before they cou'd or ſhou'd be declar'd, 'and truly otherwiſe our Nakedneſs and Weakneſs wou'd be expos'd. 'Tis true as has been objected, The asking and giving of Money for 'this purpoſe, wou'd allarm as declaring the Alliance, but then it wou'd 'defend too. A Whip will allarm a wild Beaſt, but will not defend 'the Man; a Sword will allarm the Beaſt, but will alſo defend the Man.' Others alledg'd, 'That Alliances might be made forthwith, and then 'Money wou'd be granted forthwith; if they were declar'd to Day, the 'ſix hundred thouſand Pounds wou'd be granted to Morrow: There was 'no Fear of the Want of Money, our own Extravagancies wou'd main-'tain the War.' They further ſaid, 'The Door towards France muſt be 'ſhut and guarded; for as long as it is open, our Treaſure and Trade 'will creep out, and their Religion creep in at it. We think the Proſe-'cuting theſe Alliances, the only good uſe for which our Money can be Debates upon it.

An Address to the King.

'employ'd; and therefore before we give, we shou'd be secure it 'shou'd be apply'd to this purpose, and not by ill Counsels diverted to 'others.

After a long Debate, they agreed to draw up a long Address to his Majesty, of which the greatest Part ought to be inserted; 'We your Ma-'jesty's most Loyal and Dutiful Subjects, &c. having taken into Consi-'deration your Majesty's most gracious Speech, do beseech your Majesty 'to believe it is a great Affliction to us, to find our selves oblig'd, at pre-'sent, to declare against the granting your Majesty the Supply you are 'pleas'd to demand; conceiving it not agreeable to the Usage of Parlia-'ments, to grant Supplies for Maintenance of Wars and Alliances, be-'fore they are signify'd in Parliament; from which Usage, if we might 'depart, the Precedent might be of dangerous Consequence in future 'Times, tho' your Majesty's Goodness gives us great Security during 'your Reign, which we beseech God long to continue. This Conside-'ration prompted us in our last Address, humbly to mention to your 'Majesty our Hopes, that before our Meeting again, your Majesty's Al-'liances might be so fix'd, as that you might be graciously pleas'd to im-'part them to us in Parliament, that so our earnest Desires of supplying 'your Majesty, might meet with no Impediment or Obstruction; being 'highly sensible of the Necessity of Supporting, as well as Making the 'foremention'd Alliances, and which we still conceive so important to 'the Safety of your Majesty and your Kingdoms, That we cannot 'omit, upon all Occasions, humbly to beseech your Majesty, as we do 'now, to enter into a League, Offensive and Defensive, with the States-'General of the United Provinces, against the Growth and Power of the 'French King, and for the Preservation of the Spanish Netherlands; and 'to make such other Alliances with other such of the Confederates, as your 'Majesty shall think fit and useful to that End: In doing which (that 'no Time may be lost) we humbly offer to your Majesty these Reasons 'for the expediting of it. 1. That if the entering into such Alliances 'shou'd draw on a War with the French King, it wou'd be least detri-'mental to your Subjects at this Time of the Year, they having now 'fewest Effects within the Dominion of that King. 2. That tho' we have 'great Reason to believe the Power of the French King to be dangerous 'to your Majesty and your Kingdoms, when he shall be at more leisure 'to molest us; yet we conceive the many Enemies he has to deal withal 'at present, together with the Situation of your Majesty's Kingdoms, the 'Unanimity of the People in the Cause, the Care your Majesty hath been 'pleas'd to take of your ordinary Guards of the Sea, together with the 'Credit provided by the late Act for an Additional Excise for three 'Years, make the Entering into, and Declaring Alliances very safe, un-'til we may in a regular Way give your Majesty such further Supplies, 'as may enable you to support your Alliances, and defend your King-'doms. 3. And because of the great Danger and Charge which must 'necessarily fall upon your Majesty's Kingdoms, if through Want of that 'timely Encouragement and Assistance, which your joyning with the 'States-General of the United Provinces, and other Confederates, wou'd 'give them, the said States, or any other considerable Part of the Con-'federates, shou'd the next Winter, or sooner, make a Peace, or a Truce 'with the French King.——Having thus discharg'd our Duty, in laying 'before your Majesty the Danger threatning your Majesty and your King-'doms, and the only Remedies we can think of, for the securing and 'quieting the Minds of your Majesty's People, with some few of those 'Reasons which have mov'd us to this, and our former Addresses on 'these Subjects; We most humbly beseech your Majesty, to take the Matter

'Matter into your ſerious Conſideration, and to take ſuch Reſolutions, as 'may not leave it in the Power of any Neighbouring Prince, to rob your 'People of that Happineſs which they enjoy under your Majeſty's gra- 'cious Government; beſeeching your Majeſty to reſt confident and aſ- 'ſured, that when your Majeſty ſhall be pleas'd to declare ſuch Alliances 'in Parliament, we ſhall hold our ſelves oblig'd, not only by our Pro- 'miſes and Aſſurances given, and now with great Unanimity reviv'd in 'a full Houſe; but by the Zeal and Deſires of thoſe whom we repreſent, 'and by the Intereſts of all our Safeties, moſt chearfully to give your 'Majeſty from time to time ſuch ſpeedy Supplies and Aſſiſtances, as may 'fully and plentifully anſwer the Occaſions, and by God's Bleſſing pre- 'ſerve your Majeſty's Honour, and the Safety of the People. 1677. Car. 29 Reſ. 18

After the Reading of this Addreſs in the Houſe, it was obſerv'd and objected, 'That there was but one Reaſon given in it for declining the 'Granting Money, and that was that it was unprecedented, about which 'they were not ſatisfy'd.' On the other Side it was ſaid, 'There might 'be other Reaſons aſſign'd againſt giving of Money before the Alli- 'ances, but they rather deſired to ſpare them;' only in general they ſaid, ''Twas not reaſonable to grant Money before there was a Change '(they wou'd not ſay of Counſellors, but) of Counſels; and a hearty Un- 'dertaking theſe Alliances, wou'd be the beſt Demonſtration of that 'Change: For the Swerving from this Intereſt and Part, was the Step by 'which we went awry, and the Returning thereto wou'd reſtore us to 'our right Place and Way.' Some other Things were objected, but in the main the Addreſs paſs'd the Houſe without any Diviſion, and was preſented to the King on the 26th of May. His Majeſty was ſenſibly mov'd at this Addreſs, and two Days after, he ſent for the Commons to the Banquetting-Houſe in White-Hall, where he was pleas'd to ſhew his Reſentment in this following Speech. Gentlemen, Cou'd I have been Silent, I wou'd rather have choſen to be ſo, than to call to mind Things ſo unfit for you to meddle with, as are contain'd in ſome Parts of your laſt Addreſs, wherein you have entrench'd upon ſo undoubted a Right of the Crown, that I am confident it will appear in no Age (when the Sword was not drawn) that the Prerogative of making Peace and War hath been ſo dangerouſly invaded. You do not content your ſelves with deſiring Me to enter into ſuch Leagues, as may be for the Safety of the Kingdom, but you tell me what Sort of Leagues they muſt be, and with Whom; and, as your Addreſs is worded, it is more liable to be underſtood to be by your Leave, than at your Requeſt, that I ſhou'd make ſuch other Alli- ances, as I pleaſe, with other of the Confederates. Shou'd I ſuffer this Fundamental Power of Making War and Peace to be ſo far invaded (tho' but once) as to have the Manner and Circumſtances of Leagues pre- ſcrib'd to Me by Parliament, 'tis plain that no Prince or State wou'd any longer believe that the Sovereignty of England reſts in the Crown; Nor cou'd I think my ſelf to ſignify any more to Foreign Princes, than the empty Sound of a King. Wherefore you may reſt aſſured, That no Condi- tion ſhall make me depart from, or leſſen ſo Eſſential a Part of the Mo- narchy; And I am willing to believe ſo well of the Houſe of Commons, that I am confident theſe ill Conſequences are not intended by You. Theſe are in ſhort the Reaſons why I can by no means approve of your Ad- dreſs; and yet tho' you have declin'd to grant me that Supply which is neceſſary to the Ends of it, I do again declare to you, That as I have done all that lay in my Power ſince your laſt Meeting, ſo I will ſtill ap- ply my ſelf by all the Means I can, to let the World ſee my Care for the Security and Satisfaction of my People, altho' it may not be with thoſe Advantages to them, which by your Aſſiſtance I might have procured. At the Concluſion of this Speech, his Majeſty was pleas'd farther to declare his Pleaſure to them, That the Houſe be Adjourn'd 'till the 16th of July next; telling them, He wou'd give them Notice by his Proclamation when he intended they ſhou'd ſit again; which, his Majeſty was pleas'd to add, wou'd not be till the Winter, unleſs there ſhou'd happen ſome extraordinary Occaſion of calling them ſooner.

The Parliament breaks up by Adjournment.

And thus ended this Part of the Sixteenth Seſſion of the Second Parliament, which broke up with much Uneaſineſs on both Sides; and the King to teſtify his Reſentment, order'd his Speech to be printed in the next Gazette, a Thing 'till now altogether unuſual in this Reign. But before we leave the Parliamentary Affairs, we are to remember, among the Proceedings of this Seſſion, That a Queſtion was made without Doors, as had formerly been within, Whether this Parliament were not truely and legally diſſolv'd. Therefore the Lords, who had been ſo ſevere with their own Members, to reſtrain and terrify People from ſuch exceſſive Freedom, made an Order, 'That the Serjeant at Arms attending that Houſe ſhou'd 'take into his Cuſtody Aaron Smith, and bring him to the Bar of the 'ſaid Houſe, there to anſwer for ſpeaking certain dangerous and ſeditious Words againſt the Being of this preſent Parliament.' And Mr. Smith having upon this abſconded, they immediately preſented their humble Deſires to his Majeſty, 'That he wou'd by his Royal Proclamation ſtrictly charge and command, that the utmoſt and moſt effectual Endeavours ſhou'd be us'd for apprehending the Perſon of the ſaid 'Aaron Smith, and bring him before the ſaid Houſe of Peers (if the Parliament ſhou'd be ſitting at the Time of his Apprehenſion) or in caſe 'the Parliament ſhou'd not be then ſitting, before one of his Majeſty's 'principal Secretaries of State, to the intent that the ſaid Aaron Smith 'might be ſecured, in order to his Appearance before the Houſe of Peers, 'to anſwer for his ſaid Offence.' To which his Majeſty comply'd by a Proclamation iſſu'd out two or three Days after the Parliament broke up. And it is believ'd, the more effectually to chaſtiſe Him and other like Offenders, that the Parliament was this Year continu'd by Adjournments rather than by Prorogation, as was moſt commonly practis'd.

2. All this while the Affairs abroad were kept in ſome Suſpence, and chiefly by the very ſlow Progreſs made in the Treaty at Nimeguen. And what ſtill lengthen'd the Negotiation, was the Departure of Sir William Temple, the chief Engliſh Ambaſſador, who was ſent for into England by the King, under the Notion of Preferring him to the Secretary's Place. Sir William did not approve of the Conditions, but was very graciouſly receiv'd by his Majeſty, who often held private Diſcourſes with him in his Cloſet alone, or with none other preſent beſides the Duke of York, or the Lord Treaſurer, and often both. The Subjects of theſe Converſations were uſually the general Peace, and an intended Journey of the Prince of Orange into England. The King always expreſs'd a great Deſire for the firſt, but none for the other, till the firſt was concluded.

The King's Diſcourſe with Sir W. Temple.

He ſaid, The Parliament wou'd never be quiet or eaſy with him while the War laſted abroad: That they had got it into their Heads to draw him into it whether he wou'd or no. That they pretended Publick Ends and Dangers from France; and there might be both meant by a great many honeſt Men amongſt them; but the Heats had been rais'd by ſome factious Leaders, who thought more of themſelves than of any Thing elſe; and had a mind to engage him in a War, and then leave him in it, unleſs they might have their Terms in removing and filling up Places: And he was very unwilling to be ſo much at their Mercy. That beſides, he ſaw the longer it continu'd, the worſe it wou'd be for the Confederates; and there- therefore he wou'd fain have the Prince make the Peace for them, if they wou'd not do it for Themſelves: That if He and the Prince cou'd fall into the Terms of it, he was ſure it might be done; And after ſeveral Converſations upon this Subject, the King told him, He found that the Conduct of Spain was like to ruin all at laſt, therefore he had a great mind that he ſhou'd go and try the Prince, if he cou'd perſwade him to it. The Duke and the Lord Treaſurer both preſs'd Sir William upon the ſame Point; but he repreſented to them, 'How often he had been 'employ'd upon this Errand to the Prince; how immoveable he had 'found him, and how ſure he was to find him ſo ſtill, unleſs his Majeſty 'wou'd conſider of another Scheme for the Peace: That his Majeſty 'wou'd do well to try another Hand; and he wou'd the better know 'the Prince's Mind, if his Anſwers were the ſame to both.' The King ſaid, It was an Affair of Confidence between Him and the Prince, and muſt be ſo treated; and he knew no Body he had beſides to ſend. Upon which Sir William propos'd to name a Perſon, which was Mr. Hyde; whoſe Choice was approv'd by the Duke of York, the Lord-Treaſurer, and the King himſelf. Mr. Hyde was diſpatcht away accordingly, and attended the Prince at the Camp; but found his Highneſs firm and reſolute againſt the Peace, upon the very Terms he had propos'd to Sir William Temple: Of which he gave an Account, both to the King and Sir William; and then went to reſide at Nimeguen as one of the Ambaſſadors and Mediators. 1677. Steps towards the Marriage of the Prince of Orange.

The other Affair, the intended Journey of the Prince of Orange into England, was a great Secret of the higheſt Importance, which began to diſcover it ſelf towards the End of this Year's Campaign; and this was for a Marriage between his Highneſs and the Princeſs Mary, eldeſt Daughter of James Duke of York, a glorious Lady, not much above 15 Years of Age. The firſt Motion of this happy Deſign was made by the Prince himſelf to Sir William Temple at the beginning of the Spring in the former Year 1676; when being ready to take the Field, he told that Ambaſſador, That he deſired to have ſome Diſcourſe with him in private, and appointed him a time to meet him in his Garden at Hounſler-dyke, where he freely unboſom'd himſelf to his Excellency, and told him, 'He wou'd eaſily believe, that being the only Son 'that was left of his Family, he was often preſs'd by his Friends to think 'of marrying, and had many Perſons propos'd to him, as their ſeveral 'Humours led them: That for his own Part, he knew it was a thing to 'be done at one time or other; but that he had hitherto excus'd the 'Thoughts of it otherwiſe than in general, till the War was ended: 'That, beſides his own Friends, the Deputies of the States began to 'preſs him more earneſtly every Day, and the more as they ſaw the War 'like to continue; and perhaps they had more reaſon to do it than any 'others. That he had at laſt promis'd them he wou'd think of it more 'ſeriouſly and particularly; and ſo he had, and reſolv'd he wou'd marry; 'but the Choice of a Perſon he thought more difficult: That he found 'himſelf inclin'd to no Propoſals that had been made him out of France 'or Germany, nor indeed to any that had been mention'd upon this Occa-'ſion by any of his Friends, but that of England. That before he con-'cluded to make any Steps that way, he was reſolv'd to have his Opinion 'upon two Points; but yet wou'd not ask it, unleſs he promis'd to anſwer 'him as a Friend, or at leaſt an indifferent Perſon, and not as the King 'of England's Ambaſſador. When Sir William told him he ſhou'd be obey'd, he proceeded and ſaid, 'That he wou'd confeſs to him, That 'during the late War, neither the States nor he in particular, were 'without Applications made to them from ſeveral Perſons, and conſiderable

'in England, who wou'd fain have engag'd them to Head the Diſcontents 'that were rais'd by the Conduct of the Court in that whole War, which 'he knew was begun and carried on quite contrary to the Humour of the 'Nation, and might, perhaps, have prov'd dangerous to the Crown, if it 'had not ended as it did. That all theſe Perſons who pretended to be 'much his Friends, were extreamly againſt any Thoughts of his marry-'ing in England; and their Reaſons were, That he wou'd by that loſe 'all the Eſteem and Intereſt he had there, and be believ'd to have run 'wholly into the Diſpoſition and Deſigns of the Court, which were ge-'nerally thought ſo different from thoſe of the Nation, eſpecially upon 'the Point of Religion; that his Friends there did not believe the Go-'vernment wou'd be long without ſome great Diſturbance, unleſs they 'chang'd their Meaſures, which was not thought very likely to be done; 'and upon this he deſir'd his Thoughts as a Friend.' The next was the Perſon and Diſpoſitions of the young Lady; 'for tho' it wou'd not paſs 'in the World for a Prince to ſeem concern'd in thoſe Particulars, yet 'for himſelf he wou'd ſay without any Affectation, that no Circumſtances 'of Fortune or Intereſt wou'd engage him, without thoſe of the Perſon, 'eſpecially thoſe of Humour and Diſpoſition. That he might, perhaps, be 'not very eaſy for a Wife to live with; he was ſure he ſhou'd not to ſuch 'Wives as were generally in the Courts of this Age. That if he ſhou'd 'meet with one to give him Trouble at Home, 'twas what he ſhou'd not 'be able to bear, who was like to have enough Abroad in the Courſe of 'his Life: And that after the manner he was reſolv'd to live with a Wife, 'which ſhou'd be the beſt he cou'd, he wou'd have one that he thought 'likely to live well with him, which he thought chiefly depended upon 'their Diſpoſition and Education; and if he knew any thing particular 'of the Lady Mary in theſe Points, he deſired him to tell him freely.

Sir William Temple like a Friend anſwer'd his Highneſs, 'That he was 'very glad to find he was reſolv'd to Marry, being what he ow'd his Fami-'ly and Friends: That he was much pleas'd that his Inclinations led him 'to endeavour it in England. That he thought it as much for his Intereſt, 'as other of his Engliſh Friends thought it was againſt it. That the 'King and his Highneſs wou'd ever be able to do one another more Good 'and more Harm, than any other Princes cou'd do either of them, by 'being Friends or Enemies. That it was a great ſtep to be one Degree 'nearer the Crown, and in all Appearance the next. That for his Friends '(as they pretended) in England, they muſt ſee much further than he 'cou'd, to believe the King in any ſuch Dangers or Difficulties as they 'imagin'd. That the Crown of England ſtood upon ſurer Foundations 'than ever it had done in former times, and the more for what had paſs'd 'in the laſt Reign; and that he believ'd the People would be found bet-'ter Subjects than perhaps the King himſelf believ'd them. That it was, 'however, in his Power to be as well with them as he pleas'd, and to 'make as ſhort Turns to ſuch an End; if not, yet with the Help of a 'little good Husbandry, he might paſs his Reign in Peace, tho' not per-'haps with ſo much Eaſe at home, or Glory abroad, as if he fell into 'the Humour of his People. That if the Court were of Sentiments 'different from thoſe of his Highneſs, yet his Adviſers wou'd make him 'a greater Compliment, in believing him as likely to induce the Court 'to his, as in concluding they wou'd bring him to theirs; and if that 'ſhou'd happen, the moſt ſeditious Men in England will hardly be able 'to find an ill Side in ſuch a Match. That for the other Point, he cou'd 'ſay nothing to it; but that he had always heard his Wife and Siſter 'ſpeak with all the Advantage that cou'd be of what they cou'd 'diſcern in a Princeſs ſo young; and more from what they had been 'told

'told by the Governeſs, with whom they had a particular Friendſhip; 'and who, they were ſure, took all the Care that cou'd be in ſo much 'of the Lady's Education as fell to her Share. 1677. Car. 29 Reſ. 18

After two hours Diſcourſe upon this Subject, the Reſult was, that the Prince concluded to enter upon his Purſuit; and in order to it, reſolv'd to write both to the King and the Duke, to beg their Favour and Leave to come over into England, and make his Applications at the End of the Campaign. And likewiſe, that Sir William Temple's Lady, a Perſon of admirable Senſe and Addreſs, who was then going over upon private Affairs, ſhould carry and deliver theſe Letters; but ſhou'd firſt endeavour to inform her ſelf the beſt ſhe cou'd, of all that concern'd the Perſon, Humour and Diſpoſition of the young Princeſs. The only Perſon in England intruſted with this Secret, for a conſiderable time, was the Lord Treaſurer Danby, who inviolably obſerv'd it. And he has ſince inform'd us, that the King did not know any of the Prince's Thoughts of that Matter till May 1677, when he firſt try'd how the King wou'd approve of ſuch a Propoſal; and that it was at leaſt two Months after before he had any hopes of his Majeſty's Allowance of any Treaty about it. The Prince himſelf was long diverted from this Purſuit and Inclination by his Fatigues in the Camp, and by the Perplexity of the Affairs of Europe, and eſpecially by the tedious Suſpence of the Treaty of Nimeguen. About the end of July this Year he made an Attempt upon Charleroy, but fail'd in the intended Surprize of that Place. And now at laſt perceiving there cou'd be no ſtop put to the Progreſs of the French Arms, but by calling in the Aſſiſtance of England, he reſolv'd to purſue the Marriage with all Vigour, and ſent over Monſieur Bentinck, ſince Earl of Portland, into England, to ſollicit that Affair, and to make way for his Journey thither. This was managed with ſuch Skill and Secrecy, by the Aſſiſtance of the Lord Treaſurer, that the King was brought to allow and approve of the Prince's Journey; but ſtill in a great Meaſure under the cover of Foreign Buſineſs. The Progreſs of it.

3. Under this Encouragement, the Prince, accompanied by a great many Perſons of the beſt Quality in Holland, came over into England, and arriv'd at Harwich on the 9th Day of October. His Highneſs, like an eager Lover, went Poſt from thence to Newmarket, where the Court was enjoying all ſorts of Rural Sports and Entertainments. At his firſt alighting, the Earl of Arlington, as Chamberlain, attended his Highneſs, making his Pretence of the chief Confidence with him; and the Court expected no leſs from his Acquaintance and Journeys into Holland. The Lord Treaſurer and Sir William Temple went together to attend him; and whiſpering to them both, he ſaid to Sir William, That he muſt deſire him to anſwer for him and the Lord Treaſurer one to another, ſo as they might from that time, enter both into Buſineſs and Converſation, as if they had been of a longer Acquaintance. This was a wiſe Strain of Policy, conſidering the Treaſurer's Intereſt in the Court at that time, and prov'd of ſpecial uſe to the Prince, in the Courſe of his Affairs then in England: And tho' it much diſpleas'd the Lord Arlington and his Friends, yet it cou'd not be wonder'd at by ſuch as knew what had paſs'd between the Prince and him. His Highneſs was very kindly receiv'd by the King and the Duke, who both invited him often into Diſcourſes of Buſineſs, which they were ſurpriz'd to ſee him decline ſo induſtriouſly; inſomuch that the King order'd Sir William Temple to find out the Reaſon of it. His Highneſs plainly told Sir William, He was reſolv'd to ſee the young Princeſs, before he enter'd upon any Conferences about the Peace or War. The King laugh'd at this nice Piece of Gallantry; but, however, The Prince arrives in Englandl ever, to humour his Highneſs in it, he left Newmarket ſome Days ſooner than he intended.

His Reception.

The Prince, upon his Arrival at London, and ſight of the Lady Mary, was ſo captivated with her Perſon, and all thoſe Signs of ſuch an Humour as had been deſcrib'd to him upon former Enquiries, that he immediately made his Suit to the King and the Duke of York. His Royal Highneſs was very cold upon the Propoſal, which was very well receiv'd and aſſented to by his Majeſty; but with this Condition, That the Terms of a Peace Abroad might be firſt agreed on between them. The Prince excuſed himſelf, and ſaid, He muſt end his firſt Buſineſs before he begun the other. The King and the Duke were both poſitive in their Opinion, and the Prince as reſolute in his; and ſaid at laſt, That his Allies, who were like to have hard Terms of the Peace, as Things then ſtood, wou'd be apt to believe that he had made his Match at their Coſt; and for his Part, he wou'd never ſell his Honour for a Wife. This prevail'd not, but the King continu'd ſo poſitive for three or four Days, that the Lord-Treaſurer and Sir William Temple, the great Promoters of the Match, began to fear the whole Buſineſs wou'd break upon this Punctilio. About that time Sir William went by chance to the Prince after Supper, and found him in the worſt Humour that ever he ſaw him. His Highneſs told him, That he repented he ever came into England, and reſolv'd he wou'd ſtay but two Days longer, and then be gone, if the King continu'd in his Mind of treating upon the Peace before he was married; but that before he went, the King muſt chuſe how they ſhou'd live hereafter; for he was ſure it muſt be either like the greateſt Friends, or the greateſt Enemies, and deſir'd Sir William to let his Majeſty know ſo next Morning, and give him Account of what he ſhou'd ſay upon it. Accordingly Sir William, early in the Morning, told the King all that the Prince had ſaid to him the Night before, and repreſented to his Majeſty the ill Conſequences of a Breach between them, conſidering the ill Humours of ſo many of his Subjects upon the late Meaſures with France, and the INVITATION made the Prince by ſeveral of them during the late War. The King heard him with great Attention, and in concluſion ſaid, I never yet was deceiv'd in judging a Man's Honeſty by his Looks, of which he gave him ſome Examples; and if I am not deceiv'd in the Prince's Face, he is the honeſteſt Man in the World, and I will truſt him, and he ſhall have his Wife, and you ſhall go immediately and tell my Brother ſo, and that 'tis a thing I am reſolv'd on. Sir William did ſo, and the Duke at firſt ſeem'd a little ſurpriz'd, but at laſt ſaid, The King ſhall be obey'd, and I ſhou'd be glad if all his Subjects wou'd learn of me to obey him: I do tell him my Opinion very freely upon any thing; but when that is done, and I know his Pleaſure upon it, I obey him. From the Duke of York, Sir William Temple went to the Prince of Orange, who hearing the Story was ſo tranſported, that embracing him, he told him, He had made him a very happy Man, and very unexpectedly.

The Match declared between him and the Lady Mary.

Immediately after, Sir William gave an Account of what had paſs'd to the Lord Treaſurer, who took upon him to adjuſt all the reſt, as well the Portion of Forty Thouſand Pounds, as other Matters, between the King, the Duke and the Prince; all which he effected ſo well, that the Match was declar'd that Evening at the Committee, before any other of the Court knew the leaſt of it. The next Morning, the 24th of October, his Majeſty was pleas'd to ſummon the Lords of the Privy-Council upon this extraordinary Occaſion, and to declare to them, That he had concluded a Marriage between her Highneſs the Lady Mary, and his Highneſs the Prince of Orange. Upon which their Lordſhips, about three in the the Afternoon, with great Pleaſure, went in a Body to make their Compliments and Congratulations firſt to the Lady, and afterwards to the Prince. And as the ſurprizing News flew about, the City was preſently fill'd with Lights of Bonfires, the Sound of the Guns and Bells, and all the Marks of the moſt dilated Joy and Satisfaction. The French Ambaſſador and the Lord Arlington appear'd the only two diſſatisfy'd Perſons about the Court; the firſt not knowing how to anſwer it to his Maſter, that an Affair of that high Importance ſhould be tranſacted without his Advice, or ſo much as his Knowledge, in a Court where nothing before had been done ſo for many Years; and the Lord Arlington, that it ſhould paſs without his Knowledge, who ſtill endeavour'd to keep up the Court in the Belief of his Confidence with the Prince; to whom, however, he made this Compliment, That ſome Things good in themſelves, were ſpoil'd by the Manner of doing them, as ſome Things Bad were mended by it; but he wou'd confeſs this was a Thing ſo good in it ſelf, that the Manner of doing of it, cou'd not ſpoil it. On the 29th of the ſame Month, Sir Francis Chaplin, the preſent Lord Mayor, made a Solemn Invitation in the Name of the City to the Prince and the whole Court. Accordingly both their Majeſties, accompany'd with his Royal Highneſs the Duke, with the Lady Mary and the Lady Anne, the Prince of Orange, attended by a great many of the principal Nobility, and other Perſons of Quality, went firſt to the Show in Cheapſide, and after that to the Guild-Hall to Dinner, where the Entertainment was wonderful Noble and Magnificent in all Kinds. His Majeſty was pleas'd to confer the Honour of Knighthood upon William Royſton and Thomas Beckford, the preſent Sheriffs, and return'd with the Court to White-Hall, extreamly pleas'd with the abundant Demonſtrations of Joy and Duty that appear'd upon this Occaſion.

1677. Car. 29 Reſ. 18

Their Entertainment by the Lord Mayor.

The Prince of Orange, upon the firſt Notice of his Succeſs, immediately diſpatch'd away an Expreſs to the States, to acquaint them with what had paſs'd, expecting the Approbation of the Match with all Speed; that he might the ſooner repair to them, for the Service of their Country. Upon which the States-General aſſembled, and having maturely weigh'd the Advantages which might accrue to their Government by this Marriage; and particularly, 'A Confirmation of the Union between 'England and Holland, the Eſtabliſhment and Illuſtration of the Houſe 'of Orange, and the Concluſion of the Peace ſo earneſtly deſired, be'ſides the happy Choice his Highneſs had made of a Princeſs, every 'Way accompliſh'd;' they expreſs'd their Approbation by a Publick Edict, in Terms full of Joy and Satisfaction: Declaring moreover, 'the 'mighty Eſteem they had for ſo glorious an Alliance, and their ſincere 'and firm Reſolution to cultivate the ancient Friendſhip and good Cor'reſpondence, which was between his Britannick Majeſty and Them.' This Anſwer arriving at London on his Highneſs's Birth-Day, November the 4th, the Marriage was privately celebrated at St. James's, about Eleven at Night, by the Biſhop of London, in the Preſence of his Majeſty, who gave the Bride, their Royal Highneſſes, and ſome of the Principal Nobility. The News of this the next Morning rais'd new Tranſports of Joy in the City; and this was the firſt Time that the Fifth of November ſeem'd to have met with a double Solemnity. This Marriage was ſo much for the preſent Benefit of the Nation, and ſo important in the Conſequence, that too much Gratitude can hardly be expreſs'd to the Memory of the Authors. And here we may properly take Notice of Father Orleans's Account of it, a Perſon afterwards ſo well acquainted with King James, who ſays, 'Some are of Opinion that 'the Prince had Foreſight enough to have the Succeſſion in View when 'he marry'd the Princeſs Mary, Eldeſt Daughter to the Duke of York;

The Marriage conſummated.

'and that from the Time he perceiv'd the Storm riſing againſt the Heir 'to the Crown of England, he thought it his Right to make the beſt 'Advantage of his Shipwreck. The Duke of York had miſtruſted it, 'and done all he could to obſtruct the Match, which the King his Bro- 'ther, being impos'd upon by the Earl of Danby and Sir William Tem- 'ple, had concluded without his Privity. The Event has plainly ſhew'd 'that the Duke ſaw farther than others; but being under Command, he 'could make no uſe of that Foreſight for his own Preſervation, &c.'

The two Authors of it.

This, tho' obliquely repreſented by a Jeſuit, muſt juſtly be turn'd to the Honour of theſe two Great Men; and the former of them, ſince he was Duke of Leeds, has declared in Print, That he will not ſuffer that part of his Service to be bury'd in Oblivion. What Senſe the Prince had of his Services, will appear from his Letters to the Treaſurer, in which we ſhall take Notice of two Paſſages: Firſt, when the Prince was going into Holland with his Princeſs, December 8th from on board his Ship, he writes thus, 'I was deſirous to write to you juſt upon my 'Departure from England, that the laſt Thing I do before I go, may 'be thanking you for all the good Offices you have done me, and intreat- 'ing that I may always have the Continuance of them.' Soon after he landed in Holland, in another Letter he writes thus, 'Altho' I landed 'but Yeſterday, and therefore can have no great Buſineſs to write a- 'bout; yet I cou'd not forbear writing, to repeat to you the Offer of my 'moſt humble Service, and to aſſure you of the true Senſe I have of all 'the Obligations you have laid upon me. — As for me, I entirely rely 'upon you; and reſt ſatisfy'd, that you will neglect nothing that lies in 'your Power to do for the Security of both the Nations, and am, 'with all the Paſſion that is poſſible for me to be, *Yours, &c. Debates between the King and the Prince about the Peace.

4. Within a few Days after this auſpicious Marriage, the Prince earneſtly proceeded to the other Affair which he had ſo long declin'd; and the King, the Duke and He, with none others admitted but the Lord Treaſurer and Sir William Temple, fell into Debates upon the Terms of a general Peace. The Prince inſiſted hard upon the Strength and Enlargement of a Frontier, or Barrier, on both Sides of Flanders, without which France would end his War with the Proſpect of beginning another, and carrying Flanders in one Campaign. The King was content to leave that Buſineſs a little looſer, upon the Confidence That France was ſo weary of the War, that if they could get out of it with Honour, they would never begin another in this Reign; That the King grew paſt his Youth, and lazy, and would turn to the Pleaſures of the Court, and Building, and leave his Neighbours in Quiet. The Prince ſtill urg'd, That France wou'd not make a Peace now, but to break the preſent Confederacy; and their Ambition wou'd never end till they had all Flanders and Germany to the Rhine, and thereby Holland in an abſolute Dependance upon them, which wou'd leave the Dutch in a bad Condition, and the Engliſh in no good one. Sir William Temple ſeconded the Prince, and told his Majeſty, That in the Courſe of his Life, he had never obſerv'd Men's Natures to alter by Age or Fortunes; but that a good Boy made a good Man; a young Coxcomb, an old Fool; a young Cheat, an old Knave; and that quiet Spirits were ſo, young as well as old; and unquiet Ones wou'd be ſo, old as well as young: That he believ'd the King of France wou'd have ſome Bent or other, ſometimes War, ſometimes Love, ſometimes Building; but he was of the Prince's Opinion, That he wou'd ever make Peace with a Deſign of a new War, after he had fix'd his Conqueſt by the laſt; of which Opinion his Majeſty approv'd. The Points of demanding Lorrain and Alſatia were eaſily agreed to by the King and Duke; but they wou'd not not hear of the County of Burgundy, as what France cou'd never be brought to, tho' the Prince inſiſted much upon it; ſo as the King imagined he was touch'd by the Intereſt of his own Lands in that Country, which were too conſiderable to be neglected; and thereupon told him, That for his Lands he wou'd charge Himſelf with either his enjoying them as ſafely under France as Spain, or if he ſhould rather chuſe to part with them than have that Dependence, he wou'd undertake to get him what Price he ſhould value them at. But the Prince anſwer'd briskly and generouſly, That he ſhou'd not trouble himſelf nor the Peace about that Matter; and that he would be content to loſe all his Lands there, to get one good Town more for the Spaniards upon the Frontier of Flanders. This admitted great Debates between the King and Prince; one pretending France would never be brought to one Scheme, and t'other that Spain would never conſent to the other. But at laſt it was agreed, That the Peace ſhould be made upon theſe Terms, 'All ſhould be reſtored by France to the Emperor that had been taken in the War; the Dutchy of Lorrain to that Duke, and all on both ſides between France and Holland; and to Spain the Towns of Aeth, Charleroy, Oudenard, Courtray, Tournay, Conde, Valenciennes, St. Giſland, and Binch.' That the Prince ſhould endeavour to procure the Conſent of Spain, and the King that of France; for which purpoſe he ſhould ſend ſome Perſon immediately over with the Propoſition, who was to enter into no Reaſonings upon it, but demand a poſitive Anſwer in two Days, and after that Term immediately return.

A Scheme agreed on.

For the effecting of this, the Lord Duras, the afterwards Earl of Feverſham, a Creature of the Duke's, was at laſt the Perſon fix'd on, and ſent over into France. Soon after which, the Prince and Princeſs embarqu'd for Holland; the King aſſuring his Highneſs, That he wou'd never part from the leaſt Point of the Scheme ſent over, and wou'd enter into the War againſt France, if they refus'd it. However, before he went, he had the Mortification to ſee the Sitting of the Parliament put off from the Third of December, to the Fourth of April; which the French Ambaſſador had gain'd, to make ſome friendly Appearance with France after the Prince's Marriage, and before the Diſpatch of the Terms of Peace to that Court. Upon the Lord Duras's Arrival at Paris, the Court there were ſurpriz'd both at the Thing, and more at the Manner; but took it gently, and ſaid, 'His Britannick Majeſty knew very well 'he might always be Maſter of the Peace; but ſome of the Towns in 'Flanders ſeem'd very hard, eſpecially Tournay, upon whoſe Fortifications ſuch vaſt Sums had been expended; and that they would take ſome 'ſhort Time to conſider of the Anſwer.' His Lordſhip told them, he was ty'd to two Days Stay; but when that was out, he was prevail'd with to ſtay ſome few Days longer, and to come away without any poſitive Anſwer: What he brought was, That the moſt Chriſtian King hop'd his Brother would not break with him upon one or two Towns; but even upon them he would ſend Orders to his Ambaſſadour at London to treat with his Majeſty Himſelf. And to ſave thoſe Towns, very great Sums of Money were offer'd to the Engliſh Ambaſſador Mountague, for the Uſe of the King, and the Lord Treaſurer, which were never accepted. However, the King was ſo mollify'd, that the Buſineſs came to be drawn out into ſo many Meſſages from England, and Returns from France, that it diminiſh'd into nothing.

The Delays of France,

In the mean Time the ill Humour of the People growing higher upon the Noiſe of a Peace, and negotiated in France, and the late Prolongation of the Parliament, the King thought fit by Proclamation to anticipate the meeting of the Parliament, and to appoint it on the 15th Day of Janua- ry; making a ſhew as if he reſolv'd to enter into the War, for which the Parliament ſeem'd impatient whenever the King appear'd averſe to it, and grew jealous of ſome Tricks whenever the Court ſeem'd inclin'd to it. However, the King was ſure of obliging them in the Particular of the late Marriage of his Neece; the News of which Marriage at Nimeguen, gave the Confederates great Hopes that his Majeſty of England would now declare in their Favour. But it had a different Effect in Holland, particularly in Amſterdam; and tho' it had been generally receiv'd with great Satisfaction, yet in a little Time the French Emiſſaries found Means to raiſe Jealouſies of the Meaſures concerted between the King and the Prince upon this new Alliance, as dangerous to the Liberty of their Country; and to make it believ'd, 'That by this Match the 'King and the Duke had wholly brought over the Prince to their Inte-'reſt and Sentiments;' when in reality, the Prince went away poſſeſs'd of having drawn Them into His; tho' they were equally miſtaken. But how different ſoever their Apprehenſions abroad might be of Things, at Home the King wav'd his Engagements to the Prince, of entering into the War with the Allies, in caſe of no direct and immediate Anſwer from the King of France; and contented himſelf with ſending Mr. Thynne over into Holland with a former Draught of an Alliance to be made with the States-General, in order to compel France and Spain into the Compliance of the Scheme agreed on; and to conſign the ſame into the Hands of Mr. Hyde, then at the Hague. Accordingly the Treaty was ſign'd on the 16th of January, tho' not without great Difficulties, and much Diſſatisfaction on the Part of the Prince of Orange; who had yet the ſmall Comfort to be cover'd in it by the private Conſent of the Spaniſh Miniſter there, in behalf of his Maſter; ſo that the War cou'd not break out but upon France, in caſe of their Refuſal.

1677. Car. 29 Ref. 18

And Contrivances.

5. Such was the State of Affairs at the next Meeting of the Parliament, againſt which all Preparations had been made; but before we come to that, for a Concluſion of the Year, we are to take Notice of ſome Honours and Preferments, and the Deaths of ſeveral noted and conſiderable Men. As to the Former, this Year his Grace Henry Duke of Newcaſtle, and the Earl of Danby Lord Treaſurer of England, were inſtall'd Knights of the moſt noble Order of the Garter at Windſor, on the 19th of April, in the Room of William Duke of Newcaſtle, and George Earl of Briſtol. About the Beginning of Auguſt, the Duke of Ormond was again conſtituted Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, and made his Journey towards that Kingdom with a noble Equipage, and agreeable to the Dignity of that Employment; being accompany'd out of Town by moſt of the principal Nobility and Perſons of Quality, in a numerous Train of Coaches: Arriving in Ireland, on the 23d of Auguſt, his Grace was ſolemnly conducted to the Council-Chamber, where he was ſworn into that great Office, and receiv'd the Sword from the Earl of Eſſex, the laſt Lord Lieutenant, who began now to decline in the King's Favour. In the Beginning of January, his Majeſty was pleas'd, in Conſideration of the great Services perform'd to him and his Royal Father, by George Wharton, Eſquire, and of his Sufferings in the late Times of Uſurpation, to confer on him the Dignity of a Baronet of this Kingdom.

The Deaths of Archbiſhop Sheldon,

Of the Eminent Perſons that dy'd this Year, we ſhall begin with two venerable Prelates, Dr. Gilbert Sheldon, and Dr. William Lucy: The Former was educated in the Univerſity of Oxford, where he was Warden of All-Souls; and having been Chaplain to the late King, and run through many Difficulties, after the Reſtoration, he was made firſt Biſhop of London, and laſtly Archbiſhop of Canterbury, which See he fill'd with with great Honour and Reputation for above Fourteen Years, when he dy'd at Seventy nine Years of Age. Beſides his Learning and Piety, he is particularly diſtinguiſh'd by his munificent Benefactions, in which no Man more readily ſignaliz'd himſelf; and particularly he immortaliz'd his Name in that glorious Work, the Theatre of Oxford; and we are aſſur'd from his Relations, that from the Time of his being Biſhop of London to that of his Death, it appear'd in his Book of Accompts, that upon Publick, Pious and Charitable Uſes, he had beſtow'd about Threeſcore and ſix Thouſand Pounds. He was ſucceeded in this high Station by Dr. William Sancroft, the worthy Dean of St. Pauls, who was advanc'd to it without any Expectation or Inclination of his own. The other Prelate was Dr. Lucy, Biſhop of St. Davids, a Perſon who had his Education in both Univerſities, and particularly in Caius College in Cambridge, where he liv'd ſeveral Years on his own Eſtate; from whence, removing into Hampſhire, after variety of Fortunes, he was upon the Reſtoration advanc'd to his Epiſcopal See, in which he dy'd in the 87th of his Age, full of Years and Reputation; being a Perſon of ſignal Candor, and Virtues requiſite to a true Church-Man, which in the moſt difficult Times gain'd him great Eſteem from the very Enemies of his Order and Function. 1677. Car. 29 Ref. 18 Biſhop Lucy.

The next to be mention'd are two other eminent Divines of the Church of England, Dr. Iſaac Barrow, and Dr. Robert Mapletoft: The Former was of London by Birth, and principally educated in the Univerſity of Cambridge, where, after he had improv'd Himſelf by Travel, he was made ſucceſſively Greek and Mathematick Profeſſor, as well as Geometry Lecturer in Greſham College: Afterwards the preſent King made him Maſter of Trinity College in the ſame Univerſity, and when he beſtow'd it upon him was pleas'd to ſay, That he gave it to the beſt Scholar in England; and truly he ſhew'd himſelf of a moſt extenſive Genius, profoundly vers'd in Theology, as well as other Parts of Learning, and had ſuch an Invention and Method, that all his Sermons ſeem'd as compleat Treatiſes, in which the Subject, after his peculiar Manner, was exhauſted. After an exemplary Life of Piety, Modeſty and Sweetneſs, he dy'd in the 47th Year of his Age. The Other Divine, Dr. Mapletoft, was of Lincolnſhire by Birth, and of Pembroke-Hall in Cambridge by Education, of which College he was afterwards made Maſter, afterwards Sub-Dean of Lincoln, and laſt of all Dean of Ely. His Worth was ſo diſtinguiſhing, that when Archbiſhop Sheldon perceiv'd the Dutcheſs of York inclinable to Popery, he look'd upon Dr. Mapletoft a ſufficient Perſon to ſatisfy her Scruples, and keep her in the Communion of the Church of England, and us'd to call him by the Name of The Primitive Divine; but he was ſent for too late. He is particularly to be remember'd for his pious and charitable Donations, his Founding two Schools, his Catechetical Lectures, his free Gifts to Cathedrals, Colleges, Clergy-Mens Widows, &c. for which his Name deſerves to be perpetuated. Dr. Barrow, Dr. Mapletoft,

After theſe, we are to mention two celebrated Divines of the Diſſenting Party, Dr. Thomas Manton, and Mr. Theophilus Gale: The Firſt was once of the Presbyterian, and then of the Independent Sect, and a Chief amongſt Both, of whoſe extraordinary Services and Compliances with reſpect to Oliver and Richard Cromwell, mention has been formerly made. At the King's Reſtoration he was in great Repute, was made one of his Majeſty's Chaplains, one of the Savoy Commiſſioners, and became a zealous Mover to get the Declaration for Eccleſiaſtical Affairs paſs'd into a Law; which had he compaſs'd, he wou'd have accepted of a Deanery that was offer'd him; but upon the Act of Uniformity, he thought fit not only to refuſe his Deanery, but alſo to quit his Church of Covent-Garden Dr. Manton,

1677. Car. 29 Ref. 18

Garden in London. After which he became a conſiderable Sufferer from the Laws againſt Diſſenters, yet kept up a mighty Intereſt with ſome great Men, as the Earl of Bedford, the Lord Wharton, &c. and left the World with the Name of a Perſon of great Learning and Temper, Judgment and Integrity, and an excellent unwearied Preacher. But with all theſe good Qualities and Abilities, a faithful Hiſtorian ought not to let him paſs without declaring, That he knows not how to excuſe his general Proceedings in the late Times. It cannot be deny'd, that the Diſſenters felt a great Loſs in his Death, but the Church in general had not ſo great a one in his Quitting his Living, if it be conſider'd who was his Succeſſor, the unexceptionable Dr. Symon Patrick. The Other, Mr. Gale, ſeem'd to have had more Learning and leſs Faction than the Former: He had been Fellow of Magdalene College in the Univerſity of Oxford, and a frequent Preacher there. Being ejected, at the Reſtoration, out of that, and a Place in Wincheſter, he travell'd into Foreign Parts, as Tutor to the Lord Wharton's Sons; from whence returning, he ſettled in London, and ſhew'd himſelf to be a Man of vaſt Reading and Induſtry, an exact Philologiſt and Philoſopher, as his Court of the Gentiles, and his other learned Works do ſufficiently teſtify. In the midſt of his great Deſigns he was ſnatcht away in the Prime of his Years, the 49th of his Age.

Mr. Gale,

Beſides theſe, we are to mention three or four others of different Characters: The two firſt were Mr. Robert Sheringham, and Dr. Francis Gliſſon, both educated in Caius College in Cambridge. The Firſt, being driven from his Fellowſhip in the College in 1643, went into Holland, where he taught the Hebrew and Arabick Tongues; but after the Reſtoration, he return'd to his Fellowſhip, and liv'd a ſtudious and retired Life, ſhewing himſelf to be an extraordinary Linguiſt, eſpecially in the Oriental and Gothick Languages, as alſo admirably well vers'd in the Original Antiquities of the Engliſh Nation, as appears from his Book De Anglorum Gentis Origine, and other learned Writings. The Other, Dr. Gliſſon, was one of the famous Phyſicians of the Age, who for his Eminency was firſt made the King's Profeſſor of Phyſick in the Univerſity of Cambridge, and afterwards Preſident of the College of Phyſicians. He made ſeveral notable Diſcoveries in Anatomy, wrote ſome very uſeful Treatiſes in his Faculty, and dy'd at London, much lamented by Foreigners, as well as his own Countrymen. The two laſt to be mention'd are Sir John King, and Mr. James Harrington: The Former had his Education in Queen's College in Cambridge, where he firſt diſcover'd his great Parts and Abilities; from whence he remov'd to the Inner Temple, where he ſhew'd himſelf moſt famous in his Profeſſion, the Law, and was made Solicitor General to his Royal Highneſs the Duke of York; and his Buſineſs ſo much increas'd upon his Hands, that in the laſt Part of his Life his Fees amounted to forty and fifty Pounds a Day. He was not only a compleat Lawyer, but a general Scholar, an accompliſh'd Gentleman, and a modeſt and pious Chriſtian, who was ſuddenly taken from the World in the 39th Year of his Age, to the great Affliction of his numerous Friends and Relations. The Other, Mr. James Harrington, was a fine Gentleman that made a conſiderable Figure in the World during the late Times of Confuſion, of whom mention has been already made. After a great Improvement made by ſeveral Years Travels, and having been an Attendant on the late King during his Impriſonment, he afterwards much diſtinguiſh'd Himſelf by Inventing a new Model of a Commonwealth, and writing ſeveral Books to that End, of which his Oceana and the Rota were ſo highly admired by ſome, as to be compared to the Pattern in the Mount, but by others look'd upon as ingenious Maggots, never to be reduc'd duc'd to Practice in the Engliſh Nation. After the Reſtoration his Schemes all vaniſh'd and diſappear'd, and he again went to travel in Foreign Countries, ſeeking out new Models of Government, till the Warmth of his curious Head, after his Return home, brought on a ſort of a Delirium, or an uncommon Strength of Imagination, in which Condition he left the World in the 67th Year of his Age.

VII. 1. We are now arriv'd at the 30th Year of this King's Reign, a Year, upon the Account of Domeſtick Affairs, more remarkable and tumultuous than any ſince the Reſtoration. It began with a further Continuation of the Sixteenth Seſſion of the Second and long Parliament. By way of Preparation to this Meeting, his Majeſty thought fit to do ſome Things Terrifying as well as Popular, to ſhew his Authority as well as his Clemency, in ſuppreſſing Libels and ſeditious Diſcourſes, which very much encreas'd about this Time. Particularly the Dangers of Popery, and the Advances of the Popiſh Intereſt at Court, were ſo boldly and reflectingly repreſented by Mr. Andrew Marvel in his Account of the Growth of Popery, &c. that his Majeſty caus'd an Order to be publiſh'd in theſe Words: 'Whereas there have been lately Printed and Publiſh'd 'ſeveral Seditious and Scandalous Libels againſt the Proceedings of both 'Houſes of Parliament, and other his Majeſty's Courts of Juſtice, to the 'Diſhonour of his Majeſty's Government, and the Hazard of the Publick Peace: Theſe are to give notice, That what Perſon ſoever ſhall 'diſcover unto one of the Secretaries of State, the Printer, Publiſher, 'Author, or Hander to the Preſs of any of the ſaid Libels, ſo that full 'Evidence thereof may be made to a Jury, without mentioning the Informer; eſpecially one Libel intituled, An Account of the Growth of 'Popery, &c. and Another call'd, A Seaſonable Argument to all Grand 'Juries, &c. The Diſcoverer ſhall be rewarded as follows: He ſhall 'have fifty Pound for ſuch Diſcovery, as aforeſaid, of the Printer, or the 'Publiſher of it from the Preſs; and for the Hander of it to the Preſs, 'one Hundred Pounds, &c.

A further Continuation of the SIXTEENTH SESSION of Parliament.

Thus prepared, on the 15th Day of January both Houſes of Parliament met according to Adjournment, after a Receſs or Interval of a little above ſeven Months. But before they began any Buſineſs, the King ſent them this following Meſſage: 'That his Majeſty had Matters of ve- The King's Meſſage. 'ry great Importance to communicate to both Houſes, in Order to the 'Satisfaction of the late Addreſſes for the Preſervation of Flanders. But 'it ſo happening, that Matters are not yet ſo ripe as within a few Days 'they will be; therefore his Majeſty's Pleaſure was, that they ſhou'd be 'immediately adjourn'd till Monday the 28th of this Inſtant January.' On that Day his Majeſty came to the Houſe of Peers, and ſending for the Commons, he made this remarkable Speech to both Houſes: 'My Lords And Speech to both Houſes. 'and Gentlemen, When we parted laſt I told you, That before we met 'again I wou'd do that which ſhou'd be to your Satisfaction; I have accordingly made ſuch Alliances with Holland as are for the Preſervation 'of Flanders, and which cannot fail of that End, unleſs prevented either 'by the Want of due Aſſiſtances to ſupport thoſe Alliances, or by the 'ſmall Regard the Spaniards themſelves muſt have to their own Preſervation. The Firſt of theſe I cannot ſuſpect, by reaſon of your repeated Engagements to maintain them; and I know you are ſo wiſe as to conſider, That a War, which muſt be the neceſſary Conſequence of 'them, ought neither to be proſecuted by Halves, nor to want ſuch Aſſurances of Perſeverance as may give me Encouragement to purſue it: 'Beſides, it will not be leſs neceſſary to let our Enemies have ſuch a 'Proſpect of our Reſolutions, as may let them ſee certainly, That we

'ſhall not be weary of our Arms, 'till Chriſtendom be reſtored to 'ſuch a Peace, as ſhall not be in the Power of any Prince alone to di-'ſturb.

'I do acknowledge to you, that I have us'd all Means poſſible, by a 'Mediation, to have procured an honourable and ſafe Peace for Chriſten-'dom; knowing how preferable ſuch a Peace wou'd have been to any 'War, and eſpecially to this Kingdom, which muſt neceſſarily own the 'vaſt Benefits it has receiv'd by Peace, while its Neighbours only have 'yet ſmarted by the War: But finding it no longer to be hop'd for by 'fair Means, it ſhall not be my Fault if that be not obtain'd by Force, 'which cannot be had any other Ways. For this Reaſon I have recall'd 'my Troops from France, and have conſider'd, That altho' the Dutch 'ſhall do their Parts, we cannot have leſs on ours than Ninety Sail of 'Capital Ships conſtantly maintain'd, nor leſs than thirty or forty Thou-'ſand Land Men (with the Dependencies) to be employ'd upon our 'Fleets and elſewhere. And becauſe there ſhall be no Fear of Miſem-'ploying what you ſhall give to theſe Uſes, I am contented that ſuch Mo-'ney be appropriated to thoſe Ends as ſtrictly as you can deſire. I have 'given Teſtimony enough of my Care in that Kind by the Progreſs 'I have made in Building the new Ships; wherein, for the making them 'more uſeful, I have directed ſuch larger Dimenſions, as will coſt me 'above one Hundred Thouſand Pounds more than the Acts allow. I 'have gone as far as I cou'd in Repairing the Old Fleet, and in Buying 'neceſſary Stores for the Navy and Ordnance; and in this and other Pro-'viſions, for better Securing both my Foreign Plantations and the Iſlands 'nearer home, I have expended a great deal more than the Two Hun-'dred Thouſand Pounds you enabled me to Borrow upon the Exciſe, 'altho' I have not found ſuch Credit as I expected upon that Security. I 'have born the Charge both of a Rebellion in Virginia, and a new War 'with Algiers: I ſtand engag'd to the Prince of Orange for my Neice's 'Portion; and I ſhall not be able to maintain my conſtant neceſſary Eſta-'bliſhments, unleſs the New Impoſt upon Wines, &c. be continu'd to 'me, which wou'd otherwiſe turn only to their Profit to whom we leaſt 'intend it.

'I hope theſe Things will need little Recommendation to you, when 'you conſider your Promiſes in ſome, and the Neceſſity of the reſt; and 'to let you ſee that I have not only employ'd my Time and Treaſure for 'your Safety, but done all I cou'd to remove all ſorts of Jealouſies, I 'have marry'd my Neice to the Prince of Orange, by which I hope I 'have given full Aſſurances that I ſhall never ſuffer his Intereſts to be 'ruin'd, if I can be aſſiſted as I ought to be, to preſerve them. Having 'done all this, I expect from you a Plentiful Supply ſuitable to ſuch 'Great Occaſions; whereon depends not only the Honour, but, for ought 'I know, the Being of an Engliſh Nation, which will not be ſav'd by 'finding Faults afterwards, but may be prevented by avoiding the chief 'Fault of doing Weakly and by Halves, what can only be hop'd from 'a vigorous and thorough Proſecution of what we undertake. Theſe 'Conſiderations are of the greateſt Importance that ever concern'd this 'Kingdom, and therefore I wou'd have you enter immediately upon them, 'without ſuffering any other Buſineſs whatſoever to divert you from 'bringing them to good Reſolutions.

The Conſtitution of the Commons. The Conſtitution of the preſent Houſe of Commons, that had ſat near ſeventeen Years, was now more manifeſtly grown into two Parties, which were call'd by the Name of the Court and the Country: The Former were grown numerous, by a Practice introduc'd about five Years

Years before this time by the Lord-Treaſurer Clifford, of downright buying off one Man after another, as they cou'd make the Bargain. The Country Party ſtill continu'd the Majority, and return'd more Credit upon the Corruption of others, and their Profeſſion of Adherence to the true Intereſts of the Nation, eſpecially in the Points of France and Popery: Where theſe came in Queſtion, many of the Court Party voted with thoſe of the Country, who then carried all before them; but whenever the Court appear'd to fall in with the true Intereſts of the Nation, eſpecially in thoſe two Points, then many of the Country Party, meaning fairly, fell in with the Court, and carried the Votes, as they ſoon did upon the King's Pretence to grow bold with France, and reſolve upon a War, if the Peace was refus'd. But firſt they began with an unexpected Strain of Loyalty, and before they conſider'd any part of his Majeſty's Speech. Having ſat on part of the 30th of January, the Anniverſary Faſt, upon the Motion of the Lord O-Brian, whoſe Son had lately marry'd the Lord-Treaſurer's Daughter, they voted, 'The 'Sum of Seventy thouſand Pounds for a ſolemn Funeral of his late Ma- 'jeſty King Charles the Firſt, and to erect a Monument for the ſaid 'Prince of glorious Memory; the ſaid Sum to be rais'd by a two 'Months Tax, to begin at the Expiration of the preſent Tax for build- 'ing Ships.' This, tho' look'd upon as an Affair to which the Nation had ſtood oblig'd for many Years, yet being never heartily mov'd in that Houſe before, was at preſent not a little ſurprizing to many, whoſe Minds were fill'd with various Conjectures.

Their Loyalty.

2. The next Day the Commons took the King's Speech into Conſideration, and in return preſented an Addreſs to his Majeſty at Whitehall, declaring their 'Thanks for his Care expreſſed for the Preſerva- 'tion and Encouragement of the Proteſtant Religion, in concluding a 'Marriage between his Neece and the Prince of Orange; beſeeching 'him not to admit any Treaty of Peace, whereby the French King 'ſhou'd be left in Poſſeſſion of any greater Dominion or Power, than 'was left him by the Pyrenean Treaty: That both on our Parts, and the 'Parts of the Confederates, no Ship nor Veſſel may be admitted to 'come out of any Port of France, but that the Ships and Men be ſeiz'd, 'and the Goods deſtroy'd: That he wou'd pleaſe to provide that none 'of the Parties who ſhou'd join in this Alliance and Confederacy againſt 'France, depart from the ſaid Alliance, 'till the ſaid King be reduced to 'the ſaid Treaty: That neither we nor the Confederates admit any 'Trade with France, or ſuffer any Goods to be imported from thence 'on pain of Forfeiture: That his Majeſty in making ſuch Confederacies 'as neceſſary for attaining theſe Ends, ſhall never doubt of the Affections 'of his People. Laſtly, they renew'd their former Proteſtations and En- 'gagements to perſevere in the Proſecution of the ſaid War; and when 'he ſhou'd be pleas'd to impart ſuch Alliances and Confederacies to them 'in Parliament, they wou'd give ſuch ready Aſſiſtances, upon all Occa- 'ſions, as might bring the War to a happy Concluſion.

And Addreſs to the King.

To this Addreſs the King return'd the following Anſwer in Writing, which was read in the Houſe of Commons the 4th of February: 'That 'he was not a little ſurpriz'd to find ſo much inſerted in their Addreſs 'of what ſhou'd not be, and ſo little of what ſhou'd: That his Speech 'was to both Houſes jointly, and the Return ought to be from both: 'That in their Addreſs of the 20th of May laſt, they did invite him to a 'League Offenſive and Defenſive with Holland againſt the French King, 'and for Preſerving the Spaniſh Netherlands; and upon his Declaration 'of ſuch Alliances, aſſur'd ſuch ſpeedy Aſſiſtances as might fully anſwer

The King's Anſwer.

1671/8. Car. 30 Reſ. 18

'the Occaſion: That he hath made ſuch Alliances, yet finds no Return 'but the Old Promiſes upon New Conditions; and ſo he may be us'd to 'Eternity, ſhou'd he ſeem ſatisfy'd with ſuch Proceedings: That on the '28th of May laſt he told them, how highly he was offended at the great 'Invaſion of his Prerogative; yet they took no notice of it, but added 'to their former ill Conduct new Invaſions. They deſir'd him to oblige 'his Confederates never to conſent to a Peace till the moſt Chriſtian King 'be reduc'd to the Pyrenean Treaty; a Determination fitting only for 'God Almighty, ſince none but he can tell the Terms of Peace who 'knows the Event of War: They deſire him not to ſuffer a Ship of theirs 'to come from France under Pain of Confiſcation, not excepting Allies, 'Prince, or Ambaſſadors (if any among them) that he did not believe 'any Aſſembly of Men ever gave ſo great and publick a Provocation to 'the whole World, without ſo much as conſidering to provide one Ship, 'Regiment, or Penny towards juſtifying it: That, however, if by their 'Aſſiſtance he might be put into Arms ſufficient for ſuch a Work, he 'wou'd not be weary till Chriſtendom be reſtor'd to ſuch a Peace, that 'it ſhou'd not be in the Power of one Prince to diſturb it: That the 'Rights of making and managing War and Peace were in his Majeſty; 'and if they thought he wou'd depart from any part of that Right, they 'were miſtaken: The Reins of Government were in his Hands, and he 'had the ſame Care to preſerve them there, as to preſerve his own Per-'ſon. He kept both his People's Protection and Safety; and that if the 'Houſe of Commons wou'd encourage his Majeſty to go further in Al-'liances, they muſt conſider of raiſing ſpeedy Supplies; for from the 'Conſideration of thoſe he muſt take his Meaſures.'

Shortly after the Commons reſolv'd upon a Supply, but with ſome ſtrict Limitations. At the ſame time they undertook to regulate ſuch Grievances as aroſe from their own Privileges; and took off all written Protections which had been granted by ſeveral Members to ſuch as were not really their Servants, to an incredible number; and particularly voted, 'That no Protection ſhou'd be allow'd to any but their Menial Servants, 'actually in Service, and that without a written Certificate.

The E. of Shaftsbury's Caſe,

3. All this time, and for above a Year, the Earl of Shaftsbury was kept a cloſe Priſoner in the Tower; for an Offence of a high Nature, as was formerly mention'd. After he had continu'd many Months, and finding his Petitions rejected for want of a formal Recantation of his Crime, he had recourſe to the King's-Bench, whither he was brought by a Habeas Corpus on the 27th of January, where Mr. Williams, Mr. Wallop, and Mr. Smith, his Council, argued that the Court ought to relieve him; and the Earl ſpoke himſelf with great Reaſon and Eloquence for the Liberty of the Subject, and his own Diſcharge. Yet the Judges deny'd him Redreſs, one of them declaring before the Cauſe was heard, That the Court cou'd not help him; and ſo the Earl was remanded to Priſon. This Application to an inferior Court was ſoon taken Notice of by the Lords, who voted it a Breach of Privilege, for which the Earl was to anſwer his Contempt at the Bar of the Houſe. On the 22d of February he was accordingly brought to the Bar, where he offer'd to acknowledge his aſſerting the Diſſolution of the Parliament to be an unadviſed Action, and to beg their Lordſhips Pardon for his Offence in bringing his Habeas Corpus. Soon after the Houſe proceeded to a Reſolution, that the Lord Shaftsbury ſhou'd make his Submiſſion and Acknowledgment in a Form preſcrib'd by that Houſe, without which he was to expect no Releaſe. This, tho' a Mortification to a high Spirit, the Earl was forc'd to ſubmit to: Accordingly the Lord Chancellor read the

the following Words to him, while the Earl kneeling repeated them at the Bar. 1. I do acknowledge that my endeavouring to maintain that the Parliament was diſſolv'd, was an ill-adviſed Action; for which I humbly beg Pardon of the King's Majeſty, and this moſt honourable Houſe. 2. I do acknowledge that my bringing a Writ of Habeas Corpus in the King's-Bench, was a High Violation of your Lordſhips Privilege, and a great Aggravation of my former Offence, for all which I beg Pardon. Having both repeated and ſubſcrib'd this Recantation, the Houſe order'd the Lords with White Staffs to acquaint his Majeſty, 'That they 'had receiv'd Satisfaction from the Earl of Shaftsbury in the Matter of 'the Habeas Corpus, and the other Contempt, and pray'd him to diſ-'charge the ſaid Earl from his Confinement.' Accordingly the Earl was releas'd, after an Impriſonment of about thirteen Months, and the next Day ſat in the Houſe of Lords, where he ſoon found Opportunities of ſhewing his Reſentments. 1677. Car. 30 Reſ. 18 And Submiſſion.

About the ſame time the City and Parliament were very much alarm'd with the ſudden and ſucceſsful Motions of the French King; who, to the Surprize of all Men, began his Campaign on the End of February: And marching at the head of his Army with his Queen and Court Ladies to Mentz, he ſeem'd firſt to threaten Luxemburg, Namur or Mons; but having drawn the Spaniſh Forces that way, he ſuddenly croſs'd the Country, and ſat down before Ghent; and notwithſtanding the Difficulties of the Seaſon, and their drowning part of the Country, he made himſelf Maſter of that large Place, and ſoon after of Ypres. By which he gave a mighty Alarm to Holland, and ſtrengthen'd the Credit and Endeavours of thoſe who were already diſpos'd to his Conditions of Peace, as grown now abſolutely neceſſary; while England ſeem'd reſolv'd to enter into the War, or at leaſt gave the Confederates many ſuch Hopes. After this Succeſs, the French King thought fit for a while to relax, and to diſpoſe his Armies into Quarters of Refreſhment; whether he thought them ſufficiently harraſs'd, or whether he was afraid of the King of England, who, at the Deſire of the Spaniſh Ambaſſador, had ſent over conſiderable Forces, under the Command of the Duke of Monmouth, to ſecure the important Town of Oſtend, which now ſeem'd much in Danger. And now the French King was pleas'd to make a publick Declaration of the Terms, upon which he was reſolv'd to make a Peace: Which, tho' very different from thoſe agreed between England and Holland, and more from the Pretenſions of the Allies; yet having, as to what concern'd Spain and Holland, been firſt privately agreed with ſome Leaders of the principal Towns, prov'd indeed the Plan of the Peace, both for Holland, and all the other Confederates. And here the French began that imperious way of Treating, which they afterwards purſued in the whole Negotiation of the enſuing Peace; peremptorily declaring, ſuch and ſuch were the Conditions they wou'd admit, and no other; and to which the King of France pretended to be tied no longer than one Month. And about the ſame time his Ambaſſador at London began to change his Language, who had ever before pretended, That his Britannick Majeſty ſhou'd always be Arbiter of the Peace; but now aſſuring himſelf that his Maſter had agreed with Holland, he ſeem'd to wonder and expoſtulate Why the King of England ſhou'd pretend to obtain better Terms for the Spaniards, than were allow'd by their Allies the Dutch. The Progreſs of the French in Flanders.

In the mean time the Commons, under great Apprehenſions, haſtned the Poll-Bill for raiſing of Money, and on the 14th of March expreſs'd their Impatiency for a War in theſe Terms: 'Upon ſeveral Motions 'made for conſidering the deplorable Condition of the Nation, reſolv'd 'in a Committee of the whole Houſe, That it is their Opinion, that an The Houſe of Commons alarm'd.

1677/8. Car. 30 Ref. 18

'Addreſs be preſented to the King, humbly to adviſe his Majeſty, that 'his Majeſty, to quiet the Minds of his loyal Subjects, and to encourage 'the Princes and States, Confederates againſt the French King, wou'd 'be graciouſly pleas'd to proclaim, and enter into an actual War with 'the French King; and to give his Majeſty Aſſurances, That this Houſe 'will conſtantly ſtand by and aid his Majeſty, in the Proſecution thereof, 'with neceſſary and plentiful Supplies and Aſſiſtances; and that his Ma-'jeſty wou'd preſently diſmiſs the French Ambaſſador, and recal his from 'France and Nimeguen.' Which Addreſs was the next Day drawn up accordingly, and ſent to the Lords for their Concurrence, but never proceeded further. For the King made haſte to ſecure the Money-Bill, and on the 20th of March came to the Houſe of Peers, and paſſed that and another, Intituled, An Act for Continuance of two former Acts, For preventing of Theft and Rapine upon the Northern Borders of England. In the Poll-Bill there was one ſtrict appropriating Clauſe for the Money ſo levied, to be apply'd to no uſe but the intended French War; and alſo another Clauſe prohibiting the Importation of any French Commodities for three Years. Upon paſſing thoſe Bills, by the King's Order, the Parliament was adjourn'd for about three Weeks, 'till the 11th of April, and then again for above a Fortnight longer to the 29th of the ſame Month.

A ſhort Receſs.

1678. 4. On Thurſday the 11th of April, the Parliament met, and adjourn'd to the Monday following; at which time, by the King's particular Appointment, they choſe a new Speaker in the Houſe of Commons, Sir Robert Sawyer, one of the King's Council Learned, and a great Practicer in the Exchequer; and from thence adjourn'd over to Monday the 29th of April. But in a few Days Sir Robert Sawyer excus'd his Attendance in a Letter, that he cou'd not follow the Service by reaſon of a violent Fit of the Stone, occaſion'd by his long Sitting one Day in the Houſe; whereupon the old Speaker, Mr. Edward Seymour, was again choſen, and reinſtated in the Chair. During the Receſs of Parliament, a very ſtrict Faſt was kept on Wedneſday the 10th of April in the City of London, and a Fortnight following throughout all England, to implore God's Bleſſing upon his Majeſty and his Kingdoms, and for the averting the particular Judgments of Heaven.

A Faſt.

Both Houſes being met on Monday the 29th of April, and the King and the Lords in their Robes; the Lord Chancellor Finch in a long Speech, 'recited all the Addreſſes that had been made in relation to a 'War with France, what the King had already done in purſuance of the 'ſame; and joining in an effectual League with the Confederates to that 'End, and how ready the King was to purſue their Deſires; but that 'now his Majeſty had diſcover'd, that the Dutch were entering upon a 'Treaty of Peace with the French King, and that without his Conſent or 'Privity; therefore his Majeſty demands the Advices of his two Houſes 'how to proceed.' Upon Conſideration of this, on the 4th of May, the Commons directly voted, 'to give their humble Advice to his Majeſty, 'that he wou'd forthwith enter into the preſent Alliance with the Confe-'derates, and an actual War with France, &c.' Beſides this Advice, it was voted by a Majority of ſixteen Voices, 'That the late Leagues, 'made with the States-General of the United Provinces, are not purſu-'ant to the Addreſſes of this Houſe, nor conſiſtent with the Good and 'Safety of the Kingdom.' Upon which, two Days after, the King being diſoblig'd, return'd this Anſwer, His Majeſty having been acquainted with the Votes of the 4th Inſtant, is very much ſurpriz'd both with the Matter and Manner of them; but if his Majeſty had had Exceptions to neither, yet his Majeſty having ask'd the Advice of both the Houſes, doth not think fit to give any Anſwer to any thing of that Nature, 'till he hath the Concurrent Advice of both Houſes.

In the mean time the Commons appear'd not at all diſcourag'd with this Anſwer, but drew up a new Addreſs, and preſented it to his Majeſty on the 11th of May, Saturday in the Afternoon, containing, 'Their 'humble Thanks to his Majeſty, for demanding their Advice; that ac- 'cordingly they gave it, and they beſeech him to communicate to them 'his Reſolutions thereupon; and whereas they conceive that the Incon- 'veniencies and Dangers which the Kingdom now lies under, might to- 'tally, or in a great meaſure have been prevented, in caſe his Majeſty 'had accepted of the Advice by them given in their Addreſſes of the '26th of May laſt, and the 31ſt of January: That therefore he wou'd 'be pleas'd to remove thoſe Counſellors that advis'd him to give thoſe 'Anſwers which he did to the ſaid Addreſſes; that he wou'd pleaſe to 'accept of this Petition in good part, as proceeding from Perſons hear- 'tily devoted to him, &c. in fine, that he wou'd be pleas'd to remove 'the Duke of Lauderdale from his Preſence and Councils.' This put the King beyond all Patience; and as ſoon as he heard it, he immediately return'd Anſwer in theſe few Words; That he was much ſurpriz'd at the Extravagancy of their Addreſs, and unwilling at preſent to give it ſuch a due Anſwer as it deſerves. And now finding the Heats of the Houſe increaſe, he thought nothing ſo proper as a ſhort Prorogation; accordingly, on Monday the 13th of May, he came to the Houſe of Peers, and paſſing ſome private Bills, he caus'd the Parliament to be Prorogu'd 'till Thurſday come Sevennight, being the 23d of this Inſtant May. And this put an End to the Sixteenth Seſſion of the ſecond and long Parliament, which Seſſion had continued by ſeveral Adjournments, and ſome Intermiſſions, above fifteen Months. What ſeem'd moſt ſenſibly to touch the King in the Houſe of Commons, was an unlucky peeviſh Vote, as Sir William Temple calls it, mov'd by Sir Thomas Clargis, in ſpite to the Lord-Treaſurer, and paſs'd the Houſe, That no Money ſhou'd be given, 'till Satisfaction was given in Matters of Religion. This left all ſo looſe and ſo lame, that the King, who appear'd reſolv'd to declare War, was in a Rage, and reproach'd Sir William Temple, the Promoter of it, with his Popular Notions, and ask'd him, When or how he thought he cou'd truſt the Houſe of Commons to carry him through the War, if he ſhou'd engage in it? He ſays, no Vote cou'd ever have paſs'd more unhappily, nor in ſuch a Counter Seaſon, nor more croſs to the Humour of the Houſe, which was generally bent upon engaging the King in a War, and the Perſon that mov'd it was probably of the ſame Mind; but having ſince the Loſs of a Place ever acted with great Animoſity againſt the preſent Miniſtry, in whoſe Hands ſoever it was, this private ill Humour carried him contrary to his Publick Intentions, as he did many more in the Houſe, who pretended to be ready to ſupply the King upon occaſion of the War, or even of his Debts, but that they wou'd not do it during the Lord-Treaſurer's Miniſtry.

VIII. 1. During this laſt Seſſion of Parliament, and ſince the Paſſing of the Poll-Bill, within ſix Weeks time, the King had raiſed an Army of about Twenty Thouſand Men, the moſt compleat, and in all Appearance the braveſt Troops that could be ſeen in any Place; and might have rais'd many more upon ſo great a Concurrence of People's Humour with his Majeſty's ſeeming Deſign of entering into a War againſt France; and it was acknowledg'd by all the Foreign Miniſters, That no King in Chriſtendom could have made and compleated ſuch a Levy as this appear'd, appear'd, in ſo ſhort a time. And now his Majeſty's Reſolutions appear'd entirely for War, when, before the Parliament broke up, there came Letters from Mr. Hyde, and Mr. Godolphin, 'That Holland abſolutely 'deſired the Peace, even upon the Terms propos'd by France, and had 'reſolv'd to ſend Monſieur Van Lewen into England, to diſpoſe the 'King to be contented with them'. Upon his Arrival the King immediately ſent Sir William Temple to know his Errand. He was the Chief of the Town of Leyden, and had joyn'd with Amſterdam, and ſome other Places, on promoting the Peace; but being a Man of great Honour and Worth, and having come upon Suſpicion that England, at the Bottom, was ſtill in with France, and that all the reſt was but Amuſement; the Prince of Orange had procur'd him to be ſent over purpoſely to ſatisfy himſelf, and his Accomplices for the Peace, that the King's Intentions were really for the War, which his Highneſs thought the only Means to prevent the Peace. He freely told Sir William Temple, 'That 'Nothing was more againſt their Inclinations in Holland, than to make 'a Peace upon Terms ſo low and unſafe for Flanders; and that if the 'King had gone into the War, as was promis'd, upon France's delaying 'to accept the Scheme, they would certainly have continu'd it: But his 'Majeſty's Proceedings look'd ever ſince ſo Uncertain or Unreſolv'd, 'that it had rais'd Jealouſies in Holland, of the Engliſh Meaſures being, 'at the Bottom, fix'd with France; which made moſt of the Towns in 'Holland think they had nothing left to do, but to go in with them as 'faſt as they could; and the Approach of the French Army to Ant-'werpe, left them no Time to deliberate:' Yet, he profeſſed to Sir William in private, That if the King would immediately declare the War, he believ'd the States would ſtill go on with it, in purſuit of their Alliance, and the Terms contain'd in it.

Sir William made this Report to the King, who now was juſt ready to declare the War, if the Parliament wou'd ſupport it; when on a ſudden happen'd the foremention'd croſs Vote in the Houſe of Commons, which ſhew'd there was ſuch a mutual Diſtruſt both in the Court and Parliament, as it was very hard to fall into ſound Meaſures between them. The King at leaſt ſaw, that he had now loſt his Time of entering into the War, and that he ought to have done it with the whole Confederacy, upon the Return of the Lord Duras from France. But the witty Turn that his Majeſty gave all this, was, That ſince the Dutch wou'd have a Peace upon the French Terms, and France offer'd Money for his Conſent, to what he cou'd not help, he did not know why he ſhou'd not get the Money; and thereupon order'd Sir William to treat with Monſieur Barillon, the French Ambaſſador at London; but Sir William found Means handſomly to decline a Treaty, which he ſaid belong'd not to his Poſt. At the ſame time the Heats in the Houſe of Commons much increas'd the ill Opinion the King had conceiv'd of their Intentions in preſſing him to enter upon a War. Yet notwithſtanding all this, he had conceiv'd ſuch Indignation at one Article of the Private Treaty, propos'd by the French Ambaſſador, that he ſaid, He wou'd never forget it while he liv'd. Sir William, who tells us he had it from a good Hand, leaves us however in the Dark as to that Secret Article: But the Publiſher of his Letters, Dr. Swift, acquaints us with that remarkable Paſſage, namely, That France, in order to break the Force of the Confederacy, and elude all juſt Conditions of a General Peace, reſolv'd by any Means, to enter into ſeparate Meaſures with Holland; to which End it was abſolutely neceſſary to engage the good Offices of the King of England, who was look'd upon as the Maſter of the Peace, whenever he pleas'd. The Bargain was ſtruck for either Three or Four Hundred Thouſand Pounds:

A Private Treaty between England and France.

But

1678. Car. 30 Ref. 19

But when all was agreed, Monſieur Barillon, the French Ambaſſador, told the King, That he had Orders from his Maſter, before Payment, to add a private Article, by which his Majeſty ſhould be engag'd, Never to keep above Eight Thouſand Men of ſtanding Troops in his Three Kingdoms. This unexpected Propoſal put the King in a Rage, and made him ſay, Gods Fiſh! does my Brother of France think to ſerve me thus? Are all his Promiſes to make me abſolute Maſter of my— come to this? Or does he think That a Thing to be done with Eight Thouſand Men?

Tho' the King ſaid nothing to Sir William Temple of his Reſentment, yet he obſerv'd his Majeſty to be at this Time more reſolv'd to enter into the War, than he had ever before ſeen, or thought him. In the mean time young Monſieur Ruvigny, who was diſpatch'd into France, to know the laſt Intentions of that Court, being return'd without any clear or poſitive Anſwer; the King proceeded to compleat his Levies, and to prepare for War: But this again was defeated by the Prorogation of the Parliament; and Monſieur Van Lewen, the Dutch Agent, diſtaſted with theſe Delays, and the Counter-Paces between King and Parliament, began to talk freely of the 'Neceſſity his Maſters found to 'make the Peace as they cou'd, ſince there was no Relying upon any 'Meaſures with England for carrying on the War; and the Seaſon was 'too far advanc'd to admit of any longer Delays.' Upon theſe Diſcourſes from him, the King began again to cool his Talk of a War, and to ſay, The Peace muſt be left to the Courſe which Holland had given it. And tho' at the next Meeting of the Parliament, the Commons ſeem'd in a much better Temper than they parted; yet News coming about the ſame time, that Monſieur Beverning was ſent by the States-General to the French Court at Ghent, to propoſe a Ceſſation of Arms for ſix Weeks, in order to negotiate the Terms of the Peace; both the Court and Parliament began to look upon it as a Thing concluded, or at leaſt, as like to receive no other Motion than what ſhou'd be given it by Holland and France. And indeed the Diſpoſitions were ſo inclin'd to it on both Sides, that the Terms were in no long time adjuſted between them.

The Dutch reſolve upon a ſeparate Treaty.

2. In the mean time the Parliament met again according to Prorogation, on Thurſday the 23d of May, after a ſhort Receſs or Interval of only ten Days. The Parliament had before been continu'd a conſiderable time by Adjournments; but now a Prorogation was thought neceſſary, to ſettle the Minds of the People, or to anſwer the Expectations of the Court; ſo that this Meeting made the Seventeenth Seſſion of the Second and Long Parliament of this Reign. Upon the foremention'd Day, his Majeſty went to the Houſe of Peers, and being ſeated on the Throne with his Robes and Crown, the Uſher of the Black-Rod was ſent to the Houſe of Commons to attend his Majeſty in the other Houſe, where he made a ſhort Speech to both Houſes, to this Effect: 'My Lords and 'Gentlemen, In the firſt Place, I am reſolv'd, as far as I am able, to ſave 'Flanders, either by a War or a Peace, which Way I ſee moſt conducing to that End. In either Way, I think it convenient to keep up my 'Army, and Navy at Sea, for ſome time; but I leave it to you to conſider of Supplies for their Continuance or Disbanding; and in either 'Caſe not to diſcourage ſo many worthy and gallant Gentlemen, who 'have offer'd their Lives and Services to their Country, and that in Purſuit of your Advice and Reſolutions. I muſt tell you, That a Branch 'of my Revenues is now expiring, and another Part of it is cut off by a 'Clauſe in the Poll-Bill; That I have borrow'd two Hundred Thouſand Pounds upon the Exciſe at your Requeſt, of all which you are to 'conſider. That I have no Intentions but of Good to You, and my 'People,

'People, nor ever ſhall; therefore I deſire you will not drive me into 'Extremities, which muſt end ill both for You and Me, and (which is 'worſt of all) for the Nation. I deſire to prevent all Diſorders and Miſ-'chiefs that may befall by our Diſagreement; but in caſe there do, I 'leave it to God-Almighty to judge who is the Occaſion of it. In Con-'cluſion, I muſt tell you, That I will not for the future ſuffer the old 'Courſe and Method of Paſſing of Laws to be chang'd, by Tacking to-'gether ſeveral Matters in one Bill. The reſt I leave to the Lord Chan-'cellor.'

The Main of the Lord Chancellor's Speech.

Accordingly his Lordſhip made a long and remarkable Speech, of which the greateſt Part ought not to be omitted. He let them firſt know, 'That with Reference to the preſent State of Chriſtendom, and a 'general Peace, the Advances which had been made abroad, tho' 'haſtned by ſome late Occurrences, were long ſince meditated and pre-'pared in Holland: For when the States-General perceiv'd, that tho' 'they had ſtrain'd themſelves to the utmoſt, and exceeded all the Pro-'portions which by their Treaty they were bound to furniſh, yet the 'Spaniards fail'd them in every Point, not only in the Subſidies they were 'oblig'd to pay, but in the very Strength and Forces they ſtood engag'd 'to ſet out; inſomuch that all their Towns and Garriſons were ſo far 'from being in any tolerable Poſture to receive any Enemy, that they 'remain'd as perfectly defenceleſs as if they were intended to be aban-'don'd: Hereupon the States reſolv'd to ſeek all Occaſions of coming out 'of the War, and to lay hold on the firſt that ſhou'd offer it ſelf; and to 'that End, the laſt Year they ſolicited his Majeſty to endeavour a Peace, 'and they would then have taken ſuch a Peace as they now ſeek: But 'his Majeſty thought he had done great Service to the Chriſtian World, 'when he had gain'd two Points upon them; Firſt, to model and con-'cert with them the Terms and Articles of a better Peace; and then, 'on Proſpect of that Peace, to enter into a League Offenſive and De-'fenſive with his Majeſty, to obtain that Peace by Force, if it could not be 'had otherwiſe. Tho' the Dutch were ſtill inclin'd to accept of Peace, 'and were hearkning after the French Propoſitions at Nimeguen; yet 'ſuch were his Majeſty's Reſolutions to hold them to their League, and 'ſo conſtant were all his Refuſals to hearken to ſuch a Peace, that they 'muſt of Neceſſity at laſt have been oblig'd to continue on the War 'ſome way or other. But ſince it was heard abroad, that this League, 'which was the only Thing by which his Majeſty cou'd oblige the States, 'had been ſo ill underſtood at home, as to meet with ſome very unfit-'ting, and very undeſerving Reflections; as ſoon as it had taken Air, 'and underſtood That there was a Reſolution to give no Money until Sa-'tisfaction was given in matters of Religion, which in all Countries are 'the longeſt Debates that can be enter'd upon, and at this Time, above 'all others, ſhou'd leaſt have been ſtirr'd; and when at laſt the King had 'receiv'd an Addreſs, which they took to be of ſuch Nature as was ne-'ver ſeen or heard of before in any State or Kingdom of the World, 'and had proceeded ſo far as to expreſs his Reſentment of it: Then 'they concluded with themſelves, That it was in vain to rely any longer 'upon England, for England was no longer it ſelf: Then all Sides began 'to wiſh for Peace, even Spain, as well as Holland; and if the Ceſſa-'tion, which is endeavour'd to be made in order to it, take effect, as 'in all likelihood it will, we may conclude, That the Peace will ſoon 'follow.'

After this Hiſtorical Account, he proceeded to this Effect: 'What In-'fluence ſuch a Peace will have upon our Affairs, is uncertain; only we 'know we have given no ſmall Provocation to a mighty King, who may 'be

'be at leaſure enough to reſent it when he pleaſes; therefore it imports 1678.
'us to ſecure our ſelves, by preſerving Peace and Unity at Home: He 'that foments Diviſions now, does more Hurt to his Country, than a Car. 30
'Foreign Enemy can do, and diſarms it at a Time when all the Hands
'and Hearts we have are little enough to defend us: No Fears of Arbi- Reſ. 19
'trary Government can juſtify, no Zeal to Religion can ſanctify ſuch a 'Proceeding!' He then reminded them of the late Times, 'When Reli- 'gion and Liberty were truly loſt by being made a Handle and Pretence
'for Sedition; when Prelacy was call'd Popery, and Monarchy nam'd
'Tyranny, &c. and can we now endure to ſee Men break the Act of Ob-
'livion every Day, by reviving the Memory of forgotten Crimes in new 'Practices? It is worth the Conſideration Whether we do not bring ſome
'Kind of Scandal upon the Proteſtant Religion, when we ſeem ſo far to
'diſtruſt the Truth and Power of it, that after ſo many Laws paſt to 'guard it, and ſo many miraculous Deliverances from the Attempts made
'againſt it, we ſhou'd ſtill be afraid of its Continuance? Hath not the 'late Act made it abſolutely impoſſible for the moſt conceal'd Papiſt that 'is, to get into any Kind of Employment? And did ever any Law ſince
'the Reformation give us ſo great a Security as this? As little Reaſon
'there is to be jealous of our Liberties and Properties. Can there be a 'greater Evidence of the Moderation of a Prince, and his Tenderneſs of
'the Liberty of the Subject, than to ſuffer, as he does every Day, ſo
'much licentious and malicious Talk to paſs unpuniſh'd? If there be not 'a ſingle Inſtance to be found in a whole Reign, of a Man that has ſuf-
'fer'd againſt Law, and very few of thoſe that have ſuffer'd by it, ſhall
'we endure them that dare ſay in all publick Places, That the Nation is
'enſlav'd? Let them ſhew the Time, if they can, ſince the World began,
'and this Nation was firſt inhabited, wherein there were fewer Grievances,
'or leſs Cauſe of Complaint than at this preſent Time: Nay, let them
'ſearch all Ages and Places, and tell us when and where there was ever
'found a happier People than we are at this Day.

He proceeded then to the Matter of the Revenue, and to the ſame purpoſe with what the King had ſaid before, with ſome Enlargement; but plainly told them, 'That the Manner of their Proceedings was as 'conſiderable to his Majeſty, as the Matter; and that he wou'd not ac'cept a good Bill, how valuable ſoever, unleſs it came to him in the old 'and decent Method of Parliaments: That the late Way of Tacking to'gether ſeveral Independent and Incoherent Matters in one Bill, ſeem'd
'to alter the whole Frame and Conſtitution of Parliaments, and conſe-
'quently of the Government it ſelf. It took away the King's Negative
'Voice in effect, and forc'd him to take all or none, when one Part of 'the Bill might be as dangerous, as the other was neceſſary for the King'dom: It took away the Negative Voice of the Houſe of Peers by the
'ſame Conſequence, and diſinherited the Lords of their native Liberty
'of Debating and Judging what is good for the Kingdom: It look'd like 'a Kind of Defamation of the Government, and ſeem'd to ſuppoſe the 'King and Lords to be ſo ill affected to the Publick, that a good Bill
'cou'd not carry it ſelf through by the Strength of its own Reaſon and
'Juſtice, unleſs help'd forwards by being Tack'd to another that will be fa-
'vour'd: It did at laſt give up the greateſt Share of the Legiſlature to the 'Commons, and by conſequence the chief Power of Judging what Laws
'are beſt for the Kingdom.' In fine he ſhew'd that the ſame Method might be made uſe of by the Lords againſt the Commons; 'and thus
'every good Bill wou'd be dearly bought at laſt, and one chief End of 'Calling Parliaments, the Making of good Laws, be wholly fruſtrated
'and diſappointed, by departing from that Method which the Wiſdom

'of our Anceſtors purpoſely preſcrib'd to prevent and exclude ſuch In'conveniencies. Theſe Innovations the King reſolv'd to aboliſh, and had 'commanded him to ſay to them, State ſuper Vias antiquas.' Then he ſaid, 'If this Seſſion do not repair the Misfortunes, and amend the 'Faults of the laſt, it will look like Fatality upon the Nation. He whoſe
'Houſe is deſtroy'd by Fire, wou'd find but little Comfort in ſaying,
'The Fire did not begin by his Means; but it will be a Matter of perpe'tual Anguiſh and Vexation to remember, That it was in his Power to
'have extinguiſh'd it. Let the World now ſee that your Zeal to pre-
'ſerve the Government is the ſame as when you were ready to dye for 'its Reſtoration; and know, 'tis an Act as Meritorious, and of as great
'Duty and Loyalty, to ſtand between the King and thoſe Libellers, who
'wou'd create a Miſunderſtanding between Him and his Parliament, as
'tis to fight for him in a Day of Battel. Embelliſh the Hiſtory of this 'Parliament, by ſhewing us the Healing Virtue of this Seſſion: So ſhall
'your Service be acceptable to the King, who never forgets any Thing
'but Injuries: So ſhall you recommend your Selves to Poſterity, by
'tranſmitting to them the ſame Peace and Happineſs you are truſted
'with. And the God of Peace and Unity proſper all your Conſultations
'to the Honour and Happineſs of the King, and the Joy and Comfort
'of all his good Subjects.

For the better Conſideration of theſe Speeches, the Houſe of Commons were adjourn'd for three or four Days; and meeting on Monday the 27th of May, they ſoon came to this Reſolution, 'That the Houſe taking in-
'to Conſideration the State of his Majeſty's Affairs, and the great Charge
'and Burthen that his Majeſty and the Nation lye under by the Army
'now in being, are humbly of Opinion, That if his Majeſty pleaſe to think
'fit to enter into the War againſt the French King, this Houſe is, and 'always will be ready to ſupport and aſſiſt him in that War; but if other-
'wiſe, they will proceed to the Conſideration of Providing for the ſpee-
'dy Disbanding of the Army.' The Houſe further order'd, That the Members of his Majeſty's Privy-Council, do acquaint the King with theſe Votes, and pray his Majeſty's ſpeedy Anſwer. To which the King re-turn'd the following Anſwer, which was read the very next Day in the Houſe of Commons; 'That the French King hath made ſuch Offers of 'a Ceſſation till the 27th of July, as his Majeſty doth not only believe
'will be accepted, but will end in a general Peace; yet ſince that is not 'certain, he does not think it prudent to diſmiſs either Fleet or Army
'before that Time, nor doth he think it will add much to the Charge,
'in regard the raiſing Money, and paying them off, wou'd take up that 'Time, were they to be Disbanded as ſpeedily as poſſible: In the mean Time
'he deſired Money for their Subſiſtance, that as hitherto they have been
'the moſt orderly Army that ever came together, they may be encou-
'rag'd to continue ſo. Then he concluded with reminding them of the 'two Hundred Thouſand Pounds formerly mention'd in his Speech,
'which he wanted for the Subſiſtance of his Houſhold.' Hereupon, on the next Sitting Day, the Commons unanimouſly Voted, 'That all Forces
'rais'd ſince the 29th of September laſt (except thoſe tranſported to Fo'reign Plantations) be forthwith paid off and Disbanded, and that they
'wou'd conſider of a Supply for that Purpoſe.

The Commons Reſolve.

The King's Anſwer.

In the mean Time there happen'd ſome Alterations in Weſtminſter-Hall, not to be forgotten in this Place: On the laſt Day of May, being the Firſt of Trinity Term, the eminent Sir William Scroggs, an active Man at that Time, Prime Judge in the Common Pleas, took his Place in the King's Bench, as Lord Chief Juſtice of England, to which Station he was pre-ferr'd by the King's ſpecial Favour, upon the Removal of Sir Richard Rainsford, Sir W. Scroggs promoted.

3. Upon the 4th Day of June, the Houſe of Commons, who ſeem'd now in a more giving Humour than in the laſt Seſſion, firſt voted two Hundred Thouſand Pounds to be rais'd by a Monthly Tax, in ſix Months, after the Land Tax, now in being, ſhou'd be expired; but with a Clauſe, That this be for the Diſbanding the Army, by the End of this preſent June. The next Day they voted the King two hundred Thouſand Pounds more, towards the Defraying the Expences of the Fleet, and were ready to add another ſuch Sum for the King's extraordinary Occaſions. Soon after which, his Majeſty ſent them a Meſſage by one of the Secretaries of State, importing, 'That his Mind was ſtill the ſame with what he deli-'ver'd in his Speech the 23d of May laſt, viz. That the Army and Fleet 'ought to be kept up till the expected Peace be concluded: And he fur-'ther recommended to their Conſideration, Whether it were not diſho-'nourable for him to recall his Forces in Flanders, from thoſe Towns 'which he had taken into his Protection, before they cou'd provide them-'ſelves of other Succours.' Upon Conſideration of which, the Commons extended the Time, as to the Forces in Flanders, to the 27th Day of July. But upon Saturday, the 15th of June, they Reſolv'd, 'That after 'the Tueſday following, no Motions ſhou'd be made for any new Sup-'plies of Money, till after the next Receſs; nor any more private Bills 'brought in, till after the ſaid Receſs. The Commons vote a Supply.

On the foreſaid Tueſday, June 18th, the King came to the Houſe of Peers, and ſending for the Houſe of Commons, he declar'd to them all in a pathetick Speech, 'That the Seaſon requiring a Receſs by the mid-'dle of the next Month, it was convenient that He and his Parliament 'ſhou'd part fairly, and with a perfect Confidence of one another: 'Therefore he open'd his Heart freely to them in ſome Particulars of 'the neareſt Concern: That what he told them in the Beginning of the 'Seſſion concerning a Peace, ſeem'd ready to be determin'd, at leaſt as 'to Spain and Holland; in which Peace his Part wou'd be not only that 'of a Mediator, but alſo to give his Warranty in it. That Spain writes 'Word, That unleſs England bears the Charge of maintaining Flanders, 'even after the Peace, they will not be in a Condition to ſupport it long; 'Therefore to that End, it was neceſſary to keep up the Navy at Sea, 'and not only ſo, but to give the World ſome Aſſurance of being well 'united at home: That tho' the Houſe of Commons might think ſuch a 'Peace as ill a Bargain as a War, becauſe it wou'd coſt them Money; 'yet if they ſeriouſly conſider'd that otherwiſe Flanders had been loſt, 'and perhaps by this Time, He believ'd they wou'd give much greater 'Sums than that wou'd coſt, rather than the ſingle Town of Oſtend ſhou'd 'be in the French Hands, and forty of their Men of War in ſo good a 'Haven over againſt the River's Mouth.' Then he inſinuated to them, 'that they cou'd not but be pleas'd to underſtand, the Reputation Eng-'land had gain'd abroad, by having in forty Days rais'd an Army of 'thirty Thouſand Men, and prepar'd a Navy of ninety Men of War; 'Therefore if they deſir'd to keep up the Honour of the Crown at home, 'and look to the Safety of the Balance of Affairs abroad, and purſue the 'Wars of Algiers; If they deſir'd he ſhou'd paſs any Part of his Life in 'Quiet, and all the reſt in Confidence and Kindneſs with Them, and 'other future Parliaments; they muſt find a Way, not only to ſettle 'for his Life his Revenue as at Chriſtmas laſt, but alſo to add a new 'Fund of three hundred Thouſand Pounds per Annum, upon which he The King's Second Speech to both Houſes.

1678. Car. 30 Ref. 19

'wou'd paſs an Act to ſettle Fifty Thouſand Pounds upon the Navy and 'Ordnance; and ſhou'd be likewiſe always ready to conſent to all ſuch 'Laws as they ſhou'd propoſe for the Good of the Nation.' He laſtly reminded them, 'to enable him to keep his Word with the Prince of 'Orange, in the Payment of his Neice's Portion, which was forty Thou- 'ſand Pounds; the firſt Payment being now due and demanded by 'Him.

Not comply'd withal.

Upon the Return of the Commons to their Houſe, they immediately took this affecting Speech into Conſideration, and ſoon voted his Majeſty the humble Thanks of the Houſe for his moſt gracious Expreſſions in it. But when they came to debate on the Additional Revenue propos'd, they gave a total Denyal to it; and not only ſo, but when a Motion was made to give a Compenſation for the loſt Part of his Majeſty's Revenues by the late Prohibiting Act, concerning French Commodities, it paſs'd in the Negative, 202 againſt 145. Not long after, the Lords, having paſs'd the Bill for Disbanding the Army, &c. and ſent it down with a Clauſe of Enlargement of the Time prefix'd for one Month longer; the Commons wou'd by no means agree to it, but deſiring a Conference, they gave their Lordſhips their Reaſons why they cou'd not conſent to the Amendment.

Several Bills paſs'd.

After ſome Continuance longer, and ſome conſiderable Bills prepar'd, the King growing more and more uneaſy, on the 15th of July he came to the Houſe of Peers, and with the uſual Solemnity paſs'd the following Bills, 1. An Act for granting a Supply to his Majeſty of ſix hundred nineteen Thouſand Pounds, &c. for Disbanding the Army, and other Uſes therein mentioned. 2. An Act for granting an Additional Duty to his Majeſty upon Wines for three Years. 3. An Act to enable Creditors to recover their Debts of the Executors and Adminiſtrators of Executors in their own Wrong. 4. An Act for Burying in Woollen. 5. An Act for Admeaſurement of Keels and Boats carrying Coals. 6. An Act for Reviving a former Act, intituled, An Act for avoiding unneceſſary Suits and Delays, and for Continuance of another Act, intituled, An Act for the better ſettling Inteſtate Eſtates. 7. An Act for further Relief and Diſcharge of poor Priſoners for Debt. 8. An Act for Repealing certain Words in a Clauſe in a former Act, intituled, An Act for Enlarging and Repairing Common High-Ways. 9. An Act for Preſervation of Fiſhing in the River Severn. After which the Lord Chancellor, by his Majeſty's Command, acquainted the two Houſes, 'That his Majeſty had thought fit in 'the preſent Juncture of Affairs, to Prorogue them to the firſt of Auguſt 'next, and ſo to keep them in Call by ſhort Prorogations; his Majeſty 'not knowing how ſoon he might have need of their further Service 'and Aſſiſtance: But that his Majeſty's Intention was, they ſhou'd not 'meet till towards Winter, unleſs there were Occaſion for their Aſſem- 'bling ſooner, of which he wou'd give them timely Notice by his Pro- 'clamation.' And accordingly the Parliament was Prorogu'd till the firſt Day of Auguſt; but they did not really meet till the 21ſt Day of October. And thus ended the Seventeenth Seſſion of the Second and long Parliament, after it had ſate this Time about ſeven Weeks; and was the laſt Meeting but one of this famous Aſſembly.

The End of the Seventeenth Seſſion of the Second Parliament.

Affairs abroad.

4. During this laſt Seſſion of Parliament, the Peace abroad went on variouſly, according to the uncertain Meaſures and Motions in England, which was ſo much and nearly concern'd in it. The whole Treaty was manag'd with great Artifice by the French, and with too much Remiſſneſs and Negligence by moſt of the Confederates. At length the Dutch, quite wearied out with the Charge of the War, having ving gain'd a ſort of a paſſive Compliance from the Spaniard, reaſſum'd their Reſolution of a ſeparate Peace: Accordingly, on the 22d of June, the States gave Orders to their Plenipotentiaries at Nimeguen, to ſign the Peace with France before the End of that Month; and, at the ſame Time, they acquainted the King of France with their Intentions. But notwithſtanding this Tendency, both in Spain and Holland, to give the Treaty the finiſhing Stroke, an unexpected Accident fell out, which went near to overturn the whole Fabrick, and renew the War with greater Vigour, and more equal Forces, by engaging England in a Share of it, in Favour of the Allies, which they had long been endeavouring, without any real Succeſs. The Occaſion was: In the Conditions the States had made for the French reſtoring the ſix Towns of Ghent, Aeth, Charleroy, Oudenard, Courtray and Limburgh, there was no particular Mention made of the Time of that Reſtitution; the Dutch and Spaniards preſuming it was to be upon the Ratification of the Treaty with Spain and Holland, whether any other of the Confederates were included or no. The Negotiation had been manag'd in that manner, till the Day before the Peace was to be ſign'd; when the Spaniſh Plenipotentiary either found, or made ſome Occaſion of enquiring more particularly of the French Intentions upon this Point. Whereupon the French Ambaſſadors made no Difficulty of Declaring, 'That the King, their Maſter, 'being oblig'd to ſee an entire Reſtitution made to their Allies the Swedes, 'of all they had loſt in the War, cou'd not evacuate thoſe ſix Towns, 'till thoſe were likewiſe reſtored to the Swedes; and that the Detenti-'on of theſe Spaniſh Towns was the only Means to induce the Princes 'in the North to accept of the Peace.' The Dutch Miniſters having receiv'd the States Anſwer upon this Affair, declared to the French Plenipotentiaries, 'That they cou'd not Sign the Peace without the actual 'Reſtitution of the ſaid Places in Flanders, upon the Ratification of the 'Treaty;' on the other Side, the French Miniſters were immoveable, and poſitively inſiſted upon the Satisfaction of the Swedes. Upon this unexpected Procedure of France, the States-General order'd Monſieur Van Lewen to acquaint his Britannick Majeſty with it, and to know his Reſolution upon a Point of ſo great Moment to the Peace of Chriſtendom, as well as the Safety of Flanders.

1678. Car. 30 Reſ. 19

The French take Advantage in the Treaty.

The King of England cou'd hardly believe a Matter ſo improbable; but ſending to the French Ambaſſador at London to know the Certainty of it, and finding him own his Maſter's Intention not to evacuate the Towns in Flanders, till Sweden was ſatisfy'd, he was both ſurpriz'd and inrag'd; and the next Morning ſent for Sir William Temple to the Foreign Committee, and there declared his Reſolution of ſending immediately into Holland, with full Commiſſion to Sign a Treaty with the States-General; by which they ſhou'd be oblig'd to carry on the War, and his Majeſty to enter into it, in caſe France ſhou'd not agree to evacuate the Towns within a certain limited Time. Upon this Occaſion, his Brother the Duke of York fell into the ſame Counſel with great Warmth, and declar'd in the Committee, That it was plain by this Step, that France was not ſincere in the Buſineſs of the Peace; that they aim'd at the Univerſal Monarchy; and that none but his Majeſty cou'd hinder them from it, in the Poſture that Chriſtendom then ſtood. All the Lords of the Committee agreed with ſo general an Approbation, that it was hard to imagine that this cou'd prove any Thing leſs than a ſteddy Reſolution. His Majeſty, to promote it, took the Pains to preſs Van Lewen to go over with Sir William Temple, to perſuade the States of the Sincerity and Conſtancy of his Reſolution to purſue this Meaſure with the utmoſt of his Power; and moreover took upon Himſelf to excuſe to the States, his Maſters, the making this Journey without their Conſent.

The King of England provok'd.

1678. Car. 30 Ref. 19

A little before the Time of the breaking up of the Parliament, Sir William Temple and Monſieur Van Lewen went over into Holland, and being arriv'd at the Hague, the Negotiation was immediately ſet on foot, and in the Space of ſix Days, the famous Treaty of Alliance between England and Holland was happily concluded on the 26th of July, to the general Satisfaction of the Dutch Commiſſioners; who, at the firſt Conference, made Sir William the Compliment, That they eſteem'd his coming into Holland, like that of the Swallows, which always brought fair Weather with them. And it is obſerveable, that Mr. Godolphin, who had been ſo lately in Holland, told Sir William before his Departure, That if he brought the States to conclude the Treaty his Majeſty propos'd, he wou'd move the Parliament to have his Statue ſet up. Among the reſt, the Prince of Orange receiv'd the Engliſh Ambaſſador with the greateſt Joy imaginable, hoping by the Succeſs of his Errand, either to continue the War, or recover ſuch Conditions of the Peace for the Allies, as had been wreſted out of his Hands by a Faction begun at Amſterdam, and ſince diffus'd into the reſt of the Provinces. And it was hardly to be conceiv'd, what a new Life this Alliance gave to the Authority and Fortunes of that Prince; who was now acknowledg'd by the States to have made a truer Judgment than themſelves, of the Meaſures they were to expect both from France and England: the laſt having proceeded ſo reſolutely and unexpectedly to the Offers of entering into the War; and France, after raiſing ſo great a Difficulty in the Peace, having purſu'd the War ſo far as to block up Mons, one of the beſt remaining Frontiers in Flanders, which was expected to fall into their Hands before the Time limited for the Concluſion or Breach of the Peace ſhou'd expire. Hereupon Preparations were made with the greateſt Vigour and Diligence, for his Highneſs's Expedition to relieve that important Place; and about Ten Thouſand brave Engliſh, already arriv'd in Flanders, were order'd to march that Way, and joyn his Army. The Prince went into the Field with a firm Confidence that the War wou'd certainly go on, and with great Hopes to engage the French Army before the Term for ſigning the Peace ſhould expire; and therefore reſolv'd to relieve the City of Mons, or dye in the Attempt, whether the Peace ſucceeded or no; ſo that the Continuance of the War now ſeem'd inevitable.

He makes a new Alliance with the Dutch.

Forces ſent into Flanders.

5. After the Treaty concluded between England and Holland had been ſignify'd to France, all the Arts imaginable were practis'd, on that ſide, to elude it; particularly by drawing the Matter into a Negotiation, or at leaſt, a greater length, which before had ſo well ſucceeded in England. They offer'd to treat upon it firſt at St. Quintin, then at Ghent, where the French King himſelf propos'd to meet ſuch Ambaſſadors as the Dutch ſhou'd ſend to either of thoſe Towns: But the States continued reſolv'd not to recede from their laſt Treaty, and were immoveable, 'till about five Days before the Expiration of the limited time; when the Arrival of a certain Perſon in Holland gave a new and ſtrange Turn to the whole Affair. This was one De Croſs, an inferior and buiſy Agent of Sweden, who came from London, with Orders from his Britannick Majeſty for Sir William Temple immediately to repair to Nimeguen, and to uſe his utmoſt to perſwade the Swediſh Plenipotentiaries, to let the French there know, 'That they wou'd, for the Good of Chriſtendom, conſent, and even deſire the King of France no longer to defer 'the Evacuation of the Towns, and conſequently the Peace; and to aſſure the ſaid Swediſh Ambaſſadors, that after this Peace the King of 'England wou'd uſe all the moſt effectual Endeavours he cou'd, for the 'Reſtitution of all the Towns and Territories the Swedes had loſt in 'the

'the War.' Sir William was extreamly ſurpriz'd at this new Diſpatch; but Penſionary Fagel being as it were Thunder-ſtruck, went and told his Excellency the whole Contents of it, before he had mention'd it to any Man; and particularly, 'That De Croſs had moſt induſtriouſly gone 'about to the Deputies of the ſeveral Towns, and acquainted them with 'it; and that the Terms of the Peace were abſolutely agreed between 'the two Kings; that he brought Sir William Temple Orders to go ſtrait 'to Nimeguen, where at his Arrival he ſhou'd meet with Letters from 'the Lord Sunderland, the Engliſh Ambaſſador at Paris, with all the 'Particulars concluded between both their Majeſties.

How this ſtrange Diſpatch by De Croſs was gain'd, or by whom, was never certainly known: But upon Sir William's Return to England, the Duke of York told him, That he knew nothing of it 'till it was gone, having been a hunting that Morning: The Lord-Treaſurer ſaid all that cou'd be to excuſe himſelf of it; but the King indeed told him pleaſantly, That the Rogue de Croſs had outwitted them all. The Truth is, theſe Orders ſeem to be the Reſult of French Intrigues and Management; being agreed and diſpatch'd one Morning in the Dutcheſs of Portſmouth's Chamber, by the Intervention of Monſieur Barillon, the French Ambaſſador. Yet by one of the Lord-Treaſurer Danby's Letters to Sir William Temple, dated Auguſt the 12th, it appears that the King was much diſpleas'd at de Croſs's Proceedings; in which are theſe Words: 'You 'will find that Mr. Hyde is no leſs impower'd to give Satisfaction about 'Monſieur de Croſs, who was ſo far from having any ſort of Commiſſion 'from the King, that if the Penſionary will permit any thing to be prov'd 'againſt him of theſe private Diſcourſes, which you ſay you had from 'the Penſionary, his Majeſty will make him a publick Example for the Sa- 'tisfaction of himſelf as well as the reſt of the World. However it was, and what Endeavours ſoever were made immediately after, at the Court of England, to retrieve this falſe Step, it never cou'd be done; and this one Incident chang'd the whole Face of Chriſtendom, which ſhews that the greateſt Counſels and Revolutions often turn upon the ſmalleſt Motions and Accidents.

Which proves irretrievable.

When Sir William Temple arriv'd at Nimeguen, which was but three Days before the Expiration of the Term fix'd by the late Treaty between England and Holland, either for the French to evacuate the Towns, or for carrying on the War jointly againſt France; there appear'd but little Diſpoſition towards the Signing of the Peace, but rather the contrary, by the Stiffneſs ſhew'd on both ſides, to adhere firmly to their reſpective Demands. And the Dutch, contrary to the French Propoſals, poſitively maintain'd, 'That there cou'd be no Deputation made 'to his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty, either at St. Quintin or Ghent, nor any 'other Expedient for putting a ſtop to the Operations of the War, be- 'ſides the direct Aſſent of France to evacuate the ſix Towns.' So that the Peace thereupon ſeem'd deſperate; and the more ſo, becauſe at the ſame time, the Duke of Luxemburgh preſs'd Mons, and the Mareſchal Schomberg threatned Cologn; and Bruſſels it ſelf grew very uneaſy, upon finding it ſelf almoſt ſurrounded by French Troops: So that the Confederate Miniſters thought themſelves ſecure of what they had ſo much and long deſir'd, and aim'd at; which was a War againſt France, in Conjunction with England. In the midſt of theſe Views and Diſpoſitions at Nimeguen, came the critical Day, fix'd by the late Treaty at the Hague, which was to determine whether a ſudden Peace, or a long War, were to be reckon'd upon in Chriſtendom: In the Morning of which, Auguſt 11. N. S. the French Miniſters, who had lately been wholly upon the Reſerve, thought fit to yield to the Evacuation of the Towns, and apply'd themthemſelves with ſo much Dexterity, that before twelve that Night they gain'd the great Point for their Maſter's Intereſt and Advantage, and ſecur'd the ſeparate Peace with the States of the United Provinces.

All this while the important City of Mons was ſtrongly block'd up by the French Army under the Duke of Luxemburgh, who was ſo confident of his Security, that he ſent an Account to the Mareſchal d'Eſtrades, one of the French Plenipotentiaries at Nimeguen, 'That he was ſo well 'poſted, that if he had but Ten thouſand Men, and the Prince of Orange 'Forty thouſand, yet he was ſure he cou'd not be forc'd; much leſs 'when he knew his Army to be much ſtronger than that of the Prince.' But however, the intrepid Prince reſolv'd to break through all Diſadvantages whatſoever; and having on a Sunday decamp'd from Soignies, march'd towards Roches, and from thence reſolv'd to attack the Enemy, whoſe Right Wing was poſted at the Abbey of St. Dennis, and the Left at Mamoy St. Pierre, with ſuch Advantage of Situation, that they thought themſelves inacceſſible; for beſides the Woods, there was only a Precipice led to them, and that by narrow Paſſages. About Noon the Cannon play'd furiouſly upon St. Dennis, and ſoon after the Confederate Dragoons behav'd themſelves ſo gallantly, that they drove the French from their Faſtneſs, and made themſelves Maſters of the Cloyſter; while Adjutant-General Collier advanc'd towards the Abby, and paſſing his Battalions in a Defile through the narrow Paſſes, and ſliding down the Precipices with an invincible Reſolution, after a vigorous Reſiſtance, made the French to retire within their Lines. The valiant Duke of Monmouth was preſent with the Prince at the deſperate Attack upon the Abby; and both highly animated the Soldiers by their Preſence and Example. From hence they both wheel'd off to Chaſtieau, which was warmly attack'd by the Spaniards in the Right Wing, under the Duke de Villa Hermoſa, aſſiſted by ſome Engliſh and Scotch Regiments, commanded by the brave Earl of Offery, who really did Wonders. Here the Prince of Orange advanc'd ſo far, that he was in great Danger of being loſt, had not Monſieur Overkirk ſeaſonably come into his Relief, and kill'd a French Captain that was juſt ſhooting him in the Head. At laſt, by favour of the Night, the Duke of Luxemburgh made his Retreat without any Noiſe, withdrew towards Mons, and cover'd himſelf with a Wood on one ſide, and a River on the other, leaving to the Prince, as a Teſtimony of his Victory, the Field of Battle, the greateſt part of the wounded, ſeveral Tents, and ſome Baggage, with a great quantity of Powder and other Warlike Ammunition. This Enterprize was ſo conſiderable, that one of the French Officers was heard after the Battle to ſay, That he eſteem'd this the only Heroick Action that had been done in the whole Courſe or Progreſs of the War.

The Prince of Orange's Attempt to relieve Mons.

The Succeſs of it.

Greater things might have been reaſonably expected; but the very next Morning the Prince of Orange receiv'd Advice from the States of the ſeparate Peace ſign'd between them and the French at Nimeguen. The News of which he immediately ſent to the Duke of Luxemburgh, who with a great Compliment deſir'd an Interview with his Highneſs; which being agreed to, they met in the Field at the Head of their chief Officers, where all things paſs'd with great Civility and Gallantry on both ſides; the French crowding about a young Prince that had gain'd ſuch Fame in the World; and the Day before had given Life and Vigour to ſuch a deſperate Action, as all Men eſteem'd this Battle of St. Dennis. Yet many Reflections were made upon it by the Prince's Friends as well as his Enemies: Some ſaid that he knew the Peace was ſign'd before the Fight began; and that it was too great a Venture both to himſelf and the States, and too great a Sacrifice to his own Honour, ſince it cou'd be to no other Advantage: Others laid the Blame upon the Marquiſs of Grana, who they ſaid had intercepted and conceal'd the States Packet to the Prince, which came into the Camp the Day before, but after the Battle was reſolv'd on; and that he had hopes by ſuch a Breach of the Peace, even after it was ſign'd, that the Progreſs of it wou'd have been defeated. Whether this were real Fact or no, cou'd never be made appear; but ſo much was true, that the Prince cou'd not have ended the War with greater Glory, nor with greater Reſentment, to ſee ſuch a mighty Occaſion wreſted out of his Hands, by the ſudden and unexpected Signing of the Peace, which he had aſſur'd himſelf the States wou'd not have conſented to without the Spaniards. Yet upon the News of it, he drew back his Army, return'd to the Hague, and left the States to purſue their own Steps, in order to finiſhing the Treaty between France and Spain; wherein the Dutch Ambaſſadors at Nimeguen employ'd themſelves with great Zeal and Diligence, and no longer as Parties or Confederates, but as Mediators, while the Engliſh Plenipotentiaries declin'd the Function, as a Matter wherein the Engliſh Court wou'd not take any part, or allow themſelves to have had any Hand in the Peace between France and Holland. 1678. Car. 30 Reſ. 19

And the Peace then concluded.

This particular and ſeparate Peace was ſign'd upon the 11th Day of Auguſt, to the great Satisfaction of the Dutch, and the no leſs Diſappointment of their Confederates: And it is obſervable, that no Negotiation was ever manag'd with greater Addreſs and Skill, than this had been by the French in the whole Courſe of the Affair; eſpecially after the Marriage of the Prince of Orange, which was thought to have given them ſo great a Blow, and by Force of Conduct was turn'd ſo much to their Advantage. It is apparent, that they never intended to continue the War, if England fell with ſuch Weight into the Scale of the Confederates, as the Force of that Kingdom, and Humour of the People wou'd have given to ſuch a Conjunction; and conſequently, that his Britannick Majeſty might have preſcrib'd what Terms he pleas'd of the Peace, during the whole Courſe of his Mediation. But the Peace being thus dexterouſly gain'd with Holland, the King of England was excluded from any fair Pretence of entring into the War, after the vaſt Expence of raiſing a great Army, and tranſporting them into Flanders, and after great Expectation of his People rais'd, and, as they thought, deluded as well as diſappointed. Spain was neceſſitated to accept the Terms that the Dutch had negotiated for them; and this left the Peace of the Empire wholly at the Mercy and Diſcretion of France, and the Reſtitution of Lorrain wholly abandon'd and unprovided. Whatever Advantages aroſe to France by this Negotiation, in a little time all Chriſtendom had the Happineſs of a general Peace and Tranquillity, after the greateſt part of it had been employ'd in a bloody and expenſive War of about ſix Years; with the Concluſion of which ended the famous Treaty of Nimeguen, which in a few Months after this ſeparate Treaty, finiſh'd, or laid aſleep all the Wars and Conteſts in the Weſtern World.

The End of the Treaty of Nimeguen.

I. 1. AT the time of the Conclusion of this last Treaty, Ease and Plenty increas'd in the Country, Trade and Riches abounded in the City, Luxury and Pleasures triumph'd in the Court, and all enjoy'd the natural Blessings of Peace and Tranquillity: Yet in the midst of all these outward Felicities, a sudden Fire broke out, which, as it increas'd, did not only disturb and inrage, but in effect distracted and confounded the greatest part of the Kingdom; producing a thousand strange and uncommon Effects. And this was the Discovery of a Plot, commonly call'd the POPISH PLOT; a Plot carried on by the Jesuits, and other Papists, against his Majesty's Life, the Protestant Religion, and the Government of this Kingdom. It was more particularly distinguish'd by the Name of Oates's Plot, and afterwards Shaftsbury's Plot; the first being accounted the main Discoverer of the Facts, and the latter the grand Promoter of the Belief of them. It is usual with State-Plots, that tho' their Roots be small and almost invisible, yet the Branches are large and conspicuous; especially when a People are ready prepar'd and dispos'd to preserve and cherish those exuberant Plants. This was so well cultivated in its Rise and Growth, that it soon overspread and clouded the Nation: And since it so soon grew very large and monstrous, for the greater Clearness and the Reader's Ease, we shall first represent it in its full Extent and Amplitude, as we have it from Oates himself, H. Care, and other zealous Favourers of the Belief of it.

The POPISH PLOT.

The Extent of it, as represented by the Discoverers.

The Design in general, as they inform us, was by Fire and Sword, when all other Means fail'd, to subvert the Establish'd Government and Religion of these Kingdoms, and to reduce the same to Popery, so as no Toleration should be given to any Protestant, but all to be extirpated Root and Branch. The chief Conspirators that design'd, and were to carry on this great Work, were thus marshal'd: 1. The present Pope, Innocent the Eleventh, who in the Congregation, de propaganda Fide, consisting of above three Hundred Persons, held about December, 1677, Declared 'all the King of England's Dominions to be part of St Peter's Patrimony, as forfeited to the Holy See for the Heresy of the Prince 'and People, and so to be dispos'd of as he should think fit.' 2. The English Cardinal Howard, who in pursuance of such a Declaration, was appointed by his Holiness as his Legate to take Possession of England in his Name: He likewise made him Archbishop of Canterbury, with an Augmentation of forty Thousand Crowns a Year, for the Maintenance of his Legantine Authority; and had also constituted Bishops and Dignitaries of all or most of the Sees and Ecclesiastical Promotions in England; as Perrot, Superior of the secular Priests, to be Archbishop of York, Corker Bishop of London, Whitebread of Winchester, Strange of Dur-

Durham, Dr. Godden of Salisbury, Napper, a Franciſcan Fryar, of Norwich, &c. removing all the Biſhops in Poſſeſſion from their preſent Dignities. 3. Johannes Paulus de Oliva, Father-General of the Jeſuit's Society, reſiding at Rome, who was to give Directions to the Provincial of the Jeſuits in London, how to proceed in this Affair. 4. Pedro Jeronymo de Corduba, Provincial of the Jeſuits in Spain, who was to aſſiſt with Counſel and Money, and to miſrepreſent the Actions of his Britannick Majeſty to the Spaniſh Court; which likewiſe was to be done by a Jeſuit, Confeſſor to the Emperor, in relation to England and that Court. 5. Father Le Cheſe, a Jeſuit, Confeſſor to the French King, with whom Coleman held a conſtant Correſpondence, in order to betray his Country. 6. The Provincial of the Jeſuits for the time being in England, which of late was firſt Strange, and then Whitebread. 7. The Benedictine Monks at the Savoy in London, where they had erected them a College, to carry on ſuch private Ends. 8. Great Numbers of Jeſuits and Seminary Prieſts, now reſiding in England, who were generally privy to the main Deſign, tho' perhaps not all acquainted with Particulars. 9. Several Lay Perſons of Quality drawn in, out of Zeal, Ambition, Avarice, &c. to join with them, to Command the Forces they were to raiſe, and execute the great Offices in the Realm; as the Lord Arundel of Warder, to be Lord-Chancellor of England; the Lord Powis, Lord-Treaſurer; Sir William Godolphin, Lord-Privy-Seal; Mr. Edward Coleman, Secretary of State; Lord Bellaſis, General of the Army; Sir Francis Ratcliff, Major-General; Mr. John Lambert, Adjutant-General; Mr. Langhorn, Advocate-General, &c. who had all Commiſſions ſent them, ready ſeal'd by Paulus de Oliva, from the Court of Rome. Beſides theſe, and other inferior Conſpirators to be mention'd afterwards, the Queen and the Duke of York were ſaid to be concern'd, but not ſo poſitively as the reſt. 1678. Car. 30 Reſ. 19

Next they tell us the Means whereby they reſolv'd to accompliſh this vaſt Undertaking, which were as follows: 1. By Killing the King, finding they cou'd not work him to their Deſigns; and therefore to remove him, they form'd ſeveral diſtinct Plots, and all to be kept unknown to each other: As Firſt, Grove and Pickering to ſhoot him; Secondly, Conyers and Anderton, Benedictine Monks, and four Iriſh Ruffians, to ſtab him; and Thirdly, Sir George Wakeman, the Queen's Phyſician, to Poyſon him; for which Purpoſe five Thouſand Pounds was enter'd in their Books, as paid to him in Part of fifteen Thouſand Pounds Reward, when he had finiſh'd the Work. As for the Duke of York, they concluded to make uſe of his Name and Intereſt, if he wou'd comply with theſe Conditions; Firſt, to accept of the three Kingdoms as a Gift from the Pope, and hold them in Fee of him, and confirm their Settlement of the Church and State: Next, if he wou'd exterminate all Proteſtants; and Laſtly, if he wou'd pardon the Murtherers of his Brother, the Murtherers of the People, and thoſe who ſhou'd fire the remaining Part of the City and Suburbs. 2. For that was the ſecond Particular of their Work, to fire London and Weſtminſter, and the adjacent Places; as alſo other the chief Cities and Towns of England, immediately on the Killing of his Majeſty; and then lay the whole Load, both of the Murther and Firing, on the Presbyterians and Fanaticks, thereby provoking the Epiſcopal Men to joyn with them to cut them off; that ſo Proteſtants being weakned by their own Fewds, they might have the better Opportunities, and eaſier Task, to ſubdue them all. 3. By a General Maſſacre; to which purpoſe they are ſaid to have form'd an Army, conſiſting of fifty Thouſand Men to be liſted about London; the Officers all reſolute Papiſts, and for the moſt part French and Iriſh. Theſe they gave out were enow to cut the Throats of one Hundred Thouſand Proteſtants; eſpecially being taken upon a Surprize, when the Militia of London were unprovided and undiſciplin'd, and the Country generally diſarm'd as aforeſaid. And beſides, the Conſpirators had of the French, ten Thouſand Soldiers from Flanders, and thirty Thouſand Pilgrims and Lay-Brothers daily expected from Spain, to aſſiſt them. 4. In Ireland, the Pope had made Talbot, the Titular Archbiſhop of Dublin, his Legate, to take Poſſeſſion for him of that Kingdom; whoſe Brother was to be General of all the Forces there, conſiſting of ſeventy Thouſand Papiſts, beſides the French Auxiliaries. There it was to be carry'd on by a General Rebellion and Maſſacre of the Proteſtants, as in 1641, which they call'd Demonſtrating of their Zeal for the Catholick Faith. Four Jeſuits had undertook firſt to aſſaſſinate the Duke of Ormond; and the better to carry on the whole, the Pope was to contribute eight Hundred Thouſand Crowns, and the French had privately ſent over ſome Supplies of Men and Arms, and were to furniſh them with more as ſoon as they ſhou'd be in Action; Le Cheſe having a great Influence in promoting all theſe Tranſactions.

Such was the Sum and Subſtance of this formidable Plot, of which all theſe, with many other Particulars, were formally and ſolemnly given in upon Oath; not at once, or all together, but at ſeveral Times, and by ſeveral Parcels, and likewiſe by ſeveral Perſons, who ſeem'd to ſtart up exactly as the Stories met with Credit and Incouragement, and by their Oaths and Narratives for a while bore down all Oppoſition. And yet, after the ſtricteſt and cooleſt Examinations, and after a full Length of Time, the Government cou'd find very little Foundation to ſupport ſo vaſt a Fabrick, beſides downright Swearing and Aſſurance; not a Gun, Sword, nor Dagger, not a Flaſh of Powder, or a Dark Lanthorn, to effect this ſtrange Villany; and, excepting Coleman's Writings, not one Snip of an Original Letter, or Commiſſion, among thoſe great Numbers alledg'd, to uphold the Reputation of the Diſcoverers. But ſtill the Generality of the Nation, and the Parliament in particular, were at this time more than uſually prepared and diſpos'd to receive and believe ſuch extraordinary Stories: Eſpecially the Houſe of Commons had been much agitated and heated of late by the Jealouſies of the Power of France, and the Growth of Popery, of both which they had too much Reaſon to be apprehenſive. The Latter had ſo much Effect upon them, that about three Months before, it diverted their Deſigns with Relation to the Former; and in a Conference with the Lords, they vehemently complain'd of the reſtleſs Endeavours of the Popiſh Prieſts and Jeſuits, and of the great Difficulties they found both in the Conviction, and the Puniſhment of all Popiſh Recuſants. This, and their great Zeal for the King's Perſon, made them ſuſceptible of any new Impreſſions, and ready to take fire more from the Horror, than the Probability of the Fact. And in theſe Matters there wanted not Incendiaries in both Houſes, who knew how to take the greateſt Advantages from the leaſt Diſcoveries. Of whom none was more quick ſighted, or more deſperately diſpos'd than the Earl of Shaftsbury, whoſe Reſentments and Reſolutions had been blown up to the Height; and if, as probably, he was not the Original Contriver, he was the grand Refiner and Improver of all the Materials. And ſo much he ſeem'd to acknowledge to a Noble Man of his Acquaintance, when he ſaid, I will not ſay who Started the Game, but I am ſure I had the full Hunting of it.

The Nation prepared for its Reception.

2. But to proceed more gradually to lay open the Beginning and Progreſs of this Myſterious Plot, we are firſt to take Notice of the main Diſcoverers,

1678. Car. 30 Ref. 19

An Account of Titus Oates.

Diſcoverers, or rather Projectors of it, beginning with the famous Titus Oates, who was thought ſo meritorious by ſome as to be call'd, The Saviour of the Nation. As to his Family, he was the Son of a Ribban-Weaver, who afterwards turning Anabaptiſt-Preacher, and being Chaplain to a Regiment of Cromwell's Forces in Scotland, was there clapt up in Priſon upon Overton's Plot againſt that Uſurper; but having the Fortune to eſcape upon the King's Reſtoration, he conform'd to the Church, and got the Living of Haſtings in Suſſex; where he continu'd till he thought fit to return again to his former Anabaptiſtical Station. This Son of his had his firſt Education in Merchant-Taylor's School in London, and next in the Univerſity of Cambridge, where he was Student in two Colledges, Caius and St. John's, and where he left no Reputation behind him for his Parts or Learning; tho' he ſeem'd diſtinguiſh'd for a tenacious Memory, a plodding Induſtry, and an unparallel'd Aſſurance, beſides a particular Canting Way that appear'd in his Academical Exerciſes. Removing from thence, he ſlipt into Orders, and for a while officiated as Curate to his Father; after which he enjoy'd a ſmall Vicarage in Kent, from whence he remov'd to another in Suſſex, and after that for ſome time got into the Duke of Norfolk's Family, when he particularly ſided with the Socinians at London; ſo that he became very uncertain as to his Principles and Religion, and infamous as to his Morals. In the laſt Year 1677, being abandon'd and deſtitute of common Neceſſaries, he fell into the Acquaintance of Dr. Ezrael Tongue, a City Divine, a Man of Letters, and a prolifick Head fill'd with all the Romiſh Plots and Conſpiracies ſince the Reformation. This Man was remarkable for his Parts, and great Reading, but of a reſtleſs and humorous Temper, full of variety of Projects, and ſcarce ever without a Pen in his Hand, and a Plot in his Head. At firſt he ſeem'd to entertain Oates out of Charity, who then went by the Name of Ambroſe; and complaining that he knew not where to get Bread, the Doctor took him to his Houſe, gave him Cloaths, Lodging and Diet, and told him He wou'd put him in a Way. After which, finding him a bold Undertaker, he perſwaded him to inſinuate Himſelf among the Papiſts, and get particular Acquaintance with them: Which being effected, he let him underſtand, 'That there had 'been ſeveral Plots in England to bring in Popery, and if he wou'd go 'beyond Sea among the Jeſuits, and ſtrictly obſerve their Ways, it was 'poſſible there might be one at preſent; and if he cou'd make that out, 'it wou'd be his Preferment for ever: But however, if he cou'd get 'their Names, and ſome Informations from the Papiſts, it wou'd be very 'eaſy to rouſe the People with the Fears of POPERY.

And Dr. Tongue.

They join.

Thus inſtructed and qualify'd, Oates formally reconcil'd himſelf to the Church of Rome, and further, as was ſaid, enter'd into the Society of the Jeſuits; and in the Month of April or May 1677, he took ſhipping and went to Valladolid in Spain, in which Kingdom he continu'd about half a Year, and ſo return'd to England. But not having made ſufficient Diſcoveries in this Journey, after a Month's ſtay, he went, or was rather ſent over to St. Omers, the famous Engliſh Seminary, where, tho' near thirty Years of Age, he was enter'd among the Younger Students, and where he continu'd about ſix or ſeven Months. In the latter End of June, this Year, full fraighted with Materials of Names, Places, &c. he return'd to London, to his Friend and Aſſiſtant Dr. Tongue. After ſome Thought and Conſideration, they reſolv'd to draw up a Narrative of a Horrid Plot, &c. and under the Pretence of Secrecy, or perhaps to increaſe the Myſtery, they went over the River and lodg'd at Fox-Hall at one Lambert's, a Bell-Founder; which Houſe was afterwards call'd the Plot-Houſe. Here Oates's, or rather Tongue's Narrative was written, firſt in Oates's Travels.

Greek Characters, and then in English, but often varied and chang'd; but at last they agreed upon one that shou'd be Authentick and Immutable, then consisting of forty Three distinct Articles, with great shew of Exactness and Formality. This was about Half of what afterwards was call'd Oates's Narrative, and was in the Nature and Form of Depositions, but without any Deponent's Name at present. This was to open the whole Scene, and the Substance is as follows:

The Substance of his Narrative.

'That in April 1677, the said Deponent was imploy'd by Strange, the 'then Provincial, Fenwick, Harcourt, and other Jesuits in London, to 'carry their Letters to one Father Suinam, an Irish Jesuit, at Madrid 'in Spain: That in his Journey he broke open the said Letters, and 'found therein an Account given of what Jesuits they had sent into 'Scotland to encourage the Presbyterians to rebel; and that they fear'd 'not Success in their Designs, by reason of the King's being so addicted 'to his Pleasures, and their Interest in the Duke of York, &c. That he 'saw several Students sent out of England to Valladolid, who were ob'lig'd by the Jesuits of the College, to renounce their Allegiance to his 'Majesty of Great Britain; and that one Armstrong, in a Sermon to the 'Students there did with most false and black-mouth'd Scandals repre'sent his said Majesty, using such irreverent base Expressions, as no good 'Subject cou'd repeat without Horror; with several other Trayterous 'Words and Correspondencies which he there discover'd. Being return'd 'to England, where he made further Discoveries, about the Beginning 'of December, the said Deponent was sent with another Treasonable 'Letter, written by Strange and several other Jesuits, to St. Omer's, 'wherein was expresly mention'd their Design to Stab, or otherwise to 'Poyson the King; and that they had receiv'd Ten Thousand Pounds 'from Le Chese, which was in the Hands of one Worsley a Goldsmith in 'London. There was likewise inclosed a Letter of Thanks to Le Chese, 'which the Deponent carry'd to him from St. Omers to Paris. During 'this his Journey, and being abroad, he saw and read many other of their 'Letters, all tending to the same End of Cutting off the King, Subvert'ing the present Government of England, and Restoring the Romish Re'ligion; and they were so confident as in some of them to say, That his 'Majesty of England was so possess'd of their Fidelity, that if any Male'content amongst them shou'd not prove true, but offer to discover, he 'wou'd never believe them.

But one of the principal Things he tells us in this Narrative was, 'That in April 1678, he came over from St. Omers, with other Jesuits, 'to the Grand Consult which was held the 24th of that Month, by about 'fifty Jesuits, at the White-Horse Tavern in the Strand, where they met 'and plotted their Designs for their Society: From whence they di'spers'd into several little Clubs, five or six in a Company, where they 'sign'd a Resolve for the Death of the King, with the Manner how it 'was to be done, which the Deponent, as a Messenger, carry'd from 'one Company to another to be Sign'd. Very shortly after he return'd 'to St. Omers, and towards the End of June came back to England; 'where he soon became privy to the Treaty with Wakeman to poyson, 'and Honest William and Pickering, to shoot the King; and that he 'heard Keins a Jesuit preach a Sermon to twelve Persons of Quality in 'Disguise, wherein he asserted, That Protestants and other Heretical 'Princes, were ipso facto depos'd, because such; and that it was as 'lawful to destroy them, as an Oliver Cromwell, or any other Usur'per, &c.' Besides these new Discoveries, he tells us that he learnt several other remarkable Particulars from them, as 'that the late Wars, 'and many other Mischiefs were brought about by them; but more par-

'ticularly

'ticularly the dreadful Fire in Sixty Six, which was principally manag'd 'by Strange the Provincial; in which their Society employ'd Eighty, or 'Eighty Six Men, he cou'd not tell which, and ſpent Seven Hundred 'Fire-Balls, and, over and above all their vaſt Expences, they were four-'teen Thouſand Pounds Gainers by the Plunder, amongſt which was a 'Box of Jewels, conſiſting of a Thouſand Carracts of Diamonds. He 'further learnt that the Fire in Southwark in the Year 1676, was brought 'about by the like Means; and tho' in that they were at the Expence of 'a Thouſand Pounds, they made a ſhift to get two Thouſand clear in-'to their own Pockets.' Theſe, and many other ſtrange Particulars are to be found in this tedious Narrative, which ſure cou'd never have met with ſuch Credit, and produc'd ſuch Effects in the Nation, had it been broach'd in any other Time, or had it not been kept alive by extraordinary Supporters, and uncommon Accidents. 1678. 3. Tongue and Oates being thus charg'd and prepared, on the 12th of Auguſt they began to put the whole in Execution; and the Former apply'd himſelf with all Secrecy to one Mr. Chriſtopher Kirkby, a Perſon who had ſome Intereſt at Court, ſhew'd him the forty three Articles drawn up in Writing; and, after a full Aſſurance of Fidelity, requeſted him that with the utmoſt Caution he wou'd make the ſame known to the King. Kirkby freely undertook the Matter, but cou'd not get an Opportunity of ſeeing his Majeſty, but in Company with his Brother, till the next Morning: At which Time, in the Park, he privately acquainted his Majeſty, That his Enemies had a Deſign againſt his Life, and humbly deſir'd him to be very careful, for he did not know but he might be in Danger in that very Walk. The King, more ſurpriz'd with the Strangeneſs of the News, than any Apprehenſion of the Danger, only ask'd how that cou'd be? To which the other anſwer'd, That it might be by being ſhot at; but to give a particular Account required more Privacy. Hereupon the King order'd him to attend his Return out of the Park; and then taking him aſide, laid his Commands on him, to tell him what he knew, who acquainted him, That there were two Men, call'd Honeſt William and Pickering, that watch'd an opportunity to ſhoot his Majeſty, and that Sir George Wakeman was hired to poyſon him, as he had been the Day before acquainted by a Friend, who had a more full Account thereof in Writing, and was near at hand, ready to appear when commanded; which his Majeſty was pleas'd ſhou'd be about Eight that Evening. Accordingly Mr. Kirkby and Dr. Tongue did at that Hour attend his Majeſty; and in the Red Room at White-Hall, deliver'd to him the foreſaid forty three Articles, copy'd out by the Doctor's Hand; and both of them humbly begg'd that thoſe Papers might be kept Safe and Secret, leſt the full Diſcovery ſhou'd otherwiſe be prevented, and their own Lives indanger'd. His Majeſty, looking upon them, was pleas'd to anſwer, That being to go with the Court next Morning to Windſor, he wou'd ſafely depoſite the ſaid Papers in the Hands of one he cou'd intruſt, and with whom he wou'd anſwer for their Safety; and ſo order'd them to wait upon the Lord Treaſurer Danby, the next Morning.

Tongue opens the Scene,

And delivers the Narrative to the King.

Accordingly, on the 14th of Auguſt, they both appear'd before the Lord Treaſurer, who deſir'd Mr. Kirkby to withdraw while he ſpoke with the Doctor; who told his Lordſhip That he had deliver'd ſome Papers of great Concernment to the King: That his Majeſty had look'd ſuperficially over them, but being to go out of Town, had left them with his Lordſhip. Whereupon the Earl ſhew'd the Papers to the Doctor, and ask'd Whether they were Originals? He told him, They were Copies of his own Writing. Then he deſir'd to know Who was the Author, and where

He is privately examin'd by the Lord Treaſurer,

1678. Car. 3° Ref. 19

where were the Originals? His Anſwer was, He did not know the Author, for the Originals, then in his Cuſtody, had been thruſt under the Door of his Chamber, but he did not know by whom; only he fancy'd it muſt be one that had ſome Time before held Diſcourſe with him tending to ſuch like Matters. He laſt of all ask'd If he knew where to find the Man? He ſaid No, but he had ſeen him lately two or three Times in the Streets, and it was likely not to be long before he ſhou'd meet him again; ſo nicely cautious was the Doctor in all his Steps and Proceedings. About three or four Days after he brought more written Informations to the Earl, and the Doctor told his Lordſhip That he had ſince met the Man; That he it prov'd to be as he had gueſs'd; That he own'd himſelf to be the Author, and had given him another Paper of the like Kind, number'd into Heads as the Firſt was, but deſir'd not to have his Name known to any Body but the Doctor, becauſe the Papiſts wou'd murther him, if they knew what he was doing. Upon this the Earl ask'd him directly Whether he knew thoſe Men, who were call'd Honeſt William and Pickering, who were nam'd in thoſe Papers as Men deſign'd to aſſaſſinate the King? He anſwer'd, That they us'd to walk frequently in St. James's Park; and if any Man was appointed to keep him Company, it was two to one but he ſhou'd have an Opportunity of letting that Perſon ſee one or both of them in a little Time. Laſtly he demanded of the Doctor If he knew where they liv'd? for it wou'd be neceſſary to ſecure thoſe Men forthwith. He reply'd, He knew not at that Time; but he wou'd inform himſelf, and let his Lordſhip know very ſpeedily.

Who diſcovers the whole Matter to the King.

Hereupon his Lordſhip went immediately to Windſor, and acquainted the King, That Doctor Tongue had been with him according to his Majeſty's Directions; and ſhewing his Majeſty the Additional Paper, he inform'd him of all that was paſs'd, and that he had left a Servant at London, to get a ſight of Honeſt William and Pickering, in order to the Apprehending of them, if his Majeſty thought fit. At the ſame Time his Lordſhip deſired the King, That one of the Secretaries might ſend a Warrant for the Apprehending them; and that the Matter being of ſuch Danger to his Majeſty's Perſon, ſome more of the Council might be acquainted with it. But the King wou'd neither ſuffer the Men to be apprehended, 'till he were more inform'd of the Deſign, nor wou'd he permit the Earl to ſpeak one Word of it to any Man living; and particularly caution'd him againſt the Duke of York's coming to the Knowledge of it; but only ſaid, He wou'd be very careful of Himſelf, till he heard more. Soon after, the Earl went from Windſor to his Houſe at Wimbleton not far off, leaving direct Orders, 'That if Doctor Tongue had any Thing more to 'ſay to him of that Matter, he ſhou'd come to him thither; or elſe ſend 'away that very Gentleman the Earl had left to ſtay with him, to ſee the 'Men, and learn their Lodgings; and to be diligent in bringing any In-'telligence which required Haſte.' Accordingly that Gentleman did go from London to Wimbleton every Day, and back to the Doctor's Houſe at Night; and did ſometimes bring Additional Papers to the Former, and brought Information of the Dwellings of Honeſt William and Pickering, and brought Word alſo from the Doctor, That he ſaid he ſhou'd be able to give his Lordſhip certain Notice before-hand, when any of them were to go to Windſor: Of all which the Earl gave from Time to Time an exact Account to his Majeſty.

Tongue's further Diſcoveries.

Among other Informations, the Doctor went one Night to Wimbleton Himſelf, and told the Earl 'That ſome of the intended Aſſaſſinates were 'to go the next Morning to Windſor, but that he cou'd order it ſo, that 'the Earl's Gentleman ſhou'd go in the ſame Coach with them, or if the 'Coach ſhou'd be full, he might go on Horſeback in their Company,

'and

'and watch them ſo as to give notice of their Arrival, and take them 'more conveniently that way upon the Place, where they wou'd not be 'able to give an Account what they had to do there.' Upon this particular Information, the Earl order'd his Gentleman to obſerve the Doctor's Directions, and went immediately Himſelf to Windſor; where he acquainted his Majeſty with the whole Matter, and Order was taken for ſeizing theſe Men at their Arrival at Windſor: But inſtead of that, the Gentleman brought word from Dr. Tongue, 'That ſomething had pre-'vented their going that Day; but that they intended their Journey the 'Day following, or within two Days at fartheſt:' but then alſo News was brought that they were again prevented by one of their Horſes being ſlipt in the Shoulder, or ſome ſuch Accident. Upon theſe trifling Ways and Pretences, the King, who before wou'd not give credit to it, look'd upon all as meer Sham and Fiction; and notwithſtanding all that the Earl cou'd urge, to get the Buſineſs communicated to Others, beſides Himſelf, the King was more poſitive not to permit it, ſaying, He ſhould alarm all England, and put Thoughts of Killing him into Peoples Heads, who had no ſuch Thoughts before.

1678. Car. 30 Ref. 19

The King believes nothing of the Matter.

The Matter having for a while reſted here, and the Earl done all that lay in his Power, he got leave of his Majeſty to go Half a Day's Journey into Oxfordſhire, upon particular Buſineſs; and left Order at Wimbleton to have any Thing diſpatcht to him, that ſhou'd come from Dr. Tongue. Accordingly, three Days after, the Earl was diſturb'd with another Letter from the Doctor to Himſelf, giving Account of new Matters, particularly of a Pacquet of Letters from ſome Jeſuits concern'd, which were to go to the Poſt-Houſe in Windſor, directed to one Mr. Bedingfield a Prieſt. Upon this Notice, the Earl immediately return'd to Windſor, and inform'd his Majeſty, ſhewing him the Doctor's Letter. It happen'd that the King was no Stranger to it, who ſaid, That ſuch a Pacquet had been deliver'd ſome few Hours before by the ſaid Bedingfield to the Duke of York; and that Bedingfield had told the Duke He fear'd ſome Ill was intended him by the ſaid Pacquet, becauſe the Letters therein ſeem'd to be of a dangerous Nature, and that he was ſure they were not the Hand-Writing of the Perſons whoſe Names were ſubſcrib'd to the Letters. Theſe Letters appear'd with ſuch Marks of Forgery, that they ſtill begot leſs Belief in the King that there was any real Plot; inſomuch, that he ſeem'd reſolv'd not to permit the Earl to produce thoſe Papers, and Intelligence he had receiv'd from Dr. Tongue; till his Royal Highneſs the Duke ſhew'd himſelf very earneſt to have the Truth of thoſe Letters examin'd, which Mr. Bedingfield had brought to him. By which means the Earl got leave at the ſame Time to produce the ſaid Papers and Letters in the Council; ſo that in a little Time all became publick, which the King was deſirous to have had conceal'd, and totally neglected.

More Diſcoveries, by Letters.

4. But before this was effected, Tongue and Kirkby had ply'd the King and the Earl with freſh Importunities, and new Circumſtances of Diſcovery, but with ſo cold a Reception, that they made it their Endeavours to keep up the Cauſe by other Means, and ſo transfer it to the Parliament, where it cou'd not fail of a hearty Welcome among ſuch a Variety of Humours and Inclinations. In order to which, on the 6th of September, Tongue and Oates apply'd themſelves to Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey, a conſiderable Juſtice of the Peace in St. Martin's Pariſh, who was earneſtly preſs'd, and with Difficulty prevail'd upon to ſwear Oates to the foremention'd Narrative. This was done without the Juſtice being permitted to read the Particulars; only he was aſſur'd in general, That it contain'd Matter of Treaſon, and other High-Crimes; and Dr. Tongue particularly depos'd upon Oath, That the ſame had been made known to the King. Not long after, the King and Court remov'd from Windſor to White-Hall, where, chiefly by means of the Duke of York, the foreſaid Letters and Papers were laid before the Privy-Council: The Strangeneſs of the Stories, and the Fear of the King's Perſon, made no ſmall Impreſſions upon Men ſo Loyal and Affectionate, and therefore they reſolv'd to examine into the Bottom of this myſterious Matter. Accordingly, on the 27th of September, above ſix Weeks after the Matter had been open'd to the King and the Treaſurer, Dr. Tongue was ſent for to go to the Council, who went thither together with Kirkby; but the Council was riſen before they came, and Orders were given them to attend next Day. Whereupon they reſolv'd early in the Morning to get two more Copies of the Narrative ſworn to, that each Man might have an Authentick Copy; which accordingly they did before the ſame Juſtice, Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey, with freſh and further Informations, which compleated the Narrative as it was afterwards publiſh'd in Print. Leaving a Copy there, they attended the Council, who after ſome Examinations of the Depoſitions, ſent for Mr. Oates, and preſently order'd both Him and Dr. Tongue Lodgings in White-Hall, and Guards for their Security, and ſoon after they had a bountiful Weekly Salary for their Subſiſtance.

1678. Car. 30 Ref. 19

The whole Matter laid before the Privy-Council.

Oates and Tongue advanc'd.

And now the Privy-Council ſate twice a Day, from Saturday the 28th of September, for a Week and more, when all Perſons were gradually allarm'd with a Thouſand dark and confus'd Imaginations. Oates, after a long Examination, now appear'd to be the chief Diſcoverer of the Plot, and was the firſt Night employ'd with a Guard to ſearch after ſome Prieſts and Jeſuits, to ſecure their Perſons, and ſeize their Papers; and thus he was buiſily employ'd for two or three Days together, and ſo buiſily employ'd, that the Fatigue afterwards ſerv'd as a plauſible Pretence for the Defects of his Memory, the Alterations of, and the Additions to his Stories he had given in upon Oath before the Privy-Council. By his thorow Swearing he ſoon made himſelf formidable to the whole Body of the Roman Catholicks; and by his Means many Perſons were taken up and ſecured, as Sir George Wakeman, Phyſician to the Queen, Mr. Edward Coleman, Mr. Richard Langhorn, Thomas Whitebread, John Gawen, Anthony Turner, William Ireland, William Marſhall, William Ramſey, James Corker, and Thomas Pickering; of which Number, the Eight laſt were Romiſh Prieſts and Jeſuits, with divers others. What gave the greateſt Credit to Oates's Teſtimony were Mr. Coleman's Letters and Papers, of which we have formerly given an Account, and which, tho' imperfect and intirely remote from the Murther of the King, were now the chief Supporters of the Belief of the Reality of the Plot. Theſe were found to be Authentick, and undeniable, while the five Letters to Mr. Bedingfield were by diſcerning Men look'd upon as nothing. But in the midſt of this Heat and Diſturbance, after four Days Examination of Teſtimonies, and ſeveral Perſons accus'd, on the 2d of October the King ſuddenly went to Newmarket, there to divert himſelf a few Days, while his Privy-Council were earneſtly employ'd in a Matter in which he deſir'd to have little or no Concern.

Many Papiſts taken up.

The King goes to Newmarket.

5. Tho' the Rumour of a helliſh Plot and Conſpiracy, eſpecially againſt the Perſon of the King, had very much inflam'd the Court and the People, yet after a Fortnight's Conſideration of it, with the Nature and Proofs, it began a little to cool, and was ſinking in its Credit, when an extraordinary Accident happen'd that rais'd its Reputation much higher than than before, and threw all into a Rage and Fury. And this was the ſurprizing Death of Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey, the Magiſtrate who had twice ſworn Oates to the foremention'd Narrative, a Perſon who then lay under great Fears and Apprehenſions, but of what Nature it is hard to ſay expreſly. This melancholy Gentleman went from his Houſe in St. Martins on Saturday Morning the 12th Day of October, and tho' he had been ſeen by ſeveral of his Acquaintance that Day, yet he was miſſing for four whole Days, till on Thurſday the 17th, he was found towards the Evening, in a Ditch with his own Sword through his Body, at or near a Place call'd Primroſe Hill, in the mid Way between London and Hampſtead, with Money in his Pockets, and Rings on his Fingers, with his Cane and Gloves by him. The Coroners Inqueſt ſate upon the Body, but meeting with ſome Difficulties, adjourn'd to the Day following, when they gave up their Verdict, 'That he was murder'd by 'certain Perſons unknown to the Jurors, and that his Death proceeded from 'Suffocation and Strangling by a certain piece of Linnen Cloth of no 'Value, &c.

Within a Day after this unfortunate Gentleman was miſſing, the Town began to be fill'd with Whiſpers and Conjectures, and little odd Reports; but when the Body was found, and the Nature of the Murder declared by the Jury, the People were in a ſort of Conſternation, and were preſently made to believe, what afterwards was poſitively ſworn, that he was murder'd by the Papiſts. Some Paſſages or Preſages were preſently remember'd concerning this Gentleman's Fears, of which two ought here to be mention'd, as being ſoon after given in to the Houſe of Commons by way of Information. The Firſt was that of Mr. Mulys, who declar'd, 'That about five or ſix Days before Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey 'was miſſing from his Houſe, I met him in St. James's Park, and in Diſ-'courſe told him, That I underſtood he examin'd Mr. Oates about a Plot 'that was much diſcours'd of, and deſir'd to have ſuch an Account from 'his as might be fit to be communicated: Whereupon he gave me ſome 'ſhort Relation, agreeing for the moſt Part with what was the common 'Diſcourſe of the Town.— But I muſt not talk much, ſaid He, for I lye 'under ill Circumſtances: Some Great Men blame me for not having done 'my Duty, and I am threatned by others, and very Great Ones too, for 'having done too much. He then preſs'd to leave me, and without ſay-'ing much we parted.' The next Account was given by one Mr. Robinſon, who declar'd, 'That he met Sir Edmundbury Godfrey at the Seſ-'ſions at Weſtminſter on Tueſday and Wedneſday before he was miſſing; 'and that he ask'd him whether he had any Hand in taking the Infor-'mations touching the Plot; and that he made him anſwer, That he had 'taken them, tho' very unwillingly: And deſiring of him that he might 'ſee them, he told him he cou'd not, for he had left them with my Lord 'Chief Juſtice Scroggs: And that dining with him on Wedneſday, and 'diſcourſing concerning the Plot, and the Examinations touching the 'ſame, He ſaid theſe Words; I have taken them, and I know not what 'will be the Conſequence of them, but I believe I ſhall be the firſt Mar-'tyr.' Some have interpreted theſe and the like preſaging Words, as only ſignifying his Fears of being call'd to an Account for a Miſpriſion, or Neglect, by the Parliament that was to ſit within a Fortnight; he being well known to ſome to be a Favourer, rather than a Proſecutor of the Papiſts. But his Expreſſions, tho' not very clear in themſelves, admitting of another Interpretation, and more agreeable to the Humour of the Times, the Murder was immediately charg'd upon the Papiſts, and was made not only a Part, but the grand Supporter of the Credit of the Plot; inſomuch that That common Queſtion, in every Man's Mouth,

His preſaging Fears before.

The Murder is made a part of the Plot.

1678. Car. 30 Ref. 19

of Who Murder'd Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey? was afterwards look'd upon as a ſufficient Anſwer to all the difficult Objections that cou'd be raiſed againſt the Belief of it. But we cannot fully lay open and clear the Myſtery of this great Matter; but ſhall afterwards take Notice of the Contrivance and Manner of it as it was ſworn in Court.

In the mean Time, the King return'd from Newmarket, to meet his Parliament at Weſtminſter, and the very Day before the Sitting, Sunday the 20th of October, he publiſh'd his Proclamation, commanding all his Officers and Subjects to uſe their utmoſt Diligence to diſcover the Murtherers of Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey; and particularly, 'His Majeſty was 'graciouſly pleas'd to promiſe to any Perſon or Perſons, who ſhou'd make 'ſuch Diſcovery, whereby the ſaid Murtherers, or any of them, ſhou'd 'be apprehended, the Sum of five Hundred Pounds, which ſhould be 'immediately paid upon ſufficient Teſtimony, that ſuch Perſonsor Per'ſon were or was guilty of the ſaid Murther: And if any one of the Mur'therers ſhou'd diſcover the reſt, whereby They, or any of Them, ſhou'd 'be apprehended, ſuch Diſcoverer ſhould not only be pardon'd his Of'fence, but ſhould in like Manner receive the like Reward of five Hun'dred Pounds.' This not having any open Effect, upon Suggeſtion that there were People that wou'd come in to diſcover the Murther, if it were not for the Danger of being murther'd themſelves in Revenge, his Majeſty was pleas'd to publiſh a ſecond Proclamation four Days after, in which 'He ſignify'd, and on the Word of a King promis'd, That if 'any Perſons ſhould ſpeedily make ſuch Diſcovery to one of his princi'pal Secretaries of State, he ſhould not only receive the five Hundred 'Pounds, and Pardon promis'd by his late Proclamation, but his Maje'ſty wou'd take ſuch effectual Courſes, for the Security of ſuch Diſ'coverer, as he ſhould in Reaſon propoſe.' This Incouragement did not only produce Diſcoverers of the Murther, but likewiſe new Diſcoveries of the Plot, both which in a little Time fell gradually into a perfect Union and Coalition.

Two Proclamations for the Diſcovery of the Murtherers.

II. The EIGHTEENTH SESSION of the Second Parliament.

1. Such was the State of the Nation, when the Parliament met according to Prorogation, on the 21ſt Day of October, which was the Eighteenth and laſt Seſſion of the Second and Long Parliament in this Reign. The King was very unwilling that the Parliament ſhou'd take any Notice or Cogniſance of the Plot; yet he knew not how to forbear mentioning a Matter that had rais'd ſuch a general Amazement and Abhorrence in the Nation: Therefore he deliver'd himſelf thus to the two Houſes, now fill'd with the higheſt Expectation. My Lords and Gentlemen, 'I have thought the time very long ſince we parted laſt, and 'wou'd not have deferr'd your Meeting by ſo many Prorogations, if I 'cou'd well have met you ſooner. The Part which I have had this 'Summer in the Preſervation of our Neighbours, and the well ſecuring 'what was left of Flanders, is ſufficiently known, and acknowledg'd by 'all that are Abroad. And tho' for this Cauſe I have been oblig'd to 'keep up my Troops, without which our Neighbours had abſolutely 'deſpair'd, yet both the Honour and Intereſt of the Nation have been 'ſo far improv'd by it, that I am confident no Man here would repine 'at it, or think the Money rais'd for their Disbanding to have been ill 'employ'd in their Continuance; and I do aſſure you, I am ſo much 'more out of Purſe for that Service, that I expect you ſhou'd ſupply it. 'How far it may be neceſſary, conſidering the preſent State of Chriſtendom, to reduce the Land and Sea Forces, or to what Degree, is wor'thy of all our ſerious Conſiderations.

The King's Speech to both Houſes.

'I

1678. Car. 30 Ref. 19

'I now intend to acquaint you (as I ſhall always do with any thing 'that concerns me) that I have been inform'd of a Deſign againſt my 'Perſon by the Jeſuits, of which I ſhall forbear any Opinion, leaſt I may 'ſeem to ſay too much or too little: But I will leave the Matter to the 'Law, and in the mean time will take as much Care as I can, to prevent 'all manner of Practices by that ſort of Men, and of others too, who 'have been tampering in a high Degree by Foreigners, and contriving 'how to introduce Popery amongſt us. I ſhall conclude with recom-'mending to you my other Concerns. I have been under great Diſap-'pointments by the Defect of the Poll-Bill. My Revenue is under great 'Anticipations, and at beſt was never equal to the conſtant and neceſſary 'Expence of the Government, whereof I intend to have the whole State 'laid before you, and require you to look into it, and conſider of it 'with that Duty and Affection which I am ſure I ſhall ever find from you. 'The reſt I leave to the Lord-Chancellor.

The Lord Chancellor Finch's Speech.

The Chancellor's Speech conſiſted moſtly of Hiſtorical Matters, with leſs Flights than formerly; but being ſpoke in ſo critical a time, we can omit but very little Part of it. After a ſhort Preamble, he proceeded thus: 'The Cloſe and Period of the laſt Seſſion is very memorable, 'for it may ſeem perhaps to ſome to have ended with very different, if 'not contrary Counſels and Supplies, tending both to War and Peace: 'But yet they who look more nearly into the Matter, ſhall find that this 'Incertainty proceeded not from any Unſteadineſs at home; but from 'the Mutability of Affairs abroad; every Week, almoſt, producing ſeve-'ral and contrary Appearances. The ſame Incertainties of Counſels and 'Events abroad continu'd for the moſt Part of the Summer: One while, 'the Parties exhauſted by the War, ſeem'd to be willing to accept any 'Peace their Enemies wou'd give; and there wanted not thoſe among 'them who made uſe of the Impatience of their People to neceſſitate 'them to it. Another while, the Performance of the Conditions offer'd 'became ſo doubtful, and was at laſt explain'd in a Manner ſo vaſtly dif-'ferent from the firſt Propoſals, that Deſpair begot new Reſolutions of 'continuing the War. In the midſt of theſe miſerable Perplexities and 'Confuſions, his Majeſty was daily ſolicited with the higheſt Importuni-'ties, and the moſt earneſt Supplications that were poſſible, not to Diſ-'band the Troops he had rais'd; and not only ſo, but that he wou'd ſtill 'continue to ſend over more and more of his Troops, and to augment 'the Forces which he had already Abroad. They did as good as tell 'him plainly, That it was from the Reputation of his Alliance, that 'any Overtures of Peace had been made at all; and that it was from 'the Continuance of his Arms that any further Performance cou'd be ex-'pected. They pray'd his Majeſty to conſider, That if he thought it 'expedient to obtain ſome kind of Reſpit or Breathing time for the Spaniſh Netherlands, or to ſecure any kind of Frontier or Barrier be-'tween them and their too powerful Neighbours; all this and more, 'very much more, perhaps no leſs than the Safety of Chriſtendom, wou'd 'entirely depend upon his Majeſty's preſerving himſelf in that conſidera-'ble Poſture both by Sea and Land, wherein he then was. There was 'no reſiſting ſuch repeated Interceſſions; and tho' his Majeſty ſaw well 'enough, that his complying with theſe Deſires, wou'd engage him in an 'Expence far beyond what he was then provided for, yet he could not 'poſſibly decline the Charge, nor refuſe to undergo the Difficulties. 'And now, whatever the Coſt of all this may amount to, yet neither his 'People will have any Cauſe to repent it, when they ſhall conſider that it 'hath already produc'd ſuch great and good Effects to his Majeſty's Al-'lies, and ſo much Honour to the whole Nation, that whatever is ſav'd

'of Flanders, is now acknowledg'd by all the World to be wholly due to 'his Majeſty's Interpoſition. And tho' the Peace, which ſince hath fol-'low'd, be very far from ſuch a Peace as his Majeſty cou'd have wiſh'd, yet 'it is ſuch a Peace as his Neighbours were reſolv'd to have. No Obliga-'tions they lay under to inſiſt upon a better Peace, no Conjunction 'with his Majeſty, no nor the Offers to declare War on their behalfs, 'if they deſir'd it, cou'd prevail with them, or keep them from being 'wrought upon by the Arts of thoſe who firſt rais'd unreaſonable Jea-'louſies amongſt them, and then caus'd them to precipitate themſelves 'into a Peace. Thus you ſee at once, not only the Neceſſity which his 'Majeſty had to continue his Troops in Pay, but likewiſe the Benefits 'and Advantages which have come of it.

Then, inſiſting upon the Neceſſity of a Supply in the ſame manner that the King had in his Speech, he proceeded in theſe Words: 'Thus you 'have in ſhort an Account of what hath been doing Abroad, and the 'Charge of it; 'tis now high time to look a little nearer Home: And 'ſurely in that ſtate of things to which they are now reduc'd, 'tis viſible 'and plain enough what muſt be our Buſineſs for the time to come. 'Firſt, We muſt look to our ſelves, and provide for our own Safety: 'For that which the Confederates acknowledge with Thanks, we may 'be ſure hath a quite different Reſentment in other Places. And in order 'to this, care muſt be taken ſo to ſtrengthen our ſelves both at Home 'and Abroad, that they who ſee us in a firm and well ſettled Eſtate, may 'have no Hopes to ſurprize, nor any Temptation to make any Attempt 'upon us. And herein it will be neceſſary to take Notice of what his 'Majeſty hath recommended to you, and to weigh very well the Impor-'tance of reducing the Sea and Land Forces, and the Conſequences which 'may attend ſuch a Reducement: For this be aſſur'd, that nothing in the 'World wou'd more gratify our Enemies, than to ſee us afraid of main-'taining our ſelves in a Poſture of Defence, which is the only Poſture 'they are afraid to find us in. And that the Fears of Popery may not 'too much diſquiet you, be pleas'd to conſider that you have one Secu-'rity more, ſince that which was always the Intereſt of his Majeſty's 'Honour and Conſcience, is now become the Intereſt of his Perſon too, 'to protect the Proteſtant Religion, and to prevent the ſwarming of Se-'minary Prieſts. For his Majeſty hath told you, That he hath lately re-'ceiv'd Information of Deſigns againſt his own Life by the Jeſuits. 'And tho' he doth in no ſort Prejudge the Perſons accus'd, yet the 'ſtrict Enquiry into this Matter hath been a Means to diſcover ſo many 'other unwarrantable Practices of theirs, that his Majeſty hath reaſon 'to look to them. Nor are theſe Men the only Factors for Rome; but 'there are found amongſt the Laity alſo ſome who have made them-'ſelves Agitators to promote the Intereſts of a Foreign Religion, who 'meddle with Matters of State and Parliament [Coleman] and carry on 'their pernicious Deſigns by a moſt dangerous Correſpondence with Fo-'reign Nations. What kind of Proceſs the Proof will bear, and to how 'high a Degree the Extent and Nature of theſe Crimes will riſe, is under 'Conſideration, and will be fully left to the Courſe of Law.

'In the next place, let us carefully avoid all Differences amongſt our 'ſelves, all manner of Claſhing about Juriſdictions, and all Diſputes of 'ſuch Nature, as can never end in any Accommodation. For this is ſtill 'what our Enemies wou'd wiſh, who wou'd be glad to ſee us ruin'd, 'without their being at the Charge of it. And therefore we muſt now, 'above all other times, labour to ſhew the World the moſt effectual Signi-'fications of our Loyalty and Duty that we are able to expreſs; for 'nothing in the World can more diſcourage our Enemies: as on the con-

'trary

'trary nothing does or can ſo ripen a Nation for Deſtruction, as to be obſerv'd to diſtruſt their own Government. Be pleas'd then now to take Occaſion to manifeſt ſuch a Zeal for the Government, as to look into the State of that Revenue which ſhou'd ſupport the conſtant and neceſſary Charge of it, and to ſee that it be made equal to it. There are many Motives to oblige us to this Inſpection: Firſt, you ſee the King expects it; and then again you cannot but ſee, that nothing is or can be of a more publick Conſideration, than to ſupport the Dignity of the Crown, which is in truth the Dignity of the Nation. Beſides, 'tis Unſafe, as well as Diſhonourable, that the King's Revenue ſhou'd fall ſhort of his moſt neceſſary, and moſt unavoidable Expences. And if upon a due Examination it ſhall be made appear to you, that tho' there had been no Diminution of the Cuſtoms, yet no Thrift or Conduct in the World cou'd ever make the Revenue able to anſwer the certain Charge of the Government, much leſs to diſcharge thoſe Anticipations which lie heavy upon it; how can it be poſſible for it to ſupply thoſe Contingencies which happen even in times of Peace, and which can never be brought under any Regulation or Eſtabliſhment? You may be ſure a great and generous Prince wou'd be glad, by good Managery, to have wherewithal to exerciſe his Royal Bounty. But our Neighbours have found a way to prevent that: For their vaſt Preparations put his Majeſty upon a vaſt Expence, to preſerve himſelf and us.

'My Lords and Gentlemen, You now find the King involv'd in Difficulties as great, and without your Aſſiſtance, as inſuperable, as ever any Government did labour under. And yet his Majeſty doth not think that there need many Words to beſpeak your Zeal and Induſtry in his Service: For the things themſelves now ſpeak, and ſpeak aloud. The Publick and Private Intereſt do both perſwade the ſame things, and are, and ought to be mighty in Perſwaſion. If the Honour and Safety of your Country; and, which is next to that, the Concerns of your own Families and Poſterities, cannot awaken your utmoſt Care to preſerve that Government which only can ſupport you and yours, all other Diſcourſes will be to no purpoſe. There can be no Difficulties at all to them who take delight in ſerving of the King and their Country, and love the Occaſions of ſhewing it. Such are all here! But tho' the King hath had for many Years a large and full Experience of your Duty, yet there never was a time like this to try your Affections. There is ſo ſtrange a Concurrence of ill Accidents at this time, that 'tis not to be wonder'd at, if ſome very honeſt and good Men begin to have troubled and thoughtful Hearts. Yet that which is infinitely to be lamented, is, that malicious Men too begin to work upon this Occaſion, and are in no ſmall Hopes to raiſe a Storm that nothing ſhall be able to allay. If you can reſcue the King's Affairs from ſuch a Tempeſt as this; if you can weather this Storm, and ſteer the Veſſel into the Harbour; if you can find a way to quiet the Apprehenſions of thoſe who mean well, without being carried away by the Paſſions of others who mean ill; if you can prevent the Deſigns of thoſe without Doors, who ſtudy nothing elſe but how to diſtract your Counſels, and to diſturb all your Proceedings; then you will have perform'd as great and as ſeaſonable a Piece a Service to the King, as ever yet he ſtood in need of. And when the World ſhall ſee, that nothing hath been able to diſappoint the King of the Aſſiſtance he had reaſon to hope from this Seſſion; but that there is a Right Underſtanding between the King and his Parliament, and that again ſtrengthen'd and increas'd by the Evidences of your Duty and Affection, and rais'd above all Poſſibility of being interrupted; then ſhall the King be poſſeſs'd of that true Glory

1678. Car. 30 Ref. 19

'which others vainly purſue, the Glory of Reigning in the Hearts of his 'People. Then ſhall the People be poſſeſs'd of as much Felicity as this 'World is capable of: And you ſhall have the perpetual Honour and 'Satisfaction of having been the means to procure ſo much ſolid and laſt-'ing Good to your Country, as the Eſtabliſhment of the Peace and Tran-'quillity of this Kingdom, and conſequently of all his Majeſty's Domi-'nions.

The King uneaſy about the Plot.

The King was under conſiderable Difficulties and Perplexities upon the Account of the Plot, which he had reaſon to fear wou'd much increaſe the former Heats in his Parliament, and retard his Buſineſs; and therefore he had in vain endeavour'd to divert the Miſchief by ſending over more Troops into Flanders, to join with Holland, and continue the War againſt France. And now he took care that what related to that matter in his own, and the Chancellor's Speech, ſhou'd be deliver'd with the utmoſt Caution, and with a plain Intimation that the Laws, and not the Houſe of Parliament, were to decide it; and further to prevent their meddling, he gave expreſs Commands to his prime Miniſter, the Lord-Treaſurer Danby, not to make any Diſcoveries to the Parliament. But that Lord, perhaps expecting that the Horror of the thing might rouſe the Affection of the Commons, and make them in a more giving Temper, or perhaps to ingratiate himſelf where he had many deſperate Enemies, thought fit the firſt Day to bring Oates's Informations before their Houſe. Upon this the King was very much provok'd, and told him plainly, That tho' you do not believe it, you ſhall find that you have given the Parliament a handle to ruin your ſelf, as well as to diſturb all my Affairs; and that you will live to repent it. This he found to be true, and made him afterwards acknowledge, That he had liv'd to find Kings to be true Prophets, as well as Kings; having ſeen many villainous Deſigns acted under the Cover of the Popiſh Plot. To finiſh and make an end of the envy'd State of this great Miniſter, ſoon after the Dutcheſs of Portſmouth, and Earl of Sunderland, join'd with the Earl of Shaftsbury and the Duke of Monmouth, in the Deſign of his Ruin. And tho' the King thought fit afterwards to protect him by a Pardon from the Commons Impeachment; yet this appear'd more to skreen his own, than to preſerve his Miniſter's Reputation; and he ſeem'd never after to have any great Favour or Affection for this active Stateſman.

The Treaſurer brings it into Parliament, againſt his Conſent.

The King, whoſe Inclinations were more to Popery than any other Religion, had almoſt from the Beginning look'd upon the Plot-Diſcoverers as little better than Impoſtors; but ſoon after the Beginning of this Seſſion of Parliament, he was more fully confirm'd in it by an Accident and Paſſage not hitherto publiſh'd; but was related by the King Himſelf to a Perſon of full Credit, who communicated it to the Author of this Hiſtory. The Subſtance of the Story was, That as ſoon as Oates was by the Parliament eſteem'd the prime Diſcoverer of this Plot, his Reputation in the Height, and all Perſons inflam'd with the Horror of it, about Twenty eminent rich Citizens, entire Believers of the whole, met at a great Supper in the City, to which they invited Dr. Tongue, Mr. Oates, and another noted Divine, who had been often favour'd with the King's private Converſation. Theſe three were handſomly entertain'd, and particularly careſs'd by the reſt of the Company; but their higheſt and diſtinguiſhing Compliments were paid to Mr. Oates, and with ſuch a ſeeming Derogation to the Honour of Dr. Tongue, who valu'd himſelf and his Abilities as much as any Man, that there aroſe a verbal Quarrel between theſe two Confederates; which came to that Height, that the Doctor plainly told Oates, That he knew nothing of the Plot, but what he learnt from Him. Theſe dangerous Words diſturb'd and confounded the whole Company;

The King confirm'd in the Diſbelief of it by an Accident.

pany; and had ſuch an Effect upon one of them, who was thought to be a Spy, that the very next Morning he went to the King, and told him the whole Paſſage and Tranſaction. Upon which, his Majeſty immediately ſent for the foremention'd Divine, in whom he had a good Confidence, and opening the Matter to him, he let him know That he expected to hear the Particulars from Him. But he made ſome Excuſes, and particularly alledg'd the Badneſs of his Memory; at which the King ſaid in a Paſſion, If you are good for any Thing, it is for your Memory; and then let him know, that he had heard ſufficient of the Matter already, but expected it all from Him. But ſtill he pretended not to remember it, or elſe gave ſo imperfect an Account of it, that the King incens'd, at laſt ſpoke to this effect to him; I find there is like to be a great deal of Bloodſhed about this Plot; and the Times are ſo troubleſome and dangerous to Me, that I durſt not venture to pardon any that is condemn'd: Therefore their Blood be upon your Head, and not upon Mine! And I deſire to ſee you no more. And ſo he finally diſmiſs'd him his Preſence. But to return to the Parliament. 1678. Car. 30 Reſ. 19

2. The Houſe of Commons having receiv'd Oates's Informations, they fell into a Flame, and were ſo aſſiduouſly employ'd, that in the Beginning of this Seſſion they ſate whole Days, from Morning till late at Night; chiefly enquiring into the Plot and the Murder of Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey, and with ſo much Secrecy, that the Minutes and Votes of the Houſe were forbid to be divulg'd. The Upper Houſe ſeem'd no leſs diligent; and the Firſt Buſineſs of both was to agree in the following Addreſs to his Majeſty, viz. 'That Information had been given of a horrible Deſign 'againſt his Sacred Life, and being very ſenſible of the fatal Conſequences 'of ſuch an Attempt, and of the Dangers of the Subverſion of the Proteſtant Religion and Government of this Realm, They humbly beſeech his 'Majeſty, That a ſolemn Day of Faſting and Humiliation may be appointed to implore the Mercy and Protection of Almighty God to his Majeſty's Royal Perſon, and in Him to all his Loyal Subjects, and to pray 'that God will bring to Light more and more all ſecret Machinations 'againſt his Majeſty and the whole Kingdom.' All which was accordingly done by Proclamation, dated the 25th of October, requiring that Wedneſday the 13th of November ſhou'd be kept for a General Faſt. Soon after, both Houſes again agreed in another Addreſs, 'That having taken 'into their ſerious Conſideration the bloody and trayterous Deſigns of 'Popiſh Recuſants againſt his Majeſty's Sacred Perſon and Government, 'and the Proteſtant Religion, they do for Prevention thereof moſt humbly beſeech his Majeſty to iſſue forth his Royal Proclamation, commanding all Perſons, being Popiſh Recuſants, or ſo reputed, to depart 'from the Cities of London and Weſtminſter, and all other Places within 'Ten Miles of the ſame, on or before the 7th of November next enſuing, 'under Pain of his Majeſty's higheſt Diſpleaſure, and of the ſevereſt Execution of the Laws againſt them.' To which his Majeſty comply'd, and ſent out a Proclamation to that Effect, dated October 30. This being not thought ſufficient, they proceeded to another in theſe Words, 'Whereas the Safety and Preſervation of your Majeſty's Sacred Perſon, 'is of ſo great a Conſequence and Concernment to the Proteſtant Religion, and to all your Subjects; We do moſt humbly beſeech your Majeſty to command the Lord Chamberlain, and all other the Officers of 'your Majeſty's Houſhold, to take a ſtrict Care that no Unknown, or 'Suſpicious Perſons may have Acceſs near your Majeſty's Perſon; and 'that your Majeſty will likewiſe pleaſe to command the Lord Mayor, 'and Lieutenancy of London, to appoint ſufficient Guards of the Train'd

'Bands, during this Seſſion of Parliament; and likewiſe the Lords Lieu'tenants of Middleſex and Surry, to appoint the like Guards of the 'Train'd Bands, in Middleſex, Weſtminſter, Southwark, and other Places
'adjacent, as ſhall be thought neceſſary.

Oates examined by the Commons.

On the ſame Day, October 24th, Mr. Oates, now call'd Dr. Oates, was examin'd in the Houſe of Commons ſix or ſeven Hours; at the End of which he was ſeveral Times, and with great Strictneſs Interrogated Whether he knew any Thing more of the Plot, or any other Perſons concern'd in it, than what he had already mention'd? He ſolemnly anſwer'd He did not; and about Nine at Night, the Houſe ſent for the Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs, who took his Examination upon Oath, and in the Houſe ſeal'd twenty ſix Warrants againſt ſeveral Lords and Others that he had ſworn againſt. Whereupon the five Lords, namely, the Lord Powis, the Lord Stafford, the Lord Arundel of Wardour, the Lord Petre, and the Lord Bellaſis, and Sir Henry Tichburn Baronet, were taken into Cuſtody, and ſhortly after committed to the Tower; and ſeveral others were ſent Priſoners to Newgate. But notwithſtanding Oates's ſolemn Aſſeverations of his not knowing any more, he ſoon began ſo much to abound with new Diſcoveries, that ſome began to ſuſpect his Veracity: Therefore to put an end to all ſuch Doubtings, on the 31ſt of October, the Commons Reſolv'd, Nemine Contradicente, 'That upon the Evidence that has already

'hath been a Damnable and Helliſh PLOT contrived and carry'd on by
'Popiſh Recuſants, for Aſſaſſinating and Murdering the King, for Sub-
'verting the Government, and Rooting out and Deſtroying the Proteſtant
'Religion.' After which they Order'd, 'That this Vote be communi'cated to the Lords at a Conference, and that the Lords be deſired to join
'with this Houſe in providing Remedies for the Preſervation of his Ma-
'jeſty's Perſon and Government, and the Proteſtant Religion.' This remarkable Vote had a great Effect in all Places; and the very ſame Day the People were ſtrangely affected with the Sight of the Funeral of Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey: The Solemnity proceeded from Bridewell to St. Martins in the Fields; and the Body was attended by ſeventy two London Divines, who went in Proceſſion before it, and above a Thouſand Perſons of Quality and conſiderable Citizens, who follow'd after in the ſame Order, all being compleated by a memorable Funeral Sermon preach'd by Dr. Lloyd Miniſter of the Pariſh.

Sir E. Godfrey's Funeral.

The next Day there was a Conference between the two Houſes, upon the Subject of the laſt Vote of the Commons; and this Report was made.

The Lords Report.

'The Lords have conſider'd the Vote of the Houſe of Commons com'municated to them at the Conference, and have moſt readily and una-
'nimouſly concurr'd with them in it, Nemine Contradicente; and their
'Lordſhips are very glad to ſee that Zeal which the Commons have
'ſhew'd upon this Occaſion, and do fully concurr with them, That the
'moſt ſpeedy and ſerious Conſiderations of both Houſes are neceſſary for
'Prevention of the Imminent Dangers; In Order whereunto, their Lord-
'ſhips have Reſolv'd to Sit de Die in Diem, Forenoon and Afternoon,
'and deſire that the Houſe of Commons will do the ſame, &c.' At the ſame Time the King, finding the Unanimity of both Houſes, and receiving a new Addreſs againſt the Papiſts, acted as tho' he equally believ'd the Danger, and iſſu'd out his Proclamation, Beginning with the

A Proclamation againſt Papiſts.

'Lords and Commons having taken into their ſerious Conſideration the 'Bloody and Traiterous Deſigns of Popiſh Recuſants againſt his Majeſty's
'Sacred Perſon and Government, and the Proteſtant Religion; therefore
'he commanded them all, except ſettled Houſe-keepers that wou'd take
'the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy, to depart the Cities of London

'and

'and Weſtminſter, and all Places within Ten Miles diſtant from the ſame. In purſuance of this Proclamation, many Papiſts, refuſing thoſe Oaths, went out of Town with great Lamentations, leaving their Trades and Habitations; but within a Week or two, they generally return'd again, and, being better ſatisfy'd by their Leaders, ventur'd to take the foreſaid Oaths. 1678. Car. 30 Ref. 19

One great Danger of Popery at this Time was the Number of Papiſts, and even of new Converts, retain'd in his Majeſty's Guards; and therefore to remove the Apprehenſion of the Parliament, on the 2d of November, his Majeſty was pleas'd to declare in Council, 'That whoſoever 'ſhall make Diſcovery of any Officer or Soldier of his Majeſty's Horſe 'or Foot Guards, who, having formerly taken the Oaths of Allegiance 'and Supremacy, and the Teſt, enjoyn'd by a late Act of Parliament, 'For Preventing Dangers which may happen from Popiſh Recuſants, 'hath ſince been perverted to the Romiſh Religion, or hears Maſs, ſuch 'Diſcoverer, upon Information thereof given to his Grace the Duke of 'Monmouth, Lord General of his Majeſty's Forces, ſhall have a Reward 'of Twenty Pounds for every Soldier or Officer ſo diſcover'd as afore-'ſaid. And to the End his Majeſty's Pleaſure herein may be fully known, 'his Majeſty doth command that this Order be forthwith printed and 'publiſh'd.' A Second Danger was from the Intereſt of Popiſh Members of Parliament, but eſpecially in the Houſe of Peers; and therefore the Commons prepar'd a Bill, For the more effectual Preſerving the King's Perſon and Government, by diſabling Papiſts from Sitting in either Houſe of Parliament. But a Third, which now moſt threatned the Security of the Proteſtant Religion, was the Proſpect of a Popiſh Succeſſor; and therefore the Popular Members of both Houſes began to form the Deſign of a Bill of Excluſion, as the only Means to extinguiſh the Hopes and Expectation of the Romiſh Party. The Commons began gently on this Occaſion, and on the 4th of November ſuffer'd a Debate to ariſe in their Houſe, for an Addreſs to be preſented to his Majeſty, That his Royal Highneſs may withdraw Himſelf from his Majeſty's Perſon and Counſels. But then they adjourn'd this Debate till Friday November 8, and then again adjourn'd it to the Tueſday following.

Another.

Deſigns againſt the Duke of York.

The King, who had conſented to all they had ask'd this Seſſion, now reſolv'd to give them a handſome Check, as well underſtanding the Tendency of this Addreſs; and therefore on the Saturday before, November 9, he came to the Houſe of Peers, and made this remarkable Speech to both Houſes: 'My Lords and Gentlemen, I am ſo very ſenſible of the 'great and extraordinary Care you have already taken, and ſtill continue 'to ſhew for the Safety and Preſervation of my Perſon in theſe Times of 'Danger, that I cou'd not ſatisfy my ſelf without coming hither on pur-'poſe to give you all my moſt hearty Thanks for it. Nor do I think it 'enough to give you my Thanks only, but I hold my ſelf oblig'd to let 'you ſee withal, That I do as much ſtudy your Preſervation too, as I can 'poſſibly; and that I am as ready to joyn with you in all the Ways and 'Means that may eſtabliſh a Firm Security of the Proteſtant Religion, as 'your own Hearts can wiſh: And this not only during my Time, of 'which I am ſure you have no Fear, but in Future Ages, even to the 'End of the World. And therefore I am come to aſſure you, That 'whatſoever reaſonable Bills you ſhall preſent to be paſſed into Laws, 'to make you ſafe in the Reign of my Succeſſor, (ſo they tend not to 'Impeach the Right of Succeſſion, nor the Deſcent of the Crown in the 'true Line, and ſo as they Reſtrain not my Power, nor the Juſt Rights of 'any Proteſtant Succeſſor) ſhall find from Me a ready Concurrence. And 'I deſire you withal, to think of ſome more Effectual Means for the 'Conviction of Popiſh Recuſants, and to expedite your Counſels as faſt 'as you can, That the World may ſee Our Unanimity, and that I may 'have the Opportunity of ſhewing you how ready I am to do any Thing 'that may give Comfort and Satisfaction to ſuch Dutiful and Loyal Sub-'jects.' In the Afternoon, the Houſe of Commons went to the Banquetting-Houſe of White-Hall, and by their Speaker return'd his Majeſty their humble and hearty Thanks, for his moſt gracious Speech this Day made to both Houſes of Parliament. To which his Majeſty was pleaſed to give this obliging Anſwer, Gentlemen, it ſhall always be my Study to preſerve the Proteſtant Religion, and to advance and ſupport the Intereſt of my People.

The Appearance and Character of Bedloe.

3. In the mean Time, while the Credit of the Plot began to ſink a ſecond Time, and to become a little too unwieldy for one Evidence, there ſuddenly appear'd another Supporter, one William Bedloe, or Beddoe, according to his reputed Father's Name; a Fellow who took upon him the Title of Captain Bedloe, being a proper Collegue and Aſſiſtant to Dr. Oates, and having undergone greater Variety of Fortunes. He was one of a baſe Birth and worſe Manners, who from a poor Foot-Boy and Runner of Errands, for a while got into a Livery in the Lord Bellaſis's Family; and having for his Villanies ſuffer'd Hardſhip and Want in many Priſons in England, he afterwards turn'd a kind of a Poſt or Letter-Carrier, for thoſe who thought fit to employ him, beyond Sea. By theſe means he got the Names and Habitations of Men of Quality, their Relations, Correſpondents and Intereſt; and upon this Bottom, with a daring Boldneſs, and a dextrous turn of Fancy and Addreſs, he put himſelf into the World. He was skilful in all the Arts and Methods of Cheating; but his Maſter-Piece was his perſonating Men of Quality, getting Credit for Watches, Coats, Horſes, borrowing Money upon Recommendations, bilking of Vintners and Tradeſmen; Lying and Romancing, to the Degree of Impoſing upon any Man that had any Remainders of Humanity or good Nature. He liv'd like a Wild Arab, upon the Prey and Ramble; and where-ever he was in Flanders, France, Spain or England, he never fail'd of leaving the Name of a notorious Cheat and Impoſtor. In ſum, he was an admirable Second to help out Oates in his Evidences, had more Wit and Humour, but ſtill he was better at a Sham off-hand, than a Conſpiracy by Book.

He firſt pretended only to diſcover the Murther of Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey, and ſeem'd to have a ſpecial Eye to the five Hundred Pounds Reward, which had not ſufficient Effect till it was back'd by a ſecond Proclamation, which offer'd Protection as well as Reward to any Perſon that ſhould make the Diſcovery. In order to make the more Noiſe, within a Day or two after the laſt Proclamation, Bedloe took a ſudden Journey from London to Briſtol, having but lately got out of Priſon, where he was fed out of the common Alms-Basket. In this Journey, he wrote a Letter from Newberry to Secretary Coventry, a little myſteriouſly worded, but implying a Deſire to have him give Orders to the Mayor of Briſtol, to have him taken up and ſent to Him. This took Effect, and he was accordingly taken up in the moſt publick Place and Manner at Briſtol, and with all the Noiſe and Affectation of being taken Notice of as a grand Diſcoverer. On the 5th of November he left Briſtol, and return'd to London, where he was immediately dubb'd a Captain, and a King's Evidence; and, as Oates before him, was honour'd with Guards for his Security, and Subſiſtance at his Majeſty's Charges at White-Hall.

He is examined before the King,

He was immediately examin'd by the two principal Secretaries of State, in the Preſence of the King Himſelf, touching the Murther of Sir Edmund-bury bury Godfrey, and other Matters. He declar'd he had been bred up in the Church of England till within theſe two Years, when by the Perſuaſion and Promiſes of the Jeſuits, he was drawn over to them, but he was not one of their Order. As to Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey he ſaid He knew that he was Murther'd in Somerſet-Houſe; but at the ſame Time he ſolemnly declar'd upon his Oath, That he could ſay nothing at all to the Plot that was then in Queſtion. The next Day, Novemb. 8th, he was examin'd by the Houſe of Lords; where, upon new Incouragement, he thought fit to be more open, and launch out into the Depths of the Plot, with a new and Supplemental Evidence; wherein he declar'd, that Walſh and Le Phaire, two Jeſuits concern'd in the horrid Murther, inform'd him, 'That the Lord Bellaſis had a Commiſſion to command 'Forces in the North, the Earl of Powis in South-Wales, and the Lord 'Arundel of Warder had a Commiſſion from the Pope to grant Com-'miſſions to whom he pleas'd; That Coleman had been a great Agitator 'in the Deſign againſt the King, and that he ask'd the Jeſuits, why they 'had not formerly told him what they had deſign'd concerning the King's 'Death, they anſwer'd, That none but whom my Lord Bellaſis gave Di-'rections for, were to know it.' Then he deſir'd he might have Time to put the whole Narrative into Writing, which he ſaid he had begun. They particularly ask'd him, whether he knew Titus Oates, and he poſitively deny'd it; tho' afterwards he came off with a Salvo, that he knew him by the Name of Ambroſe.

1678. Car. 30 Reſ. 19

And by the Lords.

This firſt Diſcovery ſoon took place, and preſently produc'd an Order to make a ſtrict Search for Charles Walſh, Le Phaire, and other ſuſpicious Perſons, and an Addreſs the Day following for a Proclamation againſt Conyers, Simmonds, Walſh, Le Phaire, Pritchard and Caſtaway, as Perſons guilty of the Damnable and Helliſh Plot, &c. On the 12th of the ſame Month, upon a further Examination in the Houſe of Lords, Bedloe's Eyes were more open'd, and his Knowledge much enlarged, both as to the Plot and the Murder. The Subſtance of what he ſaid concerning the Plot was: 'That the Monks of Doway firſt told him the Deſign; 'and after four Sacraments of Secrecy, they ſent him to Harcourt, a Je-'ſuit in Duke-ſtreet, London; who provided for him, and ſent him to 'Paris, &c. That Le Phaire, Walſh, Pritchard and Lewis told him 'what Lords were to govern, what Men were to be rais'd; particularly 'forty Thouſand to be ready in London; what Succours were to be ex-'pected, namely Ten Thouſand from Flanders, Twenty or Thirty Thou-'ſand Religious Men and Pilgrims from St. Jago in Spain; that Hull 'was to be ſurpriz'd; and that juſt in the critical Time the Plot was diſ-'cover'd; that Le Phaire gave him a Sacrament of Secrecy; and they 'told him who and who were to be kill'd, and the Men that were to do 'the Work. Le Phaire ſaid further, That Conyers was my Lord Bel-'laſis's Confeſſor, and communicated his Orders; and that they were 'reſolv'd, if any Plotters were taken, to diſpatch them before they cou'd 'be brought to Tryal, or to burn the Priſon. He moreover depos'd, That 'Le Phaire, Pritchard, Lewis, Keines and Walſh, and others, had often 'told him, That there was not a Roman-Catholick in England, of any 'Quality or Credit, but was acquainted with this Deſign of the Papiſts, 'and had receiv'd the Sacrament from their Father Confeſſors, to be ſe-'cret and aſſiſtant in the carrying of it on. He further added, That the 'Part that was aſſign'd him, was to bring and carry Orders and 'Counſels, and all other Intelligences from one Army to another, upon 'all Occaſions; he knowing every Part and Road of England and Wales.' In this long Examination, the Lords were for the moſt part very ſtrict and particular, and they eſpecially conjur'd him to ſpeak nothing but Truth;

Truth; and he did in the Preſence of God, as he ſhould anſwer it at the Day of Judgment, aſſure all to be true he had Depoſed.

4. As the Credit of the Plot increas'd, ſo did the Labour and Diligence of the two Houſes of Parliament, and the King ſeem'd all along to keep the ſame Pace with them: Particularly, on the 12th of November, he iſſu'd out a new Proclamation, 'whereby all Romiſh Recuſants, and 'ſuch reputed, were enjoyn'd under the Penalty of the Laws, to repair 'to their own Houſes, and not to remove more than five Miles from 'thence without Licenſe; excepting out of this Proclamation the Inha-'bitants of London and Weſtminſter.' On the ſame Day, the Houſe of Commons, to whom the King was moſt attentive, Reſolv'd, 'That there 'being an Accuſation of High-Treaſon againſt Sir William Godolphin, 'his Majeſty's Ambaſſador in Spain, a humble Addreſs be preſen-'ted to his Majeſty, to deſire him to call home Sir William Godolphin 'to anſwer the Accuſation.' To which his Majeſty was pleas'd to anſwer, That he had already order'd his Letters of Revocation; and that he had a Perſon in his Eye, who he deſign'd ſhould ſucceed him in that Service. And on the ſame Day the Commons preſented another Addreſs to his Majeſty, praying, 'That a ſpecial Commiſſion may be iſſu'd forth, 'for tendering the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy to all the Servants 'of his Majeſty and Royal Highneſs, and to all other Perſons (except 'his Majeſty's Portugal Servants) reſiding within the Palaces of White-'Hall, St. James's, and Somerſet-Houſe, and all other his Majeſty's Hou-'ſes; and that there may be likewiſe ſpecial Commiſſions iſſu'd forth, 'for tendering the ſaid Oaths to all Perſons reſiding within the two Ser-'jeant's Inns, all the Inns of Court, and Inns of Chancery.' To which his Majeſty return'd an Anſwer in Writing, two Days after, That as to all his Majeſty's own Servants, all the Servants of his Royal Highneſs, all other Perſons reſiding in White-Hall, St. James's, Somerſet-Houſe, or any other of his Majeſty's Houſes, except the menial Servants of the Queen and Dutcheſs; as alſo all Perſons within either of the Serjeant's Inns, or any of the Inns of Court, or Chancery, his Majeſty willingly grants it. But as to the Queen's Menial Servants, who are ſo very inconſiderable in their Number, and within the Articles of Marriage, his Majeſty does not think it fit. And his Majeſty cannot but take Notice, That in a late Addreſs from the Houſe of Peers, the Menial Servants of the Queen and Dutcheſs are excepted; and his Majeſty hopes this Houſe will proceed with the ſame Moderation as to that Particular.

A new Proclamation.

The Commons Addreſs.

The King's Anſwer.

But the Commons were ſo heated with new Examinations and Diſcoveries, that they cou'd not be ſatisfy'd with this Anſwer; therefore in another Addreſs, they humbly advis'd his Majeſty, and renew their Deſires, That the Perſons excepted in his Majeſty's Meſſage, may be comprehended in the ſame Commiſſion; for which they do in all Duty lay before his Majeſty the Reaſons following: 'I. For the Quieting of the 'Minds of your Majeſty's good Proteſtant Subjects, who have more 'than ordinary Care and Solicitude for the Safety of your Majeſty's Per-'ſon, by reaſon of the notorious Conſpiracy of the Popiſh Party at this 'Time, even againſt the Life of your ſacred Majeſty. 2. By your Maje-'ſty's Proclamation, ſet forth upon the Addreſs of both Houſes, for Ba-'niſhing Popiſh Recuſants Ten Miles from London, there is no ſuch Re-'ſtriction. 3. The Diſcouragement it wou'd be to this Kingdom, to ſee 'ſo great a Neglect; and the Occaſions that Papiſts would take to ſay 'from thence, That all our Fears were groundleſs. 4. It is too great a 'Countenance to the Dangerous Factions, which are already come to 'that Height, that it renders all manner of Diſcouragement on that ſide 'neceſſary.

Another Addreſs.

1678. Car. 30 Ref. 19

'neceſſary. 5. It is againſt the Laws and Statutes of the Realm; which, 'as they are preſerv'd and maintain'd by your Majeſty's Authority, ſo 'We aſſure our ſelves, You will not ſuffer them to be thus violated by 'your Family and Royal Preſence, upon the Account of Popiſh Recu-'ſants.

This was not very pleaſing to his Majeſty, but before he cou'd well return any Anſwer, there happen'd an Accident that made him more uneaſy: For, on the 18th of November, the Commons being inform'd, That there were ſeveral Commiſſions granted to Popiſh Recuſants, and Warrants alſo that they ſhou'd be Muſter'd, notwithſtanding they had not taken the Oaths, and ſubſcrib'd the Declaration, according to the Act of Parliament, and that they were counter-ſign'd by Sir Joſeph Williamſon, Secretary of State: The Notice of this rais'd ſuch a Heat in the Houſe, that they immediately ſent Sir Joſeph, as a Member of their Houſe, to the Tower. This much offended the King, who the next Day ſent for the Houſe of Commons to attend him in the Banquetting-Houſe in White-Hall, where in a Speech to them he told them plainly, That tho' they had committed his Servant, without acquainting Him; yet he intended to deal more freely with Them, and acquaint them with his Intentions, to Releaſe his Secretary; which accordingly he did that very Day.

The Commons ſend Secretary Williamſon to the Tower.

The King releaſes him.

Upon which immediately, the ſame Day, the Commons drew up an Addreſs to his Majeſty, to preſent to him theſe Reaſons of their Proceedings in the Commitment of Sir Joſeph Williamſon, as a Member of their Houſe, viz. 1. 'That divers Commiſſions were granted to Popiſh 'Officers, and counter-ſign'd by the ſaid Sir Joſeph Williamſon, and de-'liver'd out in October laſt, ſince the Meeting of this Houſe, and the 'Diſcovery of the preſent Popiſh Conſpiracy. 2. Divers Warrants have 'alſo been produc'd before Us, of Diſpenſations, contrary to Law, for 'Popiſh Officers to continue in their Commands, and to be paſs'd in 'Muſter, notwithſtanding they have not taken the Oaths of Allegiance 'and Supremacy, and receiv'd the Bleſſed Sacrament of the Lord's Sup-'per, according to the late Act of Parliament in that Behalf: All which 'ſaid Warrants were likewiſe counter-ſign'd by the ſaid Sir Joſeph Wil-'liamſon; which being complain'd of to us, and confeſs'd by the ſaid Sir 'Joſeph Williamſon, We your Majeſty's moſt dutiful Subjects, having the 'immediate Conſideration before us, of the imminent Danger of your Ma-'jeſty's Perſon, the Safety whereof is above all things moſt dear, and like-'wiſe the Dangers from Popiſh Plots ſo nearly threatning the Peace and 'Safety of your Majeſty's Government, and the Proteſtant Religion, 'were humbly of Opinion, we cou'd not diſcharge our Duty to your 'Majeſty and the whole Kingdom, without the committing the ſaid Sir 'Joſeph Williamſon; and therefore moſt humbly deſire, That he may not 'be diſtharg'd by your Majeſty. And we do further moſt humbly de-'ſire your Majeſty, to recall all Commiſſions granted to all Papiſts with-'in the Kingdom of England, and Ireland, or any other of your Maje-'ſty's Dominions and Territories.

They Addreſs the King.

This Adherence of the Commons made the King not a little weary of their Proceedings; but however, in two Days time he return'd this Anſwer in Writing, which was deliver'd to the Houſe by Mr. Secretary Coventry. His Majeſty having receiv'd an Addreſs the 19th Inſtant from this Houſe, is pleas'd to return this Anſwer: That he releas'd Mr. Secretary Williamſon before your Addreſs came, as he told you in the Banquetting-Houſe he wou'd do. As to the Returns of granting thoſe Commiſſions, his Majeſty acquainted you at large with them, in his Speech, when you laſt attended him: But in Anſwer to your preſent Addreſs, his Majeſty promiſes promiſes to recal all his Commiſſions whatſoever given to Papiſts or reputed Papiſts, either in England or Ireland, immediately; and for his remoter Dominions, they ſhall likewiſe be recall'd with all the Expedition the Safety of thoſe Places will permit.

About this time the Bill formerly mention'd for Diſabling all Papiſts from Sitting in either Houſe of Parliament, having been ſent up from the Commons to the Lords, it there paſs'd with ſome little Amendments, and a particular Clauſe in Favour of his Royal Highneſs the Duke of York. The ſaid Bill being ſent back to the Commons on the 21ſt of November, it paſſed there alſo with the ſeveral Alterations, but not without ſome conſiderable Difficulty: For Sir Jonathan Trelawny and one Mr. Aſh, being violently heated in the Debate, and opprobrious Words paſſing between them, Sir Jonathan, unable to bear them, ſtruck the other a Cuff on the Ear; which being return'd by Mr. Aſh over the Face, they both began to draw their Swords. But this Diſturbance being at laſt quieted by the Speaker, Sir Jonathan was preſently ſent to the Tower, and Mr. Aſh was publickly Reprimanded by the Speaker. About the ſame time there came out an Order of Council, explaining the late Proclamation, whereby all Papiſts were baniſh'd ten Miles from London, 'Declaring it not to extend to Merchant Strangers, and ſuch Outlandiſh 'Perſons, who repaired thither on the Account of Travel.' And on the ſame Day came out a Proclamation, 'Offering a Reward of Twenty 'Pounds to any one who ſhou'd diſcover or apprehend a Romiſh Prieſt 'or Jeſuit.

A Diſturbance in the Houſe of Commons.

5. The King finding the Delays of the Commons, and himſelf under Wants and Difficulties, on the 25th of November he came to the Houſe of Lords, and made this third Speech to both Houſes. 'My Lords and 'Gentlemen, I told you in the beginning of this Seſſion, how much I 'had been oblig'd to keep up my Forces in Flanders: That without it, 'our Neighbours had abſolutely deſpair'd; and by this means, whatever 'has been ſav'd of Flanders, is acknowledg'd to be wholly due to my Interpoſition: And I ſhew'd you withal, That I had been forc'd to employ 'that Money which had been rais'd for the Diſbanding thoſe Troops, in 'the Continuance of them together; and not only ſo, but that I had been 'much more out of Purſe for that Service; a Service by which the Honour and Intereſt of the Nation hath been ſo far improv'd, that as I am 'confident no Man wou'd repine at it, ſo I did not doubt but you wou'd 'all be willing to ſupply it. I have now undergone this Expence ſo long, 'that I find it abſolutely impoſſible to ſupport the Charge any longer; 'and did therefore think of putting an End to that Charge, by Recalling 'my Troops with all poſſible Speed, who are already expos'd to the utmoſt Want and Miſery, being without any Proſpect of further Pay or 'Subſiſtance. But whilſt I was about to do this, I have been importun'd by the Spaniſh Miniſters to continue them a little longer, until 'the Ratifications of the Peace be exchang'd: Without which, all that 'hath been hitherto ſav'd in Flanders, will inevitably fall into the Hands 'of their Enemies. And now, between this Importunity to keep up 'thoſe Troops, and my own Inability to pay them any longer, I find my 'ſelf in great Difficulties what to reſolve. If you do not think that the 'Publick Safety may require the Continuance, I do wiſh as heartily as 'any Man, that, for the Publick Eaſe, they may be ſpeedily Disbanded, 'and paid off. I have thought fit thus to lay the Matter before you; 'and having acquitted my ſelf to all the World, by asking your Advice 'and Aſſiſtance, I deſire it may be ſpeedy, and without any Manner of 'Delay.

The King's Third Speech to both Houſes.

The

The Commons apprehending ſome Danger from the Engliſh Army in Flanders, which, upon the late Juncture of a Separate Peace, had now nothing to do; they therefore preſently Reſolv'd, Nemine Contradicente, 'That it is neceſſary for the Safety of his Majeſty's Perſon, and 'Preſervation of the Peace of the Government, that all the Forces that 'have been rais'd ſince the 29th of September 1677, and all others that 'ſince that Time have been brought over from beyond Seas from Foreign 'Service, be forthwith Disbanded: And reſolv'd, It be the humble Opi-'nion and Deſire of the Houſe, That the Forces which are now in Flan-'ders, may be immediately call'd over, in Order to their Disbanding;' to which purpoſe they preſented an Addreſs to his Majeſty. At the ſame time the Houſe of Commons had before them a Bill, For Raiſing a Third Part of the Militia, to be in conſtant Arms for a time; which, with Amendments, was Ingroſs'd immediately after the King's Speech, and ſent up to the Lords, where it likewiſe paſs'd that Houſe. 1678. Car. 30 Reſ. 19

The Commons reſolve to Diſband the Army.

Upon the 30th of November, it was preſented to the King on the Throne; together with that Other deſirable Bill, For Diſabling Papiſts from Sitting in either Houſe of Parliament. This laſt Bill he readily paſs'd, to the great Satisfaction of the People; and ſhew'd himſelf very willing to Recall his Forces from Flanders, in Order to their Disbanding; but the Militia Bill he totally rejected, alledging, That it was to put the Militia out of his Power, which Thing he wou'd not do, NO NOT FOR ONE HOUR; but if the Commons would aſſiſt him with Money for that purpoſe, He wou'd take care to raiſe ſuch a Part of the Militia, as ſhou'd ſecure the Peace of the Government, and his own Perſon. And to the ſame Effect, he ſhortly after ſent a Meſſage to the Houſe of Commons, declaring, It was to prevent all Miſunderſtandings that might ariſe from his not paſſing that Bill.

A Bill paſs'd againſt the Papiſts.

Another rejected.

III. 1. All this time, while theſe Things were tranſacting in the Parliament, the King proceeded in the ſame manner with relation to the Plot, as tho' he believ'd the whole Truth of it. He ſeem'd now to have Occaſion to exerciſe his Talent of Diſſimulation; and the French Hiſtorian Orleans ſays, He counterfeited a Credulity, which was made uſe of to the committing of much Injuſtice. However, according to his firſt Speech, he wholly left the accus'd Perſons to the Law, and the common Courts of Judicature, and the Appointment, Management and Proſecution of their Tryals to his Judges and proper Officers. The firſt Man deſign'd for Tryal was Mr. Edward Coleman, as the moſt ſignal and obnoxious Offender. But there unexpectedly happen'd a Caſe ſo eaſy, and free from Difficulties, tho' no part of the grand Plot, that it was thought fit to begin with a much later Criminal; one Mr. William Staley, a Goldſmith in Covent-Garden, a ſtrict and zealous Romaniſt, bred in one of the Engliſh Seminaries beyond the Seas, and intended for a Prieſt; but afterwards, for a more profitable Proſpect, he return'd home, and became an Aſſiſtant to his Father in the Shop, who had a great Trade, being entruſted with the Caſh of many of the Popiſh Nobility and Gentry. Theſe, upon the Noiſe of the Plot, ſuddenly began to call in their Money; and He, as it is ſaid, being unable readily to make up his Accounts with his Father, and finding their Trade in a bad Condition, grew ſo far diſturb'd, that on the 4th of November, being in Company with one Fromante, a Foreigner, in a Cook's Shop, diſcourſing together about the Plot, &c. the Foreigner ſaid in French, That the King of England was a great Tormenter of the People of God: To which the ſaid Staley anſwer'd, The King of England! furiouſly repeating the Words, is a grand Heretick, and the greateſt Rogue in the World:

Tryals. Leſtrange. Orleans. Care. Rot. Parl.

Mr. Staley's Treaſon.

1678. Car. 30 Ref. 19

His Tryal,

Here's the Heart, ſtriking his Hand upon his Breaſt, and here's the Hand that will kill him, my ſelf. He was heard to ſpeak theſe Words by three Scotch Gentlemen, who were in the next Room, with the Door open juſt over againſt him.

This Man being inform'd againſt, was immediately taken up, arraign'd on the 20th of November, and the next Day try'd at the King's Bench-Bar before the Lord Chief-Juſtice Scroggs. The Witneſſes, William Corſtairs, and Alexander Sutherland, did both poſitively ſwear the Words before cited, for they both underſtood French very well; and the third Witneſs, tho' he did not underſtand French, ſwore he heard the Priſoner ſpeak ſomething with great Earneſtneſs, and that Captain Corſtairs, at that Inſtant, told him it was in Engliſh, That he would kill the King. The Priſoner own'd, 'That he was at that time with Fromante at the 'Cook's Shop, but deny'd that he ſpoke the Words, and ſaid they only 'ſpoke of the French King, and the Words ſworn by the Witneſſes in 'French, muſt ſignify, I will kill my ſelf, rather than I will kill him 'my ſelf.' But to this the Court obſerv'd, 'Firſt, that the Witneſſes 'ſwore directly that it was the King of England he ſpoke of, and nam'd 'him twice; nor did he count the French King a Heretick: And as to 'the ſecond, they obſerv'd, that after he had given the King ſuch ſcur-'rilous Names, it cou'd not be Senſe to ſay, He wou'd kill Himſelf.' The Priſoner had little more to ſay for himſelf, beſides general Proteſtations of his Loyal Intentions. And therefore the Lord Chief-Juſtice, having repreſented the Proof to the Jury, without going from the Bar they brought him in guilty of Treaſon; and Sentence was pronounc'd on him to be Drawn, Hang'd, and Quarter'd.

And Execution.

Accordingly, about five Days after, he was Executed at Tyburn, behaving himſelf in his Paſſage after a very ſober and penitent Manner: Yet he deny'd the Words for which he was condemn'd; or if he did ſay them, They were the Effect of a raſh Paſſion, without any Deſign againſt the King's Perſon. His Quarters, upon the Petition of his Relations, were deliver'd to them privately to be Bury'd, and not to be ſet upon the Gates of the City. But to the Abuſe of his Majeſty's Mercy, his Friends caus'd ſeveral Maſſes to be ſaid over thoſe Quarters, and us'd other Popiſh Ceremonies, and ſolemnly appointed a Time for his Interment, from his Father's Houſe in Covent-Garden; at which time a pompous Funeral was made, and many People follow'd the Corps to the Pariſh Church, where it was bury'd. The King hearing of this, was juſtly diſpleas'd, and commanded the Coroner of Weſtminſter to take up the Body, and deliver it to the Sheriff of Middleſex to be ſet upon the Gates of the City; all which was preſently done according to the uſual Form and Method.

2. The Condemnation and Execution of Mr. Staley, tho' of a Nature remote, was of conſiderable Uſe to the Plot-Diſcoverers, and open'd a Paſſage to the Tryal of a more Important Perſon, who was likely to be the chief Foundation; and this was Mr. Edward Coleman, Secretary to the Dutcheſs of York, a zealous and active Romaniſt, whom we have particularly taken notice of in the Years 1674, and 1675. Upon the firſt Diſcovery of the Plot, September the 30th, his Houſe was ſearch'd, and his Papers ſeiz'd; tho' it is believ'd that he had Time enough to convey away all the Papers of the two laſt Years, with the Book of Entries of them. The next Day he ſurrender'd Himſelf to Mr. Secretary Williamſon; and being under Examination, he, as Sir George Wakeman, ſeem'd to hear the wicked Things charg'd upon him, with Scorn and Indignation; inſomuch, that tho' Warrants were drawn up to ſend him to Newgate,

The Tryal of Coleman.

gate, he was only for the time preſent committed to a Meſſenger to ſecure him againſt the firſt Order. But afterwards he was cloſely confin'd, and now on the 27th of November, the very Day after Mr. Staley's Execution, he was brought to his Tryal at the King's Bench-Bar, before the ſame Lord Chief-Juſtice Scroggs, having a Jury of very conſiderable Men in Middleſex, who were not ſo much as challeng'd by the Priſoner. The General Heads of the Charge were, The Conſpiring the Death of the King; The Endeavour of Subverting the Government of England, and the Proteſtant Religion. Which Treaſonable Deſigns were to be made out, partly by Witneſſes, vivâ voce, and partly by Letters and Negotiations under his own Hand, proving a Correſpondence with ſeveral Agents for the Accompliſhing thoſe Ends. The living Witneſſes were the celebrated Duumvirate, Dr. Oates, and Captain Bedloe, who were now approaching to the Height of their Glory, and ſeem'd under the Neceſſity of exerting their utmoſt Powers. 1678. Car. 30 Reſ. 19

Oates's Evidence.

The Subſtance of Oates's Evidence was, 1. 'That in November 1677, 'being brought acquainted with the Priſoner by Mr. Keins, then the 'Deponent's Confeſſor, who lodg'd at the Priſoner's Houſe, he carry'd 'ſome Letters from him to St. Omers, in which were Treaſonable Ex'preſſions againſt the King, calling him Tyrant, &c. and a Letter in La'tin enclos'd to Father Le Cheſe, to whom Oates carry'd it from St. 'Omers to Paris; in which there were Thanks return'd for the Ten 'thouſand Pounds by him remitted into England, for the Propagation 'of the Catholick Religion, and promiſing it ſhould be employ'd for no 'other Purpoſe, but for what it was ſent, viz. To cut off the King of 'England, as appear'd by the Letter of Le Cheſe, to which this was an An'ſwer, and which Oates ſaw and read. 2. That Coleman was concern'd 'in the Deſign of killing the King; for when, at the Jeſuits great Con'ſult, on the 24th of April, which afterwards divided into ſeveral Clubs, 'it was reſolv'd, that Pickering and Grove ſhould take off his Majeſty 'by Shooting, or other Means; this Reſolve was communicated to Cole'man, in Oates's hearing, at Wild-Houſe, who did approve thereof, and 'ſaid it was well contriv'd. 3. That in Auguſt, 78, Coleman was preſent 'at a Conſult with the Jeſuits and Benedictine Monks in the Savoy, for 'raiſing a Rebellion in Ireland, for which Forty thouſand Black Bills, 'as Arms, were provided; and was very forward to have Dr. Fogarthy 'ſent over to poyſon the Duke of Ormond: And at another Time, being 'in Fenwick's Chamber, Coleman ſaid to him in Oates's hearing, That he 'had found out a way to tranſmit Two Hundred thouſand Pounds to carry 'on the Rebellion in Ireland. 4. Thatin the ſame Month of Auguſt, Cole'man knew of the four Iriſh Ruffians ſent to kill the King at Windſor; 'and in Oates's hearing, ask'd Father Harcourt at Wild-Houſe, what Care 'was taken for thoſe four Gentlemen that went laſt Night to Windſor? 'who reply'd, That Eighty Pounds was order'd them, which he ſaw there 'on the Table, moſt of it in Guineas; and that Coleman was ſo zealous, 'that he gave a Guinea to the Meſſenger who was to carry the Money, 'to expedite the Buſineſs. 5. That in July, 78, Coleman was privy to 'the Inſtructions brought by Aſhby, Rector of St. Omers, from Father 'Whitebread, to impower the Conſulters to propoſe Ten thouſand Pounds 'to Sir George Wakeman to Poyſon the King, provided Pickering and 'Grove fail'd to do the Work: That Oates had read and copy'd thoſe 'Inſtructions, and tranſmitted them to ſeveral others of the Conſpirators, 'who were gathering Contributions about the Kingdom, who wou'd be 'the more incourag'd to give largely, both becauſe they were aſſur'd the 'Buſineſs wou'd ſoon be diſpatched, and that they might ſee they had 'Aſſiſtance from beyond the Seas; and that Coleman was ſo far from

1678. Car. 30 Ref. 19

'disappointing this Treaſon, that he ſaid, It was too little, and that it 'were well to give Five thouſand Pounds more, to make the Buſineſs ſure. '6. That in April, 78, Oates ſaw Coleman's Patent, or Commiſſion to be 'Secretary of State, from Paulus de Oliva, General of the Society of Je-'ſus, by vertue of a Brief from the Pope, and he knew the Hand per-'fectly well; and that in Fenwick's Chamber, he ſaw Coleman open it, 'and heard him ſay, It was a good Exchange. Laſt of all, Oates being ask'd how many came over in April to the grand Conſult, and how many Prieſts and Jeſuits had been in England at one Time? he ſaid, he could not exactly remember their Numbers, but to his Knowledge there had been in England, at the ſame Time, a Hundred and ſixty Secular Prieſts, Eighty Jeſuits, and by Names upon a Liſt above Three Hundred.

2. Bedloe's Evidence.

The Second Witneſs againſt the Priſoner was Bedloe, who teſtify'd to this Effect. 1. 'That he knew not of any Commiſſion to Mr. Coleman; 'but that Sir Henry Tichbourn had told him, that he brought a Com-'miſſion for him to be Principal Secretary of State, when he brought 'over the reſt of the Commiſſions for the Lords and others, from the 'principal Jeſuits at Rome, by Order of the Pope. 2. That in April, 75, 'he carry'd over a large Pacquet of Letters from Coleman to Father le 'Cheſe, about carrying on the Plot, and brought back an Anſwer: And 'on May 24th, or 25th, 77, he receiv'd another Pacquet of Coleman's, to 'carry to Paris to the Engliſh Monks; and that he had receiv'd Mo-'ney to carry on the Deſign to ſubvert the Government of England, 'to free England from Damnation and Ignorance, and free all Catholicks 'from the hard Tyranny and Oppreſſion of Hereticks. 3. That upon Bed-'loe's Return with Anſwers to the laſt Letters, which were deliver'd to 'Coleman by Harcourt, he heard the Priſoner, at his Houſe behind Weſt-'minſter-Abby, at the Foot of the Stair-Caſe, ſay, If he had a hundred 'Lives, and a Sea of Blood to carry on the Cauſe, he wou'd ſpend it all 'to eſtabliſh the Church of Rome in England; and if there were a Hun-'dred Heretical Kings to be depoſed, he would ſee them all deſtroy'd.' Upon this ſtrange Saying, Mr. Coleman ask'd him this Queſtion; Did I ever ſee you in my Life? Yes, ſaid the other, in the Stone Gallery in Somerſet-Houſe, when you came from a Conſult, where were great Perſons, which I am not to name here; that wou'd make the bottom of your Plot to tremble: You ſaw me then.

3. The Priſoners own Papers.

The Third Evidence againſt Mr. Coleman was his own Papers and Letters, which were undoubtedly real, and of that Moment, that we have already taken Notice of the chief of them, according to their proper Dates, 1674, and 1675. Theſe were moſtly written to Father le Cheſe, the French King's Confeſſor, and ſhew him to be very bold and pragmatical, working hard for Money, as well as the Advancement of his Religion, promiſing by the Power of that to diſſolve and make Parliaments, and to do many other great Things improper for his Station. Altho' the Subſtance of theſe Letters hath been formerly mention'd, yet here we ought not to omit two or three Paſſages which prov'd ſo ſtartling and ſhocking at this Time. Towards the end of this long Letter to the Confeſſor, he ſays, Our prevailing in theſe Things, wou'd give the greateſt Blow to the Proteſtant Religion that ever it receiv'd ſince its Birth. Afterwards, in another Letter he has theſe Words: We have a mighty Work upon our Hands, no leſs than the Converſion of three Kingdoms; and by that, perhaps the utter ſubduing a Peſtilent Hereſy, which has domineer'd over a great part of the Northern World a long Time: There never were ſuch Hopes of Succeſs ſince the Death of our Queen Mary, as now in our Days. And again he ſays, The Oppoſition we are ſure to meet with, is alſo like to be great, ſo that it imports us to get all the

Aid

1678. Car. 30 Ref. 19

Aid and Aſſiſtance we can, for the Harveſt is great, and the Labourers but few. Theſe were dangerous Paſſages that had great Effect at this critical Juncture; tho' in all the Letters, there was nothing found that look'd like taking off the King, or making uſe of any Foreign Power, beſides that of Money, of which the largeſt Sum that ever was propos'd to the Confeſſor, was Three hundred thouſand Pounds, and at other Times much leſs Sums. In ſhort, the criminal Part of the Letters, excepting the promoting his Religion, bore no ſort of Reſemblance or Compariſon with thoſe Matters charg'd upon the Writer by Oates and Bedloe.

His Defence.

The Priſoner's Defence he made for himſelf, conſiſted of theſe Particulars. ‘ 1. That Oates, who now pretended ſuch Acquaintance with him, de- ‘ clared before the King and Council, That he never ſaw him before, or ‘ did not know him.' To which the other anſwer'd, ‘ That it being by ‘ Candle-Light, and his Sight weak, and Coleman alter'd in Habit and ‘ Wig, he did at firſt ſay he cou'd not ſwear that was the Man, or that ‘ he had ever ſeen him before; but as ſoon as he heard him ſpeak, he knew ‘ him well, and cou'd have then ſworn it, had it been demanded. 2. That ‘ had the Things now alledg'd by Oates been true, he wou'd have charg'd ‘ the ſame before the Council: But then he only charg'd him with a Let- ‘ ter, and ſuch ſlender Matters, that the Council was ready to let him go ‘ at large; and therefore all the reſt muſt be invented ſince. To this ‘ Oates reply'd, That he was then ſo weak and weary, he cou'd not well ‘ tell what he ſaid; beſides his Deſign was then to lay no more to his ‘ Charge than might ſerve for Information, &c. 3. Whereas Oates charg- ‘ ed him with conſenting to Wakeman's Poyſoning of the King, and that ‘ it was conſulted by him in Auguſt, and as he remember'd about the ‘ 21ſt Day, Coleman alledg'd, that he was then in Warwickſhire, and one ‘ of his Men and He were there all Auguſt, as he thought, but was not ‘ ſure of it, and after Conviction, he offer'd a Book that would ſhew he ‘ was out of Town from the 18th, to the 31ſt of Auguſt: But this was no Evidence in it ſelf, and offer'd too late, ſo it did not contradict Oates, who was not poſitive to the Day, but only to the Month. As to what was ſworn by Bedloe, he made no other Anſwer than a Solemn Aſſeve- ration that he never ſaw the Man in his Life. But as to his Papers, which he did not deny, he alledg'd, ‘ There was no Treaſon in them, ‘ tho' very Extravagant Expreſſions; and that it would plainly appear ‘ from them, that his Deſign was ſo far from killing the King, that it was ‘ only to make the King and Duke as Great as cou'd be.' In the Conclu- ſion of his Defence, he us'd theſe Words, as he had in effect before; I poſitively ſay, and upon my Salvation, I never ſaw theſe Witneſſes, Oates but once, and Bedloe never before.

He is Caſt.

Then the Jury went out, and after ſome Time return'd, and brought him in Guilty of Treaſon; and the next Day he was again brought to the Bar, and there receiv'd Sentence: Before which paſs'd, the Lord Chief Juſtice made a ſolemn and affecting Speech to him; in which he warmly urg'd him, as the only Satisfaction he cou'd make to the Nation, publick- ly to confeſs all that he knew; and further ſaid, Were I in your Caſe, there ſhould be nothing at the bottom of my Heart that I wou'd not diſ- cloſe; as your Offence is Publick, ſo ought your Confeſſion to be. Per- chance you may be deluded with the fond Hopes of having your Sentence reſpited: Truſt not to it Mr. Coleman; you may be flatter'd to ſtop your Mouth, till they have ſtopt your Breath, and I doubt you will find that to be the Event. After a further Diſcourſe, he ſaid thus, We are at this Time in ſuch Diſorders, and the People ſo continually allarm'd either with ſecret Murthers, or ſome Outrages and Violences that are at this

The Lord C. Juſtice's Diſ- courſe with him.

Day

1678. Car. 30 Ref. 19

Day on foot, that tho' the King, who is merciful almoſt to a Fault, ſhou'd be inclin'd that Way, I verily believe both Houſes of Parliament would interpoſe between That and You. In Anſwer to this and much more, the Priſoner made a very moving Oration to his Lordſhip, in which he particularly ſaid, Your Lordſhip moſt Chriſtian-like, hath obſerv'd, That Confeſſion is extream neceſſary to a dying Man, and I do ſo too; but that Confeſſion your Lordſhip I ſuppoſe means, is of a Guilty Evil Conſcience in any of thoſe Points I am condemn'd for, of maliciouſly contriving, &c. If I thought I had any ſuch Guilt, I ſhould aſſuredly think my ſelf damn'd, now I am going out of the World, by Concealing them in ſpite, of all Pardons or Indulgences, or any Act that the Pope, or the Church of Rome cou'd do for me, as I believe any one Article of Faith. Therefore pray hear the Words of a Dying Man! I have made a Reſolution, I thank God, not to tell a Lye, no not a ſingle Lye, not to ſave my Life. I hope God will not ſo far leave me as to let me do it; and I do renounce all manner of Mercy that God can ſhew me, if I have not told the Houſe of Commons, all that I know in my whole Heart towards this Buſineſs; and I never in all my Life either made any Propoſition towards the Supplanting and Invading the King's Life, Crown, or Dignity, or to make any Invaſion or Diſturbance to introduce any new Government, or to bring in Popery by any Violence or Force in the World.— I do confeſs I am guilty of many common Crimes; but in matters of this Nature that I now ſtand condemn'd for, tho' I do not at all complain of the Court; for I do confeſs I have had all the fair Play imaginable; but I ſay as to any Act of mine. ſo far as Acts require Intention to make them Acts, as all Human Acts do, I am as innocent of any Crime that I now ſtand charg'd as guilty of, as when I was firſt born. Upon this the Lord Chief Juſtice ſaid, That is not poſſible! The Priſoner anſwer'd, With Submiſſion, I do not ſay Innocent as to any Crime in going againſt any Act of Parliament, then it is a Crime to hear Maſs, or to do any Act that they prohibit, but for intending and endeavouring to bring in that Religion by the Aid and Aſſiſtance of the King of France, I never intended or meant by that Aid and Aſſiſtance, any Force in the World, but ſuch Aid and Aſſiſtance as might procure us LIBERTY OF CONSCIENCE.

After this the Lord Chief Juſtice ſolemnly urg'd him to declare Whether his Correſpondence and Negotiations did continue longer than the Letters that were found, that is after 1675, not having diſcover'd one Paper, but what was found unknown to him, and againſt his Will. He anſwer'd, Upon the Words of a dying Man, and upon the Expectation I have of Salvation, I tell your Lordſhip, that there is not a Book nor Paper in the World, that I have laid aſide voluntarily. No? ſaid his Lordſhip, Perhaps you have burnt them. The other vehemently reply'd, Not, by the LIVING GOD! And ſo he perſiſted againſt all Examinations to the Day of his Death, which was upon the 3d of December, when he was drawn upon a Sledge from Newgate to Tyburn; and being come thither, he declared, That he had been a Roman Catholick for many Years; and that he thank'd God, he dy'd in that Religion: And he further declar'd, He did not think that Religion at all prejudicial to the King and Government. The Sheriff told him, if he had any Thing to ſay by Way of Confeſſion or Contrition, he might proceed; otherwiſe it was not reaſonable for him to go on with ſuch like Expreſſions. And being ask'd if he knew any Thing of the Murder of Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey, he declar'd, upon the Words of a Dying Man, he knew not any Thing of it; and he was a Priſoner at that Time. Then after ſome private Prayers and Ejaculations to himſelf, he was hang'd and quarter'd, but his Quarters were granted to his Friends to be bury'd. It was the Opinion of ſome that beheld him

him as he was drawn along, or while he was ſpeaking or praying at Tyburn, that he was ſomewhat diſturb'd in his Thoughts, or under ſome Expectations of a Reprieve: And it was confidently reported, that he ſhou'd ſay that Day, with great Paſſion, There is no Faith in Man! But as to the laſt, H. Care tells us that Enquiry was made, and no credible Perſons appear'd to teſtify that they heard the Words ſpoken; ſo that it ought to paſs only as a common Rumour, deſign'd for a particular Reflection upon the Duke of York. 1678. Car. 30 Ref. 19

3. When the two great Diſcoverers, Oates and Bedloe, had once drawn Blood, they aſſum'd new Courage, and became more formidable to the Romiſh Party, and more eſtimable to the Other. They were all along ſupported by great Numbers of both Houſes of Parliament, with different Intentions; and particularly the Lords, to ſhew their Zeal, by an Addreſs obtain'd a new Proclamation from the King, which was iſſu'd out the ſame Day that Mr. Coleman was try'd, which in theſe Words did Declare, 'Upon the humble Requeſt of the Lords Spiritual and Tempo'ral, That if any Perſon or Perſons ſhall before the twenty fifth Day of 'December next, make any further Diſcovery of the late Horrid Deſign
'againſt his Majeſty's Sacred Perſon and Government, to one of his Ma-
'jeſty's Principal Secretaries of State; He or They, making ſuch Diſ-
'covery, ſhall not only receive from his Majeſty, for every ſuch Diſco
'very, the Reward of Two Hundred Pounds, to be immediately paid
'upon due Proof of the Truth thereof; but if He or They were a Prin'cipal, or Principals in the ſaid Deſign, or guilty of the former Conceal-
'ment thereof, He or They ſhall have his Majeſty's Gracious Pardon for
'ſuch His or Their reſpective Offence.

A Proclamation to encourage further Diſcoveries.

This gave new Incouragement to every bold Diſcoverer; and the ſame Evening, Oates and Bedloe, having juſt before overthrown Coleman, proceeded ſo far as to accuſe the Queen her Self, before the Privy Council. Bedloe ſwore 'That about the latter End of April was a Twelve-month,
'about Six in the Afternoon, there was a Conſult held in the Chappel
'Gallery at Somerſet-Houſe, where were preſent the Lord Bellaſis,
'Mr. Coleman, Le Phaire, Pritchard, Latham and Sheldon, and two
'French Men in Orders, whom he took for Abbots, and two other Per-
'ſons of Quality, but did not ſee their Faces, and Others: Amongſt
'them, the Queen: And further that Coleman and Pritchard told him,
'That after the Conſult the Queen wept at what was propos'd there, but
'was over-perſwaded to Conſent, by the Strength of the two French Mens
'Arguments. That he was below walking in the Chappel in the Time 'of the Conſult, with others, &c. The Queen came through the Room
'where the Prieſts dreſs'd themſelves, and that he then obſerv'd ſome
'Alteration in her Majeſty's Countenance.' Oates back'd this with another Story, which he Swore before the Council, namely, 'In the Month
'of July, this preſent Year, Sir George Wakeman, in a Letter to Aſhby
'the Jeſuit, did write, That the Queen wou'd aſſiſt him to Poyſon the 'King. That a few Days after, Father Harcourt, and four other Jeſuits
'did go to attend the Queen at Somerſet-Houſe, being ſent for, and He
'himſelf waited upon them; and they went into a Chamber, and while
'he waited without, he heard a Woman's Voice, which did ſay, That
'ſhe wou'd not endure the Violations of her Bed, and that ſhe wou'd aſſiſt
'Sir George Wakeman in Poyſoning the King; and that he was after'wards admitted in, and that he ſaw no other Woman there but her
'Majeſty; and he heard, while he was within, the ſame Voice ask Fa'ther Harcourt, If he had receiv'd the laſt Thouſand Pound?

Bedloe and Oates accuſe the Queen.

The House of Commons enraged.

This surprizing Evidence threw the Parliament into a new Flame, and the very next Day the House of Commons drew up the following Address to the King; 'We your Majesty's most Dutiful Subjects, &c. having receiv'd Information by several Witnesses [Oates and Bedloe] of a most Desperate and Trayterous Design and Conspiracy against the Life of your Sacred Majesty, wherein, to our great Astonishment, the QUEEN is particularly charg'd and accus'd: In Discharge of our Allegiance, and out of our Affections and Care for the Preservation of your Majesty's Sacred Person, and consequently, of the whole Kingdom, do most humbly beseech your Majesty, That the Queen, and all her Family, and all Papists and Reputed Papists, be forthwith remov'd from your Majesty's Court at White-Hall.' Immediately after, they came to this grand Resolve, That an humble Address be presented to his Majesty, That all Papists and Suspected Papists, within the several Counties of England and Wales, and the Town of Berwick upon Tweed, may be Apprehended and Secured. But the King himself was so disoblig'd at Oates's insolent Behaviour, that he immediately order'd a stricter Guard upon him than ever; which occasion'd the Commons, the Day after, to order an Address to his Majesty, 'That the said Oates be freed from his 'Restraint, attended by his own Servants, and that a competent Allowance be appointed for his Maintenance.' And thus there appear'd a struggle between the King and the Commons; but the Latter, resolving to make sure of the Offenders of the highest Rank, who were appointed to be try'd the common Way, came to this Determination on the 5th of December, 'That the House do proceed by Way of Impeachment of 'High-Treason, &c. against the Lord Arundel of Warder, Lord Powis, 'Lord Petre, Lord Bellasis, and Viscount Stafford.' Accordingly, the next Day they did Impeach the said Lords, at the Bar of the House of Peers; but the Articles were not exhibited against them this Parliament, and the Matter was reassum'd by another House of Commons.

They impeach several Lords.

The Tryals of Ireland, Pickering, and Grove.

4. In the mean Time Oates and Bedloe fell into further Business, by means of the Tryal of Three Persons at one Time, William Ireland, and Thomas Pickering, both Priests, and John Grove, a Lay Brother. These were arraign'd on the 17th of December at the Old Bayly, together with Thomas Whitebread and John Fenwick, two Jesuits; but in the Course of the Evidence, there not appearing sufficient Proof against the two last, the Jury was discharg'd of them, and they reserv'd for another Time. The Three first were Indicted for High Treason, and that of the most odious Nature, as being actively concern'd in Carrying on the General Plot for Subversion of the Government, but more especially for the Horrid Design to Murther his Majesty's Person; Ireland, for contriving and consenting to it; and Pickering and Grove, for having undertaken, and actually attempted to effect it.

Oates's Evidence.

The Sum of Oates's Evidence against the Prisoners, waving some Generals already mention'd, was 1. 'That at the Grand Consult of April 24. 'at the White-Horse in the Strand, whereof Ireland was one; It was re'solv'd that Pickering and Grove, as having been formerly engag'd, shou'd 'go on in their Design and Attempt to Murther the King; and that Grove 'being a Lay-man, shou'd have fifteen Hundred Pound for his Reward; 'and Pickering, being a Priest, Thirty Thousand Masses, which at twelve 'Pence a Mass amounted to that Sum. 2. That this Resolve was the 'same Day drawn up in Writing by one Mico, that was Secretary to the 'Society, and Companion to Provincial Whitebread, at the said White'bread*'s Chamber, who having sign'd it, it was carry'd by the Deponent

'Oates,

'Oates, as being a Meſſenger to the Conſult, to be ſign'd by the reſt of 1678.
'the Colloquies; and that Ireland in his own Chamber did ſign it in his Car. 30
'Preſence. 3. Pickering and Grove conſented to ſuch Reſolve, ac- Reſ. 19
'cepted the Terms, and alſo ſign'd it the ſame Day, at the ſaid White-
'bread's Chamber, at Mrs. Sanders's at Wild-Houſe, where in a little
'Chappel, they and about forty or fifty of the Conſulters heard Maſs,
'and receiv'd the Sacrament, adminiſter'd by one Barton, a Jeſuit; and
'thereupon took an Oath of Secrecy upon a Maſs Book which Mico
'held, while Whitebread pronounc'd the Words. 4. That in purſuance
'of this Reſolve, the Deponent did ſeveral Times ſee Pickering and Grove
'walk in the Park together, with Screw'd Piſtols, longer than ordinary Piſtols,
'and ſhorter than ſome Carbines: That they had Silver Bullets to ſhoot
'with; and that Grove wou'd have had the Bullets champt, to render
'the Wound incurable; and that he ſaw Grove's Bullets in May, and
'Pickering's in Auguſt. Moreover, 5. That, before the Conſult, in the 'Month of March, Pickering had a fair Opportunity to ſhoot the King,
'but the Flint of his Piſtol happen'd to be looſe, and he durſt not venture
'to give Fire; and becauſe by their Negligence this Opportunity was
'miſs'd, Pickering underwent Penance, and had twenty or thirty Strokes
'of Diſcipline, and Grove was chidden for his Careleſneſs, as the Depo-
'nent had ſeen in Whitebread's Letters. 6. That Grove did go about
'with one Smith to gather Peter-Pence, either to carry on the Deſign,
'or to ſend to Rome: That he ſaw the Book wherein it was enter'd, and
'heard the ſaid Grove ſay he had been gathering it.

2. Bedloe's Evidence.

Bedloe was the ſecond Evidence, who now ſwore, '1. That he was
'imploy'd for the Space of five Years as a Meſſenger, by the Conſpira-
'tors, for Carrying their Letters to their Confederates beyond the Seas,
'and bringing others back, all or moſt of them relating to the Plot; for
'he had a Way to open and read them, by which he fully inform'd him-
'ſelf of thoſe Matters: And for the Nature of the Plot, he heard ſome
'of the Conſpirators ſay, That they wou'd not leave any Member of a
'Heretick in England, that ſhou'd ſurvive to tell hereafter, That there
'ever was any ſuch Religion as the Proteſtant. And to confirm his In'timacy with them, he ſwore the Manner of his coming firſt to be im-
'ploy'd by them; by means of the Lady Abbeſs of the Engliſh Nunnery
'at Dunkirk, who, having kept him ſix Weeks in her Convent, recom'mended him to Sir John Warner, as a proper Inſtrument, who after'wards ſent him to Father Harcourt to be inſtructed.' And as a further Confirmation, he brought his Brother James Bedloe, who ſwore he knew nothing of the Plot, but did teſtify, 'That he had heard the Priſoners
'often named, as being of his Brother's Acquaintance; and that he had
'on his Brother's Behalf, receiv'd ſeveral Sums of Money from Prieſts
'and Jeſuits, as fifty or ſixty Pounds at a Time. 2. That about the lat'ter End of Auguſt, this Year, at Mr. Harcourt's Chamber, he met the 'Priſoners, Ireland, Pickering and Grove, with ſome others, where he 'heard them diſcourſe, That ſince the four Iriſh Ruffians had miſs'd of 'Killing the King at Windſor, Pickering and Grove ſhou'd go on in their
'Deſign, and that one Conyers, a Benedictine Monk, was to be joyn'd
'with them; and that they ſhou'd endeavour to aſſaſſinate his Majeſty
'in his Morning Walk at New-Market: That they were zealous in the 'Matter; and Mr. Grove, more forward than the reſt, ſaid, Since it cou'd
'not be done Clandeſtinely, it ſhou'd be attempted Openly, and that thoſe
'that ſhou'd fall in the Attempt, had the Glory to dye in a good Cauſe;
'but if it were diſcover'd, the Diſcovery wou'd never reach ſo far, but
'their Party wou'd be ſtrong enough to accompliſh their Work. 3. He
'ſwore that Harcourt told him, Grove was to have fifteen Hundred

1678. 1 Car. 30 Ref. 19

Pounds, and Pickering as many Maſſes, as at twelve Pence a Maſs, came to the like Sum. 4. That at the ſame Time, when the Diſcourſe about Killing the King was at Harcourt's Chamber, there was likewiſe a Deſign concerted amongſt them of Killing ſeveral Noble Perſons, and the particular Parts aſſign'd to every one; as Knight, to kill the Earl of Shaftsbury; Prichard, the Duke of Buckingham; Oneile, the Earl of Oſſory; Obrian, the Duke of Ormond, &c.

The Defence of the Priſoners.

The Priſoners Defence againſt all this, was, 1. 'A peremptory Denial of the whole: Grove particularly ſaid, as I have a Soul to be ſav'd, I know nothing of this Matter charg'd upon me. Pickering affirm'd, That he never ſhot off a Piſtol in his Life. And Whitebread, who was there during the Tryal, declar'd before Almighty God, That Oates had not ſpoken three Words of Truth. 2. A particular Denyal of their Knowledge of, or Acquaintance with the Witneſſes: Ireland deny'd, That he ever ſaw Bedloe before that Time in the Court, and challeng'd him to produce one Witneſs that he had ever ſpoken to him. Pickering affirm'd that he never ſaw Oates before; and offer'd to ſwear, that he never was in Bedloe's Company. And Grove deny'd that he had ſcarce any Acquaintance with Oates.' Whereupon Oates gave him a remarkable Token, viz. 'That in December laſt, when he was with him, he own'd, that he and three Iriſhmen had fired Southwark; and that they had a Thouſand Pounds given them for it; whereof he had Four Hundred Pounds, and the reſt Two Hundred Pounds a-piece. 3. Ireland, againſt Bedloe's Evidence, affirm'd, He was not in London the whole Month of Auguſt, and part of September; and offer'd to prove by twenty Witneſſes, that he was in Staffordſhire and Cheſhire all that Time; and urg'd Bedloe to name the Place and the Company whereever they were together. But not only Bedloe ſwore the contrary, but likewiſe Oates himſelf; but what ſeem'd more important, one Sarah Pain, formerly a Servant to Grove, ſwore, that ſhe ſaw Mr. Ireland at a Scrivener's Door in Fetter-Lane, about the 12th or 13th of Auguſt. 4. Ireland, as well as Whitebread, objected againſt the Grand Conſult of April 24th, that Hundreds could prove that Oates was at St. Omers all the Months of April and May; and offer'd to produce a Certificate from thence, under the Seal of the College.' But ſuch Certificate was not allow'd as Evidence by the Law of England. Laſtly, They endeavour'd to blaſt the Reputation of Dr. Oates, to prove him Perjur'd, &c. but their Witneſſes at this Time were ſo tender and fearful, that they were of little Service.

The Lord Chief Juſtice's Speech.

After this, the Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs proceeded to Sum up the Evidence; and in his Speech to the Jury, among many others, ſpeaking of the Popiſh Prieſts and their Religion, had theſe remarkable Expreſſions; If they had not murther'd Kings, I would not ſay they wou'd have done Ours: But when it hath been their Practice ſo to do; when they have debauch'd Men's Underſtandings, over-turn'd all Morals, and deſtroy'd all Divinity; what ſhall I ſay of Them? When their Humility is ſuch, that they tread upon the Necks of Emperors; their Charity ſuch, as to kill Princes; and their Vows of Poverty ſuch, as to covet Kingdoms; what ſhall I judge of them? When they have Licenſes to Lye, and Indulgences for Falſhood; nay, when they can make him a Saint that dies in One, and then Pray to him; as the Carpenter firſt makes an Image, and then worſhips it; and can then think to bring in that Wooden Religion of theirs amongſt us in this Nation; What ſhall I think of them? what ſhall I ſay to them? what ſhall I do with them? They eat their God; they kill their King, and Saint the Murderer: They indulge all ſorts of Sins, and no Human Bonds can hold them. And not to be defective in this ſort of Rhetorick, the Recorder, Sir

1678. Car. 30 Ref. 19

Sir George Jeffery's Speech

Sir George Jefferys, in a long Speech when he paſſed Sentence upon the Priſoners, had theſe Expreſſions; You muſt e'er long appear before a Great Tribunal, where your Maſſes will not ſignify ſo many Groats to you; no, not one Farthing: I muſt ſay it for the ſake of thoſe ſilly People whom you have impos'd upon with ſuch Fallacies, that the Maſſes can no more ſave you from a future Damnation, than they do from a preſent Condemnation. In another Place, he adviſ'd them not to rely upon their Maſſes, Tricks, or Trumperys; and afterwards proceeded thus: I am ſorry with all my Soul to hear a Layman ſhould with ſo much Malice declare, That a Bullet, if round and ſmooth, was not ſafe enough to execute his Villanies by: But he muſt be ſure, not only to ſet his poiſonous Invention on work about it, but he muſt add thereto his poiſonous Teeth; for fear if the Bullet were ſmooth, it might light in ſome Part where the Wound might be cured. But ſuch is the Height of ſome Men's Malice, that they will put all the Venome and Malice they can into their Actions. I am ſure this was ſo horrid a Deſign, that nothing but a Conclave of Devils in Hell, or a College of ſuch Jeſuits as yours on Earth, could have thought upon. In Concluſion, he Sentenc'd them to be Drawn, Hang'd, and Quarter'd.

But there being a Delay of their Execution, on the 26th of December, the Houſe of Commons order'd the ſaid Recorder to attend, and give the Houſe an Account why he did not iſſue out his Warrant to execute them. And being call'd on again the next Day, he inform'd the Houſe, that he had not yet receiv'd any Orders from the King for their Execution; which Anſwer ſeem'd very unſatisfactory to ſome Members, but the Debate of that Matter was adjourn'd. They were reſpited till the 24th of January, the Day that the Parliament was diſſolv'd, when William Ireland and John Grove ſuffer'd according to Sentence, at the common Place of Execution. But the latter, Thomas Pickering, whether to induce him to a Confeſſion, or for what other Reaſons, it appears not, was kept a conſiderable Time afterwards; but at laſt he was likewiſe executed on the 9th of May. It is obſervable, that He, and the other two before him, perpetually deny'd their Crimes, and inſiſted upon their Innocence to the laſt Moment of their Lives. And it is further to be remember'd, that it was chiefly upon the Tryal of theſe Three, that Oates was afterwards convicted of Perjury: In which, two and twenty Witneſſes prov'd that Oates was actually at St. Omers during the grand Conſult he ſwore to; and above Forty teſtify'd, that Ireland was in Staffordſhire, when Oates ſwore he was at London.

IV. 1. While the two Houſes of Parliament were buſily employ'd, and warmly upon the Scent of the Popiſh Plot, they were of a ſudden diverted, and thrown into a new Flame by an unexpected Event that appear'd at this Time. The Cauſe of it was from a long Deſign laid to overthrow the prime Miniſter of State, the Lord Treaſurer Danby, whoſe Endeavours to bring the King out of thoſe deſtructive Methods he had been led into by the Cabal, and the French Intereſt, and his rejecting many Offers of France with a generous Indignation, had given ſuch a Diſtaſte to that Court, that it became a Maxim amongſt them, That he muſt be ruin'd before they could do any good in England. To effect this, Monſieur Barillon, the French Ambaſſador, found it the beſt way to joyn with one Party in the Parliament; and young Ruvigny was ſent over from France purpoſely to manage with the Lord Ruſſel, and other Malecontents in the Houſe of Commons; while the Duke of Monmouth, Earl of Shaftsbury, Eſſex, and others of the ſame Party, joyn'd with the Dutcheſs of Portſmouth, to leſſen his Reputation with the King; who had already been diſpleas'd with him for giving ſo much Countenance to the Plot. Theſe ſeeming ſeparate Intereſts being thus combin'd, and devoted to his Deſtruction, there wanted only a fair Opportunity to accompliſh it; and this was effected by means of the honourable Ralph Mountagu, formerly mention'd, the Engliſh Ambaſſador in the French Court, a Perſon of great Parts and Subtlety, who had been for ſome time projecting and obtaining French Money for his Britannick Majeſty. But that part of his Employment being, or ſeeming to be at an end by the approaching Peace, he was deſirous to come over, and be one of the Secretaries of State; in which he was civilly oppos'd by his old Friend the Lord Treaſurer, who had been particularly engag'd to bring in Sir William Temple. Whereupon he came privately over into England, without the King's Conſent or Knowledge; and not only got himſelf choſen into the Houſe of Commons, for Northampton, but ſecretly joyn'd himſelf with Barillon, and the diſcontented Members, and ſeem'd to wait for the firſt Occaſion to expoſe his Maſter's Secrets, and to defeat his Prime Miniſter; which thus preſented it ſelf.

The King, who began highly to diſlike his Proceedings, receiv'd ſuch kind of Intelligence from Mr. Olivecrans, the Swediſh Ambaſſador, that on the 19th of December, he ſent a Meſſage to the Houſe of Commons, 'That upon Information, That Mr. Mountagu, a Member of that Houſe, 'and late Ambaſſador in France, had held ſeveral Conferences with the 'Pope's Nuncio there, without any Directions or Inſtructions from his Maje-'ſty; His Majeſty, to the end that he might know the Truth of that Matter, 'had given Orders for the ſeizing Mr. Mountagu's Papers.' The Houſe now looking upon this Gentleman as a Proſelyte, ſeem'd ſullen at the Meſſage, and particularly deſired to know Whether the Information was upon Oath, and of what Nature the Offence was? Upon which Mr. Mountagu ſtanding up, took the Opportunity to acquaint the Houſe, 'That 'he had in his Cuſtody ſeveral Papers, which he conceiv'd might tend 'very much to the Safety of his Majeſty's Perſon, and the Preſervation 'of the Kingdom.' A Committee was immediately appointed to bring the Writings to the Houſe; which being accordingly done, and Mr. Mountagu order'd to ſelect ſuch of them as he thought for the Service of the Houſe, and diſpoſe of the reſt as he pleas'd, he produc'd two Letters out of many others, both ſubſcrib'd Danby, and both written to him when he was Ambaſſador at Paris.

Mr. Mountagu acc ſes him to the Commons.

The firſt was dated at London, January 17, 167⅞, in which they took Notice of theſe Words: Yeſterday young Ruvigny came to me with Monſieur Barillon, (having given me his Father's Letters the Day before) and diſcours'd much upon the Confidence the French King hath of the Firmneſs of Ours to Him; of the good Opinion his Maſter hath of Me; of his King's Reſolution to condeſcend to any Thing that is not infamous to him, for the Satisfaction of our King; How certainly our King may depend upon all Aſſiſtances and Supplies from his Maſter, in caſe the Friendſhip be preſerv'd.— The main of their Drift was, to engage me to prevail with the Prince of Orange, as to the Town of Tournay.—The King muſt come to ſome Declaration of his Mind to the Parliament when it meets. That which makes the Hopes of Peace leſs probable, is, That the Duke grows every Day leſs inclin'd to it, and has created a greater Indifferency in the King than I cou'd have imagin'd; which being added to the French King's Reſolutions, not to part with Tournay, does, I confeſs, make me deſpair of any Accommodation: Nevertheleſs, I am aſſured, That one principal Cauſe of this Adjournment for Thirteen Days, has been to ſee if any Expedient for the Peace cou'd have been found in that Time; and the Effect of the Adjournment hath hitherto been, That no Body will now believe believe other than that the Peace is already concluded between Us and France. 1678.

Two of his Letters produc'd.

The Second Letter produc'd by Mr. Mountagu, was dated, London, March 25, 1678, in which were mark'd out theſe Words: In caſe the Conditions of the Peace ſhall be accepted, the King expects to have Six Millions of Livres a Year, for Three Years, from the Time that this Agreement ſhall be ſign'd betwixt his Majeſty and the King of France; becauſe it will probably be two or three Years before the Parliament will be in Humour to give him any Supplies after the making any Peace with France; and the Ambaſſador here has always agreed to that Sum, but not for ſo long a Time. If you find the Peace will not be accepted, you are not to mention the Money at all; and all poſſible Care muſt be taken to have this whole Negotiation as private as is poſſible, for fear of giving Offence at Home; where, for the moſt Part, we hear in ten Days after of any Thing that is communicated to the French Miniſter. At the bottom of this Letter are theſe Words: THIS LETTER IS WRIT BY MY ORDER. C. R. Car. 30 Reſ. 19.

Upon reading of theſe Letters, the Houſe was all in a Flame, which was no ways allay'd by the King's own Hand that appear'd at the Bottom; and now having gain'd the deſir'd Opportunity, they immediately Reſolv'd, 'That there was ſufficient Matter of Impeachment againſt 'Thomas Earl of Danby, Lord Treaſurer of England;' and within two Days, by the Help of Mr. Mountagu and Mr. Harbord, Articles of Impeachment were fully drawn up, and agreed on, as following: 'I. That 'he hath traiterouſly incroach'd to himſelf Regal Power, by treating in 'Matters of Peace and War with Foreign Princes and Ambaſſadors, and 'giving Inſtructions to his Majeſty's Ambaſſadors abroad, without com-'municating the ſame to the Secretaries of State, and the reſt of his Ma-'jeſty's Council, &c. II. That he hath traiterouſly endeavour'd to ſub-'vert the ancient and well-eſtabliſh'd Form of Government; and inſtead 'thereof, to introduce an Arbitrary and Tyrannical Way of Government; 'and the better to effect this his Purpoſe, he did deſign the Raiſing of 'an Army under Pretence of a War againſt the French King, and then 'to continue the ſame, as a Standing Army within this Kingdom: And 'an Army being ſo raiſed, and no War enſuing, an Act being paſs'd to Pay 'and Disband the ſame, he did continue the Army contrary to the ſaid 'Act, and miſapply'd the Money to the Continuance thereof, and wil-'fully neglected to take Security of the Paymaſters of the Army, as 'the ſaid Act required, &c. III. That he trayterouſly Intending and De-'ſigning to alienate the Hearts and Affections of his Majeſty's good Sub-'jects from his Royal Perſon and Government, and to hinder the Meet-'ings of Parliaments, and to deprive his Majeſty of their ſafe and whole-'ſom Counſel, did propoſe and negotiate a Peace for the French King, 'upon Terms diſadvantagious to the Intereſt of his Majeſty, and his 'Kingdoms; for the doing whereof, he endeavour'd to procure a great 'Sum of Money from the French King, for enabling him to maintain 'and carry on his ſaid traiterous Deſigns and Purpoſes. IV. That he is Po-'piſhly affected, and hath traiterouſly concealed (after he had notice) the 'late horrid and bloody Plot and Conſpiracy, contrived by the Papiſts, 'againſt his Majeſty's Perſon and Government; and hath ſuppreſs'd the 'Evidence, and reproachfully diſcountenanc'd the King's Witneſſes in the 'Diſcovery of it, in favour of Popery, &c. V. That he hath waſted 'the King's Treaſure, by iſſuing out of his Majeſty's Exchequer ſeveral 'Branches of his Revenue for unneceſſary Penſions and ſecret Services, 'to the Value of 231602 Pounds, within two Years, &c. and he hath 'remov'd two of his Majeſty's Commiſſioners of that Part of the Re-'venue, for refuſing to conſent to ſuch his unwarrantable Actings there-in,

The Commons draw up Articles of Impeachment againſt him.

‘ vate Uſes. VI. That he hath by indirect Means procur'd from his ‘ Majeſty to himſelf divers conſiderable Gifts and Grants of Inhe‘ ritance, of the ancient Revenue of the Crown, even contrary to Acts ‘ of Parliament.

2. The Lord-Treaſurer finding ſo great a Storm ready to fall upon him, and chiefly by the means of Mr. Mountagu, thought once to divert it by expoſing all that Gentleman's Letters, which, eſpecially in the Caſe of the French Money, muſt have render'd him much more obnoxious than himſelf. All this he found neceſſary in his own Defence, without he was ſufficiently protected by the King his Maſter; who, upon conſulting with him, thereupon offer'd him his Pardon, if Occaſion requir'd, to plead againſt the Impeachment; and he was particularly told by his Majeſty, That he ow'd him more Duty than to expoſe his and his Ambaſſador's Letters of private Negotiations betwixt him and the King of France; and he was ſure he wou'd not be guilty of ſuch perfidious Baſeneſs to him, as Mountagu had been. However, whether by Permiſſion or otherwiſe, the Treaſurer ſent two of Mr. Mountagu's Letters to the Houſe of Commons, expecting they might turn to his Advantage. The firſt was dated Paris, January 11, 167⅞, in which were theſe Words, I give you the beſt Light I can into the Reaſon of Monſieur Ruvigny's Son's Journey into England, who will be there perhaps as ſoon as this Letter. If his Father's Age wou'd have permitted it, I believe they wou'd have ſent him; for they have choſen the Son, who is to make uſe of Lights his Father will give him; and by the near Relation he has to my Lady Vaughan, who is his Couſin-German, and the particular Friendſhip which Father and Son have with Mr. William Ruſſell, he is to be introduc'd into a great Commerce with the Malecontented Members of Parliament, and inſinuate what they ſhall think fit, to croſs your Meaſures at Court, if they ſhall prove diſagreeable to them here, whilſt Monſieur Barillon goes on in his ſmooth Civil way. The ſecond Letter, dated Paris, January 18, 167⅞, has theſe Words, after ſpeaking of young Ruvigny's Journey: His chief Errand is to let the King know, ‘ That the King of ‘ France did hope he was ſo firm to him, as not to be led away by the ‘ Grand-Treaſurer; [Danby] who was an ambitious Man, and, to keep ‘ himſelf with the People, wou'd gratify their Inclinations, by leading
‘ his Maſter into an unreaſonable War againſt France.' That as for Money, ‘ if he wanted that, he ſhou'd have what he wou'd from hence.' His Inſtructions are, if this does not take, by the means of William Ruſſell, and other diſcontented People, to give a great deal of Money, and croſs all your Meaſures at Court.-----Old Ruvigny, that values himſelf for knowing of England, has given it them for a Maxim, ‘ That they muſt ‘ diminiſh your Credit, before they can do any good;' But ſince their chief Quarrel to you is, the being ſo juſt to your Maſter's Intereſt, I am ſure he is too juſt to let them do you any hurt. If the King is for a War, you know what to do; if he hearkens to their Money, be pleas'd to let me know what they offer, and I dare anſwer to get our Maſter as much again; for Barillon's Orders are to make the Market as low as he can.

Two of Mr. Mountagu's Letters ſent to the Commons.

The Lord-Treaſurer Impeached.

Theſe, when offer'd in the Earl's Vindication, were not ſuffer'd to be read; and the Commons purſu'd him with greater Eagerneſs than the five Popiſh Lords accus'd of the Plot. Inſomuch, that in two Days they both impeach'd him at the Bar of the Houſe of Peers, and ſent up the Articles by Sir Henry Capel, Brother to the Earl of Eſſex, under the Title of Articles of Impeachment of High-Treaſon, and other High Crimes, Miſdemeanors, &c. Upon the reading of theſe, the Earl ſtood up up in his own Juſtification, and made a formal Speech, of which the greateſt part is worthy to be preſerv'd. After a handſom Introduction he proceeded thus: ‘ My Lords, I know this is not the time for me to ‘ enter regularly upon my Defence, becauſe I know your Lordſhips will ‘ firſt order me a Copy of my Charge, and appoint me a time for my ‘ Vindication; when I doubt not to do it to the full Satisfaction of your ‘ Lordſhips and all the World. In the mean time I will only beg leave ‘ to obſerve to your Lordſhips, that thoſe Articles in this Charge which ‘ ſeem to have any thing of Treaſon in them, have their Anſwer ſo obvi- ‘ ous, that there is very little in them which may not be anſwer'd by ‘ many others, as well as my ſelf, and ſome of them by every Man in ‘ the Kingdom. The Firſt, which is the Aſſuming of Regal Power, I ‘ confeſs I do not underſtand; having never in my Life done any thing ‘ of great Moment, either at Home, or relating to Foreign Matters, for ‘ which I have not always had his Majeſty's Command. And tho' I am ‘ far from having been the moſt cautious Man in taking care of my own ‘ Security (which perhaps my great Innocence hath been the Cauſe of) ‘ yet I have not been ſo wanting of common Prudence, as in the moſt ‘ Material things not to have had his Majeſty's Orders and Directions ‘ under his own Hand, and particularly for the Letters now made uſe of ‘ againſt me. The Second, I think doth ſcarce need my giving any An- ‘ ſwer to; it being obvious, that the Army was no more rais'd by me, ‘ than by every Lord in this Houſe: And whoever is in that Station ‘ which I hold, muſt certainly be a Fool, to deſire any thing which ‘ creates a want of Money, eſpecially ſo great a one, as the Charge of ‘ an Army muſt neceſſarily and immediately produce. And for one part ‘ of the Article concerning the Pay-Maſter of the Army, it is in Fact o- ‘ therwiſe; for Security from the Pay-Maſter has been taken in Sum of ‘ Four hundred thouſand Pounds. The Third is of the ſame Nature with ‘ the Firſt, and comes from the ſame Foundation, which is, What a ‘ Gentleman hath thought to produce to the Houſe of Commons. I ‘ will not now cenſure his Actions, I think it will do enough for its ſelf; ‘ I will only ſay, that tho' I take it for one of the greateſt Misfortunes ‘ which can befall a Man, to lie under ſuch a Charge of the Houſe of ‘ Commons, yet I wou'd much ſooner chuſe to be under that Unhappi- ‘ neſs, than under his Circumſtances.

‘ The Fourth Article is not only falſe in every Part of it, but it is not ‘ poſſible to believe it true, without my being the greateſt Fool on ‘ Earth, as well as the blackeſt Villain. For were I capable of ſuch ‘ Wickedneſs, yet the more wicked any Man is, the more he is car- ‘ ry'd to his own Intereſt; and is it poſſible any thing under Heaven ‘ can agree leſs with my Intereſt, than the Deſtruction of this King? ‘ Can I poſſibly hope to be better than I am? And is it not apparent, ‘ that there is not one Man living, whoſe Happineſs depends ſo much ‘ as mine upon the Preſervation of his Perſon? My Lords, I know ‘ there is not one Man in the World, that can in his Heart think ‘ me guilty of that part of the Article, if I ſhou'd ſay nothing to it. But ‘ beſides, I was ſo far from concealing this Helliſh Plot, that it is noto- ‘ rioufly known, his Majeſty ſent me the firſt Notice of it, together with ‘ forty three Heads of the Information, before I knew a Syllable of it ‘ from any body elſe: And it hath been own'd at the Bar of the Houſe ‘ of Commons by him, from whom only I had the Intelligence, That he ‘ had all the Encouragement and Diſpatch from me, that I cou'd give ‘ him. Beſides, when it was diſclos'd to the Council-Board, he told ‘ ſome of the Clerks of the Council, as he had done me divers times ‘ before, That it wou'd have been much better, and more wou'd have been

‘ diſ-

'diſcover'd, if it had been longer kept private. Beſides this, I had the 'Fortune to be particularly Inſtrumental in ſeizing Mr. Coleman's Papers, 'without which Care, there had not one of them appear'd, and conſe-'quently, the beſt and moſt material Evidence which is yet of the Plot, 'had been wholly wanting. And certainly this is the firſt time that any 'Man was accus'd to be the Concealer of that Plot, whereof he hath 'been a principal Means of procuring the Diſcovery. For that part of 'the Article that ſays, I am Popiſhly affected, I thank God, that the 'contrary is ſo known to all the World, that even ſome of thoſe that 'voted againſt me, did own their Knowledge of the Falſity of that Al-'legation; and I hope I have through my whole Life given ſo good Te-'ſtimony of my Religion, both in my own Family, and by my Services 'to the Church, whenever it hath lain in my Power, that I ſhall not 'need much Vindication in that Particular: And I hope your Lordſhips 'will forgive me my Weakneſs, in telling you, that I have a younger 'Son in the Houſe of Commons, whom I ſhall love the better as long 'as I live, for moving to have that part of the Article to ſtand againſt 'me, That by that Pattern it might appear, with what ſort of Zeal the 'Whole hath been carried to my Prejudice.

5. 'The Fifth Article will, upon Examination, appear to be as ill-'grounded as any of the reſt; and I am ſorry I am able to give one Rea-'ſon, which is, That I have known no Treaſure in my time to waſte, 'having enter'd upon an empty Treaſury, and never ſeen one Farthing 'given to his Majeſty, in almoſt ſix Years, that hath not been appro-'priated to particular Uſes, and ſtrictly ſo apply'd by me, as the Acts 'have directed. And there hath not been one of thoſe Aids, which, 'inſtead of giving the King Money, hath not coſt him more out of 'his own Purſe to the ſame Uſes, as doth appear by the larger Dimen-'ſions of the new Ships, and ſo in other things: Inſomuch, that I take 'upon me the Vanity to ſay, that by the Payments I have made to the 'Navy and Seamen beyond former Times; the Paying off the greateſt 'part of the Debt which was ſtopt in the Exchequer before my Time; 'by my Punctuality in the Courſe of Payments, and by other things 'which I am able to ſhew, I doubt not to appear Meritorious, inſtead of 'being Criminal upon that Article. As to the Sixth Article, which men-6. 'tions my Great Gettings, I cannot deny but that I ſerve a Maſter, 'whoſe Goodneſs and Bounty hath been a great deal more to me than I 'have deſerv'd, and to whom I can never pay Gratitude enough by all the 'Services of my Life. But when the Particulars of thoſe Gettings ſhall 'appear, it will be found very contrary to what is ſuggeſted Abroad; 'and that in near ſix Years time in this great Place, I have not got half 'that, which many others have got in leſſer Places in half that time. And 'from the Examination of this, which I deſire may be ſeen, there will 'ariſe Matter to accuſe my Prudence, in not having done for my Family 'what juſtly I might, but nothing to arraign my Honour, my Conſci-'ence, or my faithful Service to the Crown.

'My Lords, if my Obedience to the King ſhall not be my Crime, I 'think nothing elſe will ſtick upon me from theſe Articles: For my own 'Heart flatters me to believe, That I have done Nothing but as a true 'Proteſtant, and a faithful Servant both to my King and Country. Nay, 'I am as confident, as that now I ſpeak, that had I been either a Papiſt, 'or Friend to the French, I had not been now accus'd. For I have 'Reaſon to believe, That the principal Informer of the Houſe of Com-'mons hath been aſſiſted by French Advice to this Accuſation; and if 'that Gentleman were as Juſt to produce all he knows for me, as he hath 'been Malicious to ſhew what may be liable to Miſconſtruction againſt

'me,

1678. Car. 30 Ref. 19

‘ me, or rather againſt the King, as indeed it is, no Man cou'd vindicate ‘ me more than Himſelf: Under whoſe Hand I have to ſhew, how great an ‘ Enemy to France I am thought; how much I might have had to have been ‘ otherwiſe; and what he himſelf might have had for getting me to take it.
‘ But I do not wonder this Gentleman will do me no Right, when he does ‘ not think fit to do it to his Majeſty, upon whom chiefly this Matter muſt ‘ reflect: Tho' he knows, as will appear under his Hand, That the great- ‘ eſt Invitations to his Majeſty for having Money from France, have been ‘ made by Himſelf; That if his Majeſty wou'd have been tempted for ‘ Money, he might have ſold Towns for as much as if they had been his ‘ own, and the Money have been convey'd as privately as he pleaſed; That ‘ his Majeſty might have made Matches with France, if he wou'd have ‘ conſented to have given them Towns; and yet, that the King hath al‘ ways ſcorn'd to yield the meaneſt Village, that was not agreed to by ‘ the Spaniard and Hollander. That Gentleman hath often pretended ‘ how much his own Intereſt in France was diminiſh'd, only by being ‘ thought my Friend. And beſides divers other Inſtances I have under ‘ his Hand to ſhew the Malice of the French Court againſt me, I ſent
‘ two of his Letters to the Houſe of Commons, which ſhew how Mon-
‘ ſieur Ruvigny was ſent hither on purpoſe to ruin Me; which I am well ‘ aſſur'd at this Time they wou'd rather ſee, than of any one Man in ‘ England. Beſides what that Gentleman cou'd ſay of this Kind, if he ‘ pleas'd, I hope his Majeſty will give me leave, in my Defence, to ſay in ‘ his Preſence, and in the Hearing of divers Lords, with whom I have ‘ the Honour to ſit in the Committee of Foreign Affairs, that, which ‘ were it not true, his Majeſty muſt think me the impudenteſt and worſt
‘ of Men to affirm before him, That ever ſince I had the Honour to ‘ ſerve his Majeſty to this Day, I have deliver'd it as my conſtant Opinion, ‘ That France was the worſt Intereſt his Majeſty cou'd embrace; and that ‘ they were the Nation in the World from whom I did believe, he ought ‘ to apprehend the greateſt Danger; and who have both his PERSON ‘ and GOVERNMENT under the laſt Degree of Contempt. For ‘ which Reaſon alone, were there no other, I wou'd never adviſe his Ma-
‘ jeſty to truſt to their Friendſhip.——

Upon the Debate of this grand Affair, we are told of a very peculiar Speech pronounc'd by the Earl of Carnarvon, a Lord, who is ſaid never to have ſpoken before in that Houſe; who having been heated with Wine, and more excited to diſplay his Abilities by the Duke of Buckingham (who meant no Favour to the Treaſurer, but only Ridicule) was reſolv'd before he went up, to ſpeak upon any Subject that ſhould offer it ſelf. Accordingly he ſtood up, and deliver'd himſelf to this Effect:

The Earl of Carnarvon's Speech.

‘ My Lords, I underſtand but little of Latin, but a good deal of Eng-
‘ liſh, and not a little of the Engliſh Hiſtory; from which I have learnt
‘ the Miſchiefs of ſuch Kind of Proſecutions as theſe, and the ill Fate of ‘ the Proſecutors. I cou'd bring many Inſtances, and thoſe very ancient;
‘ but, my Lords, I ſhall go no further back than the latter End of Queen ‘ Elizabeth's Reign: At which Time the Earl of Eſſex was run down
‘ by Sir Walter Rawleigh, and your Lordſhips very well know what be‘ came of Sir Walter Rawleigh. My Lord Bacon, he ran down Sir Wal- ‘ ter Rawleigh, and your Lordſhips know what became of my Lord Ba- ‘ con. The Duke of Buckingham, he ran down my Lord Bacon, and ‘ your Lordſhips know what happen'd to the Duke of Buckingham.
‘ Sir Thomas Wentworth, afterwards Earl of Strafford, ran down the ‘ Duke of Buckingham, and you all know what became of Him. Sir
‘ Harry Vane, he ran down the Earl of Strafford, and your Lordſhips

1678. Car. 30 Ref. 19

'know what became of Sir Harry Vane. Chancellor Hyde, he ran 'down Sir Harry Vane, and your Lordships know what became of the 'Chancellor. Sir Thomas Osborn, now Earl of Danby, ran down Chan- 'cellor Hyde; but what will become of the Earl of Danby, your Lord- 'ships best can tell. But let me see that Man that dare run the Earl of 'Danby down, and we shall soon see what will become of Him.' This being pronounc'd with a remarkable Humour and Tone, the Duke of Buckingham, both surpriz'd and disappointed, after his Way, cry'd out The Man is Inspir'd! and Claret has done the Business.

However it was, the House cou'd not come to an Agreement to imprison the Earl, whose Cause was now the Discourse and Noise of the whole Town, and seem'd to labour under great Difficulties. The King himself was so disturb'd and perplex'd with these Proceedings, which confounded the Minds of all Men, that he resolv'd, as usually in such Cases, to put an End to the Session, before he had pass'd one Bill, besides that killing Act against the Roman Catholicks before-mention'd. Accordingly, on Monday the 30th of December, he came to the House of Lords, and declared in a Speech, That it was with great Unwillingness that he came to tell them, that he intended to Prorogue them; that all of them were Witnesses, he had not been well us'd, the Particulars of which he wou'd acquaint them with at a more seasonable Time: In the mean time he wou'd immediately enter upon the Disbanding the Army, and do what Good he cou'd for the Kingdom, and Safety of Religion; and that he wou'd prosecute the Discovery of the Popish Plot, to find out the Instruments of it, and to take all the Care that was in his Power to secure the Protestant Religion, as was now by Law Establish'd. And accordingly his Majesty was pleas'd to Prorogue the Parliament till the 4th Day of February next. And thus ended the Eighteenth and Last Session of the Second and Long Parliament, after it had continu'd the Space of two Months and nine Days. This was the most warm and busy Session of any that preceded it, both Houses were work'd into a Flame, and no Money was given to the King: The Commons indeed had prepar'd a Money Bill For the Disbanding of the Army, but had inserted a Clause for the Money to be paid into the Chamber of London; for which Reason the Lords totally rejected it; so that the Soldiers came over in Depth of Winter, and many of those brave Men, who had gain'd so much Glory at Mons, and other Places, against the French, miserably perish'd thro' Sickness, Want and Cold.

The King's Speech.

The End of Eighteenth Session of the Second Parliament.

3. For a Conclusion of the old Year, we are to take Notice of some Promotions, and Deaths, and some Matters of an inferior Nature. As to Honours and Preferments conferr'd this Year, on July 17, the Right Honourable George Lord Berkely, of Berkely-Castle, was sworn of his Majesty's most honourable Privy-Council: On October 18, the Earl of Ailesbury was admitted to the same Board; as was James Earl of Salisbury, and Henry Earl of Clarendon, about two Months after. The Right Honourable James Earl of Arran, Son to his Grace the Duke of Hamilton, was about the same time sworn one of the Gentlemen of his Majesty's Bed-Chamber in Ordinary; 'Which Mark of his special 'Favour his Majesty was graciously pleas'd to confer upon him, in Con- 'sideration of the great and loyal Services of that Ancient and Noble Fa- 'mily.' Mr. Secretary Williamson having fallen into the high Displeasure of the House of Commons, not only for the Reason of his Commitment, but, as they thought, of his irregular Discharge, thought fit to resign his Place, and immediately after the Prorogation, his Majesty was pleas'd to constitute the Right Honourable Robert Earl of Sunderland, one of one of his principal Secretaries of State in the Room of Sir Joſeph Williamſon, who reſigning the Seals into his Majeſty's Hands, retir'd, and marry'd the Lord O Brian's Widow, a rich Lady, in the Country. Sir William Temple was call'd over from Holland by the King, in order to take upon him this Office; who acquainted the Prince of Orange, and the States, with his Journey, and the Deſign of it. They made him Compliments upon that Occaſion, and intimated to him, That his Secretary's Place was to make amends for his being Ambaſſador; but Sir William ſaid to the Prince, That tho' He muſt go, yet if he found the Scene to be what it appear'd at that Diſtance, he won'd not charge himſelf with that Employment, upon any Terms that cou'd be offer'd. Whether Sir William did refuſe it, or whether it was never earneſtly offer'd to him, it is certain it was diſpos'd of before Sir William's Return into England: And it was not long a Secret, that the Earl of Sunderland paid to Sir Joſeph Williamſon ſix Thouſand Pounds, and five Hundred Guineas, in Conſideration of his Surrender of the ſaid Place. The Earl of Danby, lying under the Weight of an Impeachment, tho' not Impriſonment, his Majeſty thought fit to diſmiſs him from the Office of Lord High-Treaſurer of England; and the Lord Latimer, his Son, having deliver'd the White-Staff into his Majeſty's Hands, the King was pleas'd to appoint the Right Honourable the Earl of Eſſex, Lawrence Hyde, Brother to the Earl of Clarendon, Sir John Ernle, Sir Edward Deering, and Sidney Godolphin Eſquire, to be Commiſſioners of his Majeſty's Treaſury.

Honours and Preferments.

The Earl of Sunderland made Secretary.

The Earl of Danby out, and the Treaſury in Commiſſion.

In this Year we are to take Notice of ſome remarkable Crimes committed both by a Lay-Lord, and a Clergy-man. In the Beginning of it, the Earl of Pembroke was by the King's Command committed to the Tower, for Blaſphemy, Abuſe of the Celebration of the Sacrament, and other Miſdemeanors unfit to be nam'd, towards the Lord North's Chaplain, and others: But not long after he was releas'd from his Impriſonment, upon the Hearing of his Caſe in the Houſe of Lords, who upon the ſame Declared and Adjudg'd, 'That the ſingle Teſtimony of a Commoner, altho' upon Oath, was not a ſufficient Evidence againſt a Peer, 'who deny'd the Fact upon Honour.' His Lordſhip not long after fell under the Accuſation of Murther, for which he abſconded for ſome Time; but in April he ſurrender'd himſelf to Sir George Carteret, Gentleman-Uſher of the Black-Rod, who immediately convey'd him to the Tower, in Order to bring him to his Tryal before the Houſe of Peers; and ſoon after he was brought thither by Sir John Robinſon, Lieutenant of the Tower; and after Eight Hours ſpent in the Formality of the Tryal, his Lordſhip was by the Votes of the major Part of the Peers then preſent declar'd, Not Guilty of Murther, but Guilty of Man-Slaughter; and had the Benefit of his Peerage allow'd him for the ſame by the Lord-Chancellor, who was High-Steward pro hac Vice, purſuant to the Priviledge granted to the Nobility in this Behalf, for their firſt Offence, made in the firſt Year of the Reign of King Edward the Sixth. The Clergy-man was Mr. Robert Foulkes, Miniſter of Sumton-Lacy, in the County of Salop; who having been convicted and ſentenc'd at the Seſſions in the Old-Bayley, London, for the Murther of a Baſtard-Child, begotten by himſelf, was ſoon after executed at Tyburn; leaving behind a very ſolemn Declaration of Repentance, which was publiſh'd in Print; and by the Strains of Devotion in it, did, in a great Meaſure, wipe away the Scandal he had given to his Holy Function.

The Earl of Pembroke obnoxious.

Mr. Foulkes ſuffers Death.

It likewiſe ſeems proper to be remember'd, as an extraordinary Event, that ſoon after the Prorogation of the Parliament, on Sunday, January the 12th, for above a Quarter of an Hour, between Ten and Eleven in the Morning, was ſo great and ſudden a Darkneſs, in and about the Cities of London and Weſtminſter, that the People within the Churches cou'd not ſee to read in their Bibles, and were not able in the Streets to diſtinguiſh one Perſon from another. It was for a time a deeper Blackneſs than that of an Eclipſe, which did not now happen; and was thought to equal, if not exceed the great Solar Eclipſe, which in the late Times left the Name of Black-Munday.

A ſtrange Darkneſs.

The Deaths of Biſhop Henſhaw,

As to the Deaths of conſiderable Men, in this Year, we ſhall begin with three Divines, very different in their Characters, Qualifications and Stations: The Firſt a Reverend Prelate, Dr. Joſeph Henſhaw, Biſhop of Peterborough, a Perſon educated in the Univerſity of Oxford, and much in Renown for his admirable Way of Preaching in London and other Places, before the great Confuſions in the Nation; during which he was a great Sufferer in the general Calamity: After which, he was rewarded with the Deanery of Chicheſter, and at laſt with the forementiond Biſhoprick, where he ſufficiently diſtinguiſh'd himſelf both by his great Learning and good Preaching, but did not ſo well approve himſelf as to Hoſpitality and Humility. The Second was Mr. Francis Potter, a Batchelor of Divinity, and Rector of Kilmington in Somerſetſhire, where for about Fifty-eight Years he led a retired, ſingle and Monaſtick Life, without the Converſation of ingenious Men. Yet he was choſen a Member of the Royal-Society, and diſtinguiſh'd himſelf by many ingenious Inventions, both Mechanical and Medical, as in Water Engines, and the Transfuſion of the Blood; beſides his extraordinary Diſcourſes upon the Revelations, which were admired by ſome of the greateſt Men in the Nation; and laſt of all, he dy'd very aged and blind; and without a Soleciſm or Reflection, he may be term'd the Apocalyptick Vertuoſo. The laſt was Mr. Abraham Woodhead, a celebrated Divine of the Romiſh Perſuaſion, who had taken Orders according to the Church of England, and had been ſeveral Years Fellow of Univerſity Colledge in Oxford, where he was Tutor to the fam'd Obadiah Walker. But being driven from the Univerſity, in his Travels beyond Sea, he chang'd his Religion, and returning to his Colledge after the Reſtauration, and deſiring to conceal his Religion, he retired to a little Cell in Hogſden near London, in which great Obſcurity he liv'd 18 Years, and wrote many notable Tracts, ſeveral of which were publiſh'd after his Death, by his Pupil Walker, and had a great Influence in the following Reign; he being accounted the moſt modeſt, and likewiſe the moſt ingenious and ſolid Writer of the whole Romiſh Party.

Mr. Potter,

Mr. Woodhead,

The Three next were as various in their Genius and Characters as the other; the Firſt of whom was Dr. John Godolphin, a Doctor of the Civil Law, and a celebrated Man in his Profeſſion, who in the Time of the Engliſh Republick, was made one of the Judges of the Admiralty, and after the Reſtoration, one of the King's Advocates; being eſteem'd a very learned Man, and as well read in Divinity as in his own Faculty; yet diſtinguiſh'd by his noted Abridgment of the Eccleſiaſtical Laws of this Realm. The next was Mr. Thomas Stanley, a learned and ingenious Gentleman, of Cumberlow in Hertfordſhire, who made himſelf ſufficiently known to the learned World by his Skill in Philoſophy, Hiſtory and Poetry, in which he ſhew'd great Reading, exquiſite Fancy, and admirable Judgment: He was noted, not only for his Hiſtory of Philoſophy, and his own Productions, but likewiſe for his various Tranſlations of the ancient Greek and Latin, as alſo of the modern Italian, French and Spaniſh Poets; in which he ſhew'd himſelf Maſter of Languages, as well as other ſorts of Knowledge. The laſt was a learned Foreigner, call'd Henry Oldenburg, ſometimes call'd Grubendole; a Perſon who had been Conſul for his own Country-men in the Dutchy of Breme in the Lower-Saxony,

Dr. Godolphin,

Mr. Stanley,

Mr. Oldenburg,

Saxony, and came to reſide in London, in the time of the Long Parliament and Cromwell's Power: At length quitting his Employment, upon the Founding the Royal-Society, he became Fellow and Secretary to that noble Eſtabliſhment; in which Poſt, he publiſh'd the famous Philoſophical Tranſactions, from the Year 1664, to 1677; by which Work he render'd himſelf a wonderful Benefactor to Mankind, by his affectionate Care, and indefatigable Diligence and Endeavours, in maintaining the moſt extenſive Intelligence, and promoting the Deſigns and Intereſt of the moſt profitable and general Philoſophy, Mathematicks, &c. 1678. Car. 30 Reſ. 19

After all theſe, we ſhall mention two fam'd Writers that made much Noiſe in the World, Andrew Marvel, and Marchamont Nedham, both peſtilent Wits, and noted Incendiaries. But Mr. Marvel, having an Appearance of more Honeſty and Steadineſs, is firſt mention'd. He was Son to Andrew Marvel, the facetious Calviniſtical Miniſter of Hull, who gave him an Academical Education in Cambridge; where gaining the Maſterſhip of the Latin Tongue, he became Aſſiſtant to John Milton, when he was Latin Secretary to Cromwell, and very intimate and converſant with him. After the Reſtoration, he was choſen into this preſent long Parliament by the Burghers of Hull, who gave him an honourable Penſion for his Maintenance; in which Poſt he continu'd to his Death. He was of a reſerv'd Converſation, and a thoughtful keen Wit, which he employ'd with great Severity, not only againſt particular Perſons, but againſt the Church and Crown; and he made himſelf very remarkable by his Rehearſal tranſpros'd, and his Growth of Popery, the latter of which brought him into Danger from the State; but Death put an end to all a little before the Diſcovery of the preſent Plot. As to Nedham, it is hard to give a full Account of him, who was one of the moſt various Writers, and moſt mutable Men in the Age; a Perſon, who with a fluent Pen, and a pregnant Fancy, wrote through thick and thin, with the utmoſt Boldneſs and Sharpneſs imaginable. He wrote both for and againſt the late King and his Friends, for and againſt Monarchy, &c. according as he was hired and incourag'd; ſo that, without ſaying any more, he is juſtly accounted an accompliſh'd mercenary Writer, and a ſignal Inſtance of the Miſchiefs that may ariſe from the Uſe of Pen, Ink, and Paper.

Mr. Marvel.

And M. Nedham.

Leſtrange. Prance. Care. Tryals. Wright. Gazette. Leeds. &c.

V. I. After the ſudden Prorogation of the Parliament, the Month of January was buſily employ'd in Court Conſultations, and Proclamations, and very much diſturb'd by new Diſcoverers of the grand Plot, and the Murder of Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey, ſuch as Prance, Dugdale, Everard, &c. who out of Dread of Puniſhment, or Hopes of Reward, appear'd upon this Occaſion. The firſt prov'd a material and ſeaſonable Evidence at this Time; eſpecially when it was found ſo exceeding uſeful to tack the Murder to the Plot, and to make one a Part, or rather a Support, of the other. But to ſhew how he was brought in and induc'd to make ſuch important Diſcoveries, it is neceſſary to look a little back, and take Notice of ſome previous Matters, reſerv'd, for Method and Regularity, to this Place. In order to which, it is to be remember'd, that upon the miſſing of Juſtice Godfrey, the Town was fill'd with various Rumours and Surmiſes of Fancy and Conjecture, about him. Sometimes it was ſaid, he was murther'd in Arundel-Houſe; othertimes, in the Lord Bellaſis's Cellar; and then again, That the Duke of Norfolk's Coach was ſeen to come from Primroſe-Hill the Saturday that he went away: But at laſt, they pitch'd upon Somerſet-Houſe, and adher'd to that Place, as a Popiſh Palace, tho' two Miles from that where the Body was found. And of this, Bedloe, as before mention'd, was the firſt publick Diſ-

Diſcoverer. The Noiſe of this Murder, ſoon after that of the Plot, had ſuch a terrible Effect, that the chief Promoters of the Diſcovery, took the greateſt Advantages from it; more eſpecially that Head of them the penetrating Earl of Shaftsbury, whoſe indefatigable and indirect Endeavours in this Matter, we are to take Notice of here in ſome Inſtances, afterwards given in upon Oath.

The Earl of Shaftsbury's Management,

The Firſt was the Treatment of the two Perſons, who firſt diſcover'd Sir Edmund-bury's Cane and Gloves, which occaſion'd the finding of the Body immediately after, viz. William Brumwell and John Walters, two ordinary Perſons, the latter a Blackſmith, who came that Way by accident. Within leſs than a Fortnight after, they were both taken up, and brought before the Lords Committees at Wallingford Houſe, the Earl of Shaftsbury being in the Chair, where they were examin'd; and Brumwell was ſeverely threatned by the ſaid Earl, and committed to Newgate. Walters was more ſtrictly examin'd and threatned, and Titus Oates was there ready to ſee if he knew him; after which he was ſent to the Gate-Houſe, where he was Fetter'd, and Hand-Cuffed, and kept in a Dungeon for three Days and Nights together. About ten Days after, when Bedloe was opening his Diſcoveries, Brumwell was ſent for again, when the Lord Shaftsbury declared, This Man was ſet on by ſome Great Roman Catholick to find out the Body of Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey; and if any Man ever was hang'd, he ſhou'd be hang'd if he did not diſcover it. After which Menaces, Major Wildman took him into a private Place, and there ask'd him, Why he wou'd not diſcover who ſet him on, for he ſhould have Five hundred Pounds Reward, his Life ſecured, &c. but he told him plainly, That he had ſpoke what he knew already, and that he could ſay no more, nor would he accuſe any Man falſly. Whereupon he was re-manded to Newgate, and kept nine Weeks Priſoner, without ſuffering any to ſee him but his Wife, who came twice by the Permiſſion of the Duke of Buckingham. About the ſame Time, Walters was alſo ſent for to the ſame Place, where the Lord Shaftsbury took him into a By-Cloſet, and with a pleaſing Countenance, ſaid, Honeſt Smug the Smith, thou look'ſt like an honeſt Fellow, thou ſhalt Shoe my Horſes, and I'll make a Man of thee: Prethee tell me who murther'd this Man, and who ſet thee to find him out? What Papiſt doſt thou Work for? And thus going on, he anſwer'd, My Lord, if I knew your Self had murther'd him, I would diſcover it, tho' I dy'd for it; and then he told him, as well as he could remember, for what Cuſtomers he wrought: Whereupon he was re-deliver'd to the Keeper; but upon further Conſideration, he was call'd back and diſcharg'd.

In the Caſe of Brumwell and Walters,

Of Mrs. Gibbo,

The next Inſtance was of Mrs. Mary Gibbon, the Wife of Captain Thomas Gibbon, a Gentleman related to Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey, and one of his chiefeſt Confidents. When the Buſineſs of the Murder was at the higheſt before the Lords Committees, this Mrs. Gibbon deliver'd a particular Paper to a Perſon of Quality, Sir John Banks, who deliver'd the ſame to the Earl of Shaftsbury. The Deſign of it was to ſhew the melancholy Apprehenſions of Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey, eight or nine Days before his Death, in which were theſe Words: ‘ Sir Edmund came ‘ to her Houſe, and having gone into a Chamber with her, and bolted the ‘ Door, he appear'd to be much troubled and out of Order. He ask'd ‘ her, If ſhe had not heard that he was to be Hang'd? For, added he, all ‘ the Town is in an Uproar about me. She ask'd him for what? To ‘ which he reply'd, That having taken Oates and Tongue's Examinations, ‘ a Month ago, and tho' he had been often at Dinner ſince at my Lord ‘ Chancellor's, and Sir William Jones the Attorney-General, yet he never ‘ had diſcover'd the Plot they had ſworn to. She ask'd him What Plot?

her upon her Oath to declare who wrote it, he call'd her Bitch, and other vile Names, and threatned her, That if She wou'd not confeſs, that Sir John Banks, Mr. Pepys, and Monſieur de Puy ſet her on to write this Paper, ſhe ſhou'd be torn to Pieces by the Multitude; threatning her alſo to have her worry'd as the Dogs worry Cats; inſomuch that out of Fear ſhe fell into Fits, and thought ſhe ſhou'd never have got home. All which ſhe afterwards deliver'd in upon Oath to one of the Secretaries of State; with an Addition of theſe Words, I Mary Gibbon am indiſpos'd in Health; but whether I live or dye, in the Preſence of God, and his Holy Angels, I do make Oath, that this is every Syllable True.

And of Francis Corral,
